Health of the Emigrants—Organization of Companies—Starting upon the Plains—Salt Lake Mail—Indian Depredations.

We have just returned from a three weeks' tour in the upper country, and too late to furnish our readers this week with more than a bird's-eye glance at the position of affairs on the frontiers, and the events of our tour.

The fine steamer F. X. Aubry landed us on the levee at Atchison, at two o'clock on the morning of the 29th ult., where we found Elder Glover, with part of his company, still on the levee, who had landed from the Equinox the previous day. After taking a morning nap, and breakfasting with Elder McGaw, we surveyed the town, and the few tents and detachments of companies still remaining on the old camp-ground just back of town, and later in the day visited the general encampment at Mormon Grove—four miles west—which presented the appearance of a city of tents and wagons beautifully arranged in the open woodland, and covering several undulations. Our visit was emphatically one of business; but it proved equally one of pleasure.

The lowing of cattle—the din and bustle of camp—and the joyful greetings, were to us what martial music is to the soldier. Although we had allotted ourselves only three or four days in camp, the great amount of business relating to the P. E. Fund emigration, as well as the Danish and other independent companies, which required our personal attention, detained us until the 10th inst., and then it was with reluctance that we bid them adieu, to return to our duties in the city.

During our stay, we organized four companies for the Plains, consisting of about fifty wagons each.

The first under Captain Kinley consisted chiefly of the emigrants from St. Louis, and other parts of the States. The second, under Captain Jacob Siechrist, embraced the Danish and part of the British independent company. The third, under Captain S. M. Blair, embraced the Texas Camp, and portions of the Saints from other parts of the States and adjacent Provinces. And the fourth, under Captain Richard Ballantyne, embraced a part only of the Perpetual Emigrating Fund emigration.

The first drew out and formed a separate encampment on the 1st inst., and soon were on their march for the mountains. The 2d were also moved out, and the 3d was moving out when we left, and the 4th were preparing to follow soon as their outfits could be completed.

The general health of the camps was good, although several deaths have occurred in the Danish camp and among the passengers ex-ship "Juventa," who had almost entirely escaped until they reached Atchison. Among the lamented dead of this company, we have to mention Elder Simpson long and favorably known among the British Saints, and Elder Bell, late President of the Malta Mission, and his wife.

The Saints who remain in camp are busily engaged plowing and planting, and thus laying a foundation for the sustenance of the poor that may be left. The merchant train of Messrs. Livington, Kinkead & Co., of Salt Lake, passed near Mormon Grove, on the 2d inst., being the first of the season, and one month later than previous years. Several other merchant trains were being fitted out at Atchison and Leavenworth City. Our business called us by the way of Weston, Kansas and Independence, where on the 12th, we took passage on the "Polar Star," the universal favorite in the Missouri trade.

Up to the time of our leaving Independence no tidings had been heard from the Salt Lake Mail, due on the 30th ult. It was reported that the party with the April mail, outward bound, had been robbed of every animal at Devil's Gate, and fearful apprehensions were entertained for the safety of the party Some early trains of California Emigrants are also reported to be stripped of all their animals.

Capt. Heath of the U. S. Army, direct from Fort Kearney, who was a fellow passenger down the river, informed us that the May mail, outward bound, with which was Hon. J. M. Bernhisel, had been safely escorted by a part of his command as far as Ash Hollow, and safely delivered to a like escort from Laramie. Dragoons have started from Fort Leavenworth to patrol the line, and keep Indians off the road.

The Ben Bolt, with a company of Saints, was just landing at Atchison, as the Polar Star left there, on the 11th.

The Springfield Republican says that the Know Nothing who would not use the word patriot, because it began with pat, has concluded to emigrate somewhere, because he has at last found out that "America was discovered by a foreigner."

THE TIMES WE LIVE IN.

It was said by a notable character of a former age, that in the last days, perilous times should come; he said many other important things, but being a professional Saint, an enthusiastic follower of the despised Nazerine, an inveterate dreamer and miracle monger, his sayings were but little heeded, and his righteous blood was shed; and ages have rolled away, the last days have come, and with them have come the perilous times spoken of by the Prophet.

The Morning Herald of this city, speaking concerning this subject, says:

The times are of evil omen. The temper of men's minds has been gradually growing worse and worse, till now the "bond of brotherhood," which should unite men together, is lamentably relaxed. All over our country, prevails a lawless spirit, which is producing grave mischiefs, and threatens still more deplorable and awful consequenses. The human intellect seems to have lost its balance wheel. Constitutions and laws, which are binding on the consciences and reason, and ought to be equally overruling in the hearts of men, are set at naught, treated with contempt; despised, spit upon. Barriers and defences, set up by the wisdom of, we fear, a better generation, for the protection of property and liberty, are leveled with the earth by a blind fury, obeying the dictates, and insensible to every thing but the gratification, of insane passions."

Who would believed, a few years ago, that troubleous times would come in our own beloved America? the Prophet Joseph foretold it, 'tis true, but who would then believe it? But strange as it then appeared, we find the nation groaning under the severe pressure of the times, men's hearts are truly failing them for fear of the things that are coming on the earth; some are in anguish and trouble because the springs of water are dried up, some are famishing of hunger, and millions are perishing for the lack of knowledge of the truth God has revealed unto us, whilst iniquity and corruption are on the increase, and threaten ere long, to curse the earth with complete dissolution and destruction.

Ancient and modern Apostles have predicted these things, and have strove to stem the torrent of evil and pollution as it rushed through the Christian nations; but the tide was too strong. The vast current of the worlds population is rushing heedlessly and irresistably to the gulf of misery; some are seized by the whirlwind, stricken by disease, slain in the battle field, and fall victims of the assassin or otherwise perish in the wreck of nations.

The Lord spake unto his servant Joseph, saying: "after your testimony cometh the testimony of earthquakes, and the voice of tempests, and the voice of the waves of the sea heaving themselves beyond their bounds, and all things shall be in commotion and surely men's hearts shall fail them; for fear shall come upon all people, and the angels shall fly through the midst of heaven, crying with a loud voice, saying: prepare ye, Oh inhabitants of the earth, for the judgment of God is come."

If these messengers do not bring the careless and ungodly to repentence and a due consideration of their position, their case is hopeless and their destruction is sure.

This is a sad portraiture of the position and destiny of the Christian nations, of a people who have boasted of their civilization and Christianity, but we are bound to admit the evidence that is brought against them, for out of their own code of laws and out of their own mouths they stand condemned, because they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinances, and broken the everlasting covenant.

DEPARTURE FOR THE PLAINS.

We shipped on Tuesday the 19th Inst. on the Ben Bolt, upwards of two hundred P. E. Fund Passengers, under the Presidency of Elder Francis St. George, Louis A. Bertrand Secretary. This company had been encamped near this city about fourteen days, and had enjoyed general good health, and have left this city with light hearts and buoyant spirits. It was uncertain for sometime whether this company would be sent through this season, therefore when it was announced that they could embark they were perfectly delighted, and ready to shout hosannah to God and the Lamb. This is the company that was said to be disaffected and determined not to proceed further on their journey, but we will say to their credit that they felt well notwithstanding their temporary disapointment, and as a general thing were fully resigned to their lot, and had pretty generally made up their minds to remain another year. They are consequently rejoicing in the Lord and praising Him for their deliverance.

Elder John S. Fulmer left this city on Thursday the 21st inst., by the F. X. Aubry. We purpose to ship one more company this season, which will be mostly of the passengers of the Ship Germanicus, who arrived here about twelve months since; with this company we shall roll off the entire emigration of this season from this city, and in a few weeks we hope to roll off the entire emigration not only from this city but also from Atchison, our hands will be measurably free, and our mind considerably releived, and we shall feel better prepared for the performance of our other duties and engagements.

We clip the following from the Squatter Sovereign of the 12th inst.; some might be inclined to think there was a little gas in this discription of Atchison and its commercial facilities; but we can assure our readers, from personal observation, that it is decidedly the best outfitting point that we have seen on any point of that upper country, and the city of Atchison bids fair, ere long to eclipse many older cities in that section of country:

Atchison an Outfitting Point.

To give our readers an idea of the amount of business done in our city, we give the names of some of the principle shippers who are now outfitting here. Livingston, Kinkead & Co., the Salt Lake Merchants, who had made arrangements to start from Leavenworth City, after outfitting one train at that place, which was four days arriving within five miles of this city, landed the ballance of their freight, (80 tons,) here, and will do all business which they may hereafter have, in the outfitting line, at Atchison. Mr. Blair, another merchant, with a large train and heavy freight, is also in our place, making arrangements to start for Utah, at an early day. Messrs. Hooper & Williams, will start from Atchison this season, about one hundred and fifty waggons, and probably a much larger train next spring. Mr. Kimball, with his extensive train, heavily freighted, is on the eve of departure for the Salt Lake valley. The merchants named above, comprise the chief business firms in Salt Lake City, and have control of the vast trade between that place and the States.

In addition to the large shipments of the traders named above, the entire Mormon emigration, which is of itself sufficient to build up a large town, starts from Atchison. We cannot give the exact number of waggons necessary to convey five thousand emigrants, with their goods and effects, so long a journey, but our readers can see that the number must be large. They have already landed at our wharf about a thousand tons of freight, and a much larger quantity is yet to arrive.

This is the first season that shippers have been suited in an outfitting point. Here all advantages offered, (separate, in other places,) are combined. The best range in the world, with a great quantity of good water, a healthy City, with a good landing; large and commodious warehouses, and stores well filled with goods, adapted to the wants of the emigration. Shippers who have examined this place, endorse it as the best outfitting point for the California, Oregon and Salt Lake Emigrants, on the Missouri river.

THE INFERNAL "NEWS."

We noticed in the Evening News, a few days since, certain lying statements concerning Mr. Orson Hyde, one of the Apostles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, who occupies an honorable and distinguished position in the Territorial administration of Utah. If we thought the lying editor had sufficient sensibility to appreciate his deserts, we would administer a flagellation upon his cowardly carcase, (spiritually,) that he would think himself a more contemptible dog than he really is. A creature that will take advantage of the absence of his neighbor, traduce and vilify his character, is an insignificant scoundrel, a mean puppy, a paltry coward, and unworthy the appellation of a man; such is a fac simile of the Evening News and its cousin german, the Intelligencer.

We wish to be charitable, but we freely confess that we have no charity for a liar, nor any sympathy with a slanderer—we hate the one, and despise the other; but there are some persons so adicted to lying, that they appear to possess a sort of mania for it. Such persons can scarcely be considered accountable for anything they say. We feel inclined to think that the News and Intelligencer are characters of this stamp, and if so, they deserve our pity rather than our censure.

Whether fripon coquin or fool, or tous les trois, we advise the editor of the News in particular, if he has any respect for himself, to abjure his lying propensities, and make restitution for his outrage, and be careful in the future how he speaks of his superiors and particularly those in Utah; for whilst Mormonism lives (which by the by will be forever) there will not be wanting a man to wield the pen, nor a Mormon printing press non plus, by which his foul hearted calumnies may be hurled back upon his guilty head.

We hope our friends will take this gentle warning, recall their false statements, make restitution for their wickedness, and never again open their mouths or their papers against the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, they may thereby peradventure find favor with the Lord, and be saved from the wrath to come.

Among other modest statements we were told that Orson Hyde had arrived in this city, and had come for the purpose of marrying ten more wives to whom he was affianced. Mr. Hyde, we believe, is in Carson valley, Utah, and has probably all the wives he wants, and if he has not, he will not be likely to come to St. Louis to search for them. We should rather expect them to go to Utah and call on him, for that would be more scriptural and consequently more consistent with the genius of Mormonism.

If it be thought that we have too much identified the News and Intelligencer in our reflections, we have only to say in reply, that they are equally deserving, they have notoriously identified themselves in their nefarious statements concerning us, and we wish to dispense with even hand, our favors between them, which we hope will be duly appreciated.

Correspondence.

CAMP OF ISRAEL, NEAR ST. LOUIS,
June the 17th, 1855.

TO PRESIDENT ERASTUS SNOW:

Dear Brother—You will do me a great favor if you will permit me to express a few of my sentiments and reflections through the columns of your excellent journal. I am now sitting in my tent making a part of the camp of Israel, now situated in a picturesque position in the environs of this city, awaiting orders to embark for the vallies of the mountains.

This is the second time that I have the honor of walking upon the American continent. About twenty years ago, according to the example of many other Europeans, I visited this continent with only one object in view, and that was to make a fortune. With this golden dream I visited New York, where I remained for a considerable time. I afterwards travelled in South America, and after enduring many vicissitudes, I returned to France—my own country, but had not the satisfaction of realizing altogether the object of my desires. I had barely succeeded in laying the foundation. Still remaining a worshiper of the golden calf, a foolish thought struck my mind which so facinated me, that I was soon plunged into new commercial speculations; deceived by the seducing hope of gain, I again left my home for a voyage of four years in the Indian and China seas. It was about the time of the first productions of the daguerreotype, and I travelled as a professor of that admirable invention. My debut was brilliant, and my first success exceeded all my hopes and expectations; but at the moment I was about to realize the dream of my whole life, I was made the victim of a deception, the most cruel and distressing. Whilst I was staying at Mannilla, the capital of the Archipelago of the Phillipine Islands, I lost nearly all my property, being robbed of nearly all I had. I was thus roughly chastised, by which means my eyes were opened in some measure, and I began to understand the folly and futility of human speculations.

In the year 1854, I returned to Paris poorer than when I left. I then devoted myself body and spirit to politics and more particularly to the study of questions brulantes posses upon the first French Revolution, which have been since developed by socialism. I labored for some years to realize, comprehend and appreciate the system advocated by Mr. Cabet—Communism, which the author has imagined and discribed in his voyage en Icarie, but which he has never been able to realize or practically demonstrate, although he had the city of Nauvoo and all the surrounding country to facilitate his schemes and consummate his dreams.

When Mormonism opertunely offered itself for my investigation I was in the office of the journal le Populaire in the city of Paris. It was there that the Elders of Israel first visited me and bore testimony to me of the restoration of the everlasting gospel. I was then one of the most ardent and zealous advocates of democracy and socialism in France; but from the first moment I heard the truth I was struck with its important character, and seized la portee immense of this great work which is vulgarly called Mormonism. After seriously and attentively examining and studying the merits of the work during three months, I was baptised in the river Seine by Elder John Taylor and soon rejoiced in the blessings of the gospel administered through one of the Apostles of Jesus Christ. I was born and reared up in the bosom of Catholicism, but had thrown of the yoke of priestcraft and the false traditions of my fathers for many years; yet I was distressed with doubt and uncertainty, and was assailed by scepticism in every form. I had, lived till then absolutely indifferent to any matters of religion.—My conversion was sudden, indeed it might be considered instantaneous. By my obedience to the gospel and by prayer I experienced a complete transformation, so that my eyes once blind were opened, and I can truly say that old things passed away and all things became new, so that I soon worshiped the things that I had despised, and on the other hand, despised the things I had formerly worshiped; and I am fully convinced that every member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints that has banished iniquity from his heart, is in possession of the same evidence of the divinity of this work, and the doctrines and principles that have been revealed unto us.

The Book of Mormon (in the translation of which I contributed considerably) was scarcely published in our tongue, when a new potitical revolution prohibited tout-a-coup the propagation of the gospel in France. I had desired for a long time to consecrate myself entirely to the work I had embraced. The arrival of the President of the Mission, A. L. Lamoreaux, accompanied by Elder James H. Hart, contributed to the realization of my desires. By their counsel, I left my occupation, my wife and my children and country, and took up my abode on the Island of Jersey, where I labored nearly two years, during which time I translated into the French tongue, the Voice of Warning, the book of Doctrine and Covenants, the articles published by Orson Pratt in the Seer, upon Celestial marriage, and compiled a book of French Hymns, numbering two hundred and seventeen. The manuscript of these three last are now in the hands of Elder Franklin D. Richards, President of the Churches Britanniques. The Voice of Warning was published at Jersey, and was confined to the issue of one thousand copies.

Having completed my labors in translating, &c., and permission being given to emigrate to Zion, I am now en route for the smiling vallies of the West. The first time I came to America, my only object was, as I before said, to accumulate wealth; such is not the motive of my emigration on this occasion. The gospel of Jesus Christ has taught me to put a correct value upon the perishable things of the world, and to appreciate the importance and real value of true riches.

I am going to Zion, that I may see the Prophets vivants, that I may hear their voice, that my faith may be strengthened by their instructions and counsels, that I may acquire additional light and intelligence, and be led onward toward perfection and obtain my endowments in the Temple of the Lord, and my title to an inheritance among the Saints; and contemplate with my own faculties, and behold with my own eyes the rising grandeur of the work of the last days, enfin. I am going to Zion to carry my grain of sand to the foundation of the kingdom of God upon the earth.

Chief President, in my cogitations I have looked upon every member of the Church of Jesus Christ, as having some special mission to accomplish upon the earth. I feel inclined to believe, that mine is to contribute to Evangelizer la France, when her doors are fully opened to our Missionaries. The gospel of the kingdom must be preached and proclaimed upon the house-tops among all people and nations of the old world. France, Italy, Spain and Germany, have systematically closed their doors against us, but I believe the present revolutionary movements in the East, will all tend to break down the barriers that have hitherto barricaded the progress of truth in those nations.

The present war in the East, will soon become general, the revolutionary element that the Western powers have hitherto held in abeyence, will be by themselves openly invoked to counterbalance the influence of the powers of the North, and from this universal shock of antagonistic interests, we shall behold events the most unexpected and astonishing. European soil is everywhere undermined, the great explosion of the revolutionary volcano will be consequently attended with the most disastrous consequences to the present European organizations. I should not be surprised if before two years have passed away, that the present dynasties should cease to exist, and a general Republic under the name of the United States of Europe should be proclaimed upon their smoking ruins.

If my ideas and anticipations should be realized, the Elders of Israel, who are initiated into the merits of our tongue, will have a magnificent field open for their labors, for it is estimated that there are upwards of 40,000,000 of souls who speak the French language on the continent of Europe.

I must now conclude, but before doing so, permit me to present to you my lively and sincere thanks for the kind reception you have given me, and for the facility and opportunity you have furnished me of persueing my journey to Zion.

May the Tout Puissant pour out upon you and your labors, the plenitude of His bendictions, both temporal and spiritual, is the earnest prayer of your very humble servant and brother,

LOUIS A. BERTRAND,

The Gathering Place---Location of a New City.

HONOLULA, Oct. 15, 1854.

Dear Brother George—The blessing of prosperity seems to attend all the exertions that are being made upon the Islands for the spread of truth, and the native Saints are fast increasing in a spirit to obey counsel, and to assist in sustaining those missions that have been adopted for their benefit. Soon after you left, brother Karren and myself were sent to Lanai to select a place to commence operation, and to attend to any buisiness that might be deemed neccessary relative to the preparing a place for gathering. We selected a beautiful spot, an eminence just overlooking the valley of "Ephraim," containing perhaps some two hundred acres, as the site for a city which we called the city of "Joseph." This, in company with Elders Green and Hammond, we dedicated to the Lord, for the benefit of the Hawaiian Saints; and we felt to prophesy that from that place salvation should go forth to this people. Many of the brethren were on hand as pioneers, and already engaged in putting in seed, and evincing an energy and zeal which with them we had never before witnessed, Since that period we have learned of their continued prosperity, together with an increase of facilities and help.

The press &c., arrived on the 8th, and it would do you good to see the seventeen large bales of printing paper, each containing ten reams, all in good condition. The native brethren gather around with joy and emotion on their countenances, while beholding the press and material, and evince a great anxiety to see it in immediate operation.

Our books came duty free, but I am told by the collector of customs that it is a doubt whether our press will also pass free, as he does not recognize us as a "Christian community." I spent not less than an hour in showing him and others who were present, that we were the only "Christian community;" and you may believe that they heard some things they will never forget. I then addressed a note to the collector, to be presented to the Privy Council, demanding exemption for our mission property, and referring him to the law providing for the same, which I think will result in its release from duties.

Brother Keeler reports from a Conference on Hawaii over 800 members.

Your friend and brother,

BENJAMIN JOHNSON.

ELDER GEORGE Q. CANNON.

Walluku, Maui, S. I., Oct. 6, 1854.

Dear Brother George—The work of the gathering has commenced. I came home from Honolulu, and went straight to Walluku-nei and Kulu, and chose ten men from each place, as pioneers to go directly to Lanai, and commence sowing and planting. Brothers Kinoo Pelio and Kadanui were chosen leaders. They all joined me at Lahaina in about a week's time, with their tools, provisions, &c., &c. Brothers Karren and Johnson also arrived about the same time from Honolulu, and we all repaired to Lanai. Brother Lewis blessed brother Johnson before he left Oahu, and told him he should know the spot were to commence operations for farming, and also for building, when he should come unto it; and it was even so, the spot was pointed out by revelation where to commence farming, and also where to lay out the city.

At the dedication of our meeting-house we had a glorious time, and the Sunday following we had meetings nearly all day long, barely rested long enough to eat. The rain poured down beautifully for about five hours, wetting the ground for them to plant on the morrow, just as we had asked the Lord to do. I could realize in some degree the benefit of the gathering from these few meetings; there were none present of the Church, except those of strong faith, and they had come there according to the word of the Lord; therefore, He was ready to bless them, and He did so beyond all that I could have expected. So it will be when the multitude is gathered, their faith will be increased through sacrifices they have made; then the Lord will bless abundantly. Last week we succeeded in getting four yoke of oxen landed here. We took an old scow of B. F. Rolles & Co., and took them all over at a load. Whites and native all joined in saying that we would never land in Lanai with them, but the tides and winds would take us to sea, and we would be lost, &c.; but the Lord proved them all false prophets. We went over in the night, and had very smooth time; had three whale boats to tow the scow. We pulled and tugged all night long, and about eight o'clock in the morning we landed safe. Oh! how my heart swelled with gratitude to my Heavenly Father, for His protecting care that had been over us during the night. When we returned to Lahaina, many were ready to congratulate us on our escape from what they considered a perilous trip.

The other islands being so far off, and our having no vessel yet, it will be a hard matter for them to send many pioneers; so it will fall mostly on Manie-nei to bear off this work---that is, the commencement of it, and I must say they are ready and willing.

F. A. HAMMOND.

ELDER GEORGE Q. CANNON.

THE WORST "ISM."—"Harry," inquired a friend, the other day, "Which do you consider the worst of the 'isms,' now prevalent?" Abolitionism?" inquired his friend.—"No." "Nativeism?" "No, no."—"Then I must give it up," replied he; "expound." "Why Rheuma*tism*."

MODESTY once effaced can never be restored.

FOR THE LUMINARY.

LIVE! LIVE!!

BY W. G. MILLS.

Man was made to work and strive—
Think and act, and persevere;
Keep his energies alive
To o'ercome all trials here.

Not when fall'n, to whine and lie
In distress, and long to die,
But when down to rise again—
Feel to live, nor live in vain.

If misfortunes bear you down
By misconduct of your own;
Live! and nobly try to rise,
For the future be more wise.

If misfortunes that you bear,
Through the faults of others are;
Live! and proudly battle such,
You cannot yourself reproach.

If your character and name
Sland'rous, envious tongues defame;
Live the more! and faithful prove,
Time the aspersion will remove.

If there dwell around your path,
Enemies of spite and wrath;
Live! and work with energy,
Frustrate their malignity.

In the circles that you move
Have you faithful friends you love?
Live! to comfort and to bless
Them in fortune and distress.

If within your soul there be
Hopes of immortality,
Live to God! and so prepare
To enjoy the blessings there.

Man was made to work and strive,
Think and act, and persevere;
Keep his energies alive
To o'ercome all trials here.

Mormon Battalion Festival at Parowan, March 13, 1855.

COMMITTEE OF ARRANGEMENTS.

John Steele, E. Dolten, H. M. Alexander, for Parowan; Geo. S. Clark, for Cedar; and Rufus Allen, for Harmony.

The festivities of the day were ushered in at a quarter to 10 o'clock, A. M, by the playing of the assembly call, by the martial music, at which time the members of the Battalion, at Parowan, and from Cedar and Harmony, together with the Presidency of the Stake, the high council, the bishop and council, and the pioneers of 1847, promptly met upon the parade ground, and answered to roll call. All present, or accounted for.

Under the direction of Sergeant O. B. Adams, marshal of the day, the company fell into line in the following order:—1st, the front guard, commanded by H. M. Alexander; 2nd, the martial music; 3rd, the pioneers, with appropriate emblems; 4th, the Mormon Battalion, commanded by Lt. W. W. Willis; 5th, the chaplain; 6th, the Presidency and high council; 7th, the bishop and council; 8th, and some distance in the rear to bring up the stragglers, the rear guard, commanded by F. T. Whitney.

The Battalion then marched through the streets of the city to the Council Hall, which was tastefully and appropriately decorated for th occasion, and deposited arms.

At twelve o'clock, the assembled company say down to tables covered with the substantials and delicacies requisite to form an elegant and plentiful repast, which was blessed by the chaplain, and soon yielded to the vigorous and well-plrnned attack of the Battalion, assisted by the faith and works of the ladies, led by their gallant officers.

The company then adjourned to other apartments, while the tables were being removed, and the room prepared for dancing; and soon the floor was occupied by an orderly and joyous company, all seeming to enjoy the lively and exhilarating music, and the Spirit of God which pervaded every breast.

At different times during the evening, refreshments were handed round to the company, and the enjoyments of the day were varied by speeches from Lt. Willes and others of the Battalion and pioneers, taking a retrospective view of their trials and sufferings, with many interesting incidents and anecdotes, toasts, &c.; followed by Pres. J. C. L. Smith in a few appropriate and instructive remarks in relation to the past, the present, and the future events connected with our progress as a people, and the duties required of us to secure our present and future salvation.

Nothing occurred to mar the enjoyment of the day, but peace and good order characterized all its proceedings, and the universal feeling was manifested, that as the Battalion had formerly gone forth in obedience to the authorities of this church for its salvation temporally as well as spiritually, that should their services be required a second time by our leaders, they would be found ready and willing to respond to the call.

Too much praise cannot be awarded to the committee, for the perfection of their arrangements, and to the waiters and others who assisted in carrying them out; and may those who took their lives in their hands, and suffered the most trying hardships for the salvation of their brethren, live to enjoy many more such reunions.

LATER FROM EUROPE.

NEW YORK, June 20.—The Asia arrived at Halifax this morning.

The steamship St. Louis, from Havre, arrived at Qurantine at half past nine last night, with four days later news.

By this arrival we have important intelligence announcing that the Vienna Conferences reassembled on the 4th and almost immediately dissolved, leaving the war destinies of the Four Powers to be arbitrated by the sword alone. At the meeting, the Austrian Minister offered a new proposition, the nature of which is not explained to the Russian representative. This document he wished to transmit to St. Petersburg, but the ambassadors of France and England not being permitted to accede to such a course, the meeting adjourned sine die.

The allied successes in the Sea of Asoff are confirmed, and additional advantages obtained by them reported.

The Russians had abandoned Sujack and Kertch after burning the principal buildings, and leaving behind them sixty guns and six mortars, which they had rendered unserviceable.

The Allied squadron had appeared at Genti, and having landed a body of seamen and marines, drove the Russians from the place, destroying all their food depots and vessels of war. Thus the Russians lost in four days an immense quantity of provisions, and 240 vessels, employed exclusively in provisioning the troops in the Crimea, with 6,000,000 of rations destined for the garrison of Sebastopol.

There is nothing new from the Crimea, but all the allied generals had had a Council War, at which it was said an immense and most important move was decided on.

The French miners were making rapid advances on the works.

SPAIN

Was more quiet, but the insurrections had been of a serious nature.

The Duke de Montpensier had taken a political position which caused uneasiness.

THE SIOUX INDIANS.

The following is an extract of a letter to a gentleman in this city, dated,

NEAR MANKETO, Min., May 31.—Business is good here, and has been so for a few weeks past.—The emigration is very great, in fact, they are literally eating us out of house and home. The season has been very dry, and somewhat cold, but we have had no hard frosts to cut off our wild fruits, and within a few days we have had refreshing showers, which are bringing the crops along rapidly.

The Sioux here are getting themselves finely into business. They threatened us all the fall and winter with war. Well, there is a broad play ground. The small pox broke out among them and swept through them as fire sweeps through the woods.—Whole families, were thus destroyed, which so weakened them that they had enough to do without doing much in the way of war. This spring, deputations arrived from the Western Bands, who undertook to get up a general alliance, but failed to effect it generally, but yet succeeded in doing enough to kill off some of our cattle and steal some property. They raised a few volunteers, who succeeded in killing a Major of the U. S. Army on the Missouri river.

Their chifes here were required to deliver up the murderers, but as the chieftainship among the Dacotahs is merely nominal, they failed to deliver them from the fact that in the first place they could not do so, and in the next place, were not willing. A young chief was arrested for the murder and put unguard at Fort Ridgely, from which he escaped, but in doing so, he was fired upon by the sentinel and wounded in the leg. Taking these things all together, and our utter refusal to sell goods or supplies on credit to them at all, or ammunition to those only whom we know to be penceable, has caused a coldness among them that would break into open hostilities, if there was any "show" whatevr for them, on which latter point we strive to enlighten them to the best of our knowledge.

MORMONS BEFORE SEBASTOPOL.

The Saints find their religion to be no hindrance in fight. Like Cromwell's men, we think they knock the harder and face the music of the battle field the bolder, for their piety.

We are almost amused to see by our last Salt Lake City papers, that the Saints are actually hammering away at the Russians in the Crimea. The Deseret News publishes a letter from two branches of the Church in "the East"—the "Floating Branch" (for the use of mariners, we presume) and the "Expeditionary Force Branch" (for the rank and file on foreign service we fancy.) We quote.

"From a letter from Elder H. Russell, 22d September, Sebastopol. I learn on the 20th a battle was fought at a place called Alma, (2,000 killed) in which our brethren were engaged, but no one was even wounded. Elder West of the 93rd regiment had baptized one. From other letters, I learn of the baptism of two others, and that many were expected to enter the church when they could get into winter quarters."

That "one" that was baptized by him of the 93d, we should like to see. We will bet a year's subscription that he is a Huntingdonshire man, and very awful when placed behind a charged bayonet, with authoritative instructions to go ahead and keep moving. We are afraid however that his baptism was not a solemn scene. The Zouaves must have made fun of it. Those men are not reverent. To resume:

"From Priest S. Ballard, (Rifle brigade) I learn that he was invited by some Methodists to preside over their meetings. This invitation he accepted; but having convinced one of them of the truth of the work, the remainder broke up, and do not even meet among themselves. The one continues to investigate the work with increasing satisfaction, and is expected, together with another, to be baptized shortly. Brother Ballard is creating considerable stir in the Rifle brigade. He and brother Paul of the Royal Sappers, meet nearly every night for prayer, that God will direct them to the honest in heart. If the work takes a start in that division of the army, it may extend from that to another, and so on. At present the baptisms have taken place in one division only."

We would like to see brother Ballard. There must be something in the man who can make a religious convert in the midst of the siege of Sebastopol, and at the same time keep his back harmless from the Marshall's rattan for neglect of duty. He and brother Paul of the Sappers and Miners are fighting men, that England were well off, if they were numbered to her by entire regiments instead of by units.

"Elder A. Downes, of the Floating Branch, has two persons ready for baptism the first opportunity they can get. He has sent me an order for books, &c. All the brethren of that Branch, and those of E. F. Branch were in good standing.

From the Branch in Malta, I may say we are united and rejoicing in the work. Although cholera has raged on every hand, and taken away many, yet it was only permitted to pay us a hasty visit, the ordinance of anointing proving, with God's blessing, efficacious in one moment, for which we ever feel to praise God every time we think of it."

Friends, is not a faith that flourishes under the cannonade of Sebastopol rather hardy? Wise politicians will not treat it as men do old hats lying in their path. Indeed it can't be booted with any sort of success. The Pauls of the Sappers and Miners are of the Church militant, as they also claim to be of the church of God.—[Buffalo Democrat.

CORN DODGERS.

Extract from the letter of a Yankee Schoolmaster in Kentucky:

"Corn Dodgers" I like. Why don't they have such "fixins" in the North? You have white corn, and salt, and water a plenty, and that's all you want. With a meat dinner there is nothing ahead of a dodger besides the plate to pick on. You don't want butter or anything with it; it's a dodger, and that's all you wish for or care for;—and you break it by the side of your plate and go on with the main dish; you take a pick at it, and keep talking and eating.

A Dodger—It's a substratum—a glorious commonality—a community of sociality. A Dodger—It's both Democratic and Republican—it's simple enough to be Puritan. Tell your good landlady to introduce them at once. I'll guarantee it'll take like hot corn when it first comes. If it don't, send me a remonstrance and I'll bear the blame.

The meal must not be to fine—it 'aint dodger if it is. You must not chunk, 'em about and gingebread 'em over—it aint a dodger if you do. Course meal—white meal—salt and water, stirred up—fumbled up, three times as big as a hen's egg, and baked with finger marks all around, brown and crispy, steaming hot, that's a dodger, Sir—Kentucky—Dodger—Hard Times—Bad Potatoes—Try 'em—Try 'em.

CRIME IN YANKEE-LAND.

Looking over the Newburyport Herald, an excellent paper printed in Essex county, Massachusetts, we perceive, in a list of indictments found at a recent term of one of its criminal courts, that, next to breaches of the liquor law, figure adultery cases.—How happens this among the "moral and religious" population of that section? Has the penchant for the indulgence punished under the name we have italicised received any new development with the increase of isms there, thus showing that the growth of unchastity is perfectly compatible with the "prodigious moral, social and political reforms" of which there has been so loud a boast in that quarter of late years? Or is it that people there are setting their faces more sternly against offences—that they look on them with a less degree of allowance—and are swifter in the pursuit and punishment of delinquencies? The solution of this problem, as of similar ones, would be acceptable to that class of old fogies who, having not yet quite purged all reverence out of their composition, do not believe that our fathers were so infinitely worse than their sons that we should disown them, by denying that they had any virtue or set any examples, except such as should be avoided.—[Morning Herald.

WOMAN'S RIGHTS.

The Legislature of Wisconsin has recently passed a law relative to the rights of married women. It is as follows:

"Any married woman whose husband, either from drunkenness, profligacy, or from any other cause, shall neglect or refuse to provide for her support or for the stpport and education of her children, shall have the right in her own name to transact buisiness and to receive and collect her own earuings and the earnings of her minor children and apply the same for her own support and the support aud education of such children, free from the control and interference of her husband or any person claiming the same or claiming to be released from the same by or through her husband: Provided, That if it is denied by plea that either of the causes enumerated in this act as entitling the married woman to sue in her own name exists in point of fact then the issue upon this plea shall be tried and determined by the jury trying the case with the other issues submitted."

PRACTICAL PREACHING.

We have heard of various specimens of negro eloquence in our time, but never actuall listened to an illustration till yesterday. Dropping into an African meeting-house in the outskirts of the city, we found the sermon just commenced. The topic seemed to be the depravity of the human heart, and the sable divine thus illustrated hts argument:

"Bredren, when I was in Virginia, one day de ole woman's kitchen table got broke, an' I was sent into de woods to cut a tree to make a new leaf for it. So I took de axe on de shoulder, and I wander into the depths of de forest.

"All natur was beautiful as a lady going to de wedding. De leaves glistened on de maple tree like new quarter-dollars in de missionary box, de de sun shone as brilliant and natur looked as gay as looked a buck rabbit in a parsley garden, and de little bell round de old sheep's neck tinkled softly and musically in de distance.

"I spied a tree suitable for de purpose, and I raised de axe to cut into de trunk. It was a beautiful tiee! De branches reach to de four corners of de earth, and raise up high to de air above, and the squir'ls hop about in de limbs like little angels flopping deir wings in de kingdom ob heaven. Dat tree was full ob promise, my friends, jest like a great many ob you.

"Den I cut into de trunk, and make de chips fly like de mighty scals dropping from Paul's eyes.—Two, three out I gub dat tree, and alas it was holler in de butt!

"Dat tree was mucn like you, my friends—full ob pronise outside, but holler in de butt!"

"The groans from the amen corner of the room were truly contrite and affecting, but we will venture a small wager that was the most practical sermon preached in the city on that day at least.—N. Y. Exchange.

Men often blush to hear what they were not ashamed to act.

A KNOTTY TEXT.

There was once an itinerent preacher in West Tennessee, who, possessing considerable natural eloquence, had gradually become possessed of the idea that he was an extraordinary biblical scholar. Under this delusion, he would very frequently, at the close of his sermon, ask any of his congregation, who might have a "knotty text" to unravel, to repeat it and he would explain it at once, however it might have troubled less distinguished divines. On this occasion, in a large audience, he was particularly pressing for some one to propound a text, but no one presuming to do so, he was about to sit down without an opportunity of showing his learning, when a chap by the door announced that he had a Bible matter of "great concern." The preacher quite animatedly professed his willingness and ability, and the congregation was in a great excitement.

"What I want to know," said the outsider, "is, whether Job's turkey was a hen or a gobler?"

The expounder looked confused, and the congregation tittered, and the questioner capped the climax by exclaiming, "I fotch him down on the first question!"

From this time forward the practice of asking for "difficult passages" was avoided.

PRENTICE'S LAST.—Two or three papers in the interior of Kentucky are occasionally attacking us, and a friendly correspondent asks why we do not "castigat them." The truth is, they are altogether too small. A woman once handed her crying baby to her husband, requesting him to make it hush. It continued to cry till she got out of patience, and then she called out to her husband, "I do wish you would spank that baby." "Yes," said he. He fumbled about for some time and at length she angrily exclaimed. "Ain't you going to spank the baby!"—"I would," he replied, "but, indeed, wife I can't find any place big enough to spank."—[Louisville Journal.

MARRIED AND SINGLE.—How is it that girls can always tell a married man from a single one? The fact is indisputable. The philosophy of it is beyond our ken. Blackwood says, "that the fact of matrimony or bachelorship is written so legibly in a man's appearance that no ingenuity can conceal it. Everywhere, there is some inexplicable instinct that tells us whether an individual (whose name, fortune and circumstances are totally unknown,) be or not a married man. Whether it is a certain subdued look, such as that which characterizes the lions in a menagerie, and distinguishes them from the lords of the desert, we cannot tell; but that the truth is so, we positively affirm.—[Ex.

THE WEATHER.

The warm showers that fall now almost daily are considered unfavorable to the wheat crop, which is at a stage in which it is likely to suffer from the prevalence of such weather. The frequent rains interfere too, with the cultivation of corn. Whether the promise this year of a wheat crop heavier than was ever gathered here before are to be redeemed, will depend on the state of the weather for the next two or three weeks. A farmer remarked to us that there was some reason to fear that the rust, which was beginning to make its appearance in the wheat fields, would cut off the crop one-half.—[Morning Herald.

PARSON GREEN is in the habit sometimes, of drawing upon a barrel of sermons bequeathed him by his father, who was also a minister. Upon one occasion, he got hold of a sermon, by mistake. whic the old gentleman had once preached to the State prison convict. It opened well, and the congregation were becoming deeply interested, when all at once the parson surprised them with the information, that, "had it not been for the clemency of the Governer, every one of them would have been hung a long time ago!"

FOUNDLINGS.—The practice of dropping babies has become almost a mania of late in the city.—Monday evening there was one found at No. 427 Fourth street, and taken to the Almshouse. The same evening there was another found at No. 72 Rivington street, supposed to have been left there to the care of the world by its mother. A letter was found by the side of the child, stating that destitution was the cause of the heartless desertion. It also was taken to the Almshouse.—[N. Y. Times.

A crowd of people (says the New York Journal of commerce) gathered around Stewart's store, yesterday afternoon, having, on its panels, a crest, &c., and otherwise decorated with various devices, all of California gold. The horses wore harnesses mounted with gold, very elaborately cut and polished. The establishment is said to belong to "a returned Californian."

FOR SANTA FE.—We learn from the Kansas City Enterprise thet there were about one hundred waggons loaded at that place last week for Santa Fe and other places, and that they would start from that point during the present season, ten thousand waggons at least. There were landed at the wharf, during the same week, four million pounds of freight.

Some sorts of charity will swallow the egg and give away the shell.

RUM.

A song for the rights of man—
The day of his triumph is come—
The women and children have no rights
In this glorious age of rum—
Rum for the laborer's arm;
Rum for the scholar's head;
Rum for the man that lies in the street,
And the man that lies in the bed.
Drunk! drunk! drunk!
On Jefferson, Market, and Main—
Drunk! drunk! drunk!
Till the lamp-posts reel again.

The little girls have no bread;
The boys have no shoes to their feet;
The grate is as cold as the pavement stones,
The father is drunk in the street—
Drunk! drunk! drunk!
There's whisky at every door:
There's a place for whisky on every square,
But no shelter for the poor.
There is darknes in the halls
The voice of joy is dumb;
And the graves, and jails, and lunatic cells,
Are filled with the spoils of rum.

John Blunt worked all the week—
His fortune was his time;
He drew his wages Saturday night,
Six dollars—every dime;
And as he sought his home
Some friendly voice did say—
"Valk in! valk in, young shentlemens,
And hear de organ play."
There was music, and gas, and wine,
But not a kind word to save;
And Monday morning John's children saw
Their father sent to the "Cave."

A boat has left our shores
To the Southern market bound,
But the pilot was drunk and the boat was sunk,
And a hundred people were drown'd.
There was whisky enough for all,
But not a life boat to save—
For the beauty of women and the strength of man
There was a watery grave.
Drunk! drunk! drunk!
Let the world do all it can;
Let children starve and women pray,
We will not barter our rights away—
To drink is the right of man!

To the city fathers we call:
If you have children and wives
How can you turn your eyes away
When we plead with you for our lives?
If you have hearts of flesh,
Hear us while we entreat
That you break the foul deceitful snare
Set for our naked feet.
If you regard us not,
And no compassion take—
When the Lord demands your stewardship,
What answer will you make?

CONFUSION AND TURMOIL.

The difficulty of a Compromise—The Naturalization Laws—The Catholic Question—The Slavery Question—What is to be Done? etc.

PHILADELPHIA, June 8, 1855.—The Know-Nothing Council and the outsiders, as well those belonging to the organization as those unconnected with, but ready to join it the moment they see anything to be gained thereby, are all in confusion and disorder. Many of these latter are old broken down politicians of the two old parties, who are puzzled by this new movement, and cannot divest themselves of their old party traditions. Others, again, are new men, who are very good for most purposes, but who are wholly ignorant of the practical working of political organizations on a great scale, and who are bewildered by machinery to which they are strangers. One thing is clear already. There are no leading spirits or master minds in the convention at Philadelphia. There is no individual there who is gifted with the commanding power or overwhelming intellect which John C. Calhoun, Andrew Jackson, Daniel Webster, and Henry Clay have each evinced in their several spheres in former times.—The southern men of the Grand Council, with some individual exceptions, are generally more intelligent in matters of political business than the northerners. This arises from the peculiar social condition of northern and southern men. In the North, of late years, politics have become disreputable. Men of talent have avoided the political arena, and taken refuge elsewhere—in trade, the professions, or literature. For some time past none but the unprincipled, and men who have proved their inability to earn a living otherwise, have become politicians in the North, or sought political notoriety. Hence an obvious decline in the character of the class in your section of the country. Men in the South receive a better education, and one more suited to enable them to engage in political life. They study the science of politics with more care, and hence become far superior to the northerners in practical knowledge as legislators or executive men. These distinguishing traits of character are quite as discernible among the Know-Nothings of Philadelphia as they have been of late among the old parties.

But great difficulties surround the Council, and seem only to increase as they are probed and discussed. On the general question of the naturalization laws there is not much diversity of opinion. It is generally conceded by all parties that they should either be gradually changed or gradually abolished altogether. But between those who advocate either extreme it may yet prove difficult to frame a compromise.

The same difficulty presents itself on the religious question. It has been settled in a preliminary way by the exclusion of the Roman Catholic members from Louisiana. Yet there is a strong feeling here in favor of religious toleration per se, and for confining the hostility of the Order to political Catholicity; or that kind of interfering with the political condition of the various classes of society of which the conduct of Archbishop Hughes and the Protestant clergy of New England has occasionally furnished examples.

But the great difficulty for the council is the slavery question. There seems to be but one possible mode of solving this difficulty, and that is to allow slavery, like religion, to be an open question to all parties in all sections; to form a great national Know-Nothing party on the basis of opposition to the indiscreet and corrupt policy of the present administration, and to allow each section to entertain, unmolested, its local opinions in reference to slavery, just as it entertains its private views on religion.—Even this view, it must be admitted, would only be temporary; the question must be met ultimately in Congress, and an understanding had on the terms on which new States are to be admitted, whether free or slave, whether according to the constitution and the practice of former Congresses or not. Several members of the convention, and others with whom I have conversed, consider this the only way of preserving in its integrity our national organization.—They say, let the slavery question be settled by Congress. If Congress, at a future session, cannot agree on a practical compromise, let it dissolve, and adjourn; let the question be referred to the people, and a convention called to revise the constitution and provide a new one, if the old one will not answer the purpose. It is very true that the present constitution was framed by wise and practical men, at the close of the revolutionary war, when every faculty of theirs was in full play, and their wits roused to the utmost degree. But, at the same time, the country then contained but three millions of people. Their interests were of far less magnitude and less exciting than ours. We now count over twenty-five millions of people and thirty-one States. Hence our circumstances are very different from what they were at the time the present constitution was adopted.

Unless the slavery question is disposed of in some practical, friendly way, by a revision of the constitution and adapted to the growth and increase of the country, angry feelings are sure to arise, alienation will take place between the North and the South, and the ultimate result will be insurrection and civil war. Hence the proposal we have heard, if the difficulty cannot be settled in any other way, to call a new convention of the States and form a new constitution. If the representatives of the various States cannot agree upon a compromise that will suit the present time and give a promise of durability, then the North and the South had far better seperate amicably, and organize seperate republics with seperate governments

One thing is certain—the adoption of this line of policy would compel real patriots and business men to reflect on the approaching crisis. The mere ephemeral politicians who have used this slavery question for their privave corrupt purposes would be floored and thrown overboard.

It is absurd to expect that the free States can ever be pro-slavery, or the slave States anti-slavery. Such a thing is as utterly impossible as that a Catholic will undertake a defence of Protestantism or a Presbyterian of Episcopacy. The two old parties long acted on the principle of dragooning the North and the South into an apparent uniformity of sentiment on the subject, and the consequence has been that they are now both disorganized and ruined.

If any such plan as this could be adopted, the party might be completely organized, and with pro-slavery principles in the South and anti-slavery principles in the North, might go into the next State and Presidential elections—leaving it to the meeting of Congress or to the national convention to be called for the purpose, to settle the question of slavery forever. I will make further inquiries on these interesting and important points and ideas, and will give you the result of my researches.

Among other curious phenomena attending the meeting of the pending convention, the great number of persons belonging to the old political parties, who have crowded here with various views and designs, is perhaps the most noteworthy. Several of the leading Seward men from your State, and several politicians from New England who are affiliated with them, are very busy, of course, with the object of breaking up the convention. There is here a member from a western State, whose name I do not now remember, who passes for a Know-Nothing, and high in the third degree, and yet is known as a Seward man, and reports the proceedings daily for the New York Tribune. Many of the members both from the North and the South talk with considerable indiscretion.

Kenneth Raynor, of North Carolina, speaks in a very hostile manner of the policy of the New York Herald. He considers it an enemy of ours, from the freedom and the sarcasm with which it has occasionally discussed the Know-Nothing movements.

The Hon. James Brooks, ex-member of Congress, is also here, and frequently denounces the Herald to southern and western men, as a foreign organ, edited by a renegade Scotchman, who has no other object than the gain of money, and lives on what he has filched from the principal men of New York.—Poor James forgets that he himself still owes from three to five thousand dollars to George Law for the expenses of his election to Congress.

Another friend of ours is Prentice, of the Louisville Journal: he is very severe on you and the Herald.

I have other amusing anecdotes and opinions which I may send you another time. They deserve to be recorded for the benefit of the Order.—[Correspondence New York Herald.

A TELEGRAPH TO EUROPE.

The idea of a submarine telegraph between Europe and America, having long been regarded as merely visionary, is now about to be embodied into the most palpable practicability. A line of communication is to be constructed by a joint company, composed of men of wealth on both sides of the water, and the whole work is engaged to be completed so as to be able to transmit instantaneous telegraphic messages from continent to continent by the beginnig of 1858; that is, in little more than two years and a half. According to the prescribed plan of operations, the European company will lay the wires from the coast of Ireland to Newfoundland, from which place the American company will continue the work to the city of New York. The line crossing the Atlantic will be 1,750 miles in length, and the American portion 1,200; making in all nearly 3,000 miles.

Ocean soundings, which have been made from time to time, show that a sandy plain, covered with comparatively shoal water, extends from Newfoundland all across the Atlantic till within two hundred miles of the west of Ireland. Into this shoal the line will be sunk. The cable is to be a bundle of six telegraphic wires, and will weigh eight tons to the mile. Its whole length will of course be so heavy, that several steamers will be required to convey the material. When one vessel has paid out her complete coil of wire, the extremity will be joined to the portion which comprises another cargo, and so on until the several ship-loads are connected in one continuous line. But little difficulty is apprehended in the process of laying the wires. When the cable is once sunk, it will remain forever in its place. On account of its great weight and slender compass, it will speedily become imbedded in the bottom, out of the reach of accidents from ship's anchors, the attacks of marine animals, and the disturbance of the elements.

This great enterprise is not to be looked upon as a mere colossal experiment, which, on being tried, may prove a disastrous failure. It will be remembered that the English government have already a line of wire laid from Balaklava to Varna, of which three hundred and fifty miles under water; and if a submarine telegraph of this length has been constructed, and is now in successful operation, there is no reason why the width of the Atlantic may not be measured by a similar line. We hail the prosecution of this gigantic work, and look forward to its triumphant completion, not only as affording a closer and more convenient medium of communication between the Old World and the New, but as a sure pledge of more sympathetic connection of the nations of the world than has yet existed in history, which, under the influence of Christianity, shall finally lead all mankind into one universal brotherhood.—[N. Y. Observer.

"I'm a done sucker," as the Illinois child said when the mother weaned him. They have curious babies in Suckerdom.

The reason why it succeeds.—THE Mustang Liniment has attained its enormous popularity, and almost universal use, simply because it gives better satisfaction, accomplishes more good, relieves more pain, and heals more wounds and sores than any other preparation ever defore offered to the afflicted. Every bottle that is used, speaks for itself—tells its own tale in the relief it gives, and the cure it effects. And then one who has suffered, pehaps, long years with pain, without hope of relief, and finds in this Liniment an almost instantaneous remedy, cannot help but speak in its praise, and recommend it in the best terms to all he sees suffering. It needs no other recommendation than a trial.

MCLEAN'S VOLCANIC OIL LINIMENT is truly a celebrated remedy, and has done more to alleviate human suffering than any other remedy ever discovered.
One or two applications will relieve the most severe pain, bruise or sprain.
Two bottles will cleanse, purify, and heal the foulest ulcer or sore, and it will heal the most severe burn or scald without a scar.
Every family should have a supply constantly on hand, for use in time of need.
Read the following extract of a letter, which is incontestable proof of its wonderful efficacy:
A BLIND MAN RESTORED TO SIGHT.
J. H. MCLEAN—Dear Sir: * * * I have been suffering for four years with rheumatic sore eyes, being at times altogether blind. I procured the advice of several physicians, but none of them could do me any good. By the advice of a friend, I applied your "Volcanic Oil Liniment," according to the directions around the bottle, and it has cured me permanently. I have used it since for bruises, pains, &c., and it has always given immediate relief. I live on the main road near Farmington.
Yours, respectfully, JOHN H. ALLERD.
Jefferson county, Mo.
For horses it is far superior to any other remedy for curing lameness, bruises, cuts, old sores, swellings, &c.
We say, then, to all who may be suffering from external diseases, call at once and get a supply. Thousands of bottles are sold (and used) daily, and we have never heard of a case where it has failed in giving relief when properly applied.

MEDICINE FOR THE BILLION!
A Certain Remedy for all Diseases of
MAN OR ANIMALS,
Requiring an External Application.
Warranted in every Case for which it is Recommended!

THE MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT!
Unlike all other popular medicines, it is used by many prominent members of the faculty, and many of the public Hospitals. Their prejudices have yielded to indisputable and incontrovertible demonstrations of cures performed where their remedies had failed.
It has cured more cases of
RHEUMATISM
than any other medicine ever used. Its efficacy in this terrible disease is acknowledged by all who have used it. It not only cures the complaint, but appears to give a vigor and elasticity to the limbs, before unknown, thus performing a double office.

A FEW TESTIMONIALS.
PATH FINDER OFFICE, May 11, 1854.
G. W. WESTBROOK:—
Please send me by the bearer three large bottles of your Mexican Mustang Liniment, as I wish to take it up to my place in Vermont, not thinking it advisable to do without it. I have used it in my family and on my horses, and have found it invaluable. Yours,
J. T. WHITNEY.

ELIZABETHTOWN, TENN., May 25, 1855.
MR. G. W. WESTBROOK:—
Dear Sir—It affords me much pleasure in saying to you that the Mexican Mustang Liniment outsells any medicine that I have ever had for sale, and comes nearer doing what it promises to do. Send me another supply, as I am nearly out. Yours respectfully,
JOHN SINGLETRAY, P. M.

PHILADELPHIA, June 11, 1854.
MR. G. W. WESTBROOK:
Sir—My son was afflicted with a swelling upon the knee joint, which confined him to the house. I had a doctor attending him for some time, but he did not do him any good. One of my neighbors told me to use the Mustang Liniment. I asked the doctor if I could do so, and he told me he thought I could not do better.
I procured one bottle, and in about a week he was able to go out.
I can safely recommend it to the afflicted.
Respectfully yours, MRS. BENNETT.

W. S. Ladd & Co., of Portland, Oregon, writes that there is an immense demand for the Mexican Mustang Liniment in that country, and orders forty gross to be shipped by Golden Gate, that sails in a few days from New York.

Park & White of San Francisco, California, order 100 gross, to be forwarded by first clipper for that port.

PORT AU PRINCE, HAYTI, Jan. 19th, 1854.
I had the pleasure to receive two case and boxes Mexican Mustang Liniment per Oroton, and have no doubt it will have a brisk sale on the Island.
GEORGE RACKSTER.

To give health, strength and energy to the limbs, there is nothing can equal in effect, the
MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT.
FARMERS AND LIVERY STABLE KEEPERS
have need it for the following diseases with extraordinary success, certifying invariably to the efficacy of the Liniment, and the truthfulness of our assertions in its behalf:
Spavin, Splint, Ring-bone, Fistula, Wind Galls, Big Head, Bruises, Strains, String-halt, Scratches, Cracked Heels, Sweeny, Saddle, Collar, or Harness Galls, Hard Lumps or Tumor, Film, or other diseases of the Eye, Poll-Evil, &c.
The small sizes retail for 25 cents per bottle;
The medium size retail for 50 cents per bottle;
The large sizes retail for one dollar per bottle.
The medium holds three times as much as the small;
The Large holds nearly three times as much as the medium,
Therefore the large bottles are the cheapest.

A FUNERAL SERMON,

Delivered by Elder James H. Hart, St. Louis, June 17th, 1855, on the death of Andrew L. Lamoreaux, late President of the French Mission, who died on his way home to Zion, in St. Louis, June 13, 1855.

Beloved Brethren and friends—I am called upon this afternoon to address you concerning the character, history and decease of Elder Andrew L. Lamoreaux. In doing so, I wish to have your attention, I desire also your faith and prayers, and the spirit of God to rest upon me, and that it may pervade this entire assembly, that every spirit may feel the importance of the subject, that every soul may feel duly impressed with the solemnity of the occasion.

On Sunday last our deceased brother occupied this stand, apparently full of health, life and vigor; he now lies numbered with the silent dead, awaiting the joys and glories of the resurrection. Need I say that we must all likewise die? no, 'tis a fact of which you are all convinced, but which few are disposed however to think upon. It is to many a solemn and fearful subject, and many would rather banish the thought from their minds. To some it is the "King of Terrors"—a hedious monster armed with ghastly powers; but I may say, that, to the majority of this congregation it is not so, because it has lost its sting through the gospel of Jesus Christ which we have embraced, by which life and immortality are brought to light, and clearly revealed unto our minds.

I have not been so extensively acquainted with our deceased brother as some others who are present; yet I have been sufficiently acquainted with him to appreciate his character. I had the honor of making his acquaintance in the French Mission, and have corresponded with him more or less from that period until his death, during his mission he labored dilligently, accomplished a good work and was returning home to Zion and many of his sheaves with him.

A few words concerning his history and geneology. His parents were French, who emancipating themselves from the yoke of despotism in the Old World established themselves in Canada, where he himself was reared. Soon after the church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints was organized, brother Lamoreaux, father and family embraced the gospel, and shortly after gathered with the Saints, leaving their Canadian home that they might dwell with the Saints at their first gathering place in the State of Ohio, where our deceased brother lived with his family for many years. We heard from his lips last Sunday that he had the honor to be appointed by the Prophet Joseph as the President of a temporary Stake of Zion in the same State. After the work had spread abroad and other settlements formed in other states, brother Lamoreaux took a stand among his brethren and gained their respect, confidence and affection, and all those who are acquainted with his character and history have testified that he was a true friend, a faithful Saint, and an uncompromising advocate of the principles of righteousness. He was an High Priest of the House of Israel, he was honored and respected among his brethren, because of the nobility of his spirit, and the devoted zeal of his heart, and for his integrity and righteousness. He passed nobly and honorably through difficulties, persecutions and tribulations with his brethren in various parts of the states, and was never known to flinch from his post or desert his brethren, but was ever ready to uphold and sustain them, and particularly the authorities of the Church. Were some of his brethren present, they could tell how he signalized himself on many occasions as a champion of truth and as a defender of the faithful. When Elder Sly (who is in this assembly) went forth as a member of the Mormon Battalion by the will and counsel of our Prophet and President, Brigham Young, in the year 1846, brother Lamoreaux was engaged at Nauvoo defending his life and the lives of his brethren from the murderous attack of American Christians, the great body of the church was then on the western frontiers, having been compelled to vacate their city, forsake their temple and the tombs of their Prophets, and seek a home in the lonely wilderness. The only alternative was to encounter the maddened fury of an armed force that threatened to destroy them, or choose a home in the wilderness where it was hoped that stern hunger would starve them.

The good Christians of Illinois could not endure the presence of Apostles and Prophets any longer, they had become perfectly obnoxious to them, and their faithful followers likewise, and they piously determined to exterminate or murder the entire body of the Church of Jesus Christ.

The Elders and Saints had laboured indefatigably to rear up the Temple of the Lord in Nauvoo, and had measurably accomplished the task assigned them, and had received blessings and endowments therein from the Almighty through his Prophets and Apostles, having received from their hands the holy Priesthood, having done the things the Lord God of Israel had commanded them, and that which the Prophets Joseph and Brigham required of them, being sealed up unto Eternal Life, now said they, "we are ready to go and God will take charge of us. He will open our way though it be in the parched desert, we shall not die, but we shall live to build up the kingdom of God; and although we are compelled to sacrifice our homes, our lands, and our Holy Temple, yet we will live, and live to accomplish all that is required at our hands for the redemption of Zion in these last days." Such were the feelings and spirit of our deceased Brother, as of many thousands of Elders and Saints of this Church no suffering or affliction could quench their ardent zeal, or shake their faith, or destroy their confidence; they knew that if they sacrificed the Lands that the Lord had given them by purchase, that he would restore similar blessings unto them an hundred fold in this life, and if assurance was ever verified, or promise realized by the people of God, it has been realized by our Brethren in the vallies of the mountains, who but a few years ago sacrificed their all, and went forth into the wilderness not knowing their place of destination.

At this time, five hundred of our best and ablest men were demanded by the General Government, who were in a few days under the command of a U. S. Officer en route for the plains of Mexico, for the purpose of fighting the battles of their country to win more Territory to the Union. During this period, when the strength of the camp of Israel was thus engaged, and when the Church was at winter quarters, our deceased brother was still in Nauvoo with a few other Elders who had the charge of the poor, the helpless, and infirm, with some widows and orphans and others who had no means to leave the city; at this time to the everlasting shame of Ills., some thousands of her Christian citizens came upon Nauvoo with revolvers, Rifles an Cannons, determined to rob, plunder and murder the few helpless ones that still remained there Elder Lamoreaux stood at the head of a body of men, who with a few other small companies, bravely defended themselves and those committed to their charge, as President Kimball observed sometime since, there were but few of them left, but there were enough to whip the Devil, and they did it, I have often heard brother Lamoreaux speak of these circumstances, and tell how the Lord blessed and strengthened them on this and other occasions, when fighting the good fight of faith; but these circumstances are matters of Church History with which you are all more or less acquainted, and will therefore dwell more particularly upon general principles in which both we and all the Children of Men are individually concerned. I do so more especially for the benefit of strangers who may be present, and those among us unacquainted with doctrine.

I will call your attention to some Scriptures found in the xx Chap. of Revelations; "And I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the word of God and the testimony of Jesus; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. Blessed is he that hath a part in the first resurrection, for on them the second death shall have no power, but they shall be Kings and Priests unto God, and unto Christ and they shall reign with him on the Earth."

The Sectarian Churches believe that Priesthood has come to an end, that it was discontinued in the days of Jesus, that He was a great High Priest and since His day there never has been, nor will be, another Priest among men; but this idea is incorrect, it is the child of ignorance and tradition.—It originated among the follies of Sectarianism. The Protestants were so disgusted with the Roman Catholic Priesthood, that they and their followers determined to reject every thing that bore the least resemblance to it, whatever; that it is an unscriptural idea is plain from those scriptures we have just read, from which we learn that there are to be Priests, who are to be Priests forever. They will be those who will have part in the first resurrection, on whom the second death will have no power, Isaiah, speaking concerning the people of God, in the last days, says: "ye shall be called Priests and Ministers of our God, and ye shall feed my people with knowledge and understanding."

Our deceased brother was numbered among the High Priesthood, he received his endowments in the temple of the Lord at Nauvoo, as did hundreds of his brethren, and there he was sealed with the holy spirit of promise, with the powers and blessings of salvation and eternal life; and having received those blessings it was of little moment to him whether he lived or died, for he was any way the Lord's. He now lies entombed and clothed with his Priests robes, which will be a testimony for him before the angels and the Gods.

Had I one request to make of more importance than another, it would be that I might have the same honor confered upon me when I depart this life. My prayer would be, let me live O, Lord, until I be sealed up unto eternal life, that I may be clothed with white raiment which thou hast ordained and established as the holy habilliments of thy Priesthood, then will I rejoice in the God of my salvation, and praise His name forever and ever.

Brother Lamoreaux was returning home from an important Mission in Europe, where he had labored upwards of two years. Some seventy-four souls of Saints were accompanying him to Zion. Such was the honored position of our beloved brother. To finish my course with honor and integrity before my brethren and my God, and return home from every Mission with clean hands and spotless garments, in which I might be laid by the Priesthood among the silent dead, would be to me of far greater importance than any other consideration, or blessing. I would not wish for a greater honor than to be numbered among the faithful Elders of Israel, who have worn out their bodies in the service of the Lord, in striving to bring to pass the restitution of all things that must be restored in these last days.

We have said that death has not the terrors to the Latter-day Saints that it has to other persons. It may appear strange to our friends that we have so little fear of death—the world cannot understand it. I can well understand the feeling, for I well remember the time when the thought of death was to me the most terrific and appalling idea I could conceive of; but when I embraced the gospel of Jesus Christ, and became identified with the Saints of Latter-days, my fears were all removed concerning this subject, and I felt free in Christ Jesus, realizing that I had embraced that gospel which Jesus said was the power of God to the salvation of those who were through fear of death all their lives subject to bondage.

Some may think it strange that we should speak so freely concerning this subject; to such, I would say, there is a secret in it, and the secret is only known to the Saints, as the scripture saith: "the secret of the Lord is with those who fear him." It can only be known by the gift of the Holy Ghost, and the more confidence we have in God and our holy religion, and the power of the Priesthood, the less shall we fear, and the less will be our reasons for fearing the powers of death or hell. The more true and faithful we are in the discharge of our duties, and the more humble and faithful we are in our obedience to the commandments of God and the counsels of our brethren, the more confidence and joy shall we have when the time approaches when we must "shuffle off this mortal coil." When our faithful brethren depart this life we have confidence that they will soon return again clothed with power and might, with glory, immortality, and eternal life. Our hope and confidence concerning them, are grounded not upon the revelations given by wizards and spiritual mediums, but our faith is grounded upon the revelations of Jesus Christ.

We find thousands on this continent as well as on the continent of Europe, who are anxiously enquiring of astrologers and wizards, and of the spirits of the dead, which are called forth through Spirit Rappers or other mediums, to reveal to them the secrets of a future state, who are themselves as ignorant of the purposes of God, as those who enquire concerning them. For ourselves, we know by the spirit of truth and by the revelations of Jesus Christ, that the time is near at hand, when the righteous dead shall come forth and enter upon the glorious scenes of eternity.

It has been said, that, "as in Adam, all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." Death may be considered an evil, but it is certainly a necessary evil. It is necessary that we should die, that we should experience the pangs of death, that we come forth from the dead and enjoy life, even Life Eternal. And all mankind that ever lived from the morning of creation, or that will ever live henceforward to the end of time, will be likewise raised from the dead or quickened by the powers of the resurrection and redemption that are in Christ Jesus. The sin of Adam brought death into the world, and the sentence of death is passed on all men; and all mankind must pay the debt. The consequence of original sin, is death, which has been, and is as universal upon this planet, as the creation of life. The remedy or antidote for this monster evil, was as universal and comprehensive as the fall; therefore it was said by one of the old Apostles, that, "as in Adam all die, even so, in Christ shall all be made alive," as through Adam, both good and evil die, so through Christ shall all be redeemed; for every soul must be raised from the slumbering tomb for the earth and sea, and even death and hell must give up their dead, and he who holds the keys of death and hell has power which he will exercise, and bring forth from the dead every soul of man. As far as death has spread, through the fall of Adam, so far, will life spread and the resurrection extend through Jesus Christ, whose blood has made a complete expiation for the original sin of all mankind, by which every soul may claim a resurrection.

But there are two distinct periods when the resurrection shall take place. They are called the first and the second resurrections The scriptures we have just read, say "blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection, on such the second death shall have no power, &c." It has been determined in yonder Heavens, that the seventh day from the creation upon this earth, should be a day of rest—a day for the resurrection of the righteous. This day is with us one thousand years; and one thousand years of our reckoning is one day with the Lord. Is it necessary that I should argue this point, and produce evidence to sustain my position? It is pretty generally admitted by theological commentators and devines that it is so, and the scriptures bear us out that it is so. For example, before our father Adam fell, it was said unto him concerning the forbidden fruit: "In the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die;" but he ate thereof, and days, and even years passed away, and he died not, indeed we are informed that he lived upwards of nine hundred years. It is not difficult to understand that the Lord had reference to his own mode of reckoning time, when he said, "in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die," and had no allusion whatever to the diurnal revolutions of this planet.

The Lord appointed, at an early period of the worlds history, the seventh day as a day of rest; in token of the seven thousand years—the Sabbath of creation, in consequence of which we are this day resting from our labors anticipating the day when God will usher in that day of rest for his Saints, "for there remaineth a rest for the people of God." Nearly six thousand years have passed away since our father Adam first trod the earth. The seven thousandth years is at hand we stand as it were upon the threshold of the eventful period. The day is dawning, the sun has partly aris'n from the horizon, and begins to shed its effulgent rays upon the earth. The bright and glorious sun of righteousness, has commenced to light up the dark and benighted world. The holy Priesthood has been again restored from heaven—angels have visited the earth—Apostles, Prophets and other righteous men have been raised up and instructed, and commissioned to bring about the restitution spoken of by all the holy Prophets since the world began.

The Elders of Israel have gone forth with their lives in their hands to preach salvation to the nations of the earth, and to gather the remnants of the house of Israel. For this, they have not counted their lives dear unto them—for this they have laid their all upon the alter of sacrifice, and have suffered scorn, reproach, contumely and death, that they might obtain moreover a better resurrection. Paul speaking upon this subject, said that some through their faith "subdued kingdoms, wrought righteousness, obtained promises, stopped the mouths of lions, quenched the violence of fire, escaped the edge of the sword, out of weakness were made strong, waxed valient in fight, turned to flight the armies of the aliens, women received their dead raised to life again, and others were tortured not accepting deliverance; that they might obtain a better resurrection." This better resurrection can only be obtained in that which is called the first resurrection, and blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection, for on them the second death shall have no power; for they shall never die again but shall live forever.

The greater portion of us have been taught in our youth by the "divines" of the age and by the traditions of our fathers, that at some period of the world's history, there would be an immense crash—a universal shock, when the angels would sound their trumpets, and when the myriads of the dead would be raised both from sea and land, when in one general scramble the angels and devils would claim their own, when the resurrected would be consigned to eternal joys, or endless misery. Such have been the ideas generally entertained concerning the resurrection. It is not necessary that I should tell this congregation that such ideas are false. You have been taught better, you have learned that "order is heaven's first law." The resurrection will commence in this dispensation as in former dispensations. It is not necessary that it should be attended by thunderings, lightnings and earthquakes, when Jesus speaks the word, though it be a still small voice the sleeping dead will hear, and will come forth from the silent tomb, when Jesus was extended upon the cross, we read, that many of the dead came forth and appeared unto the brethren at Jerusalem; and in these last days, by the same power and Priesthood will the noble and righteous dead be raised, who have sacrificed their lives in this age for the building up of the kingdom of God, whilst their mean slanderers and miserable persecutors will go down to hell, and instead of being raised from the dead, their bodies will be trampled under foot and scattered to the winds of heaven.

The Prophet Malachi speaking on this subject, says, "the wicked shall be ashes under the soles of your feet;" when in the second resurrection they are raised from the dead, it will be to their everlasting shame and contempt. Let all the persecutors and murderers of the Prophets and Saints remember it, and let it harrow up their souls, and sting their guilty consciences henceforth and forever.—Such is the blessing of all those who have stained their hands in the blood of the Prophets, from righteous Able to Joseph and Hyrum, but though their bodies have been slain their spirits live, and they will soon return again to the earth—for the tomb must give up its dead—and their mortal bodies will put on immortality—they will come clothed in white robes, with Priests garments, having the powers of the Most High, and will be the rulers and judges of the earth.

All the nations may not be destroyed from the earth when the first resurrection has commenced, and when thousands of the righteous dead are redeemed, and have received their inheritance and glory. Zion must be redeemed and established and have dominion upon the face of the whole earth, and the kingdom of God must come in power and great glory, and His will be done on earth as it is done in Heaven. The nations of the earth must honor the King, and pay homage to his government; and if they send not up to Zion their representatives to acknowledge the reign of Zion as the rightful King of Nations, and receive the laws of Zion which will go forth for the government of all people, they will be sorely afflicted and distressed, and if they repent not they will be utterly destroyed. During this period, many of the righteous dead will be raised; for this will be the day of rest, when the Meek shall inherit the earth—this will be the first resurection, and only those who have received the Gospel and the blessings thereof, will be elegible for the honors and glories of this exalted state. But those who have received the Holy Preisthood, and have magnified their endowments, and have filled their days with good works, they shall be called the ministers of our God—they will be acknowledged Priests of God and Christ, and reign with him a Thousand years; and judgement shall be given unto them, and and they shall sit upon thrones and judge the nations of the earth; then will those who have been persecuted, hated, robbed and murdered for the word of God and the testimony of Jesus, be exalted as the supreme Judges in the earth, and by their word shall the righteous be justified, and by their decision shall the wicked be condemned.

I do not say that all those who have not been baptised into the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints are going down to endless perdition, nor do I say that if they are raised from the dead in the second resurrection that they will be subjects of the second death; but those who receive the Holy Ghost and the powers of the world to come, and turn away from the truth, and deny the Son of God, and put him to an open shame, and shed innocent blood. These characters when raised from the dead, will be raised to everlasting disgrace; they will be doomed to undergo a second death, their bodies will be again destroyed, their spirits will be again sent to Hell, and it will be with them as though there had been no Saviour and no resurrection. It will be worse for them than though they had never been born, for they will have the efficacy of the blood of Christ, the powers and blessings of the resurection, and the sole object of their creation; whilst the righteous will be blessed with eternal life, and will reign with Christ for ever and ever.

We do not mourn for our departed friends as those who have no hope, for we are conscious that we soon shall mingle with them in the spirit world, and there we shall rejoice in their society, and contemplate our speedy return to the earth, when we shall be clothed with immortal bodies, which will never be destroyed. Such will be the character of the bodies of the righteous, for this purpose we have come from Heaven, that we might be clothed upon with mortal Tabernacles and prove ourselves worthy of eternal life and Celestial Glory.

The Saints of former days had the same confidence and assurance concerning these things. They said, "we know that when this earthly Tabernacle shall be disolved we have a building of God, a House not made with hands, eternal in the Heavens. They were certain that this mortal would put on immortality, and that their bodies would become like the glorious body of Jesus Christ, and such is also our hope and confident expectation concerning the righteous of all ages. With this assurence we can go forth with cheerfulness to do the will of God, for we know that when our work is done we shall be received among the spirits of the Prophets and Saints, and shall be permitted in our time and season to return to the earth, and stand in our place among the faithful and redeemed of every age.

We care not for riches and worldly honors, nor do we court popularity and fame; neither do we seek for thrones, crowns and dominions or other secular distinction; for all these things are but secondary when compared with the honor of being associated with living Prophets and Apostles, and with the martyred dead. What greater honor can we aspire to? I know of none! Greater honor can no man have than he who lays down his life for the sake of the kingdom of God. Happy is the man who dies faithful to the Almighty, and whose life has been consecrated to the interests of His kingdom. Let me be found faithful to the commandments of the Lord, and obedient to the counsels of the Presidency of this church, and then, whether I die here, on a mission to the nations, crossing the plains, or in the valleys of the mountains, it mattereth not, for there is a power in the kingdom of God that will take me up where I fall, or in other words lay hold of my salvation where I leave it, and work out for me, if faithful till death, a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory, and so with every man in this church whose heart is right before the Lord; whether he falls on the battle field, or among his friends in Zion; whether he falls whilst crossing the ocean, ascending the rivers, or traversing the desert plains; whether he has received his endowments in the temple of the Lord, or has been prevented, by local circumstances, from obtaining that privilege during his life, all will be well. It is well with our brethren who have recently fallen at Atchison, among whom I may mention Elder James F. Bell, late President of the Malta Mission, and Elder Simpson, for many years the worthy and respected President of one of the British Conferences. I was intimately acquainted with the former, with the latter by reputation only; but they were both men who had labored faithfully in preaching the everlasting gospel; men who loved the truth more than they loved their own lives, who had the principles of life and salvation entwined around their souls, and constituted a portion of their very being. They were perfectly well assured of the truth of those principles

THE world has been so accustomed to govern, or rather misgovern itself, that any attempt on the part of the world's God to legitimately and righteously govern His children, is considered an infringement upon their rights an open violation of their venerated customs, and consequently an insult to their toadish dignity. It is not surprising, therefore, to hear men angrily declaim against the theocratic government of heaven, as a despotic and oppressive system, and opposed to all their religious, political and social interests. They are perhaps ministers, deacons, or other interested members of the christian churches, by which they obtain from one to five or ten thousand dollars per annum, and that independent of Angels, Apostles, Revelation, or indeed any principle or power associated with the kingdom of God; and when the Almighty sends His angels from heaven, and raises up Apostles and Prophets upon the earth, and establishes His kingdom among men, why, of course, these gentlemen are too much interested in their yearly saleries, quarterly collections, pew rents, and other interesting perquisites, to be particularly enamored of a system that requires them to forsake all and follow Christ, and labor for him all their life and board themselves in the bargain, the inducements held out to the selfish and mercenary are not particularly flattering, and 'tis not surprising that this class of characters find Mormonism too oppressive for their refined sensibilities, and its author an hard master, gathering where he has not strewed, reaping where he has not sown—no wonder they find "Jordan a hard road to travel."

There are moreover politicians, judges, magistrates and other dignitaries and rulers of the earth, who are duly honored as members of national assemblies—judicial councils, who are installed in offices of State, ecclesiastical courts or otherwise feasting from the revenue board, and all, sanctioned by time honored laws and the voice of the people; for these men to enter the kingdom of God and be governed by Apostles and Prophets, would be a certain loss to them of perhaps thousands of dollars per year, rather than sacrifice which, nine-tenths of them would rather sacrifice their souls. To think of receiving laws from God as Moses did, and of governing the people by authority of the Priesthood, as was the case in former ages, when Samuel, Joshua, Gidian and other Prophets were the supreme rulers and judges in Israel, would be most repugnant to their feelings, and in every way opposed to their secular interests. Perhaps they have studied law—have taken their degrees—obtained their diploma, and have everything they need but practice and preferment to make their fortunes, and to tell these gentlemen that the cases they subject to the tedious and excruciating formalities of law, ought to be decided by friendly arbitration, or by the Elders or Bishops, would be to them anything but agreeable; for this course of judicature would entirely blast their prospects in life, and would reduce them to indigence or compel them to choose a more honest means of support. It cannot therefore be expected that these gentlemen will very readily embrace the principles of theocracy. It is not surprising therefore to hear them declaim against and curse the policy of Mormonism, for in its triumph they discover the destiny of their neighbors and the termination of their own learned and lucrative career.

There is associated with the two classes of individuals above named, a third class, which is no less opposed to the interest and policy of the kingdom of God, than those already described—we allude to the medical profession. If Mormonism was generally received by the people, nine-tenths, or perhaps ninety-nine one-hundredths of the medical fraternity would be compelled to seek their bread in a less mischievous and less distructive profession. Hundreds and thousands of lives would then be annually saved that are now sacrificed by the lance, by calomel, or otherwise immolated upon the alter of esculapius. But as these gentlemen have never learned how to work, are ashamed to beg, and are afraid to steal, they have no way of escape from hard labor or penury; but by bolstering up their ricketty and condemned systems, by the manufacture of pills, by administering poisons, or otherwise officiating in the ordinances of death. There is therefore but little hope for them so far as the kingdom of God is concerned.

There is another class of persons who deserve a passing notice—the editorial fraternity—who, although they have not so distinguished a course of their own, have nevertheless so intimate a dependency upon these three grand devisions, that to abjure their influence and persue an independent course of their own choice, would be in many cases equivolent to death; hence we find but few journals, even in this land of boasted freedom, that are really free to publish any truth concerning the kingdom of God. If they should perchance publish one truth they will be particularly careful to publish a sufficient quantity of lies upon the back of it to crush and smother it, that if it live, it may be so completely fettered by falsehood as to be entirely impotant and incapacited for its mission. But notwithstanding prejudices, influences and powers that stand opposed to the progress of truth and the prosperity of Mormonism, it is still seen in the ascendant; its course is undeviating, its progress irresistible and its final triumph certain, because the Lord has chosen men who are wholly devoted to His cause, who will never rest, nor their children after them, until they behold the glory of the Lord and His kingdom established in all the earth.

One hundred men of this stamp will do more towards ameliorating the condition of mankind, in five years, than the popular Priests, Lawyers and Doctors would do in five thousand If the Lord should speak upon this subject, He could say I have reserved to myself in yonder mountains, many thousands, who have never bowed the knee to the mammon of unrighteousness, and through them will I bring to pass my strange act in the sight of all nations, and they shall know that I am the Lord, and then shall "the kingdom and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heavens be given to the Saints, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all people and nations shall serve and obey Him." Mormonism will then be universal, for its king will govern all the earth and none can hinder it.

WE copy the following from the Squatter Sovereign, which is a pretty fair specimen of what valorous deeds and sanguinary battles may be fought in an editors sanctum sanctorum. Should these pen and ink warriors meet, they would probably be found the most sociable and good natured fellows in creation there is doubtless more "gas" than blood in their respective articles.

On with the Crusade for Freedom—is not Liberty as well worth fighting for now, as in the days of the Revolution.

The prospect of a civil war in Kansas, between the ruffian hordes of Missouri and the citizens of the Territory, is growing more probable every day. The late usurpation of the ballot boxes by the Missouri mob, is awakening the old '76 spirit of the settlers; and they are undoubtedly preparing themselves to defend their rights, to hold their own elections at the "point of the rifle." Now is the time for men of sterling courage and inflexible determination to go to Kansas at once. Have we not hundreds and thousands of unflinching unmarried men, who are willing even to peril their lives, if necessary, to save Kansas from being blackened and polluted by the armed ruffians from the Hells and grog shops of St. Louis and other places in Missouri?

Because we have an imbecile President, whose duty it is to protect the settlers of Kansas, but who pays no attention to the outrage committed there, shall the sterling men of our country be as imbecile, and suffer the noble pioneers of freedom in Kansas to be driven from that country by a mob of slavery's minions?

We trust not. On, then, for the defence of freedom and the purity of the ballot box in Kansas. On for a crusade for freedom in Kansas. Show the bloated mob in Missouri that the men of Kansas are no cowards, and will not submit to their insults.—[Michigan Exposiler.

Why don't some of those Eastern editors, who are fighting the Missourians "so awfully" at home, come to Kansas themselves, and dare to attempt the committal of acts which they counsel others to do? We think it would look much better in them to practice more and preach less. To read the Eastern journals now, one would naturally suppose that an army of a million of "freemen" was being raised to drive Southern citizens out of Kansas by force of arms.—We do not fear their warlike preparations or noisy threats. If there is any truth in the old adage that "barking dogs never bite," we are comparatively safe. We would like to see the plans of the Northern Press attempted to be carried out in this Territory. It would give us an opportunity of indulging in a luxury we have long desired, of "wading waist deep in the blood of abolitionists!" Come, then, we say, on your hostile mission! and we will give you the reception that the immortal Jackson gave the British at New Orleans. We will make your wives widows and your children fatherless, and enrich our soil with the putrid carcasses of dead abolitionists. We would much like to see the editor of the Michigan Exposiler leading his company of rag-tag and bobtail recruits over the prairies of Kansas. We would like to see him then after his first encounter with the "armed ruffians from Hell," and hear him exclaim in regard to the possibility of making Kansas a free State, "'tis easier said than done!"

We are happy in being able to furnish our readers this week with news from Utah and the Plains. We have not yet received the S. L. Mail, but we are glad to learn that it is safe.

We are indebted to Elders John S. Smith and David A. Curtis for all the news we have yet received from the Home Department, which will doubtless be found interesting to our readers.

Elder Samuel W. Richards will please accept our thanks for his interesting communication, we shall be happy to receive from him additional favors of the same quality to enrich the columns of our Luminary.

It is particularly gratifying to us to learn from our Brethren of the very quiet and peaceful spirit and disposition of the Indians. It would have been pleasing to our enemies to have had to record the massacre of our emigrants by the hostile tribes, some of the Journals even commenced to publish it in advance, "dont go across the plains," said they, "for there will undoubtedly be an indiscriminate slaughter among the whites." We said at the time that our Emigrants were not to be scared by editors, Indians nor Armies, because the Lord can control them all just according to his own will, and they can neither lift a hand, nor strike a blow without his permission. tis true, the difficulties that appeared to threaten our emigration this season appeared of no ordinary character, the rivers low, freight high, cash scarce, an unprecedented emigration, hostile Indians on the route breathing slaughter and destruction, but by the overruling providence of God the barriers are broken down, difficulties overcome, and the immense emigration thrown upon our hands, is now, en route from this City to the lovely vallies of the west, and instead of encountering hostile and blood-thirsty Indians on the plains, they meet with those whose hearts the Lord hath touched, by whose influence and power their murderous feelings are changed into friendship and kindness, thus have all things worked together for good, for which we praise the name of the Most High.

THE Evening News of Monday last contained a pathetic, or what the "News" calls "a pitiable case." It is really surprising that a man should so debase himself as to dabble in every dirty puddle; but it is not particularly surprising after all when we consider the nature of the animal. Who ever knew a toad to choose a clear stream? only let him have access to a filthy pool and he is in his element and "monarch of all he surveys."

The above is not an inapt Illustration of the nature and character of the dirty scribbler of the news. Place him in a gambling hell, lunatic Asylum or other dirty puddle and he is surprisingly loquacious, and to judge by his croaking he would be pronounced "the Monarch of all he surveyed" and as it regards his "pitiable case" we think "his right there is none will dispute" and he may feel assured so far as the Mormons are concerned that none will ever attempt to wrest her from his worthy hands. We like to see birds of a feather flock together, and we consider this a pretty good pair.

Departure of the last Company for Utah.

We shipped on Thursday the 28th inst. about one hundred souls of Saints on board the "Saranac," under the Presidency of Elder Mathew Rowen, Daniel Graves Secretary, This company is composed of passengers by the ship "Germanicus" and others whose circumstances prevented them from leaving at an earlier period, eighty seven of this Company are P. E. Fund passengers. This nearly completes our shipping business this season.

Mr. T. S. Williams left this city on the 23d inst, by the F. X. Aubrey for Atchison where he will remain some few weeks. On his return to Salt Lake City he will please act as agent for the Luminary. We have entered (by permission) his name in our list of agents.

INTERESTING FROM THE ELDERS.

It is pleasing to us at all times to receive the interesting correspondences of our brethren and we can assure them that their communications are at all times agreeable to us, whethor designed for the Luminary or of a private character, but we invite our Brethren generally to exercise the gift that is in them, and forward to us from time to time such productions of their genius as may be considered suitable for publication, we would be glad to hear more often from our esteemed friend and able correspondent Professor Spencer. We have been favored with a letter under date of 14th June, from which we learn that his health is good, that all things are moving on well, in proof whereof he has sent us several new subscribers for the Luminary.

Elder Wm. Martindale writes us under date of 4th June, Grand Bluffs Panola Co. Texas. He says: I have added four others by Baptism since I wrote you, and there is a prospect of several more shortly. I preach from one to four Sermons a week, the People believe fast enough but are slow to obey; but I expect to make up a good company to cross the Plains next spring. I have already a Company of about twenty persons and expect a good number more before the 1st of March 1856. We have tight times in this country, they have called at nearly every house. The crops are very much injured for want of rain; the old settlers say it has been the warmest and dryest spring they have ever witnessed many of them are very much discouraged, and do not know what to do, and when I tell them, but few of them will pay any attention.

We have been favored with a letter from Elder Freeman Rogers under date of 17 June Rochester N. Y. He says: "I baptised and confirmed a man by the name of Wm. C. Moore last fall and another to-day, there are many through these parts who are believing." Brother Rogers was baptized at Nauvoo in the year 1840; he intends taking up his line of March for the Valley next spring.

We have received a letter from Elder Charles Smith under date of 19 June, Muddy Creek 60 miles from Atchison, from which we extract the following: "We have got along very well up to the present, no accident, very little sickness, indeed no new case of sickness since, we left Atchison; we received your instructions which were read to the camp the same morning, which will be carried out. The grass is very good so far, the cattle do well and work gentle. Brother Smith is Clerk of the second company. It is truly gratifying to us to hear from our Brethren such truly pleasing and interesting reports, for which we feel to thank and praise the name of the Lord, for his hand is as visibly manifested in quieting the hostile Indians on the Plains, as in the successful preaching of the Gospel and the blessings following the believers, we therefore ascribe all praise and glory to the Lord, and feel to shout Hosannah to God and the Lamb.

Correspondence.

Extracts of a Letter from S. W. Richards.

We have been favored with correspondence from S. W. Richards, late President of the British Missions, from which we extract the following Interesting Items.

G. S. L. City, Utah, May 1st, 1855.

DEAR BRO. ERASTUS,

A general health prevails. business is active, grasshoppers plenty, weather dry with considerable wind. Government Troops are leaving and taking with them the filth of our community. New settlements are being made and new mills and habitations erected, the laws of God are being observed and becoming the delight of the people. Peace and happiness flow to every faithful saint and the kingdom of God is being rapidly increased and built up, while the End is as rapidly drawing near.

The world at large is but a stage on which are acted the busy scenes of life where every act or every performance has an influence over the weal and woe of each performer, and never was that stage more corrupt or degenerated than now. The acts are mostly tragedies of the most horrid caste and death and destruction have the greatest attraction over the spectators who for a moment gaze upon the scene without enjoying in the universal demolition.

The health of the presidency is good. Bro. Young and Kimball returned last evening from a short trip north. Bro. Lorenzo Snow has gone north into the Box Elder county where he will remain for a time and built up the place.

It is understood that the Presidency will start upon their trip south next week, and probably go as far as Harmony.

It is said that Iron is being produced at a pretty rapid rate in Iron County, which is very encouraging news for this Territory.

A special term of the District Court has lately been held in this city, before which only two cases appeared, one C. A. and E. H. Perry, vs: Abraham Hoogland, Samuel W. Richards and Joseph Horn, Trustees of the 14th School District in G. S. L. City, for collecting a School Tax, the other, was the Territory vs. Capt. Ingills of the U. S. Army for running away with a couple of girls. The particulars you will no doubt learn from your Brother Z. Snow, who is interested in all such matters, being a legal gentleman.

The Big Canal east of the City by which is to be conveyed the granite rock for the Temple from the Big Cotton Wood, is now occupying considerable attention.

The Missions which are now being taken to Israel (the Lamanites) are of great importance and constitute a phase of especial interest upon the face of the Latter-day work. How appropriate the words of the poet,

"The happy day is rolling on
The glorious period now has come."

The organization of the Deseret Theological Institute is a circumstance of great rejoicing among the saints.

President Young delivered an opening lecture on last Wednesday evening to "a crowded audience assembled in the Social Hall," on which occasion he handled subjects which belong to the experience of other worlds with all the familiarity and freedom imaginable. Theology circumscribes all things that belong to God or that pertains to his works. The Seventies will constitute a prominent portion of the members of this Society.

The Polysophical and Universal Scientific societies are flourishing under the able superintendence of Elders L. Snow, and W. Woodruff.

The Blessing of the Lord is indeed upon His people and may they ever live so as to duly appreciate it.

God bless and aid you in all the duties of your important mission. Please accept my love and impart a share to those of my acquaintance who labour with you. Yours Truly,

S. W. RICHARDS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LUMINARY:

Dear Brother Snow:—Permit me, through the columns of your valuable paper, to express my feelings of things and persons, since my arrival at the land of Joseph.

I have been here nearly one month, and am enabled by the spirit of God which I enjoy, and the faculties of perception. to speak the truth of matters as they exist. "Many a time and oft" have we heard in England of the state of this place, of its being the resting place of Apostates and a den of unclean spirits.

By the mercies of God, we enjoyed a good passage across the Atlantic, in the ship Chimborazo—the hand of our Father being with us; and the kindness of the Captain P. Vesper, whe cannot be spoken of in too high terms, in attending to and nursing the sick, giving us every neccessary privilege on ship. and seeking at all times our interest, added much comfort and pleasure to the incidents of a sea voyage.

On our arrival here, the Saints of St. Louis manifested the greatest kindness to us. We were taken by the hand and compelled to go with them, to enjoy the comforts which they had prepared; and they made us feel that the spirit of God is enjoyed here; and we realized that the instructions of those in authority in this place are good, and are carried into effect.

On our Saints being informed that circumstances prevented many of us from proceeding further at present, many felt disappointed, as their expectations were to go to the Valley where the Prophet of God is, and they were about to seperate for a season, from Elders and Saints with whom they had been associated in the most endearing manner; and who could blame them for this good feeling towards Zion? yet, I do affirm that I and mine never felt so well under a disapointment since we have been called to meet such things here. We truly felt that the brethren in England, President F. D. Richards, and yourself here, did all that was in your power to bring us to our destination; yes, all that it was possible for man to accomplish, we felt was done.

I have heard good things since I came here, and I have heard evil things; the latter are in plentiful supply from those that breathe the spirit of apostacy; yet, I must confess, having heard and reasoned with the parties, that I have not heard the first thing, report or objection, which is worthy the attention of an intelligent mind, or the consideration of one enjoying the spirit of God. How men can let such trifles blind their eyes, and harden their hearts, is sometimes to me a matter of surprise. Their proofs and arguments are so small and contemptible that, I grieve at human nature. and say of them "These little things are great to little men." And I know that many of our Saints have been strengthened after, seeing the littleness of such fault-finders.

I feel that the organization of this Stake is good, and I know that those in authority manifest a desire, and evince the greatest feeling to do good to the Saints; give the best of counsel, and carry out the mind of the Apostolic Priesthood in their midst. It did me good to see the zeal and assiduity with which they attended to their duties, and I felt that such a copious effusion of the spirit never was poured out in this place, in this generation. May God continue to pour out upon them His spirit.

While then there is the spirit of Apostacy around us here, yet there is more of the spirit and the Holy Priesthood to counteract any evil that may exist, and I feel proud to acknowledge it to all within my reach. Mormonism is all things to me, and I pray that I may ever be able to progress with it, and make myself like its glorious principles, by putting them into practical operation for myself and mankind.

Praying God to bless you in all your endeavours to bo good in this and every place, and with thanks to the brethren and sisters for their kindness to the Saints who came in their midst.

I am, your brother in the kingdom.

News from Utah and the Plains.

Names of Missionaries to Europe and the Southern States—Friendly Conduct of the Sioux Indians—the Utah Mails—The Merchants Trains—U. S. Troops and Baggage—The Pawnee Indians—Health of Camps—Cholera in Elder Blair's Company—Prosperity and Improvements in Utah.

ST. LOUIS, June 26, 1855.

Beloved Brother Snow—We arrived here last evening, from G. S. L. City, which place we left on the 8th of May, in company with thirteen other Misionaries; and we improve the earhest opportunity of dropping you a few lines in relation to G. S. L. City, the plains, &c., by sketches from our journal. Elder Hecter C. Haight, our Captain, deserves praise for the able manner in which he has conducted our little company across the plains. Peace and union prevailed.

The names of the Missionaries for England, are, H. C. Haight, John Scott, John Kay, Daniel Davis, David A. Curtis, Wm. S. Muir, John L. Smith, and Robert F. Neslen; for the Southern States, Henry W. Miller, Wm. Richey, Robert C. Petty, John A. Richards, Washington N. Cook, James Cooper, and Wm. C. Moody.

On the 11th ult., about 12 o'clock, we met the S. Lake Mail from Independence in Echo kanyon, about 60 miles from S. L. City, containing most of the back Mails from January.

The streams are low, and the grass poor, owing to the scarcity of snow and rains in the mountains.

May 22nd, at Devil's Gate station, we learn that during the past spring, a band of Indians from the Missouri river, have stolen some 90 horses from this vicinity. The Mail which passed here a few days since, lost by same Indians, five or six mules, but a band of the Sioux recovered and returned them to the Mail station at North Platte Bridge, with the exception of one that had died. Reshaw has a good bridge across the North Platte.

May 26th, at 1 o'clock, P. M. we met another Mail on the Lapreele river on the Black Hills, with an escort of twenty soldiers from Fort Kearney,—the Hon. J. M. Bernhisel, Delegate from Utah in company, returning home from Washington.

June 10th, we arrived at Fort Kearney where we met the June Mail; Judge Drummond and lady were passengers by this Mail; the Judge to fill his appointment in Utah.

June 12th, met 500 soldiers bound for Fort Kearney. We camped at night with J. H. Burr, Surveyor General for Utah, and from what conversation we had, we believe him to be a fine old man, and think he will be liked by the people of Utah.

June 15th, met Livingston and Kinkead's first train of goods to G. S. L. City, under the charge of Mr. Patterson, about 250 miles from Independence. To-day about 300 Pawnee Indians came to us; they were very friendly, but would "steal the coppers off a dead man's eyes," if they could eat, drink, or wear them. Our captain talked with them, and gave them flour, sugar, &c., and then drove on.

June 16th, passed 500 dragoons, en route for Fort Kearney and Laramie. Met G. Gilbert's first train of goods for G. S. L. City, about 185 miles from Independence. We likewise met a company of Saints to-day, under the direction of Elder James Hindley, all being in good health and spirits.

June 17th, passed Gilbert's second train, 18th, met Elder J. F. Secrist in charge of a large company of saints, about 50 miles from Mormon Grove.

June 20th, arrived at Elder S. M. Blair's camp. We found many of his company sick with the cholera; they had buried three persons, and another died just as we drove up. Brother Blair requested our Elders to visit and administer to the sick, which we did. Two others died before we left. The names of the deceased are H. R. Jones, M. East, Mrs. E. Langford, and her husband Jeremiah Langford, and Miss York, all from Texas; Eliza A. Jost from Halifax: they all died of cholera.

June 21st, we met Hooper and Williams' first train of merchandize, consisting of 26 waggons, in charge of P. Jackman, about 10 miles from Atchison.

The health of the Saints at Mormon Grove is good. Elders Ballantyne and Glover start for the plains with companies of Saints, on the 22nd, we left the Grove at 12 o'clock, for Atchison, took passage on board the Edinburgh for this city, and arrived on the evening of the 25th.

During our journey from Fort Kearney we met several heavy trains laden with government stores, and a number of trains and cattle, en route for California.

It has been currently reported through this country, that the Sioux Indians were murdering emigrants, burning their waggons and driving off whole herds of cattle. We would state that all is peace on the plains as far as we could learn, there being no hostile Indians on the route from S. L. City to Atchison, although there are a few lurking around endeavoring to steal horses from such companies that give them the slightest opportunity. We think that a company of twenty persons can cross the plains without any danger, providing they are attentive to their own business.

The health of the people in Utah is generally good, peace and harmony prevailing. The spring was rather backward. Colonel Steptoe and troops started for California the last of March. The Deseret Iron works had commenced opperations and were beginning to make good Iron. The greatest difficulty they have to contend with, is the want of suitable fire clay. The sugar factory had been in operation manufactoring molasses from the beet.

The foundation of the temple was progressing finely, many hands being engaged upon it. Presdents Young and Kimball were fencing in their lots with cobble stone walls, laid in lime morter. Many others are following the example. A new road is being built across the warm spring marsh, north of the city. North temple street has been graded from the center each way, so as to carry off the surplus waters of city creek, during the spring rains, to the Jordan River.

Dry goods were plenty—groceries scarce—work plenty—loafers few and far between.

We start this evening up the Mississippi to visit our friends; on our return, should opportunity offer, we may write you again.

With sentiments of high respect, we remain your brethren in the new and everlasting covenant.

JOHN L. SMITH.
DAVID A. CURTIS.

From the Mormon.

ST. LOUIS, May 24, 1855.

MR. EDITOR:—Having just arrived from Salt Lake City on the fifth of this month, in company with the mail from Utah, I have been not a little surprised at seeing an article copied from the New York Daily Times, in relation to the trial of the murderers of Capt. Gunnison and his party who were massacred on the morning of the 26th Oct. 1853.—After reading the article carefully, and being there at the trial of the Indians in March last, I feel that it is my duty to the public, and to Utah, to give a true statement of the facts as they existed; for I must say, fearless of contradiction, that the articles that have appeared in the public prints, in relation to this matter, are perfectly absurd, and nine-tenths of them are falsehoods, and I challenge the writers to get Col: Steptoe, or Chief Justice Kinney to endorse their statements; or any one of the officers under Col. Steptoe's command, except the writer himself, who is without conscience, truth or honor; I know not who he is, nor care, either for his office or the position he holds, I again say, he cannot get Col. Steptoe, nor any honorable man under his command, to endorse his statements. It is true that Col. Steptoe was obliged to bribe the Chief of the Indians, for he considered it the only way to get hold of the murderers, and that too at a pretty round sum. This deal for the Indians was between the Chief Kanoshe and the Colonel—the Chief knew that the Colonel required that of him, that he would not do himself; that is, to turn traitor to his own flesh and blood, (the people of his own band,) particularly as in that murder the Chief was unquestionably as deep in the mud, as they were in the mire; and as I have been credibly informed, by the Interpreters, the Chief had stated at different times, that he had no objections to receive the Colonel's "blankets and horses," but he did object to surrendering up his people, that were concerned in the murder, to be hung up by the neck like dogs.

And what took place at the trial goes to prove this statement; for the evidence shows that the Chief had rather got the Colonel down, on the trade, for the Indians that the Chief had given up were not the ones that committed the deed; but were accessory to the crime, by assisting the party on. To substantiate this, I will here state, that two of the Indians given up were very old men, (one of them was blind) another of the party was a squaw. The Colonel ordered the question put to the Chief, while in the witness stand, why he gave up this old blind man, when he had no hand in the murder. The Chief answered, "that he had agreed to give up so many Indians, and that old man was blind, and of no account, and he did not care if they did kill him;" so it was discovered to be a swindling game on the part of the Chief, and the Colonel remarked to me, that he had been deceived by him; for when he made the bargain with the Chief, he promised to bring more Indians as witnesses to establish their guilt, and that he himself would be the most important witness. But when he was put upon his oath, he knew nothing (you will bear in mind that the witness had already obtained the blankets and horses,) notwithstanding all this treachery on the part of the Chief, of which the Colonel and the Court were fully aware; the correspondent of the New York Daily Times states that "the witnesses were tampered with by Col. Babbitt, a tool of Brigham Young." He says that, notwithstanding all this, the prisoners' guilt was proven without doubt. Why don't the writer give the evidence so that the public may judge of the matter; When the witness was upon the floor the question was put to him by the court "Has Col. Babbitt or any one else spoken or made presents to you since the trial commenced?" The answer was distinctly "No one excepting Col. Steptoe."

Col. Steptoe then asked the witness why he had misrepresented things to him; that when the first conversation took place, he (the witness,) told him, he knew considerable; but when put on his oath, he knew nothing. The witness said "he did not know why he'd forgotten, unless it was, that when he was talking to the Colonel about the bribe, he then talked for the bribe; but now, he was talking for his people." The question was then put to him: Do you know the nature of an oath? He said he did not.—He was then asked if he knew there was a God, or a Supreme Being? He said that all he knew about Him, was what the white man had told him; but he had never seen the person, nor made his acquaintance; but he could not believe the white man for some told him that God lived in the air, and others said he lived under ground: in fact he said, he did not believe that the white men knew any more about Him, than he did.

There was no evidence against the prisoners of any more weight than the Chief's; and yet this is called positive proof by the writer in the Times. I ask what reliance can be placed upon such correspondents? He further states that "Col. Babbitt was the tool of Brigham Young." I think if he had needed a tool he would not have taken an outsider, as to my certain knowledge the Colonel and the Governor are not on the best of terms; and I know that Gov. Young had nothing to do with the case, for Col. Steptoe assured me that he engaged Col. Babbitt himself to defend the Indians; and his instructions to him was to acquit them if possible, since he learned how little the Indian testimony could be relied upon; and further, Col. Steptoe spoke to me in the highest terms of Gov. Young; in my last conversation with him, previous to leaving the Valley.

In regard to Colonels Babbitt and Steptoe, I know that they were on the most intimate terms; and Mr. Babbitt's course in relation to the trial, was highly commendable; much credit is due him for his zeal, and unremitting labors in behalf of humanity, in the case of the two poor old Indians, whose only chance of defence, in their loneliness and ignorance, was through their counsel Col. Babbitt. I regret that I am not able to say as much for the counsel on the part of the people; for I presume he felt somewhat indignant at the repudiation of a certain code of morals, which had been attempted to be introduced among the femenine copper colors, by some of the profession, whose generous philanthrophy towards the benighted heathen led them to condescend to become their preceptors, in some of the arts of civilization; and the practical white teachers after luxuriating in the endearing charms of squaw-ology; having forgotten to redeem their pledges, were called upon publicly in court, by a red cyprian to fulfill their agreements; backed by her brother-in-law, the Chief Arrapene, as counsel; who took upon himself all the usual airs of the profession in imitation of our courts, he with great dignity, but rather unceremoniously, interrupted the speech of the eloquent gentleman, in his plea, who was then addressing the court, and insisted upon the immediate payment of red paint, blankets and a looking-glass, the terms agreed upon, and assuming also the office of Judge and executive he threatened instant vengeance by his band of Utes, if not complied with.

This being a new case upon the docket, and the prosecution somewhat peremptory, the case also appearing clear to the court, and the defendents being present, and making no demur; the aforesaid articles were produced to the satisfaction of the plaintiff, whose counsel, Arrapene feeling a little elated in his new profession, said "I can talk as well as the white lawyers" and demanded one dollar for his fee, which being paid, he with his sister-in-law left the court.

The above was unquestionably a serious interruption to the learned gentleman, just then pathetically addressing the court, in relation to Indian outrages; and must necessarily somewhat ruffle the equanimity of his feelings; and it would not be surprising if some charges in the shape of paint, blankets, looking-glass, &c., should be included in the mileage, or contingent expenses of some of our professional gentlemen, as it cannot possibly be that such luxuries can be enjoyed out of the small salaries, allowed by General Government.

The correspondent of the Times writes that the court charged the jury to the effect, that "they must either bring in a verdict of guilty of murder, in the first degree or clear them," &c. This I deny, in toto. The Court charged the jury, that, "if they were satisfied from the evidence given that the prisoners were guilty, they should bring in a verdict accordingly; if innocent of murder, they should so bring in a verdict; but if satisfied they were accessories to the crime their verdict should be in accordance." I must here say, that much credit is due to Chief Justice Kinney, for the able manner in which he presided in this case. I will admit that such a charge as the correspondent refered to, was asked of the court by the counsel for the prosecution; but no such charge was given; for Chief Justice Kinney is too well versed in law, to be swerved from his duty by such suggestions.

I will now call your attention to that portion of the article in which the correspondent states that he was present at the trial and does know there was a special agent sent there by Gov. Young, to communicate with the jury, "this agent, he says, was one Huntington, what communication said Huntington brought to the jury, he does not say, I was there myself during the trial; but never heard anything of this until I saw it in the Times; but this I can say that this same Huntington, is, and has been for several years employed by the General Government as Indian interpreter, and was at that time, and upon that occasion, employed by Doctor Hurt, the Indian agent for Utah.

The writer also states, as a notorious fact, that Brigham Young commanded Mr. Carington, the Prosecuting Attorney for Salt Lake county, to wrest the prisoners from the hands of Col. Steptoe. The circumstances connected with this I am also acquainted with, having received the particulars from Col. Babbitt and Mr. Huntington; and from the little regard for truth displayed by the correspondent, I feel compelled to relate it. You will bear in mind, as I stated before, that one of the prisoners was a female; these Indians were all confined in the soldiers' barracks, and a few days after Mr. Huntington and Col. Babbitt were sent for by the husband of this squaw, who stated to them, as they were there chained down as prisoners, that his wife was ravished by the soldiers before his eyes, and wanted to know if this was the way that white men treated their prisoners.

As soon as Col. Steptoe learned of this, he at once removed them, and Col. Babbitt, applied to Judge Shaver for a writ of habeas corpus, which was also the duty of their counsel; as the Indians were held in prison, out of the district in which the crime was committed, for which they were on trial. This writ, however, was denied by the Court upon the grounds that the evidence was not properly before them.—This last I had from Judge Shaver himself, and I know that Gov. Young had nothing to do in the matter. But justice demanded that those prisoners should be removed from that den of infamy and corruption.

The writer in the Times may think it all right to subject the poor ignorant Indians to violence and shame in an enlightened civilized country like our own. But this much I can say in his behalf, that for his unprincipled falsehoods in relation to this trial, and of Gov. Young and the people of Utah, he is unworthy to be classed with honorable men, or admitted into decent society. I will not asser, but appearances strongly indicate, that he is one of those men who bear upon their persons the indelible impress of a corrupt association with those very Indians that called forth publicly from Governor Young the just and scathing rebuke, about which the writers in the Times and Herald were led to so unwarrantable an attack upon a people whom these brutes had sought to corrupt and reduce to their degraded standard of morality; and this, no doubt, was the cause of their writing their falsehoods to the above named papers, in the hopes of covering their infamy.

I have more things to communicate; but as I am afraid that I have already trespassed too far upon your columns, I forbear for the present. Yours, &c.,

THOMAS S. WILLIAMS.

FOR THE LUMINARY.

THE THINGS I LIKE TO SEE.

BY WILLIAM WILES.

I'll tell you the things I like to see,
When Saints gather home to the land of the free,
To testify freely to all aronnd,
And echo the glorious Gospel's sound,
And gather home in peace.

And ere they venture upon the sea,
To fast and pray, and humble be,
The word of wisdom strictly keep,
To save frim sickness across the deep,
And many blessings gain.

Then watch and pray, both night and day,
Lest they from truth should go astray;
For many trials will assail,
Which o'er the brethren will prevail,
Unless they steadfast be.

I'd like to see them early rise,
To scan the glories of the skies;
And pass the time in doing good,
Throughout their floating neighborhood,
With singleness of heart.

I'd like to see them all inclin'd,
The glorious Mormon creed to mind;
And keep their times and boundaries too,
With Captain, officers and crew,
And yet be kind to all.

And when to Joseph's land they come,
Each counsel keep, and never roam;
For vile apostates will appear,
With dreadful tales, the Saints to scare,
Of what they've heard aud seen.

When steaming up those giant streams,
Avoid all lux'ry and expense—
The plainest viands you can find
Suit best the body and the mind,
And keep disease away.

Those muddy waters purify
With pounded alum, you can buy—
From fruit and vegetables abstain,
For they will cause both death aud pain,
And cholera to rage.

Be careful that you murmer not,
Nor think your own the hardest lot;
Nor let contention guide your tongue,
With rich or poor, or old or young,
But be indeed a Saint.

And when you're roused to go on guard,
Do'nt rub your eyes and think it hard;
But quickly rise, and watchful keep,
And think of anything but sleep,
And prowling thieves keep off.

And, now a word to all around,
Let luggage weigh one hundred pound;
For, if above this weight you bring,
All extras you away must fling,
Unless you pay the freight.

ST. LOUIS, June 12, 1855.

The Continued Sucess of the Allies in the Sea of Azoff.

The operations of the allied fleets in the Sea of Azoff continue with unabated energy and success. Intelligence was received yesterday by the Admiralty, dated the 31st of May, from Kertsch, that the squadron in the Sea of Azoff had appeared before Genitchi, landed a body of seamen and marines, which drove back the Russian forces, and destroyed all the depots and vessels laden with corn and supplies for the Russian army. Lord Raglan's despatch of the 2d of June, relates to the same achievement, and states that ninety vessels were found on this important point, laden with supplies for the army, all of which were sunk or destroyed to prevent their escape. Another dispatch, which, as we are informed, reached the Foreign Office in the course of yesterday afternoon, states that no less than six millions of rations of corn and flour, destined for the Russian army at Sebastopol and in the Crimea, have been destroyed in the Sea of Azoff, as well as 240 trading vessels.

Barely four days had elapsed since the squadron forced the Straits of Yenikale and entered upon this astonishing operation. Berdiansk, Arabat and Genitchi fell in rapid succession, and before they were concious of their peril the Russians found their storeships and magazines in the hands of the enemy, or only to be rescued from capture by instantaneous destruction. The enthusiastic satisfaction which the nation will feel on this occasion is heightened by the remarkable fact that our success has not cost the squadron a single life, one man only having been wounded at Genitchi, though, in all probability this bloodless victory has inflicted a severer blow upon the enemy than the hard fought and dearly won fields of the Alma and of Inkermann.

Russia is prodigal of men, and she has more than once threatened and attempted to overwhelm the gallant bands which have invaded her territory by the multitudinous hosts of her armed serfs. The loss of stores, of food, of wealth, and of the means of transport, is a greater calamity to the Czar than the defeat of an army; for, indeed, of what use is an army, and what resistance can it offer, if it be prived at the very outset of this campaign of the means of subsistence? War in the Crimea has this peculiar character, that five large armies are at this time arrayed within the narrow limits of that peninsula, although the natural produce of the country is insufficient to support any one of them. In ordinary years the Crimea does not produce corn enough for the nourishment of its own scanty population, and the harvest was below the average; this year the cultivation of the soil has been neglected.

The result is, that the armies must be fed by provisions brought from other countries; that is an operation for which we are now prepared, and which the Russians have hitherto been carrying on by the Sea of Azoff on a gigantic scale. But, although we have not yet invested Sebastopol in the proper sense of that term; we shall soon have invested the Crimea, and, when the supplies are cut off, the greater the force of the enemy may be in that country the less able will he be to maintain it there.

Another circumstance which causes us the most sincere satisfaction is, that the rapidity with which this squadron has swept the Sea of Azoff is the first exploit in the present war which the navy have been enabled to perform on their own element.—Under the orders of Sir Edmund Lyons and Admiral Bruat, who were the chief projectors of the expediton, they entered the Straits of Yenikale and landed an army in a position which paralyzed the forces of the enemy. The veesels of small draught then instantly proceeded to enter the Sea of Azoff, into which no foreign vessel of war, and probably no trading vessel above the size of a corn brig, had penetrated—a sea resembling a shallow lagune, the brackish waters of which are lost in the surrounding marshes. Across this sullen basin, which the ancients called a-marsh, and which the most recent travellers who have visited it compare to a reservoir of peasoup, our steamers ploughed their way.

In twenty-four hours Berdiansk was visited, at a distance of more than one hundred miles from the Straits, and on the following day Arabat was shelled. We had foreseen, and mentioned some days ago, upon the first arrival of this news, that Genitchi would be one of the first points to attack, because it commands the Strait, between the main land and the tongue of Arabat, and also the communication between the Putrid Sea and the Sea of Azoff. It is, therefore, a point of the greatest consequence for transport both by land and water, and we are not surprised to find that the Russians had accumulated there very large quantities of stores for the army.

The Straits of Genitchi, across which there is a ferry, is said to be not more than 60 fathoms wide; but it is deep, and it serves to carry off the waters of the Putrid Sea into the Sea of Azoff. Of the Putrid Sea itself, or Sirwash, as it is properly called, scarcely anything is known, and it is wholly unmarked by soundings in any chart that we possess. It appears, however, to present considerable analogy to the lagunes which encircle Venice; and though it may be inaccessible to stemers of war. we do not despair of ships' boats performing a service in these waters which might be of the most essential importance to the campaign. The Russians, within the last ten years, as we took occasion to state some months ago, constructed a road on piles across the Sirwash, at one of its narrowest points, which connects the Crimea with the main land by a wooden bridge about two hundred fathoms in length. This military road lying between the Isthmus of Perkop and the tongue of Arabat, is more practicable for an army than either of these two natural commuications, and the destruction of the wooden bridge which completes the line of communication. The distance from Genitchi to the bridge cannot be more than twenty or twenty-five miles. We are of course ignorant of the depth of water there may be in the laguues, but if it be sufficient to float the ships' boats, and we hold the entrauce to this inland water, there is no reaon why the destruction of this road should not be attempted.

TYPOGRAPHICAL ERRORS.

Are formost among the annoyances of editorial life—all the more so, because they seem beyond the reach of remedy. We do our best to have our paper as free from them as possible, but with all our efforts we are conscious of mortifying failures. Like a great many evil things we encounter, we are "getting used to it," and bear them with a greater degree of calm resignation than we expected to in former days. We perceive we are not alone in this matter. Our good brother, of the Zion's Herald, in his last issue, talks as follows: "In a weekly newspaper office it is next to impossible to attain perfect accuracy, which, by the way, is not attained even in stereotype offices, where every possible precaution against errors is taken. Types are as freakish as monkeys. They will get wrong, and all writers have to patiently endure the mortification of seeing themselves misprinted. For our part, though once peculiarly sensitive on the subject we have learned to submit to it with the composure of a stoic.

We read, some time since, of an attempt made in London to get out a book free from typographical errors. The proof was first submitted to the careful correction of several first class proof-readers; a reward was then offered to a number of readers for every error they could detect. After many readings, by numerous well-skilled persons, the book was printed; when lo! a typographical error was discovered on its first page! Who then need wondered at errata in a weeely newspaper?"—[Cen. Chris. Advocate.

LATEST FROM THE PLAINS.

Mr. Magraw, contractor for carrying the Salt Lake mail, has returned from a trip as far as the Blue. At that point he met with Lieut. Heath, who has brought the latest intelligence from Fort Laramie, and contradicted the reports of Indian depredations upon emigrant trains, of which so much has been said. All was quiet about Fort Laramie.

From the Squatter Sovereign, published at Atchison, Kansas Territory, of the 26th, we learn, that Maj. Rose, late agent for the Utah Indians in Utah Territory, with his family, arrived there on the 21st inst. Sixteen persons accompanied him.

Maj. Rose made the trip from Salt Lake Valley in forty-three days. On their journey, they passed two mail trains. Maj. Rose represents that he did not see or hear of a hostile Indian on the Plains, and denies the correctness of all reports about outrage being perpetrated by the Indians, the story of a train being intercepted and one hundred persons murdered, &c.

The Indians convicted of the murder of Capt. Gunnison and his party, who were tried at Salt Lake, sentenced to the penitentiary, and thence made their escape, were afterwards re-taken and were securely confined in prison.

The train of Messrs. Majors & Russell, on the way to Salt Lake City, was met at Little Blue, getting along finely.

Mr. John Ray writes to the editors of the Squatter Sovereign, that he left the Valley of Salt Lake on the 8th May, and met several trains for California, Oregon and elsewhere. A portion of the U. S. troops were met twenty miles east of Fort Kearny. He denies the reports respecting the troubles and annoyances of the Indians, and says that they evinced quite a friendly feeling. He hopes that some one will be employed to carry the mails in whom confidence can be placed, and not hazard their loss by the want of proper attention.

In the Utah Valley everything was in a flourishing condition. The crops were fine, and the prospect good for a rich harvest—the people were contented, enjoying their homes in the mountains.

ARRIAL OF THE BALTIC.

NEW YORK, June 28.—The mail steamship Baltic, from Liverpool on the 16th inst., has arrived.

She brings dates of European news one week later than the Asia.

In the Sea of Azoff the allied fleet attacked and destroyed the stores at Taganrog, the great intrepot of the Don and Volga rivers.

A Boat Expedition is fitting out at Portsmouth to be conveyed to shallow water; destination supposed to be Perekop.

The Russians have evacuated Anapa, and the French troops have been recalled from Kertch.

The Russians are about to build a railroad through the Isthmus to Perekop.

The Viceroy of Egypt is enrolling 5,000 blacks.

In London it is stated that the Austrian army will be reduced to 100,000 men.

Accounts from Sebastopol represent the garrison wasting by disease and despondency, and private advices from Kertch give fearful statements of sickness and suffering among the Russians. The Russians have secured a communication with the Crimea by means of Line boats. It is stated that the Russians have evacuated all their Circassian territory.

A shameful occurrence has taken place in the Baltic. The Russians fired upon a boat bearing a flag of truce and killed three officers and two sailors.

Private letters from Kertch give a fearful account of the sufferings of the Russian army, as well from wounds as from sickness.

The British ship Shamrock was foundered and lost at sea, with a cargo of copper valued at $200,000.

ENGLAND.

Ex-President Fillmore is quite a lion. He had been presented to the Queen.

Parliament was engaged in discussing the Decimal Currency question.

More reform meetings had been held.

FRANCE.

It is officially announced that the Empress is enciente.

The fight before the Mamelon Tower was of a very obstinate character. It is reported that five thousand men were put hors du combat. Sixty-two guns fell into the hands of the French.

POSTAGE ON BACK NUMBERS OF NEWSPAPERS. The Post Office Department announces that back numbers of newspapers, if addressed to a regular subscriber, are chargeable with a postage of one cent each, payable either at the of publication or the office of delivery; but if sent to a person not a subscriber, they are considered transient papers, and as such, are chargeable with one cent each if prepaid, and with two cents if not prepaid. None but regular subscribers to newspapers are entitled to the benefit of quarterly or yearly pre-payment.

Two Irishmen, in crossing a field, came in contact with a jackass, which was making daylight hideous with his unearthly braying.

Jemmy stood a moment in astonishment; turning to Pat, who also seemed enraptured with the song, he remarked—

"It's a fine large ear that bird has for music, Pat, but sure'n he's got a wonderful cowld."

MILLENIAL STAR.

We have several copies of the Millenial Star weekly, we wish to obtain regular subscribers for them, we can mail them if ordered to any part of the United States, $3 00 per year or six cents per copy.

The Star contains the History of the Prophet Joseph which is worth of itself double the subscription.

The reason why it succeeds.—THE Mustang Liniment has attained its enormous popularity, and almost universal use, simply because it gives better satisfaction, accomplishes more good, relieves more pain, and heals more wounds and sores than any other preparation ever before offered to the afflicted. Every bottle that is used, speaks for itself—tells its own tale in the relief it gives, and the cure it effects. And then one who has suffered, perhaps, long years with pain, without hope of relief, and finds in this Liniment an almost instantaneous remedy, cannot help but speak in its praise and recommend it in the best terms to all he sees suffering. It needs no other recommendation than a trial.

Apr, 14 21.] JAS. S. CANTWELL.

I have spoken off, they knew that there was power in the Priesthood of God to lay hold upon and save them, even though they might fall by the way, and their bodies slumber in the dust. And with this knowledge they could quietly fall asleep in Jesus, with a sure and certain hope of a resurrection to eternal life.

The Priesthood of God is mighty and comprehensive, and will reach any case in which there is any hope or any chance for salvation. Every faithful member of this church will be blessed, exalted and glorified, just as sure as they receive and obey the everlasting gospel. And why? 'Tis because God has decreed that it shall be so! He has made provisions by which every man or woman who has been faithful and obedient to the mandates of heaven, should be redeemed and exalted, even though they die before they have completed the work of salvation. The Lord has made provision for those even who have never heard the gospel in the flesh—He has provided means by which even they also, can be redeemed and be brought forth in the first resurrection and receive the blessings and glories thereof.—But every man will be rewarded according to his works. As the Apostle Paul said; "every man in his own order." If a man has been martyred for the word of God and the testimony of Jesus, he will be entitled to receive a martyr's crown and a martyr's glory. If a man die, who has been on a mission to the nations at a sacrifice of all he possessed, and he fall by the way—If he has been true and faithful, he will be saved in the resurrection of the just, and will receive all the blessings and glories that his labors may entitle him to. "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord; for they rest from their labors and their works do follow them." Every faithful brother who has labored, or is laboring to bring to pass the restitution spoken of by the ancient Prophets, will receive his just reward. I shall not expect to be rewarded for what others have done, by no means; but I shall expect to receive a reward for my own labors. This is a source of pleasure, joy and satisfaction, to every faithful Latter-day Saint, and serves to strengthen and fortify the spirit whilst combatting the evils of the world, and struggling to overcome the ills of this mortal life.

In leaving this world we do not go and associate with our enemies and persecutors, but we go into the society of our friends and mingle among our brethren, the noble and faithful ones, and how great will be the joy and pleasure of our departed brother when he shall meet and strike hands with our beloved Prophet and Patriarch—Joseph and Hyrum, and the brave and noble Anderson and son who fought by his side in Nauvoo, and who valiently defended the lives of their brethren, and finally laid down their own lives for their friends. Can you conceive of greater joy and satisfaction to these worthies, than that of beholding the face of a faithful brother and friend, with whom they have suffered, bled and died, and to be able again to strike hands and recount the interesting scenes of the past, which have gained for them a martyr's crown? no! impossible. They will then be prepared to say in very deed, we have fought the good fight, finished our course, and kept the faith, and now we have entered into our rest, whilst our base and inhuman persecutors and murderers are cast down to hell.

In conclusion, let our course of life and conduct be that of the righteous, the good and noble. Let us be liberal and generous in our feelings and spirit as the liberality of our departed brother, and like him, let us lay all upon the alter of sacrifice. He had nothing but was consecrated to the Lord, and was at his service whether he was travelling in the distant nations of the earth, or at home in the quiet vallies of the mountains. He lived and died full of faith and the Holy Ghost, and is gone to mingle with the just beyond the vail. May our life be the life of the righteous and our last end like his; and when we have finished our course, may we receive the reward of the righteous, and be associated with the holy ones through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen. S. J. Lees, Reporter.

COMMON SENSE AND SCHOLARSHIP.

Whatever else man was made for, it is evident he was designed to work. Labor is the inevitable condition of his earthly existence. It is true that in a great majority of cases toil produces pain; but a proper exercise of its functions always results in pleasure to the worker. Without inquiry further into the philosophy of labor, we only remark that it is the obvious policy as well as the duty of every man, inasmuch as he must work, to ask, first, what he must do, and secondly, how he shall do it?

It is pretty well understood, theoretically at least, that all effectual labor must be directed by intelligence. It is from neglect of this truth that we so often spend our strength in beating the air—a very tiresome process, by the way, and one that wears out the heart-life of a man far more rapidly than the most intense drudgery which accomplishes the thing undertaken.

The scholar has chosen for himself an inheritance of toil; but he has only to enter upon it with discretion to make it a source of pleasure as exquisite as the labor is severe. In speaking of the scholar, we mean the practical scholar—we believe in no other—for though there are many scholars "in the abstract," they are chiefly valuable only as specimens of the extent to which intellectual efforts can be carried without effecting anything real; like hydrogen soap-bubbles, interesting, because they carry high up into the air the liquid film in which they are enclosed!

The work which the real scholar proposes to himself is to acquire the greatest possible amount of intellectual power for every possible emergency. The way in which he is to do this is by arranging, harmonizing and disciplining the various elements of his mind in their proper relations to each other.—Now as common sence embraces all these original intellectual elements, it necessarily holds an important relation to any system of education. This, to be sure, is a very tame truth, and always by all men acknowledged, though the fact is not so often made use of as it ought to be. By common sense we understand the ability which all men have, to some extent, of making decisions without any formal process of deduction. Propose a question to some men, and they will at once give a correct answer, though they may not be able to give the reasons for their convictions. They feel that they are right, and no force of logic can shake their faith. There is a sort of instinct, a short method of reasoning, by which the mind goes at once to the conclusion, unconscious of the numerous steps by which it arrives there.—Ask any blunt farmer, in these our northern latitudes, on which of a particular hill corn will grow most rapidly? and though he may have never seen the spot before, and, of course, knows nothing about it by experience, he will, without hesitation, tell you the south side. His reason for the answer, if he gives any, may be that it lies toward the sun, and it is the warmest there. In most cases, he cannot assign any reason for this latter notion, though he feels sure of what he states; and, if you press him further, he may tell you that "common sense would teach anybody this fact," and this would be the whole truth. Now we do not say that there is a complete absence of reason, or that instinct and feeling at once grasp the truth, but that mere formal reason, such as a scientific mind would use in explication of the fact, would never have revealed it to such a mind.

The fact that men feel some truths which they cannot prove, but which are nevertheless demonstrable, shows that a power of reasoning may be going on in the mind, and we all the time be unconscious of it. What is more singular still, the results of such a process are often more reliable than those of more formal deduction.

Hazlitt, in one of his essays, tells us of a man stopping at a hotel in the north of England: he had ordered a dinner of ham and eggs, and was luxuriating in a happy mood by anticipation. When he waited, he saw a man pass the window; soon after, when he sat down to the table, he found himself without appetite, and much depressed in mind, although five minutes before he had been keenly hungry and in a most cheerful frame. As he was reflecting on this mysterious revulsion of feeling, the same man passed the window again, and he now recognized in him an officer of the government, who held a warrant for his arrest, which, if executed, might consign him to the prison or the gallows. He had felt the danger, at first, though totally unable to trace the connection of his feeling with its course, till the second appearance of the man and the recognition of the officer. Similar instances, no doubt, suggest themselves from the experience of every individual.

According to the laws of optics, when a man with two good eyes looks upon a distant object, he sees it in two different directions—thus apparently making two instead of one. By experience he learns to correct the error, and to regard the object as single. The rational demonstration of this fact requires the trigonometrical solution of a triangle whose base and adjacent angles are given—a process to which, we are thinking, few small children are accustomed—to say nothing of those of larger growth. Innumerable examples might be added, all going to show that we are not to make pure reason our sole guide in practical life or in mental cultivation. If we attempt this, our whole existence must be at the dictation of certain definite and unvarying formulæ. If we are to enter into a theoretical deliberation on every occasion before we act, it is evident our practical progress will be very slow. We do not mean that we are to abandon reason, by any means, but that we are to use it in connection with instinct, feeling, intuition. If in any case reason disagrees with these, we may be sure that something is wrong.—When the latter make their decisions and the former reiterate them, they mutually confirm each other, and assurance becomes doubly sure. This is common sense.—[National Magazine.

A MONSTER COMING.

Dickens, in his Household Words of May 16th, gives an account of a vast iron steamer that is now building in London. The length of the vessel, it is said, is six hundred and eighty feet, or more than twice the length of any steamer now afloat. Its burden is to be twenty-five thousand tons; nearly six times as large as that of any ship now in existence. It is believed by its projectors that this steamer will be able to make the trip from Liverpool to New York and back again in two weeks; and from Liverpool to Australia, a distance of twelve thousand miles, in thirty-two days. It is designed to run in the Australian trade, but will make its first or trial trip next Spring, between Liverpool and New York. It will have good accomodations for four thousand passengers, two thousand of the first class, and two thousand of the second; and as a transport ship it could carry with reasonable comfort nearly ten thousand soldiers at once. Its breadth on deck will be over one hundred and thirty feet.

To form some idea of the size of this monster vessel, let it be observed that it is on deck nearly twice as wide as Smithfield street, and would reach in length from Water street nearly to Fourth street.

The vessel is built of iron, and is divided into a great number of distinct apartments by iron division walls, perfectly fire and water tight, so that if fractured or broken in any part, only one or two of these apartments would fill with water, and the vessel would still float in safety. To guard still more effectually against fires, all the wood work will be made of wood rendered by a chemical process incombustible. On a voyage to Australia she would require twelve thousand tons coal, and could carry besides that eight thousand tons of freight and three thousand passengers.

Old England will be ahead of Uncle Sam in steamship building if this great steamer proves as successful as her projectors expect; but the Yankees will soon match it if it is found that such vessels will pay. And it is believed they will pay. Such vessels can command the best freights. Their very speed diminishes the chances of casualities by shortening the ume of the trip. The provision against accidents by fire and by fracture of the hull diminishes the risks and cost of insurance, and renders them the choice for passengers.

There is no doubt such vessels will be profitable. In one year more we may expect this monster to reach our shores, and it will be a sight as well worth seeing as the Crystal Palace in Paris.

Unsophisticated maners are the genuine ornaments of a virtuous mind.

LETTER FROM A MISSIONARY

Of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in Kansas, to a distinguished Politician.

Douglas Mission, August, 1854.

Last week—the Lord be praised for all His mercies
To His unworthy servant! I arrived
Safe at the Mission, via Westport; where
I tarried over night to aid in forming
A Vigilance Committee, to send back,
In shirts of tar and feathers, doublets quilted
With forty stripes save one, all yankee comers,
Uncircumcised and Gentile, aliens from
The Commonwealth of Israel, who despise
The prize of the high calling of the Saints,
To plant amidst the heathen wilderness
Pure Gospel institutions, sanctified
By Patriarchal use. The meeting opened
With prayer, as was most fitting. Half an hour,
Or thereway, I groaned, and strove and wrestled,
As Jacob did at Penuel, till the power
Fell on the people, and they cried "Amen!"
"Glory to God!" and stamped and clapped their hands,
And the rough voiced boatmen wiped their eyes:
"Go it, old horse!" they cried, and doomed the niggers,
Fulfilling thus the word of prophecy.
"Cursed be Canaan." After prayer, the meeting
Chose a Committee—good and pious men—
A Presbyterian Elder, Baptist Deacon,
A Local Preacher, three or four class leaders,
Anxious inquirers and renewed backsliders,
A score in all,—to watch the river ferry,
(As they or old did watch the fords of Jordon,)
And cut off all whose Yankee tongues refuse
The Shibboleth of the Nebraska bill.
And then, in answer to repeated calls,
I gave a brief account of what I saw
In Washington; and truly many hearts
Rejoiced to know, the President and you
And General Cushing regularly hear,
Drinking with thirsty souls of the sincere
Milk of the Word. Glory! Amen and Selah.
Here, at the Mission, all things are going well:
The brother who, throughout my absence, acted
As overseer, assures me that the crops
Never were better. I have lost one negro,
A firstrate hand, but obstinate and sullen;
He ran away some time last spring, and hid
In the river timber. There my Indian converts
Found him, and treed and shot him. For the rest,
The heathens round about begin to feel
The influence of our pious ministrations
And works of love; and some of them already
Have purchased negroes, and are settling down
As sober Christians! Bless the Lord for this!
I know it will rejoice you. You, I hear,
Are on the eve of visiting Chicago,
To fight with the wild beasts of Ephesus,
Long John and Dutch free soilers. May your arm
Be clothed with strength, and on your tongue be found
The sweet oil of persuation. So desires
Your brother and co-laborer. Amen!
P. S. All's lost. Even while in grief I write these lines
The Yankee abolitionists are coming
Upon us like a flood—grim stalwart men,
Each face set like a flint of Plymouth Rock
Against our institutions—ataking out
Their farm lots, on the wooded Wakrusa,
Or squatting by the mellow bottomed Kansas—
The Pioneers of mightier multude—
The small rain patter ere the thunder shower
Drowns the dry prairies. Hope from man is not.
Oh, for a quiet berth at Washington—
Snug naval chaplaincy, or clerkship, where
These rumors of free labor and free soil
Might never meet me more. Better to be
Door keeper in the White House, than to dwell
Amidst those Yankee tents, that whitening, show
On the green prairie like a fleet becalmed.
Methinks I hear a voice come up the river,
From those far bayous, where the alligators
Mount guard around the fillibusters;
"Shake off the dust of Kansas. Turn to Cuba.
There mays't thou, underneath thy vine and fig tree,
Watch thy increase of sugar cane and negroes,
Calm as a Patriarch in his Eastern tent!"
Amen: So mote it be! So prays your friend.

As a general thing the less a man reads the more loquacious he is. Put a dozen ignoramuses in a room, and they will wrangle all night about the "constitutionality of a saw mill."

The road ambition travels is to narrow for friendship and too crooked for love.

M'CLEAN'S VOLCANIC OIL LINIMENT is truly a celebrated remedy, and has done more to alleviate human suffering than any other remedy ever discovered.

One or two applications will relieve the most severe pain, bruise or sprain.

Two bottles will cleanse, purify, and heal the foulest ulcer or sore, and it will heal the most severe burn or scald without a scar.

Every family should have a supply constantly on hand, for use in time of need.

Read the following extract of a letter, which is incontestable proof of its wonderful efficacy:

A BLIND MAN RESTORED TO SIGHT.

J. H. McLean—Dear Sir: * * * I have been suffering for four years with rheumatic sore eyes, being at times altogether blind. I procured the advice of several physicians, but none of them could do me any good. By the advice of a friend I applied your "Volcanic Oil Liniment," according to the directions around the bottle, and it has cured me permanently. I have used it since for bruises, pains, &c., and it has always given immediate relief. I live on the main road near Farmington,

Yours, respectfully, JOHN H. ALLERD.

Jefferson county, Mo.

For horses it is far superior to any other remedy for curing lameness, bruises, cuts, old sores, swellings, &c.

We say, then, to all who may be suffering from external diseases, call at once and get a supply. Thousands of bottles are sold (and used) daily, and we have never heard of a case where it has failed in giving relief when properly applied.

THE MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT!

Unlike all other popular medicines, it is used by many prominent members of the faculty, and many of the public Hospitals. Their prejudices have yielded to indisputable and incontrovertible demonstrations of cures performed where their remedies had failed.

It has cured more cases of

RHEUMATISM

than any other medicine ever used. Its efficacy in this terrible disease is acknowledged by all who have used it. It not only cures the complaint, but appears to give a vigor and elasticity to the limbs, before unknown, thus performing a double office.

A FEW TESTIMONIALS.

G. W. Westbrook:—

Please send me by the bearer three large bottles of your Mexican Mustang Liniment, as I wish to take it up to my place in Vermont, not thinking it advisable to do without it. I have used it in my family and on my horses, and have found it invaluable. Yours,

J. T. WHITNEY.

Mr. G. W. Westbrook:—

Dear Sir—It affords me much pleasure in saying to you that the Mexican Mustang Liniment outsells any medicine that I have ever had for sale, and comes nearer doing what it promises to do. Send me another supply, as I am nearly out. Yours respectfully,

JOHN SINGLETRAY, P. M.

Philadelphia, June 11, 1854.

Mr. G. W. Westbrook:

Sir—My son was afflicted with a swelling upon the knee joint, which confined him to the house. I had a doctor attending him for some time, but he did not do him any good. One of my neighbors told me to use the Mustang Liniment. I asked the doctor if I could do so, and he told me he thought I could not do better.

I procured one bottle, and in about a week he was able to go out. I can safely recommend it to the afflicted.

Respectfully yours, MRS. BENNETT.

W. S. Ladd & Co., of Portland, Oregon, writes that there is an immense demand for the Mexican Mustang Liniment in that country, and orders forty gross to be shipped by Golden Gate, that sails in a few days from New York.

Park & White of San Francisco, California, order 100 gross, to be forwarded by first clipper for that port.

I had the pleasure to receive invoice and boxes Mexican Mustang Liniment per Groton, and have no doubt it will have a brisk sale on the island.

The small sizes retail for 25 cents per bottle;
The medium size retail for 50 cents per bottle;
The large sizes retail for one dollar per bottle.
The medium holds three times as much as the small;
The Large holds nearly three times as much as the medium,
Therefore the large bottles are the cheapest.

UNIVERSAL SCIENTIFIC SOCIETY.

EDITOR OF THE DESERET NEWS:

SIR:—By vote of the members I furnish you for publication the minutes of organization, constitution, and rules of the Society. with the introductory address of President Wilford Woodruff.

ROBERT L. CAMPBELL, Secretary.

G. S. L. City, Feb. 19, 1855.

MINUTES.

Great Salt Lake City, Tuesday evening, Dec. 19, 1854, pursuant to public notice, a meeting was held in the 16th Ward School House, Elder W. Woodruff presiding. Thomas R. Hawkins stated the object and design of the meeting, the benefits that would result, &c., and also that it was designed to form a museum, library, and a reading room. Elder Woodruff then spoke upon the principles, and importance of education, and was followed by several others, who spoke highly of the benefits that would accrue from such a society. It was then resolved to organize a Philosophical Society, and Thomas R. Hawkins, A. McDonald, George B. Wallace, James Cowdy, and James Galley were appointed to draw up a constitution and by-laws.

Monday evening, January 8, 1855 the committee met according to notice at President Brigham Young's office. Many useful hints in regard to establishing the Society were given by President Young, who suggested that the name be changed from "Philosophical Society" to "Universal Scientific Society," that its name might be applicable to the universal diffusion of knowledge and science, and requested the Society to be blended with the Board of Regents, and act in concert with them. He very much approved of a reading room, and a museum, and said, "Go a-head," and gave every encouragement to the committee to persevere, and organize the Society, elect active officers, and have lectures on every branch of science.

Saturday evening, February 3, 1855, the Society met in the Council House, Elder Wilford Woodruff in the chair, when the following constitution and rules were read:

CONSTITUTION.

Inasmuch as the inhabitants of these vallies have been blessed by the Almighty, and surrounded with the comforts of life, and that many have been inspired to reflect on the importance and necessity of an institution for the diffusion of useful knowledge in every branch of art and science: also believing that such an institution can now be advantageously organized, we hereby adopt the following constitution:—

ARTICLE I.—Title—"Universal Scientific Society."

ARTICLE II.—Object—The improvement and elevation of the intellectual powers and pursuits of its members.

1. By having lectures and essays on every branch of useful arts and sciences.

2. Through the use of a good library and reading room.

3. By collections in every department to form an extensive museum.

4. By obtaining instruments and apparatus to illustrate and advance the arts and sciences, and by every other laudable means within their reach.

ARTICLE III.—The Society to be governed by a president, seven vice-presidents, secretary and assistant secretary, a corresponding secretary and an assistant, a treasurer, two auditors, and two reporters, who shall hold their office for the term of one year, or until their successors are duly elected and qualified.

ARTICLE IV.—The above-named officers shall constitute a board of managers, empowered to elect all other officers, make all other laws and regulations, and do all other things that may appear to them advisable to promote the interests of the Society.

ARTICLE V.—The officers to be elected annually by the marjority of members present. The first annual meeting to be held on the 7th day of April, 1855, at which financial and general reports will be given.

ARTICLE VI.—Regular meetings to be held weekly for lectures, &c., unless otherwise ordered by the board of managers.

ARTICLE VII.—Persons desirous to become members may be admitted to membership by the majority of members present at any regular meeting of the Society.

ARTICLE VIII.—Each member to pay a quarterly subscription of one dollar in advance.

ARTICLE IX.—The treasurer shall be required to give bonds with approved security to the amount of $5,000, payable to the said society, said bonds to be filed in the secretary's office of the University of the State of Deseret.

RULE I.—Any officer refusing to fulfil the duties of his office, shall be liable to be removed by a majority of the board of managers.

RULE II.—Any member shall be liable to be expelled from the Society by the board of managers for immoral and unchristian-like conduct.

After some remarks from Elders Woodruff, L. Snow, G. B. Wallace, and James Cowdy, the constitution and rules were unanimously adopted. Voted unanimously that the Chancellor and Boards of Regents of the University of the State of Deseret be solicited to extend their aid and guardianship to this Society, in consonance with their chartered rights and privileges. The following officers were unanimously elected, viz:—Wilford Woodruff, president; John Taylor, E. T. Benson, Lorenzo Snow, Orson Spencer, Albert Carrington, S. W. Richards, and John Lyon, vice-presidents; Robert L. Campbell, secretary; George D. Watt, assistant secretary; Geo. A. Smith, corresponding secretary; W. W. Phelps, assistant corresponding secretary; David Fulmer, treasurer; George B. Wallace and A. F. McDonald, auditors; J. V. Long and Walter Thompson, reporters; T. R. Hawkins, secretary pro. tem.

ADDRESS

Of Wilford Woodruff, President of the Universal Scientific Society, delivered in the upper room of the Council House, on Saturday evening, Feb. 18, 1855.

We do not wish to be understood because we have adopted this title, "Universal Scientufic Society," that we profess to be in possession of all the truths which appertain to universal science; but we wish to be understood that we are desirous of learning and possessing every truth which will exalt and benefit mankind as far as it is our privilege. We wish to be made acquainted as far as possible with every law, truth, and principle belonging to art, science, or any subject which has ever proved a benefit to God, angels, or men. The proverb that knowledge is power is a truth which cannot be denied. One person is a cannibal, and will kill and eat his fellow-man, because he is ignorant; another person is a God, and can organize worlds and give laws to a universe of intelligent beings, and rule over them for their good, because he possesses knowledge and has the art and power to use it. The patriarchs and prophets looked upon their posterity as the greatest blessing which God could bestow upon them, as laying the foundation for their exaltation and glory, and an increase of their seeds to all eternity; while the millions consider children a curse, and when born wish them dead, because they have come into the world naked, since they will have them to clothe.—One man believes the earth is flat, and if it was to turn over his mill-pond would spill out, and he with his mill be hurled down through space, while another man well knows that if the earth was to cease its rotation but one day, the rush of the oceans from their watery beds, with other convulsions of nature would destroy both man and beast. The Indian looks upon a watch, carding-machine, locomotive, or telegraph wire, with as much astonishment and wonder, as the machinist or artist would in gazing upon the red-hot billows of a crater, the raging tornado, or the shower of fire and brimstone upon Sodom and Gomorrah. One will carry a peck of corn in one end of a bag, with a stone in the other to balance it, while another will construct a hydraulic press of some 300 lbs. weight, which will lift 200 tons. The mower will cut down his fields of herbs and variegated flowers, but sees in them no materials only for hay, while the botanist beholds in them a field of knowledge, the study of which affords him great delight and pleasure. The mass who cultivate the earth for a living, plant and sow corn, wheat, rye, barley, cotton, rice, and other grain and vegetables, promiscuously, without any regard to the kind of soil made use of, while the chemical practical farmer would carefully study the component parts of each kind of grain and vegetables, and understand well the various qualities and properties of his soil. One looks upon man as the noblest work of God, wonderfully made, containing thousands of arteries, veins, muscles, bones, and joints, with flesh and skin, with its thousand strings, kept in tune by the great Architect, while he is gazed upon by others only as a block of wood. The ignorant of all nations convey their ideas and wishes by making use of detached words and sentences in a mingled manner, with their talents like gold in the mine concealed from human view; while the linguist will hold the souls of men spell-bound through the well-tuned language by which he conveys the thoughts and sentiments of his mind. The question is asked what is a mountain? to some it is to feed cattle upon; to others it is a deposit of iron, lead, copper, silver, gold, and other minerals; to others it is trap rock, slate, quartz, granite, marble, and other strata. One man will study from the library contained in its bowels, many truths with great interest; he will seek to trace the whole life and history of that mountain from its first organization to its decomposition, with feelings of great satisfaction; while at the same time to most of us it is nothing but a mountain.

What are the starry heavens? To the astronomer it is a polar system, containing the sun, moon, planets, comets, and stars; it is the height of enjoyment to him to study their appearance, size, shape, arrangement, distance, motions, physical constitution, and mutual influence upon each other. He tells us that all the planets revolve in elliptical orbits, having the sun in one of their foci; that the radius vector passes over equal spaces in equal portions of time; also, that the squares of the times of the revolutions of the planets around the sun are proportional to the cubes of their mean distances from the sun; he gives us the diameter of each planet, the distance they are from the earth and each other; he weighs them in his scales, and explains their forces and the laws by which they are governed. Thus are the starry heavens to the astronomer; but to the prophets of God, in every age of the world, they are an innumerable company of worlds, each containing a God enthroned in light, intelligence, glory, and dominion, surrounded with an innumerable company of intelligent, immortal, and glorified beings, who have kept the same celestial law given them by their Creator, as the planet has upon which they dwell, who are filled with joy and happiness, with a sure hope that their glory will increase to all eternity; but to the millions the starry heavens are only clouds, skies, stars, and the milky way.

For what purpose is man placed here, and what is his life upon the earth? One class of men verily believe and assuredly know that they existed before they came here, and were sent here by their Father in heaven, that they might prove themselves true in a second estate, that they might search out the laws of God, and obtain a knowledge of the true and only plan of salvation, whereby man can be saved and have part in the first resurrection, and be exalted to a fulness of celestial glory in the presence of that God whose name they have honored upon the earth, by keeping his laws and obeying his will. When that class of men have obtained a knowledge of the laws of God and the gospel of Jesus Christ, they have laid hold of it with all their hearts, and practised it in their lives, and have ever been ready to seal their testimony with their blood in its defence. Another class profess to believe in God, in rewards and punishments, in a future state, and that some form of religion is necessary, though not at all essential or particular what that form is, or how varied or diversified their customs or mode of worship, or administering of ordinances may be among men, if they only suit their traditions, consciences, and circumstances.

The mass of mankind who inhabit the earth, appear to think, if we judge by their acts, that the chief end of man is to obtain pounds, shillings, and pence, dollars and cents—to devour each other—to blaspheme the name of God, and to worship every other being and thing upon earth, except that being who alone is the author of every blessing bestowed upon them, and the only being who has power to save and exalt man to immortality and eternal life.

Thus we have quoted a few examples of contrast out of the multitude of cases that present themselves to the reflecting mind of man. What causes this vast contrast with intelligent beings? The difference in a great measure consists in the different degrees of truth and intelligence which men possess. The mysteries and wonders which hang over the laws and works of nature, and the arts of men, all vanish away when we possess a knowledge of the laws by which they are governed, and the principles by which they are constructed. The resurrection of the dead, the formation of worlds, and the laws by which they are governed, would be as easily comprehended and understood by man, if he was now in possession of that knowledge which he is destined to obtain, as he can now comprehend the construction of a steamboat or the organization of a state.

We know that many persons have, by diligent search and study, sought out and obtained much truth and intelligence which has proved of great benefit to themselves and their fellow-men. We wish to obtain the same ourselves: there is a fountain of talent shut up in these chambers of the mountains, which we wish to call into requisition. We would be glad to see all Israel unite in joining this Universal Scientific Society, or branches of the same, and unlock their trunks, and bring forth their useful books, and form a universal library, with its branches, that the whole people may have the privilege of obtaining out of the best books, by study and by faith, a knowledge of the arts and sciences, and of kingdoms and countries, and the laws of nations. A large and useful library could be collected out of the materials that already exist in these mountains, which are now lying dormant and doing but little good.

An interest should be created in the minds of our young men sufficiently great to inspire them to improve well their time. and use their talents in a manner that their minds may be stored with useful knowledge, that they may be armed with intelligence and power to act well their part upon the stage of life as husbandmen, mechanics, soldiers, parents, statesmen, and prophets of God.

We should as soon as possible make a commencement for the collection of a museum. There are no people who exist upon earth that have greater resources and facilities from which to form an interesting and useful library and museum, than the inhabitants of Deseret. Our representatives, in the capacity of travelers, statesmen, and missionaries, will plough every ocean, tread every soil, visit every clime, mingle with every people, of all languages, tongues, and dialects upon the face of the whole earth: they will thereby be enabled to obtain a specimen of every man and chart, of every art and science, the productions of every press, a specimen from every mountain, land, and sea; every beast, fowl, fish, and insect, and every plant and herb, and instruments for the practical illustration of every art and science. We should as soon as practicable erect a good substantial building, divided into suitable apartments for a library, museum, reading room, with a hall for public lectures.

These are some of the prominent objects for which this Society is now formed. Do you ask will it prosper—will it become a permanent institution, or will it fall to the ground? This, gentlemen, will depend altogether upon yourselves, who are or may become members of the Society, and upon the blessings of God. The power is within yourselves; you have talent and means. If our theologians, asronomers, geographers, philosophers, mathematicians, chemists, geologists, mineralogists, botanists, agriculturists, horticulturists, phonographers, teachers of the Deseret alphabet, anatomists, surgeons, jurists, political economists, professors of music, logicians, tacticians, grammarians, poets, journalists, historians, linguists, and those acquainted with any subject which is useful and beneficial, will come forward and deliver lectures before the Society, that we may have an exchange of the views and sentiments of each other, upon the various subjects with which men are acquainted, then our time may be spent in a profitable and interesting manner. If the members of this Society will contribute of their books and means for the formation of a library, museum, and reading-room, and our representatives abroad will take pains to forward material for the same, and if all will take a general interest, then we can lay a foundation which may be permanent, useful, and beneficial to the inhabitants of these mountains.

The Nauvoo Legion—Civil and Religious Rights

A Speech Delivered by Mr. George A. Smith, in the Tabernacle, Great Salt Lake City, on the Anniversary of the Fourth of July, 1852.

As a humble private from the ranks of the Deseret mountaineers of the Nauvoo Legion, I have the honor, though unexpectedly, to rise and offer a few of our feelings in view of the great matters which have been presented before us this day, and of the great events of which this is the anniversary. From the remarks of the gentlemen who have occupied this stand previous to my rising, we might think, that a people who have been driven, and who have suffered so many difficulties, robbings; shaking of the ague, catching birds with hands, and for a time living on crickets, &c., that we would be very lean and poor; but my friends, I think I am a pretty fair specimen of the privates who compose the Nauvoo Legion. The experiment has been tried of living in the deserts, of wandering among mountains, and of solving the philosophical problem of almost living upon the air; and it has answered exceedingly well.

It is with the greatest pleasure that I address you for I can assure you that the Nauvoo Legion view with the strictest jealousy, every violation of the provisions of the federal constitution; every infringement of the rights of the people is regarded by the Nauvoo Legion with the most fiery indignation.—Whenever the rights of a religious body are invaded—whenever the privileges of a civil cammunity are trampled upon with impunity—whenever any man in power, or any man out of power shall trample upon the provisions of that legacy bequeathed us by our ancestors, there rises in us an unbounded indignation; for our fathers' legacy was sealed with their blood, and we are determined to maintain it inviolable. When an executive of a state rises up and assumes to himself a dignity and a power that no autocrat of all the Russians dare presume to exercise, and issues a bloody order as did L. W. Boggs, for the utter extermination of all the "Mormons;" men, women, and children, that may belong to, or be in any way connected with them, it raises the indignation of the Nauvoo Legion to an unbounded pitch.

What is more curious than all the rest; it frequently occurs in all governments that corruption arises among the people; the people become corrupt, and to a great extent, it must affect the government also; no matter how good its forms may be, the corruptions that arise among the body of the people, must in a great measure paralyze the head of the government. The Roman Catholics in Philadelphia were attacked by a lawless mob, and thousands turned out to demolish their churches and dwellings, and murder their people, and the perpetrators of such deeds are suffered to go unpunished—this fills the Nauvoo Legion with burning indignation. The legacy bequeathed to us by our forefathers was a constitution which will protect every man in his civil and religious rights; and where this Legion is, woe to him that infringes upon these constitutional liberties. Being called upon without reflection, or time to prepare a speech; and not possessing the requisite talents for preparing notes, I must give yon what I have to say in an off-hand style.

Men will rise up in distant countries, and say that the inhabitants of these mountains are rebellious.—Rebellious! against what? Against the power of mobs, lawless robbery, and the infringement and violation of the constitution of the United States—against the deprivation of human beings of religious liberty—that is what we are rebellions against; and the Nauvoo Legion are ready to rebel against every agression of this kind, as long as there is one drop of blood left in their veins.

These bayonets now before me have been carried upon the shoulders of these men to extend "the area of the American Liberty," over 4000 miles, suffering almost every kind of distress and fatigue; sometimes travelling on foot over a hundred miles of desert, from water to water. Such a march has not been equalled by any body of infantry in the world; and General Kearney said, that there was no other set of troops in his army that could endure such services.

Talk of rebellion! or want of loyalty! men might as well say the sun does not shine, as to argue that this people are enemies to their country's freedom.—there is a spirit of religious intolerance that has arisen in the minds of agreat many men against this people in the present age; they say, "you shall think as I think, or damn you, we'll destroy you." General Joseph Smith, the commander of our Legion, was treacherously murdered, and his noble brother by his side also, while under the pledge of safety of Governor Thomas Ford. The grandfather of that murdered general, (murdered while under the sacred pledge of the State of Illinois,) his grandfather, I say, was at the elbow of Colonel Ethan Allen, at Ticonderoga, and with Stark at Bennington; and his maternal grandfather was in the first naval battle, and at the elbow of the first Commodore of the American navy, when the first naval battle was fought by Americans against Great Britain, and served during the entire war. Why was he murdered? Because he thought different from his neighbors. Religious toleration was not in accordance with the feelings of narrow minded men; he must be butchered—basely murdered—and to accomplish it the faith of a sovereign state had to be pledged. We love the constitution of the United States in its organization; but we detest southern secession, and northern disunion, or anything that would be calculated to destroy our glorious Union, and the institutions which have been sealed by the blood of our fathers.

Gentlemen, appearing as I appear in your midst, lean though I may be, (Mr. Smith now weighing 230 lbs.,) I will tell you that I have the honor of having descended from an officer of the revolution, who marched 150 miles under the command of General Morgan, from the battle of the Cow Pens, with nothing to eat but the raw hide belt of his cartridge box. That cannot be the cause of my fine appearance; but it must be the noble living my ancestors have had, when fighting for the liberties we enjoy this day, in these mountains. And although I have passed through so many trials and afflictions to get here, having been driven out of three dwelling houses in different states, by mob force; as many times deprived of my property; and having buried most of my family from suffering on the plains; been three days at a time, without taking food, that there is now scarcely a hair left on my head between me and heaven; yet I am on hand, and with the Nauvoo Legion, rejoice that there is a place amid the mountains where men are free to enjoy civil and religious liberty and truth. Truth and Liberty forever! Amen.

TOBACCO.

"Come, old and young, and hear me tell
How strong tobacco smokers smell,
Who love to smoke their pipes so well,
That for tobacco they will sell
Their right to social union.

They always scent the atmosphere,
And you may know when they are near,
Though not a word from them you hear,
Their breath would strangle you, I fear
While in this smoking union.

They clean their pipe-stems with a wire,
Then fill the bowl and put in fire,
And smoke until it quite expire,
Nor do they seem to ever tire
In this laborious union.

Sometimes, from three to six you'll see,
Selected in one company,
And every fellow in good glee,
They then must have a smoking spree,
A filthy smoking union.

And then the fumes and smoke will rise,
Like morning mist towards the skies,
Then woe to him who has weak eyes,
Unless he takes his leave and flies,
Away from such a union.

With impudence they oft presume,
To vex all persons in the room,
Who can't endure tobacco fume,
And they must bear their wretched doom,
Or leave the smoking union.

Some keep their money from the poor,
And send them hungry from the door,
Then haste away to some one's store,
And spend it for tobacco more,
To burn in smoking union.

Sometimes, within their neighbor's door,
They'll cast their quids, some three or four,
And spit on carpet, hearth and floor,
Often a gill, or even more,
And talk of social union.

Oft-times within the church you view,
Persons who there will sit and chew,
And spit upon the floor of pew,
Until it spreads a foot or two,
And sing of heavenly union.

When they are mad they chew much more,
Until their angry fit is o'er,
Than they were known to chew before,
Their anger then is much too sore,
To think of heavenly union.

The quid is oft so large within,
The juice runs out and stains the chin,
And then we always have to grin,
And think there is no little sin
In this tobacco union"

GLORY brings more trouble than pleasure.

MILLENIAL STAR.

We have several copies of the Millenial Star weekly, we wish to obtain regular subscribers for them, we can mail them if ordered to any part of the United States, $3 00 per year or six cents per copy.

The Star contains the History of the Prophet Joseph which is worth of itself double the subscription.

Elder Preston Thomas, Vine Grove, Washington Co., Texas, has favored us with correspondence for the Luminary, under date of 18th June, particularly requesting us to publish his address, that the Texian Brethren may correspond with him, we shall publish his communication in our next.

Organization of the Platten Branch.

Elder Wm. Lewis called upon us a few months ago, and asked permission to organize a branch of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, in the district in which he was residing, there being already eight persons who desired the blessings of a Church organization. We gave written instructions to the brethren, who proceeded according to said instructions, cast lots for a President, and the lot fell upon Elder Lewis, who chose Elders Wm. Brighton and Geo. Thomas to be his Counsellors. This organization is called the Platten Branch, situated at Platten creek, Jefferson county, Mo.

We feel perfectly satisfied with the proceeding of our brethren, so far as we are yet informed, and we doubt not but the Holy Spirit will guide them into all truth, inasmuch as they remain humble and faithful before the Lord, they have our confidence and blessings, and we pray our Father in heaven to grant them all the desires of their hearts.

The Platten Branch was organized May the 3rd. The report has only fallen into our hands within the last few days, and we take this, the first opportunity to notice it in our paper, so that any of our brethren who may be living in the neighborhood of this branch, may avail themselves of the blessings of its organization.

Elder Brighton writes, under date of May 25, and says:

"We have held several meetings since our organization, and the Lord has blessed us, and we are determined to go on with the work of God, and keep His commandments concerning tithing and all other things required of us, that we may obtain life everlasting, which is our real desire, and for which we are anxious to labor in this cause.

"We have all represented ourselves to be Mormons and the inhabitants around us are astonished. Previous to our organization we attended their meetings and they took great delight in us and treated us kindly. They say some folks that call themselves Mormons have been robbing and plundering, cursing and getting drunk, and doing all kinds of mischief around the country, but they believe us to be honest and industrious, and they are desirous to hear us preach. Thank God for that, we intend sending in a petition for permission to preach in their Meeting house, we have been desired by one of their members to do so for it is not occupied by them only every other Sunday. Dear president we conclude praying our father to bless you and all our co-workers in the kingdom of God, wishing you would drop us a few lines now and then and instruct us in the path of righteousness.

THE UTAH MAIL.

We have received a full file of the Deseret News for the month of May; the last number is dated the 30th. As we have received no papers for April, we suppose the May Mail has been sent by way of California, which we hope to receive before another week, when we shall be able to furnish our readers with an account of the proceedings at the April Conference.

For a general description of the condition and prospects of the Territory, we refer our readers to the communication of our excellant correspondent, Geo. A. Smith, whose letters may be considered an epitomized history, which cannot fail to interest and instruct those who read it.

We learn from our correspondence, and from the News that a general time of health is enjoyed, and peace and prosperity prevails throughout the Territory. The only draw-back is the swarms of locusts and grashoppers, which threatened with entire distruction all the spring crops, but nothing daunted.—Many are resowing their fields, and expect to reap plus tard a plenteous harvest.

Upon the whole it is presumed that the crops will be scarce this year, and all the California emigrants and Government troops who may be calculating upon Utah to feed them next winter, are hereby notified that they will be most likely numbered among the lean kine unless they take their provisions with them, or learn to live upon locusts, grasshoppers, &c. The mountaineers have become accustomed to it, but the gentlemen we have refered to would most likely need something more substancial, which they had better seek in more congenial climes.

A few Hints to Editors, Priests and Judges.

The bold and successful march of Mormonism over the prejudice and opposition of this generation is simply the question of time, which a few short years will fully answer, the Lord has said concerning the latter-day saints, "no weapon that is formed against thee shall prosper, and every tongue that is lifted up in judgement against thee, thou shalt condemn." Our enemies bear testimony against themselves, and their own journals furnish evidence of their shame and dishonor, and when ripened in iniquity the Almighty will hurl his judgements at their guilty heads, and lays them powerless with the dead and damned. Where are now the Mobocrats and murderers who distinguished themselves in driving, kidnapping and murdering the saints in Illinois and Missouri? and where the success of their brilliant achievements? go ask the once persecuted of the Mountain Territory concerning the incarnate devils who robbed them of their homes, violated their wives, sisters and daughters, and shed the blood of their Prophets? and they will tell you that thousands of them assaying to cross the desert Plains and obtain their golden god and live, were seized by hunger, disease and death and left their putrid carcasses to pay the reckoning.

This may be considered a Table turning generation, but it happens that every turn made, is a turn in favor of Mormonism, and the very opposite to their persecutors. A few months ago the Press was literally teeming with denunciations of Governor Young and the Mormons, and panegyrics of Colonel Steptoe and his troops. It was then hoped, and by many confidentially expected that the Governors power and influence would be summarily prostrated, and his people would be crushed and Mormonism obliterated, but the chapter of the entrance and exodus of the noble Colonel and his troops does not rean as it was expected. Some gentlemen of the Press informed their readers that Colonel Steptoe would soon straighten out that Governors case and by the aid of Government troops then in Utah, would strike a blow that would make everyMormon tremble. Our cotemporaries probably believe all they said and if they could have influenced the conduct and directed the policy and movements of the gallant Colenel, he would doubtless have accomplisned all they desired, but as he happened to reside in a country where these gentlemen have no control or influence, they were of course doomed to disappointment—the last Utah mails bring the tidings of the grand exit of the Government troops, and here ends the fanatical dreams and extravagant predictions of our cotemporaries—the Mormon war—the new Governorship—and all their most sanguine expectations—and nothing accomplished—alas! poor editors, where is now your boasting? where your maledictions and prognostications? has the honorable course of the noble Colonel paralyzed your narrow souls? certain it is that your hope is departed, and nothing is left you but the tale, for not only has the anticipated hero refused supreme command in Utah, but has absolutely quit the field, leaving the lion to roar unannoyed and unmolested among the mountain sheep, with the assurance doubly sure that he will govern them in Utah, as long as the Lord is satisfied with his administration, and has no more important appointment for him to fill.

The Jeffersonian of the 23d ult informed us that the reason Colonel Steptoe refused the office to which he was appointed, was his dread of coming into direct and violent collision with the "All-powerful Brigham" the editor must know all about it of course, he may have received a dispatch from the Colonel by Mr. Magraw's Ox Telegraph, or perqaps the spirit rappers may have told him so, any way, his statement must be credited for what tis worth, but we are bound to confess that tis not particularly flattering to the Colonel and his staff, to be branded as chicken-hearted cowards, but as they did not tame the lion, and obliterate Mormonism as was predicted last fall, they must of course take the consequences, and Brigham Young must still govern Utah, and Mormonism with polygamy and all the et ceteras must still flourish and increase, and our editorial friends must be content to "grin and bear it."

A high minded and honorable man could not be found to assume the government of the Latter-day Saints in Utah, because it is well known that the present Governor is far more competent and has a hundredfold greater claims than any other man, either Mormon or Anti-mormon. It was this reason that induced Colonel Steptoe to refuse the appointment, it was neither fear nor cowardice, the Gentile Editors statements to the contrary notwithstanding, it was the honest convictions of his heart, produced by actual observation, and matured by personal acquaintance, and when he signed the petiuon to President Pierce to beg the reappointment of Governor Young, he knew perfectly well what he was about, for he was well convinced of this fact, that Brigham Young is the only man that can govern Utah to the satisfaction of the people.

We do not wish wholly to discourage those gentlemen who may be plotting and scheming in order to obtain political distinction and preferment in Utah, let them work out their own discomfiture and disgrace as did Brocchus, Brandebury, Ferris and company, they will then feel as the nigger felt after he had been whipped, "so much better after they have done smarting."

Although we have evidence that an honorable man would not accept the Gubernatorial chair of Utah, yet we believe that there are men who would resort to any meanness, perpetrate any villainy, sell their best friends, and plunge the nation into perpetual difficulties and ruin if they could by that means obtains the envied chair, and make themselves a name in the Gentile world.

We should not be surprised if some of the U. S. Judges for Utah should be taken with the office hunting fever and quit their judicial bench, and proceed to the White House in search of preferment. We should judge from the history of some gentlemen in the Mountain Territory, that they really need it, we might refresh the memory of our readers by reference to the correspondenee of Mr. T. S. Williams which presents the U. S. Attorney for Utah in a most unenviable position, which so identifies the honorable gentlemen with squawology that it would not be the least surprising to find him with other kindred spirits on a mission to Washington to seek preferment by which to cover their shame and wipe out the disgrace of their squawly association.

On the occasion to which we heve referred sundry articles were demanded of the honorable gentleman in public court, such as blankets, paints &c., in consideration of agreement made between said Attorney and squaw, the object of such contract we leave our readers to conjecture, suffice it to say, that we have no brothel houses, nor Femmes de mauvaise vie in the Mountain Territory. It is not surprising therefore that these Gentlemen find the state of things in Utah as Judge Brocchus said "very hard upon them" nor is it surprising to hear of them luxuriating in the charms of the copper colored daughters of the desert, these things are quite consistant with the spirit of anti-mormonism; and if these gentlemen should present themselves to President Pierce as candidates for the Governorship, Secretaryship or other advanced post in the territory, we shall be happy to back up their application with testimonials from the "Mormon," the "Luminary" and other interesting documents concerning them, for we should like above all things to see them rewarded according to their works.

We recommend all people henceforth to mind their own business, and leave Mormonism to those who can handle it, all its opponents who have yet entered the field are notoriously incompetent to touch its interests in any manner. The Latter-day Saints are known to be in good hands, their destiny is with the Almighty, it is his power and influence that has placed Governor Young in his present honorable station, and he will keep him therein as long as 'tis expedient. The Lord has given him sufficient wisdom to cope with this generation, no matter in what position he may be placed he is equal to every emergency. He is a perfect master of Theology in all its branches, as a Politician he is unequalled, as a Factician he cannot be excelled. He is unquestionably the most judicious, economical and excellent Governor in any territory of the Union.

His influence over the people under his jurisdiction is a hundred per cent greater than that of any other Governor in the United States, and both Saints and sinners endorse him as the most honorable and competent man in all the country, and Colonel Steptoo too—he whom "our very kind friends" hoped would lay the power of Prophets in the dust—even he endorsed the almost universal testimony concerning his superiority over any other man, we wish the Gentile Priests and Editors and Judges to remember these things, and understand that the tables are turning against them, and no apology or excuse that they can make will ever cover their shame, or mitigate the disgrace of their discomfiture.

EUROPEAN MISSIONARIES.

We have had the pleasure during the past week of enjoying the soeiety of several of our Mountain Brethren who are now en route to Europe to fulfil the Missions appointed them at the last April conference in S. L. City. They arrived here in fine health and excellent spirits and bounded into our office with happy hearts and joyous countenances like Mormons of the true stripe. We threw down our pen, shook them warmly by the hand, indulged in a merry laugh, and wished them prosperity in the name of the Lord.

On Sunday the first inst. we were favored by most of the Missionaries with addresses illustrative of their feelings concerning their Missions, and of Mormonism in general: whilst Elder Muir was describing the mammoth water melons, squashes, beets, onions, &c,, many a mouth watered we presume and not a few wished themselves in the Mountain Territory.

We may here remark that the greatest suit of buck skins ever known to ascend our Platform, and present themselves before a congregation in this stake of Zion, was on this occasion. The young gentleman (John Kay) who wore the critters, was said to be travelling for his health. He took his departure by the cars, for New York in company of Elder John Scott on Tuesday 3d July, and took with him a good stock of buffalo beef, bear, and beavers feet for the journey.

Elders H. C. Hatght, Daniel Davis, Robert F. Neslen and William S. Muir have spem several days in the city awaiting the return of John L. Smith and David A. Curtis from Keokuk and its vicinity—they left the city this morning, and will proceed immediately to New York en route for Europe the theatre of their future labors, we wish them abundant success on their Missions, and bless them in the name of the Lord.

Origin of "Throwing the Hatchet."

In the fourteenth century, the situation of public executioner for the city of Florence, became vacant, and as it was a place of considerable emolument, there were three candidates. The first candidate with a knife cleverly seperated the head of the victim from his shoulders. He was outdone by the rapid strokes of the second, whose glittering broadsword struck terror into the hearts of the surrounding multitude. The third, and least promising held in his hand a short hatchet, and when the victim was extended with his head on the fatal block, approached him, and in a whisper asked him if he was a swift runner and could swim well. On being answered in the affirmative, he desired him to spring on his feet and cross the river. The executioner then putting on a fierce look, swung his weapon round his head, but instead of making it descend on the devoted creature's neck, struck it with great force into the block! shouts of execration rose from the crowd, and the trembling wretch astonished at his wonderful escape had nearly gained the other side of the river, before any steps were taken to pursue him. He had scarcely however, gone ten yards on dry land, when the executioner taking steady aim, threw his hatched with such effect that the body continued running some time after the head was off! From this singular incident the common phraze of "throwing the hatchet," is said to be derived.

Pitch upon that course of life which is the most excellent; and custom will render it the most delightful.—[Pythagoras.

Correspondence.

We have received the following letter from Elder Seth M. Blair, per favor of Elder Milo Andrus. We deeply sympathise with Brother Blair, his company, and friends of the deceased, in this visitation from the messenger of death. We feel it hard to part with those we love, although we may be confident that they are ushered into more glorious scenes, and that we shall meet them again in happier circumstances. Death is at all times distressing; but when its ravages are dealt with such destructive hand as in this case, among our own beloved friends, we feel it more particularly severe; but in this as all the dispensations of life or death, we bow in humble adoration before the Almighty, and say, "it is the Lord, let him do what seemeth him good.

Little Nemehaw, N. T. June 24, 1855.

Dear Brothers and Presidents Andrus and Ballantyne—I thank the Lord God of Israel that life was spared me, and that I was blessed with the blessing of your kind epistle, borne by my worthy and beloved brother Elder Edward Stevenson, whom I will receive and my company as our presiding officer and leader, and with all the faith in us will we sustain him; for Oh! truly brethren the time had come to relieve your friend and brother that again in the flesh we may meet. In the last six days I have buried some twenty-five, and just such a scene of death you never witnessed on earth, and I pray that you never may. On the 17th night I found that public prayer was not to be offered up, when I called the family of brother East into his tent and prayed with them, when I learned what was then pending over our heads, and in one hour the cholera made its appearance, and in the first thirty-six hours we buried one every three hours or more; abating gradually until the 5th day when Col. N. H. Greer died. The scene, dear brethren, can neither be portrayed by the eloquence of man, neither by the pen of the ready writer. The cry of the dying and shrieks of the living presented nothing but the true scene, even all the horrors of death imaginable. The grave diggers were employed both night and day under the ever diligent eye of Serjt. J. M. Barlow, assisted by brethren never to be forgotten, Elders S. H. Earl, Geo. C. Riser, Oscar Tyler, Col. Greer, and other faithful brethren and sisters; and in my feeble health night and day reports of the dead and dying, and calls for help on every hand, truly placed me in a situation by no means ever again to be aspired unto. In short, I must close with the heartfelt gratitude ever due unto my heavenly Father, that you responded to my call, in sending to my relief brother Stevenson and those accompanying him, that my life may be prolonged and Israel gathered, and the Priesthood of our God honored on the earth. We have lost eleven of our Texian friends—three men—Col. Greer, Jones, and Lankford, and one sister Lankford, and seven children, with the wife of brother Middlemass, his aunt, sister Priestly, sister Fisher and Bagly, Eliza Jost, sister York, (of Texas,) and some other English sisters; a full report of which I will make at the "Deseret News" office. Thus brethren, in brief, I detail a scene that I feel that the seige of Sebastopol is as child's play unto. With the full feeling and faith that the Lord doeth all things well—avoid a camp on Twelve Mile creek. Remember me in your prayer, and our little company. My love to brother Snow, yourselves, McGaw, and all the saints of God. I am, as ever, your devoted brother in Christ. S. M. BLAIR.

P. S. Serjeant reports sick list 24. We have had but two new cases in thirty-six hours.

LETTER FROM ELDER MILO ANDRUS.

Completion of Enclosure around the P. E. Fund Farm.—Arrival of Missionaries. A public Dinner in the Western Style. The first fruits from the Farm. Health of the Camps. The general feeling and Spirit of the Emigration.

Mormon Grove, K. T., June 21. 1855.

To the Editor of the "Luminary."

Dear Brother.—Judging others by myself I feel as though a word from us at this point of outfit would be gratefully received by you as often as we can get time to write or find anything new to write about, and at this time we have taken a few minutes for this purpose—and we think that we have something new to write about, that will be glad tidings to all who know and love the truth. We have the privilege of saying now that the ditch and log fence is completed around the P. E. Fund Farm, and that about 30 to 40 acres is ploughed and planted and the teams still ploughing for wheat and other gram. We also had the pleasure of receiving and welcoming Messrs. H. C. Haight & Co. consisting of 19 missionaries on the morning of the 20th and feeling glad to see them and hail the servants of the Lord who are on their way to the various portions of the earth and they were much rejoiced to meet with many other old veterans of the cross that were wending their way Zionward taking charge of the flock that the great shepherd had permitted them to gather into the fold, while all parties viewed with much delight our beautiful situation here, one thought that we might add to the happiness of each other, by getting up in real western life and sitting upon the ground to partake a refreshment called by us, if a dinner, connected with which were some of the first fruits of our labours that had grown on the P. E. F. Farm consisting of onions, peas, radishes &c., we erected an awning of wagon covers and to see the spirit manifest in our sisters in getting up a dinner in as good style as possible made all hearts rejoice after partaking of food and singing a song of praise, we offered up our humble prayers to our Father in heaven asking him to protect our brethren who are outward bound and also those whose faces were set Zionward, not forgetting our beloved brethren, the presidency over the whole church of God and also the editors and presidents of the various missions throughout the world, after which the spirit of the Lord was wonderfully made manifest in exhortations and propheeyings all hearts were warmed and comforted, for which all felt to praise the Lord, as far as it regards the health of the camps of Israel is remarkably good thoug hin some instances among so vast a crowd we have some sickness. The Texas Camp has been among the sufferers, as far as we have heard from the camps on their journey, all are prospering. Elder Ballantyne will start tomorrow with the first Company of P. E. Fund passengers consisting of 396 souls re-organized the second company of P. E. Fund passengers and the fifth company of the present spring emigration on the 23d inst., under the charge of Elder Israel Barlow and others. The season is getting late and we feel to pray that the Lord will speedily open the way for the balance of the emigration to be on the move, A small company of the saints from Newark Mo. just arrived in our midst bound for Great Salt Lake city a general good spirit prevails throughout the camp and all seem to be willing to obey the councils that are given them. I now close by giving my kind regard to Bro. Hart and others in the office. Milo Andrus.

Letter from Hon. Geo. A. Smith.

Arrival of the Ox Telegraph with Mails—Condition and feelings of the Indians—The Allied Armies of Grasshoppers—The prospect for Loafers and California Emigrants—Progress of the Temple—Visit to the Foundry, Machine Shop, and other Departments of the Public Works—Description of Various Branches of Mechanism.

G, S. L. City, May 31, 1855.

To the Editor of the Luminary:

Sir,—The Eastern Mail arrived here on the 12th inst., bringing a few numbers of your brilliant "Luminary." There were 27 sacks of mail matter, being the most part of 4 months mail, and much in advance of the Ox Telegraph with which we have heretofore been favour'd.

The Presidency and company have returned from their trip south, reporting that the people are all enjoying excellent health, the Indians quiet and learning to work, and the Iron Works progressing.

The feelings of all however are awakened to one serious drawback; the grasshoppers in ennumerable hosts, are visiting every settlement, and devouring all the early crops, turning the fruitful fields into what appears to be barren wastes, and cutting off the staff of life. As judgement begins first at the House of God, is this a sample of what the Lord's Army is about to do with the nations of the earth? The operations of the allied armies before Sebastopol, is mere play compared with what the Lord can do with his army, and that without kicking up such a fuss and noise; be this as it may, the Saints are likely to have to live by faith; they are striving all they can to save what little wheat there is still left, by sweeping the grasshoppers into the creeks with willow bushes. Others are re-plouging and sowing, harrowing and planting.

There will apparently be no chance for loafers this year, and you may proclaim it as with the voice of a trumpet, that unles the emigrants to the gold mines bring provisions with them, they will not be very apt to overload their stomach when they get here. 60,000 saints have to be sustained by some means—they are not uneasy about it; for the Lord says it is his business to provide for his saints, yet they know that the Lord requires them to do the best they can for themselves, and for each other, and under the circumstances the household of faith will no doubt be cared for first.

They are drawing rock in order to commence building the new Historical Office opposite the President's Office.

Yesterday my clerks Thomas Bullock and Leo Hawkins went through the various departments of the Public Works. They saw about one hundred men vey busy rolling down large rocks for the Temple foundation, which is nearly completed all round, and they have commenced to lay the flagging for the foundation of the cut stone.

Several men were at work cutting large millstones 5 feet 8 inches in diameter, for grinding seed for oil. They also visited the foundry, the furnace of which is blown by heavy machinery? and saw Morgan Phelps and his assistants cast two segments for a large iron wheel for a thrashing machine. Next saw the blacksmith's shop where seven fires are kept constantly in blow, and the men continually clinking their hammers. and producing the useful and neccessary articles for the public works.

Found seventeen men buisily plying their hammers and chisels in the stone cutters shop, forming the coping for the north wall of the Temple block; also blocks in various shapes for different public buildings now in progress, a grave stone for Rodney Badger, another for the child of Elder O. Pratt, and one for Bro. Patterson who was killed at the stone quarry; all of which are the workmanship of Bro. Wm. Ward, who sculptured our block for the Washington Monument.

They next visited the paint shop, and found Bro. James Beck busy painting some bedsteads which are put together upon an entirely new and scientific principle. The shop abounds with various articles in their different stages of workmanship, and nine men are in constant employ. Strolling into the lumber yard, they found numerous piles containing, according to Bro. E. Forsham's statement 150,000 feet. They then took a peep into the joiners shop of which Bro. Miles Romney is foreman. This is a perfect hive of industry, being filled with benches in active operation, and every man intent upon his work. They finally visited the machine shop, where flanges, wheels, cranks, gudgeons, and machinery of various kinds were being manufactured. The whole affair being about as complete a business establishment as you will find anywhere in a day's travel; in fact you can scarcely realize the amount of improvements going on, posted up as you are in Mormon enterprise. Yours faithfully,

GEO. A. SMITH.

RURAL SCENERY.

In strolling through this city it is really gratifying to observe an increasing interest in tree and shrub planting, and in laying out flower gardens. This augurs well for the general good taste and prosperity of the community.

Many have laid out and planted the foregrounds to their houses in a neat and well arranged manner, which gives an air of tasteful and useful improvement, and points out the pioneer path for others to also strive to obtain the same delightsome improvements.

A high and judicious cultivation of the soil indicates a prosperous condition of the people. The well cultivated farm, the rural cottage, the pretty flower-garden, and the streets and avenues well planted with shade and fruit trees, all give evidence of taste and prosperity; indeed they are the results of enterprise, intelligence, and industry.

On the contrary, let any one picture to himself a "lone house" with not a tree, shrub, or flower to welcome the stranger, and he will at once form a conclusion as to the inmates of such a dwelling. But when his eye rests upon the ornamental parterree, the shady arbor, the admirably arranged and grouped trees and shrubs, he at once concludes that the occupants of such residences enjoy, and are willing to impart to others,the comforts and luxuries of this life.

In planting flower gardens, I would recommend the introduction of the many pretty flowers that grow in the kanyons, in preference to the tender plants of warmer climates, which, if they could ever be made to grow, would have a sickly appearance; for it is obvious that plants and trees that thrive well, are always more beautiful than those which are tender and sickly. THE BUFFALO BERRY,

Or Shepherdia Elegnoidese.

The buffalo-berry, being a native of these regions, is well worth cultivating as a hardy, ornamental tree, and for its fruit, which is a good substitute for the red currant, having familiar qualities for domestic use. The berries may be used as tarts, and when made into jam, or preserve, much resemble the red currant, and are also good for making vinegar.

They have been cultivated in the Eastern States upwards of 30 years, and were first discovered and made known by that indefatigable botanist, Nuttall, when on his tour of discovery to Oregon, with Capt. Wyeth of Boston, Mass. Mr. N. gave the seeds to the Messrs. Winships, nursers in Brighton, Mass., and they have cultivated and sold thousands of trees, which have been sent to all parts of the States.

This tree belongs to the class Diocea of botanists, and, like the hop, bears distinct male and female flowers on seperate plants; hence the male plants never bear fruit.

Those who desire to cultivate bearing trees should set out male and female plants, always letting the female, or berry bearing trees, out-number the male, for the Polygamia of the vegetable kingdom, like the animal, is always the most numerous on the side of the female.

Again, it may be well to say, to those who believe that the hop often changes from the male to female, that there are no such incongruities in the natural organization of the vegitable kingdom; and it is absurd to suppose any such changes in its eternal organization. E. SAYERS.

ON "SHIFTPOTS."

Suggested by a speech of Elder Lamoreaux, on board the Ship Chimborazo.

BY ELDER W. G. MILLS.

When crossing o'er the great Atlantic,
Journeying to Great Salt Lake valley,
I saw full many a cunning antic,
In Chimborazo's cooking galley.
My thinking powers, as I was looking,
Often an awkward pull and lift got,
To see man's selfish ways while cooking,
And prove himself a very shift-pot.

When at the stove the time allotted,
If in some hole the fire was scanty,
You'd see his sly glance, who had got it,
Then move his friends to cook his dainty:
I seem'd inclined his hat to pull off,
And hate him for such petty meanness,
But no! said I, the world is full of Such shift-pots—thus it dropp'd between us.

Whene'er I see a man divulging
His neighbor's secrets, sin or folly,
Or to defame his worth indulging,
To show himself more wise or holy;
Whate'er his rank, or means, or station,
Though he the greatest mentel gift got,
He is beneath consideration,
A mean and miserable shift-pot.

Whene'er I see a fellow creature
That makes an hon'rable profession,
Exhaust the sources of his nature,
To grasp all in his own posession;
Despite of how mankind may suffer,
Infirm and poor, receive his gift not,
So he may only fill his coffer,
He is a low contemptuous shift-pot.

Whene'er I see a man of power,
In riches and in influence ample,
The rights of other men devour,
And on his fellow beings trample;
Though thousands praise the proud aspirant,
That human nature's lot will lift not,
The petty, grasping, heartless tyrant,
Is but a despicable shift-pot.

Whene'er I see a man ambitious
To fill an honorable station,
To meet his momentary wishes,
Or serve the purpose of the nation,
To see him cringe unto another,
Or bribe until he has the gift got,
I'd spurn him were he even my brother,
And treat him always as a shift-pot.

Whene'er I see a man despising
An honest soul of mind and merit,
Or crush the humble genius rising,
Because he does not wealth inherit.
If one bestow for selfish favor,
A friend the place he as a gift got,
Such mean unprincipled behavior,
Is but the course of every shift-pot.

Mark me! that man is not worth trusting,
That thus displays his selfish natnre,
That aye for his own interest lusting,
Thinks not upon his fellow creature.
Had I for trust or wealth a station,
And from the trnth I here will drift not,
He should not by my approbation,
Obtain it—I detest a shift-pot.

"When I have anything to do I go and do it," was the reply.

Who can judge the Saints of God?

BY ELDER W. G. MILLS.

It is remarkable in the history of God's dealing with man, that whenever he has sent forth men commissioned with power to teach mankind, instruct them in the ways of truth, and govern them according to his divine will; that men have claimed the right and privilege to judge the Prophets of the Most High, as they display and prosecute His purposes, have placed themselves quite comfortably in the gubernatorial seat, and endeavored to govern those whom He alone should rule. It is a lamentable fact, too, which every well-informed mind must acknowledge that they have not only presumed to judge God's people and their ways, but they have done so most cruelly, wantonly, and unmercifully.

That they have invariably judged and punished most cruelly in every age when God has endeavored to raise up a people unto himself, that he might teach and govern is very evident from the history of the past. All the Prophets in their trials, sufferings, and death attest the fact. None have escaped; not even the immacculate Son of God. The Apostles and Saints bear evidence to the same; and it makes the hearts of the honest feel deeply when they contemplate on the ignorance of the wise, the corruption of the pious, and the dishonesty of philanthropic which have instigated the rude and unlettered multitude to put into execution their cruel designs on a good a virtuous people. We now acknowledge their goodness and virtue, because the prejudices of those ages do not becloud our vision nor harden our hearts; though their movements were as incomprehensible, and their principles as obnoxious then as those of the Latter-day Saints now.

It is singular that those who always with a loud voice, bold front and uplifted hand, who should be the first to greet the truth for the enlightenment of man, the dispersion of ignorance and the dissemination of the holy principles, were the first and readiest to oppose and judge the people of God, and make the heavens weep with their atrocious acts against them, were those who claimed the advantages of intellect and attainments, and the influences of religion; yet with all their pretensions to learning and piety and power to judge, I solemnly aver that it is not within their province to understand the laws, order and movements of the Saints, they have not the capacity to judge them righteously. Who are those that presume to judge God's people, and are they competent to the task? The press, that mighty engine in the world for good or evil, which bears and holds an influence in the affairs of men, and gives a tone to society, is very ready to stand forward to judge the Saints. Its editors and writers invariably take upon themselves the censorship, assume the woolsack, as readily as they mount the office stool. But, I ask, are they capable to sustain the self-constituted office justly? whence their authority? it is true, they may understand something of the constitution of earthly governments, monarchical, aristocratical, and republican; may descry the differences between tory, whig, and democrat; may talk loudly of "policy" and "expediency;" but in the name of everything that is good, what know they of the science of religion, of the kingdom of God, of those sublime laws and organizations which come from heaven, to make mundane systems like heaven? They may discourse largely, from their knowledge of the imperfect history of nations, on free-trade, abolition or slavery—we give them credit for research and acquirement—by why should caterers for the public in literature, science, and art, be competent at all to comprehend the principles and designs of the called of God? Why should they presume and we expect it? A man may be a good mathematician, but a miserable physician; he may be an excellent lawyer, but a poor astronomer; so a man may be a tolerable literary writer, yet a very inefficent judge of religious creeds. So these characters who try to teach the public mind care any thing for religion and virtue, about which they preach so much? I am sorry to say, from my general knowledge of men of the press, that they do not! Their own pecuniary interests is the primary and moving cause of their actions, to attain which they will use every artifice to please the popular desire, and feed the public spirit. To attain wealth and influence may really justify them in their pursuits; but they should let religion and things of God alone in their functions, and seek to have more truth in their columns about the common every day occurrences of life, that fewer false statements may stain their sheets, and cease to misinform the public mind. They may dabble in politics, and have a smattering knowledge of men and things so far as scandal, chit-chat and intrigue are concerned; but they are utterly incapable of knowing the purposes of the Saints; unless they receive a portion of the same spirit by obedience to the same gospel truths. Let them write, as they do, to please the vitiated taste of the excited and news-devouring public; but it is certainly preposterous, absurd and foolish for them to attempt to be judges of the Saints. As well may the ignorant plow-boy who does not understand the nature of angles, squares, circles and segments judge and condemn the mathematician in his labors to measure the distances of the planets, tell their transits and eclipses, as the gentlemen of the broad sheet to assume the dictatorial seat to the Latter-day Saints.

Ministers, too, of every denomination of religion—from his holiness the Pope, down to the ranter—esteem it their particular prerogative to judge the Saints. But are they capable to do so. I say no! They cannot even judge correctly between the individual sects of religion. They differ on "essentials" and "non-essential" points themselves. The Bible appears no guide to them, for they read it so differently—it severs them into pieces or factions; "the letter killeth;" and if they cannot surmount their own sectarian obstacles, and judge correctly their own creeds; if Presbyterian cannot read to please the Methodist, and so on throughout the catalogue, how is it really possible, even according to the common nature of things, that they can comprehend the higher laws of heaven, revealed in the church of God. How can uninspired teachers, priests and divines, judge the workings of inspired Apostles, Prophets, Elders &c? No more than darkness can comprehend light; than error can understand truth; or than evil judge good. But they say, are they inspired men? Just so; we perceive they cannot tell, they cannot judge. Men may receive the usual routine of education to qualify them for preaching, to please the ears, fancies and opinions of their flocks; they may acquire the arts of logic, rhetoric, and oratory, to draw the attention and hearts of multitudes, and yet be unable to grasp the great subject of the government of God upon earth, and learn the mysterious way of Jehovah to try, govern, and perfect the human family; for unless an individual enjoys the same spirit of God which actuates His people, and comprehends the object before him by truth, he can by no means know the workings of the people of God. The Apostle Paul says, "For what knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him? even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the spirit of God." Thus man can be known or comprehended by no being inferior to man, nor can men know or judge of God, without the spirit proceeding from God. And surely those ministers of religion who devine for money and preach for hire, who deny the spirit of God as anciently enjoyed, are incompetent to judge those who possess that spirit. The less cannot judge the greater; and unless a man is learned in the science he cannot judge the subject correctly. So these characters are incapable of judging the developments of God's ways. Yes! as well may the owl judge the sweet tones of the nightingale; the donkey despise the movements of the locomotive engine, and the devil judge God. We please the world in an awkward and awful position with all their acquirements, intelligence and religion, they are positively unable to judge the conduct, pursuits, character, movements, designs, and doctrines of the Latter-day Prophets, Apostles, evangelists, pastors and teachers. I would affectionately advise all who dared to assert their right to express their opinions and sentiments on the Latter-day work, to beware how they tamper with it, injure God's people, and speak of the truth. They have no right to assume their self-chosen dignity; they are unable to know us; and despite every effort to despise the simple movements of this church, and scorn this people; though every thing is turned upside down; yet the time will speedily arrive, when instead of the world judging the Saints, that the "Saints will judge the world!" It will be their right and privilege, and they will yet be qualified for the purpose; they will judge righteous judgment, comprehending fully every movement, feature and purpose of the human heart. Then, Oh, ye editors, ye ministers of religion, ye will be robbed of your assumed dignity, be hurled from your judgment seat, and be placed at the tribunal of justice, and receive your just reward from the hands of the Saints who judge the world.

What is a Hindoo?—New York is famous for giving names to political parties. The Whigs are classified as "Silver Greys" and "Woolly Heads," the Democrats as "Hards" and "Softs," and the Know Nothings as "Hindoos." The following explains the reason:

The Thugs of Hindostan are an association who beleive it is their duty to exterminate all who do not belong to their own order. They meet in secret lodges, and are sworn with solemn oaths. They lie in wait for unsuspecting passers-by, and attacking them suddenly, and without warning, strangle them. The higher the position and character of the victim, the greater is supposed to be the merit act. The Thug who strangles the largest number of victims in the course of a year is rewarded with the title of Grand Thug of the Council, and invested with despotic power. If any Thug refuses to yield unquestioning power to the commands of the Grand Thug, they make an image or effigy of him, which they burn, at the same time stoning and cursing it. This is supposed to visit him with all manner of misfortunes. After this any Thug who meets him is bound to stab him to the heart, provided he can do without the risk of detection. Every member of the order is sworn to deny his connection with it, and when interrogated to say he knows nothing about it. When apprehended and brought to justice, they claim to be persons of the greatest morality and virtue, and justify their acts by saying that they only wish to establish the true religion, (viz., their own,) and prevent foreigners (viz., all who are not Thugs) from getting control of the country.

The points of resemblance between the Thugs of Hindostan and the Know-Nothings of this country, are, it will be seen, many and striking; with preference on the score of merit and fair dealing, slightly in favor of the Thugs.—Maine Age.

BURNING A NEGRO SLAVE.

A few weeks since, Miss Thornton, an interesting young girl, residing near Gaston, Ala., was most brutally murdered by a slave. Immediately after the murder and detection of the negro, his immediate punishment was seriously contemplated by the people of Sumpter county, but, after mature deliberation, the law-abiding citizens delivered him into the custody of the proper officers, and he was committed to prison.

At the last term of the Circuit Court of Sumpter county, the Attorney appointed by the Court in the discharge of his duty, moved for a change of venue to Green county. The Judge, as the motion was sustained by the proper affidavit, granted the application.

On Wednesday, the 23d ult., the citizens of South Sumpter assembled en masse at Mr. Wm. McElroy's and unanimously passed a series of resolutions, reflecting seriously upon the conduct of the Judge, and after having pledged themselves to sustain each other, a portion of them proceeded to Livingston, and took the miserable criminal by force from the jail where he was confined.

On Friday following, after due preparation, they carried him to the spot where he so cruelly murdered his innocent victim, and burnt him alive at the stake,

About three thousand persons were present, who witnessed, with various emotions, the dreadful spectacle.

"We were present," says the editor of the Marion (Miss.) Republican, "but hope that we will never again witness a scene like it. The pyre was composed of several cords of light wood, in the center of which was a green willow stake, selected in consequence of its indestructibility by fire.

On the top of the pile of light wood the criminal was placed, and securely chained to the stake.—While in this situation he confessed his guilt, stating that he had no accomplice, that he was actuated by lust alone, that he had attempted to violate her person, but had failed, and to conceal the attempt he had cruelly murdered her by beating the poor innocent creature with a stump, that while he was doing this she implored him to carry her home to her father, and that she would conceal the violence he had inflicted. He then left her, but soon returned, and after again beating her, he concealed the body in the very hole where the stake was planted to which he suffered.

"After this confession was made, the match was applied, and in a few moments the devouring flames were enveloping the doomed negro; his fearful cries resounded through the air, while the surrounding negroes who witnessed his dreadful agony and horrible contortions, sent up an involuntary howl of horror. His sufferings, though excruciating, were short; in a few minutes the flames had enveloped him entirely, revealing now and then, as they fitfully swayed hither and thither, his black and burning carcass, like a demon of the fire, grinning as if in hellish triumph, at his tormentors. Soon all was over, nothing was left but the burning flesh and charred skeleton of this human devil who could thus deliberately perpetrate so foul a crime. The horrid outrage was fearfully avenged, and though the heavens were reeking with the stench of burning flesh, yet justice was satisfied; the law of retaliation was inflicted as nearly as it could be, while the example made of this wretch had, no doubt, a salutary effect upon the two thousand slaves who witnessed his execution."

The gambling law went into operation on the 17th of May, when all the gambling saloons in the State were shut up forever.

A sail boat was capsized on the 17th of May in the harbor, and a man named H. J. Mullen, cook of the U. S. cutter Ewing, was drowned. His body was found floating near Mare Island a few days after, and was decently interred.

The schooner Julius Pringle arrived in this harbor on the 17th inst., in 50 days from San Juan del Sur. She now returns from her unsuccessful voyage to the Cocos Islands, which expedition was organized some months since for gold digging purposes.

The great nugget of gold which has been on exhibition at the banking instution of James King, of Wm.—— has been smelted down, and nets the $8,829 28.

In theatricals there has been no remarkable change in the city. Since the grand explosion among the Opera troupe at the Metripolitan, that theatre has been occupied by the Rousset sisters and Miss Davenport, who has appeared in two or three leading parts. At the American, the usual excellent stock company has been playing to good houses, and "Midsummer Night's Dream" has been brought out on a scale of grace and splendor. The Italian Opera troupe have opened the old Union theatre on their own account, giving tri-weekly representations to fashionable audiences. The San Francisco Minstrels, after a short sojourn at the mines, have returned and have renewed their laughable performances. Madame Anna Bishop and her Bochsa are giving concerts in the mines.

The ship Charlotte took fire from spontaneous combustion in her cargo of coals, on the 18th ult., and it was found neccessary to scuttle her to save the ship. The cargo was not damaged.

A shocking murder has been committed at Contra Costa, the perpetrators of which have not yet been apprehended. Mr. J. P. Gelmore, residing about eight miles from Oakland, was the victim.

TERRIFIC EXPLOSION.

THE STEAMER LEXINGTON BLOWN UP—THIRTY FIVE LIVES LOST.

On the 1st inst., the Steamer Lexington, the regular Mail Packet between Louisville and St. Louis was reporting blown to atoms near Stephensport Ky. on her up trip. We clip the following dispatch from the city press:

Evansville, July 4, P. M.—The packet Baltimore has just arrived from the scene of the wreck of the Lexington. She has on board twenty of the officers and passengers of the ill-fated steamer, including Capt. Throop and Mr. Davidson, the first clerk. They are both wounded.

The Captain thanks that not more than thirty-five were killed. About one hundred persons were on board, and but one escaped uninjured, except the ladies, who all escaped unharmed. The accident occurred at Old Creek, about three o'clock Sunday morning. Boat and cargo a total loss.

STATE OF AFFAIRS IN MEXICO.

The following extract of a letter is from the National Intelligencer, written by a citizen of the United States, now in the City of Mexico:

Mexico, May 3, 1855.

"The state of things in this country is, compared with that existing in our own, awful and difficult to describe. Santa Anna, surrounded by a powerful faction, has universal power. He alone makes and annuls all laws at pleasure; is the arbiter in all suits brought before the tribunals in which the Government is concerned. He removes any of the authorities when he sees fit to do so, and replaces them with others. He orders levies of troops to be made at any moment, spends the public money, and is accountable to no person; in fact, he can do here whatever he pleases; and what he pleases to do is to keep about 45,000 men under arms, impose forced loans, live shut up in his barracks, (palace,) see fifty or sixty persons each day, be cajoled by them and called Altesa Serenisima, oppress and trample on every body, and pocket a lot of cash.

The party opposed to him live in the mountains and retired parts of the country, (Heaven knows how they maintain themselves,) refuse to become subject to this one-man power, and support a sufficient number of men to annoy Santa Anna and keep him harrassed in a manner that knows no bounds.

"There is another set or faction, who, setting aside all laws, live by indiscriminate rapine and plunder.

"Then there is the Church, with unlimited sway over all, exacts from all, and refuses the consolation of religion, even in the hour of death, unless the payment for the same be provided for beforehand.

"And last, there is the people. Those who have capital hoard it, and buisiness is at a stand. The mass of the population, wretchedly poor, clothed in rags and half starved, are forced to live in idleness, for the want of labor, which is denied them because the condition of things does not permit of the safe investment of capital in any undertaking, and vice and crime stalks abroad in open day.

"I could dwell for hours on the horrors of this revolution, which has lasted for over two years; but let it pass; your own imagination must fill up the outline above given you."

ARRIVAL OF THE AMERICA.

HARD FIGHTING—THE ALLIES DEFEATED.

New York, July 5.—The steamer America arrived at Halifax last evening, with dates to the 23d.

The news is of great interest. From England, it is stated that the reports of the Sebastopol committee were ordered to be presented to Parliament.

The St. Petersburg journals consider peace perfectly practicable.

Rumors were current of several battles in the Crimea, in which the allies were defeated with great loss. Among the officers killed, was a French General, whose name is not given.

Pelissier telegraphs to Paris that the Allies were completing new batteries, from which they would soon open fire upon the enemy with terrible effect.

Gortschakoff telegraphs that the fire of the enemy was very weak.

The Allies suffered a severe loss in an attack upon the Tower of Malakoff and Redan, on the 18th.—They were repulsed with great slaughter. The loss of the English alone is fixed at four thousand, including Gen. Campbell and seventeen officers. The reports are very contradictory, and are believed to be exaggerated.

Mr. Roebuck, in the House of Commons, moved a vote of censure upon the Ministry.

A large French loan was to be immediately negotiated.

A heartless massacre of English sailors by Russians, near Hango, created much excitement in England. They were under a flag of truce, were fired upon by the Russians and killed.

Mr. Langard's motion for an Administration Reform, was negatived.

An earthquake is spoken of at Caselifro, Italy.

American stocks brisk.

Louis Napoleon has been attacked with apoplexy.

The Chinese are said to have labored for centuries under great embarrassment, from not knowing how to make a barrel. They could do every part without any dificulty. They could make the staves, and set them up, and hoop them in; and, indeed, with the help of a man inside, they could put the second head on; but how to get the man out, after the barrell was headed up, was a problem which they could not solve.

The works of man will perish.

The reason why it succeeds.—The Mustang Liniment has attained its enormous popularity, and almost universal use, simply because it gives better satisfaction, accomplishes more good, relieves more pain, and heals more wounds and sores than any other preparation ever before offered to the afflicted. Every bottle that is used, speaks for itself—tells its own tale in the relief it gives, and the cure it effects. And then one who has suffered, pehaps, long years with pain, without hope of relief, and finds in this Liniment an almost instantaneous remedy, cannot help but speak in its praise, and recommend it in the best terms to all he sees suffering. It needs no other recommendation than a trial.

SONG OF THE SABBATARIAN.

Go, barricade the river up,
And padlock down the rail
We'll have no train on Sunday sun—
We'll have no steamer sail.
Go tell the sailor on the sea
To make his canvass fast,
And trust the mercy of the waves,
Till sabbath shall be past.

Command the sun to stay its course,
Forbid the wind to blow,
And tell the flowers they shall not bloom,
The trees they shall not grow;
The little wild-bird shall not sing,
The lambkins shall not play,
The cattle all shall silent be—
It is the sabbath day.

And order yonder reprobate
That strolls along the road,
To turn at once from sinful ways,
And seek the house of God.
What need had he of light or air?
Go, bid him fast and pray,
And put a mournful vissage on,
It is the sabbath day.

And tell the cook when you go down,
At four o'clock we'll dine,
And as we'll have some company,
To lay the cloth for nine;
And call at number twenty-six,
And say to Mr. Brown,
That after dinner we will drive
A few miles out of town.

But first run for the letters, John,
And bring them quick to hand,
That I may see, before I go,
How all the markets stand;
For if I did not watch them well,
I'e soon be on the lurch;
And then bring round the carriage, John,
And we will drive to church.

Incidents of the Siege of Sebastopol.

RUSSIAN PERSEVERANCE.

If a committee were sitting on the siege, that committee would report progress. As yet there is no result. The cannonade against the town has been kept up, though not incessantly, since it commenced on Monday last. Our fire has been brisk each day from sunrise to sunset, but, owing to a strange fatality, it has always slackened during the night. The last siege showed the inefficacy of a fitful fire, and, although the vice in our practice has this time been improved upon, it is not entirely corrected. If the fact is not forgotten, at least it is not vividly enough remembered, that it is not a common fortress we are besieging, but a place full of military stores and work-yards, and that the nation against whom we are fighting are patient, industrious, hard-working, indefatigable, and of unequalled excellence in the art of patching and repairing. Who that ever posted it in Russia but arrived at his journey's end with the profound conviction that every plough-boy, pressed for the nonce into the service as a postillion, is a great mechanical genius, whose mind makes up for the lack of material, a genius fertile of resources, and inexhaustible in expedients? Who but a Russian can drive a ricketty kibitka, and drive, too, as fast as horses can go, over stones and through pools of water, and across cuts deep as trenches; and who but a Russian, when the kibitka breaks down, as of course it must, can repair it without assistance, without instruments but a stone from the roadside, with no material except a piece of knotted cord or an old nail? Shift is the genius of the common people, and it is exactly shift which is required in the defence of a town. To have an eye for odds and ends, and the skilful hand to put them to use, not deliberately and cogitatively, but rapidly, instinctively, with as it were a sort of inspiration, that is exactly the talent which constructs gun carriages out of the mouldy boards, and raises an earthwork when others would flounder in the loose sand or sit down despairingly on immovable rocks. There can hardly be a want of skilled artificers in an army, every Russian of which can do almost anything with his axe, from making a cart wheel to the carving of a neat figure of St. Nicholas. And as we have to deal with a Russian garrison, and not with Germans or Spaniards, that Russian garrison always manages to do as much at night as we undid in the day. It is whispered in our ranks that the Russian gunners are chained to their guns. Perhaps they are. It requires a fortitude almost more than human to stand in those Russian batteries, into which our enormous projectiles are pitched with unerring aim. Perhaps the working parties, that work night and day in what we would call the engineer's yards of Sebastopol, are also chained to their jobs, or they are bribed by money and drink, or inspired by a fanatic zeal for the supremacy of Russia, and the triumph of the orthodox church. To us it matters very little what secret springs are at work to produce the results which each day call us to fresh exertions, and demand fresh victims. Whether the thousands that creep out every night, and work like insects in an ant-hill, are chained in gangs or driven forward at the point of the bayonet, or by fear of field pieces loaded to the muzzle with grape shot posted in their rear, or whether they ply their spades and picks, and raise their gabions under the inspiration of drink, or patriotism, or religion, the result to us is always the same. The guns which we silence by day raise their voices again next morning; the platforms we have broken are replaced by fresh ones; the earth and the gabions which flew into the air as if hurled up by a volcano, as our shells, diving deep into the ground, burst beneath them—that earth and those gabions are re-arranged, refilled, replaced, when our batteries awake from their nightly torpor. It is true our fire has been kept up at night.

SEBASTOPOL IN 1854 AND 1855.

As far as I can judge, the question of a general assault is so far decided, that all ideas of such a measure are abandoned for the present. Headquarters have such intelligence from the interior of the town as to make the attempt appear hazardous, if not impracticable. Sebastopol in April, 1855, is very unlike the Sebastopol of 1854. Every inch of ground between the advanced works and the town has, it is said, been covered with defensive works—which, while they reflect the highest credit on the ingenuity and activity of the Russian engineers, would make the advance of the allied troops a matter of difficulty, if not altogether an impossibility.—Every obstacle, every contrivance has been put into requisition to obstruct the progress of storming columns. Under the protection of such defence, it is not likely that the garrison should yield to a panic; and we have nothing to expect from their bodily and mental prostration. Among the leading results of a battering fire, such as we are now pouring upon the town, is to bewilder, to weary out, and to discourage the defenders—to work them off their legs, and to send forward storming columns at the very time when those within the walls are least capable of making an energetic defence. Any fortress, no matter how large and brave its garrison, would fall an easy prey to a decided assault, if invested and plied with artillery since October last. But the double fortress of Sebastopol has never been invested; the road was at all times open for the introduction of fresh troops, fresh stores and provisions, and the removal of the wounded, the sick, and worn out.—The men we have before us are not ground down by the labors, the watchings, privations, and anxieties of a siege of six months; they are, or, at least they may have been drafted in within the last six weeks, and they most assuredly have been, if the moral or physical condition of the garrison made the introduction of fresh troops necessary. In towns regularly invested, the skilled engineers and gunners drop off in the course of the siege, and their places are taken by others less skilful and experienced. But there is no reason why the Russians should not have drawn into Sebastopol companies of the best artillery men they have in the empire. In short, to all intent and purposes, the fortress we are bound to conquer cannot be considered as having stood a six months' siege though we know to our cost that we have been besieging it that length of time. Its means of defence are not impaired, its shortness of ammunition—if ever there was anything like a real want of it—has been made good by importations from Odessa, that thorn in the side of the allied armies. More skilful engineers than ever conduct the labors of defence; fresh troops support the batteries, and trained gunners work the guns. The deserters complain of the ravages of disease, but they say there is plenty of food, and there are plenty of men.

VAGARIES OF THE RUSSIAN PROJECTILES.

The Russians treat us to a pleasing variety in the way of projectiles. First comes the round shot of all sizes, which rushes past you with a shriek something like a railway whistle badly blown. Next comes the grape, which flies slower and round, like a large covey of strong birds flying very swiftly.—Then comes a gun shell, which approaches like a round shot, but has the pleasing trick of bursting when it reaches you; so that you have to run a double risk—first of the shot itself, and then of the pieces. Next comes the mortar-shell, which though really the worst of the large projectiles, I somehow dread the least; it remains in the air for nearly half a minute; and in the night you can see it quite plainly, owing to its bearing the fuse. It glances along very gracefully, rising to a great height, and making a gentle whistle every now and then like a peetwit or plover, which becomes louder and louder till it drops. Although you can see it all the way, it is a most difficult thing to tell where it will fall; and none but the oldest hands (men of whom it is said that they had got so inured to fire, that a cannon ball would hop off the pit of their stomachs,) can really make a good guess to where it will drop.—What makes it worse than a gun shell is that the former flying so low retains its impetus, so that if it is once past you before it bursts, all the pieces will continue to fly forward, and you are safe. Whereas, as the mortar shell is pitched as high as it will go into the air, and then drops, the pieces have no other impetus than what the bursting charges gives them to fly in every direction for a radius of upwards of 200 yards, and sometimes considerably more. But my greatest horror of all, and the deadliest foe we have, is the Russian rifle bullet. It is not so perfect as ours, but, as Mercutio says, "It will do well enough." I give you a sketch of it the size of life. (Here is given an admirable pen and ink sketch of the bullet, which is, like the English, conical.) This little gentleman gives you no warning, but flies about all day long, and ranges 1,200 yards.

AMUSEMENTS OF THE RIFLEMEN.

Some time age (writing April 16) I was watching three French Chasseurs "potting away" at a Russian who was sitting with his legs dangling over the sides of a precipice, and now and then returning their fire. The French knew the man quite well, and admitted he was so good a shot that they did not care to expose themselves too freely. All their balls fell short of the man, and after he had received three or four rounds from each, he raised his rifle, down went the Chasseurs and somebody else; "ping" flew the ball through the air, and "plop" it came against the rock behind which the foremost Chasseur was crouching. The Frenchman picked up the piece of lead quite flattened out and broken, and showed it to his comrades, and then they resumed their practice, the result of which I did not wait further to ascertain. Many of the Russian riflemen are excellent shots, but the majority of them are not equal to our own or to the French Chasseurs. An amateur in one of the batteries, anxious to see what kind of shooting the enemy would make, held his "wide awake" just above the parapet; in a moment two bullets went through it, and one of them took a fancy to the gentleman's forefinger and to a bit of another finger, and carried them away with it, so that the unfortunate experimentalist will be able to speak with authority on the question of Russian sharpshooting.

MY HUSBAND.

A LIFE SKETCH.

My husband is a very strange man. To think how he could have grown so provoked about such a little thing as that scarlet scarf. Well, there is no use in trying to drive him; I've settled that in my mind. But he can be coaxed—can't he, though? and from this time shan't I know how to manage him? Still there is no denying that Mr. Adams is a very strange man.

You see, it was this morning, at breakfast, I said to him, "Henry, I must have one of those ten dollar scarfs at Stewart's. They are perfectly charming, and will correspond so nicely with my maroon velvet cloak. I want to go this morning and get one before they are gone."

"Ten dollars don't grow on every bush, Adeline; and, just now, times are pretty hard, you know," he answered, in a dry careless tone, which irritated me greatly. Besides that, I knew he could afford to get me the scarf just as well as not, only, perhaps, my manner of requesting it did not quite suit his lordship.

"Gentlemen who can afford to buy satin vests at ten dollars apiece can have no motive but penuriousness for objecting to give their wives as much for a scarf." I retorted, glancing at the money, which, a moment before he had laid by my plate, requesting me to procure one for him: he always trusts me in these matters. I spoke angrily, and should have been sorry for it the next moment, if he had not answered:

"You will then charge it to my penuriousness, I suppose, when I tell you that you cannot have another ten dollars."

"Well, then, I will take this and get a scarf.—You can do without the vest this Fall," and I took up the bill and left the room, for he did not answer me.

I need it and must have it! was my mental observation, as I washed my tear swollen eye, and adjusted my hair for a walk on Broadway—but all the while there was a whispering at my heart: "Do not do it. Go and buy the vest for your husband;" and at last that inner voice triumphed. I went down to the tailor's, bought the vest and brought it home.

"Here it is, Henry; I selected the color that I thought would suit you best. Isn't it rich?" I said, as I unfolded the vest after dinner; for somehow my pride was all gone. I felt so much happier since the scarf had been given up.

He did not answer me, but there was such a look of tenderness filling his dark eye as his lips fell on my forehead, that it was as much as I could do to keep from crying outright.

But the cream of the story is not told yet. At night, when he came home to tea, he threw a little bundle in my lap. I opened it and there was the scarlet scarf, the very one I set my heart on at Stewart's yesterday.

"Oh, Henry!" I said, looking up and trying to thank him, but my lips trembled and the tears dashed over the eyelashes; and he drew my head to his heart and smoothed down my curls, and murmured the old loving words in my ear, while I cried there a long time, but my tears were such sweet ones.

He is a strange man, my husband, but he is a noble one, too, only it is a little hard to find it out sometimes; and it seems to me that my heart says it more earnestly to-night than it ever did before. God bless him!

Yesterday, an Irishman, working in a forge, got a particle of hot iron in his eye. He was in great pain, and his suffering drew some persons about him. Among them was a boy, fourteen years or so, who said, looking with a cool, speculative eye upon the violent hot face of the man:

"Will you give me half a dollar if I get that out of your eye?"

"Hey!" exclaimed the Irishman, taking him in, with his servicrble optic, "I'll give you anything—I'll give you a dollar!"

Away the boy ran, and came with a magnet, with in about a minute, he drew out the iron atom! Paddy winked his watery eyes, and swore an oath of relief and gratitude. He then gave the operator the half dollar.

"Holy Mother," said the poor fellow's sister, who stood by; "them Yankee children could do anything."

Labor conquers everything.

M'CLEAN'S VOLCANIC OIL LINIMENT is truly a celebrated remedy, and has done more to alleviate human suffering than any other remedy ever discovered.
One or two applications will relieve the most severe pain, bruise or sprain.
Two bottles will cleanse, purify, and heal the foulest ulcer or sore, and it will heal the most severe burn or scald without a scar.
Every family should have a supply constantly on hand, for use in time of need.
Read the following extract of a letter, which is incontestable proof of its wonderful efficacy:

A BLIND MAN RESTORED TO SIGHT.

J. H. McLean—Dear Sir: * * * I have been suffering for four years with rheumatic sore eyes, being at times altogether blind. I procured the advice of several physicians, but none of them could do me any good. By the advice of a friend I applied your "Volcanic Oil Liniment," according to the directions around the bottle, and it has cured me permanently. I have used it since for bruises, pains, &c., and it has always given immediate relief. I live on the main road near Farmington.
Yours, respectfully, JOHN H. ALLERD.
Jefferson county, Mo.

For horses it is far superior to any other remedy for curing lameness, bruises, cuts, old sores, swellings, &c.
We say, then, to all who may be suffering from external diseases, call at once and get a supply. Thousands of bottles are sold (and used) daily, and we have never heard of a case where it has failed in giving relief when properly applied.

MEDICINE FOR THE BILLION!
A Certain Remedy for all Diseases of
MAN OR ANIMALS,
Requiring an External Application.
Warranted in every Case for which it is Recommended!

THE MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT!
Unlike all other popular medicines, it is used by many prominent members of the faculty, and many of the public Hospitals. Their prejudices have yielded to indisputable and incontrovertible demonstrations of cures performed where their remedies had failed.
It has cured more cases of
RHEUMATISM
than any other medicine ever used. Its efficacy in this terrible disease is acknowledged by all who have used it. It not only cures the complaint, but appears to give a vigor and elasticity to the limbs, before unknown, thus performing a double office.

A FEW TESTIMONIALS.

PATH FINDER OFFICE, May 11, 1854.
G. W. Westbrook:—
Please send me by the bearer three large bottles of your Mexican Mustang Liniment, as I wish to take it up to my place in Vermont, not thinking it advisable to do without it. I have used it in my family and on my horses, and have found it invaluable. Yours,
J. T. WHITNEY.

ELIZABETHTOWN, TENN., May 25, 1855.
Mr. G. W. Westbrook:—
Dear Sir—It affords me much pleasure in saying to you that the Mexican Mustang Liniment outsells any medicine that I have ever had for sale, and comes nearer doing what it promises to do. Send me another supply, as I am nearly out. Yours respectfully,
JOHN SINGLETRAY, P. M.

PHILADELPHIA, June 11, 1854.
Mr. G. W. Westbrook:
Sir—My son was afflicted with a swelling upon the knee joint, which confined him to the house. I had a doctor attending him for some time, but he did not do him any good. One of my neighbors told me to use the Mustang Liniment. I asked the doctor if I could do so, and he told me he thought I could not do better.
I procured one bottle, and in about a week he was able to go out.
I can safely recommend it to the afflicted.
Respectfully yours, MRS. BENNETT.

W. S. Ladd & Co., of Portland, Oregon, writes that there is an immense demand for the Mexican Mustang Liniment in that country, and orders forty gross to be shipped by Golden Gate, that sails in a few days from New York.

Park & White of San Francisco, California, order 100 gross, to be forwarded by first clipper for that port.

PORT AU PRINCE, HAYTI, Jan. 16th, 1854.
I had the pleasure to receive invoice and boxes Mexican Mustang Liniment per Croton, and have no doubt it will have a brisk sale on the island.
GEORGE RACKSTER.

To give health, strength and elacity to the limbs, there is nothing can equal in effect, the
MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT.
FARMERS AND LIVERY STABLE KEEPERS
have need it for the following diseases with extraordinary success, certifying invariably to the efficacy of the Liniment, and the truthfulness of our assertions in its behalf:
Spavin, Splint, Ring-bone, Fistula, Wind Galls, Big Head, Bruises, Strains, String-halt, Scratches, Cracked Heels, Sweney, Saddle, Collar, or Harness Galls, Hard Lumps or Tumor, Film, or other diseases of the Eye, Poll-Evil, &c.
The small sizes retail for 25 cents per bottle;
The medium size retail for 50 cents per bottle;
The large sizes retail for one dollar per bottle.
The medium holds three times as much as the small;
The Large holds nearly three times as much as the medium,
Therefore the large bottles are the cheapest.

DISCOURSE.

By President Brigham Young, Tabernacle, April 8th, 1855.

It is nearly time to draw our meeting to a close, and I think we had better adjourn our Conference to the sixth of next October, as the business now necessary to be done is accomplished; and I find that we are very much crowded in this Tabernacle, and on this account the congregation is rather uncomfortable.

There has been much said, though for one I can say that we have not preached to the assembled thousands one fourth part as much as we could have wished. But we have been privileged to meet from distant points and see each other, and hear, learn, and receive spiritual strength.

A few of the brethren have spoken, but there has not been a lengthy discourse delivered since we have been together; and if we were to continue in Conference a whole week, we could give opportunity to but comparatively few of the Elders who would like to speak, even though we allotted only fifteen, twenty, thirty, forty, or forty-five minutes to each speaker.

I realize that the hearts of many are full, and they would like to rise up and testify, and say that they believe the Book of Mormon, and that Joseph Smith was a Prophet, just as well as the few who have spoken. You are aware that you have this privilege in your several Wards, and any of the Elders of Israel who wish to bear their testimony to the truth of the Gospel, and have not had the privilege in this Conference, can go to the Ward meetings and rise up and bear testimony of the truth, and exhort the brethren. And if you have a word of counsel, or a word of doctrine, give it to the people, and do not be backward, but improve every opportunity that is presented for you to expand your minds.

A man who wishes to receive light and knowledge, to increase in the faith of the Holy Gospel, and to grow in the knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus Christ, will find that when he imparts knowledge to others he will also grow and increase.—Be not miserly in your feelings, but get knowledge and understanding by freely imparting it to others, and be not like a man who selfishly hoards his gold; for that man will not thus increase upon the amount, but will become contracted in his views and feelings. So the man who will not impart freely of the knowledge he has received, will become so contracted in his mind that he cannot receive truth when it is presented to him. Wherever you see an opportunity to do good, do it, for that is the way to increase and grow in the knowledge of the truth.

I expect the brethren who have been selected to go and preach the Gospel will meet this evening in the Seventies' Hall, and the Twelve will meet with them, and the missionaries will there receive some instructions. I will give them one item of instruction now. I wish each man, who does not feel willing to seek unto the Lord his God, with all his heart, for preparation to magnify his mission and calling, but declines in his feelings to walk up to his duty in spirit, and is not anxious to cleave to righteousness and forsake iniquity, to keep away from the Hall this evening; or, if such a one comes there, let him ask us at once to be excused, and we will excuse him. We do not wish a man to enter on a mission, unless his soul is in it. Some of the brethren will say—"I do not know whether my feelings are upon my mission, or not, but I will do the best I can." That is all we ask of you. I have known some of the Elders, when they thought they would be called out to preach, keep away from meeting lest they should be called upon, for they feel their littleness, their nothingness, their inability to rise up and preach to the people. They do not feel that they are anybody, and why should they expose their weaknesses? I have noticed one thing in regard to this, quite as many of these men become giants in the cause of truth, as there is of any other class; for when they get away they begin to lean on the Lord, and to seek unto Him, and feeling their weaknesses, they ask Him to give them wisdom to speak to the people as occasion may require. Others can rise up here and preach a flaming discourse, insomuch that you would think they were going to tare down the nations; but when they go out into the world they often accomplish but little.

You used to hear brother Joseph tell about this people being crowded into the little end of the horn, and if they kept straight ahead they were sure to come out at the big end. It is so with some Elders who go on missions; while many who go into the big end of the horn, and are so full of fancied intelligence, preaching, counsel, knowledge, and power, when they go out into the world, either have to turn around and come back, or be crowded out at the little end of the horn.

On the other hand I do not wish any of the brethren to be discouraged, for if you feel that you cannot say a single word, no matter, if you will only be faithful to your God and to your religion, and be humble, and cleave unto righteousness, and forsake iniquity and sin, the Lord will guide you and give you words in due season.

Recollect that we are now calling upon the Elders to go and gather up Israel; this is the mission that is given to us. It was the first mission given to the Elders in the days of Joseph. The set time is come for God to gather Israel, and for his work to commence upon the face of the whole earth, and the Elders who have arisen in this Church and Kingdom are actually of Israel. Take the Elders who are now in this house, and you can scarcely find one out of a hundred but what is of the house of Israel. It has been remarked that the Gentiles have been cut off, and I doubt whether another Gentile ever comes into this Church.

Will we go to the Gentile nations to preach the Gospel? Yes, and gather out the Israelites, wherever they are mixed among the nations of the earth. What part, or portion of them? The same part, or portion, that redeemed the house of Jacob, and saved them from perishing with famine in Egypt. When Jacob blessed the two sons of Joseph, "guiding his hands wittingly," he placed his right hand upon Ephraim "and he blessed Joseph, and said, God before whom my fathers Abraham and Isaac did walk, the God which fed me all my life long unto this day, the angel which redeemed me from all evil, bless the lads," etc. Joseph was about to remove the old mans' hands, and bringing his right hand upon the head of the oldest boy, saying—"Not so, my father, for this is the first born; put thy right hand upon his head. And his father refused, and said, I know it, my son, I know it; he also shall become a people, and he also shall be great; but truly his younger brother shall be greater than he, and his seed shall become a multitude of nations.—Ephraim has become mixed with all the nations of the earth, and it is Ephraim that is gathering together.

It is Ephraim that I have been searching for all the days of my preaching, and that is the blood which ran in my veins when I embraced the Gospel. If there are any of the other tribes of Israel mixed with the Gentiles we are also searching for them. Though the Gentiles are cut off, do not suppose that we are not going to preach the Gospel among the Gentile nations, for they are mingled with the house of Israel, and when we send to the nations we do not seek for the Gentiles, because they are disobedient and rebellious. We want the blood of Jacob, and that of his father Isaac and Abraham, which runs in the veins of the people. There is a particle of it here, and another there, blessing the nations as predicted.

Take a family of ten children, for instance, and you may find nine of them purely of the Gentile stock, and one son, or one daughter, in that family who is purely of the blood of Ephraim. It was in the veins of the father, or mother, and was reproduced in the son, or daughter, while all the rest of the family are Gentiles. You may think that is singular, but it is true. It is the house of Israel we are after, and we care not whether they come from the East, the West, the North, or the South; from China, Russia, England, California, North or South America, or some other locality; and it is the very lad on whom father Jacob laid his hands, that will save the house of Israel. The Book of Mormon came to Ephraim, for Joseph Smith was a pure Ephraimite, and the Book of Mormon was revealed to him, and while he lived he made it his business to search for those who believed the Gospel.

Again, if a pure Gentile firmly believes the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and yields obedience to it, in such a case I will give you the words of the prophet Joseph. "When the Lord pours out the Holy Ghost upon that individual he will have spasms, and you would think that he was going into fits."

Joseph said that the Gentile blood was actually cleansed out of their veins, and the blood of Jacob made to circulate in them; and the revolution and change in the system were so great that it caused the beholder to think they were going into fits.

If any of the Gentiles will believe, we will lay our hands upon them that they may receive the Holy Ghost, and the Lord will make them of the house of Israel. They will be broken off from the wild olive tree, and be grafted into the good, and tame olive tree, and will partake of its sap and fatness. If you take a bud and inoculate it into another tree it ceases to receive nourishment from its original stock; it must however, receive nourishment, or it will die. Where must it receive its nourishment from? From the tree into which it has been introduced; it is supported by it, and becomes incorporated with it.

It is so with the House of Israel and the Gentile nations; if the Gentiles are grafted into the good olive tree they will partake of its root and fatness.

You understand who we are; we are of the House of Israel, of the royal seed, of the royal blood.

There are many subjects upon which I wish to speak, but there is not time now, though in regard to teachings pertaining to our temporal organization, I will take the liberty of saying a few words. Do not some of you have to send for doctors to draw your teeth, and lay night after night with a bag of hot ashes, or hot salt, on your faces, and say "O dear what a tooth ache I have got?" When your children wake up in the night crying on account of a pain in their heads, do not some of you go to the doctors to see what they can do for the little sufferers? Some of your children are afflicted with humors in the head, with blotches upon the body, and other ailments; and some of you have pains in various parts of your bodies.

The fathers and mothers have laid the foundation for many of these diseases, from generation to generation, until the people are reduced to their present condition. True, some live to from fifty to ninety years of age, but it is an unusual circumstance to see a man an hundred years old, or a woman ninety.—The people have laid the foundation of short life through their diet, their rest, their labor, and their doing this, that, and the other in a wrong manner, with improper motives, and at improper times. I would be glad to instruct the people on these points, if they would hearken to me. I would be glad to tell mothers how to lay the foundation of health in their children, that they may be delivered from the diseases with which I am afflicted, and have been from my youth up.

Suppose I happen to say, come, wife, let us have a good dinner to-day, what does she get? Pork and beef boiled, stewed, roasted, and fried, potatoes, onions, cabbage, and turnips, custard, eggs, pies of all kinds, cheese, and sweet meats. Now grant that I and my wife set down and overload our stomachs, until we feel the deleterious affects of it from the crown of our heads to the soles of our feet, the whole system is disturbed in its operations, and is ready to receive and impart disease. A child begotten under such a condition of the systems of its parents, is liable to be born with a tabernacle subject to a life of pain and distress.

Will all the women hearken to this plain statement? No, you might as well talk to the wild geese that fly over us.

Again, a little hot tea, coffee, or sling, is generally given to a babe as soon as it comes into the world, to quiet the nerves, and make it sleep better; and I have seen my own wives almost whip their little ones to make them drink liquor. When I happen to see them, I say, stop that, that is something you may very well dispense with; do not put a drop of liquor into that child's mouth.

Some mothers, when bearing children, long for tea and coffee, or for brandy and other strong drinks, and if they give way to that influence the next time they will want more, and the next still more, and thus lay the foundation for drunkenness in their offspring.

An appetite is engendered, bred, and born in the child, and it is a miracle if it does not grow up a confirmed drunkard.

Now will you, my sisters who are before me, hearken to good, sound, common sense and reason? Will you commence now, and lay the foundation for a healthy posterity? Will you say, "I am determined not to desire this thing, or that, which will be injurious, but I will pray, and ask my Father in heaven for grace according to my day, that I may not desire that which will lay the foundation of ruin to my offspring, and to my posterity for generations?" Or will you say, "cannot I have a little tea, or a little whiskey?"

The satisfying of these desires lays the foundation of sickness, disease, and short life. But if any one really desires a particular kind of food, or drink, and feels as though she could not do without it, let it be obtained, if possible; though it is far better to have faith to overcome such desires.

It is for us to stop the tide of physical degeneracy—to lay the foundation for a return to the position from which the human family has fallen. We have that privilege, by keeping ourselves pure. If we take the right course, our children will live longer than we shall, and their children will surpass their fathers, and have longer life, and so on, till they obtain to the age of those who lived in the early period of the world. The prophet, speaking of the Saints in the last days, said, "for as the days of a tree are the days of my people, and mine elect shall long enjoy the work of their hands." Still, in the present short period of life some say that "this is a miserable world, I do not care how soon I get through." Well go and destroy yourselves, if you choose, you have all the opportunity that you can desire, there is plenty of arsenic, calomel, and other means, within your reach. But I would not give a cent for such persons; I do not delight in such characters, and I do not believe that the Lord delights in people who wish to die before they have accomplished the work that He designed for them to do. For a person to be willing to die is but a small part of the duties pertaining to the Gospel of salvation and the gift of eternal life. We ought to prepare ourselves to live in the flesh, and overcome every sin, to live to the glory of God, to build up his kingdom, and to bring forth righteousness, salvation, and deliverance to the house of Israel, until the devil and his associates are driven from the earth, and he and his clan are bound and thrust down to hell; and a seal put upon them. Latter-day Saints who live merely to get ready to die are not worth much; rather get ready to live, and be prepared to live to the glory of your Father in heaven, and to do the work He has given you to do. That is our duty, and then we shall be ready to receive our blessings.

I do not wish to occupy any more time now, but if we had the time, as we shall have, and a house to hold all who wish to assemble, I am ready to come here every day, for I have nothing to do but to do good. At this time some may say "my wheat is not all sown." That does not effect my feelings. I will tell you an item of my experience with regard to raising grain. The last year we staid in Nauvoo, I planted from ten to twelve acres of corn, and I never saw one day, from the time it was planted until it was harvested, in which to spend an hour amongst it. My teams were wanted at the Temple, and said I, let the corn go. If they had the teams ready to attend to the corn, the word was, go to the Temple, and I do not suppose there was a greater crop of corn raised in all Hancock county. I said to the brethren who plowed and planted the land, Paul plants and Apollos waters, and if God does not give the increase I can do without it.

I have given the sisters a few words of advice, and wish the brethren to pay particular attention to what brother Geo. A. Smith, said this forenoon. If the "old fogies" take a little tobacco, a little whisky, or a little tea and coffee, we wish you boys to let it alone, and let those have it who have long been accustomed to its use. It is far better for these my brethren, who are young, and healthy, to avoid every injurious habit. There are a great many boys here who are in the habit of chewing tobacco, they should stop it, and take no more, they are better without it. Some may turn round and say, "father do you think so?" Yes, let the old folks have it, but you young, smart gentlemen let it alone.

I bless you all, and feel to pray for you, and desire you to pray for me; and I believe that you do, as fervently as I could ask.

We have had a good conference, though it has been a short one to me, and perhaps we may have a long meeting some of these days, and enjoy ourselves to the full extent of our understandings and patience. [G. D. Watt, Reporter.

THE EUROPEAN NEWS.

The important intelligence from the Crimea, received by telegraph from Halifax, and published in the Commercial yesterday, naturally excited much attention in the city, and will have prepared our readers for the fuller particulars which will be found in our columns to-day. It will be seen that the intelligence of the repulse of the Allies, with fearful loss, is officially communicated to the London press by Lord Panmure, Secretary of War, and is therefore placed beyond a doubt or peradventure. It is quite possible that the loss incurred by the French and English in men and officers may be exaggerated, but it is equally possible that further particulars may present even more disastrous results. Taking the communication made by Lord Panmure, however, which is not likely to be more unfavorable than the whole truth will be, the disaster to the Allies is of very serious moment, and the fall in consols, though not great in itself, is yet sufficient, in the flourishing commercial and financial condition of the country, to indicate that confidence in the success—at least in the immediate success—of the allies is considerably shaken.

We suppose that no reader will fail to peruse the brief accounts of the disaster to the Allied armies. But it may be well in this connection to recapitulate the facts. Previous accounts had informed us of certain brilliant achievements of the besieger before Sebastopol, and of important successes on the Sea of Azof. The Mamelon and White towers had been attacked and carried after a severe engagement, continued for two nights. Both sides had evinced valor and endurance. These towers were new erections of earth works of great strength, thrown up by the Russians since the besiegers appeared before Sebastopol. The Malakoff and Redan towers are parts of the original defences or fortifications of the city, of solid masonry. The attack upon them was made on the 18th of June, the anniversary, by the way, of the battle of Waterloo, the English directing their attack against the Redan, and the French assailing the Malakoff.

The assaults were made at daylight. The French appear at one time to have gained a temporary footing, but were ultimately driven back into their parallel. The English do not seem to have had even such temporary success, but for a while maintained the combat with indomitable bravery and determination. They were, however, driven back, the slaughter being immense on both sides. No Russian accounts have yet been received of these engagements, but private information is reported to have been received in England to the effect that General Sir Colin Campbell was killed, and that of other officers seventy were numbered among the killed and wounded, with four thousand of the British troops. Of the number killed and wounded in the French army there appears to be no report. It is just possible, however, that the above numbers may be those of the Allies, and not of the British only.

This may be said to be the first assault upon the fortifications proper, of Sebastopol, and the Allies seem to have suffered from a powerful battery which the enemy had established in one of the ravines unnoticed by the Allies, and by the springing of a mine. The augury is unfavorable, inasmuch as it was the first of those severer trials through which the Allies must pass before they gain the city, and resulted in a disastrous repulse; and inasmuch also as it indicated how thoroughly the enemy is prepared for an assault upon the city itself. It is also suggestive of the possibility that after all has been said, the more cautious proceedings of Lord Raglan and General Canrobert may have been a wiser policy than that which was designed to result from the appointment of General Pellisier in the place of the latter. An assault upon Sebastopol to-day, or upon its principal fortifications, is probably a thousand fold more difficult and hazardous enterprize than it would have been after the battles of Alma and Inkermann. It is by no means improbable that the failure in these attacks will cause a resort to another plan of operations—to what at one time appeared to be the intention of the besiegers and that the energies of the large force now upon the Crimea will be vigorously directed to secure the investment of the city.

Nor would this be so tedious a road to final success as at one time seemed probable. Notwithstanding Prince Gortschakoff's boast that the success of the Allies upon the sea of Azoff would not interrupt his communication with the mainland, it is certain that the larger portion of his supplies were received through that channel, and that by the suddenness of that movement an immense amount of provisions intended for Sebastopol were destroyed. We presume it is a fixed fact that from that quarter he can expect no further aid. The Isthmus of Perekop alone remains, and a previous report is confirmed that the Allies are directing their attention to that quarter, and that an expedition against Perekop has been undertaken. They would seem now to have men enough to plan such an expedition upon a scale of sufficient magnitude to ensure its success, in which case an enemy would ere long find his way into the crowded city of Sebastopol more formidable than Briton or Gaul. Famine would confront the garrison, and with irresistible argument compel capitulation.

All the accounts agree that the forces of the Allies are in admirable condition, both of health and discipline. Their number too, we believe, is sufficient to meet any demands upon them. Their communications with the sea are open, and the enemy cannot close them for a single day. France at least can supply more men, if they are needed.—Provisions and munitions of war are and will continue to be liberally supplied to them. If they can seize and hold the isthmus of Perekop, all supplies will be cut off from the Russians. Under these circumstances, the position of the Allies is much more favorable than it was a few weeks ago.

The repulse experienced, apart from the loss of life, is mainly important in reference to its moral effect upon both belligerents. The novelty of a success will no doubt delight and invigorate the Russian commanders and troops. It is not likely, however, to have any seriously disheartening effect upon the Allies, neither French nor English being made of material to be discouraged by a single failure.—The discovery of mines, carried out so far, however, will induce greater caution. As to any idea that the tables are now to be turned upon the Allies, and a series of Russian successes is to follow and to result in the Allies being driven from Sebastopol, we of course do not entertain it for a moment. The position of the Allies is quite as impregnable as that of the Russians, with the incalculable advantage of their having their communications uninterrupted.

The intelligence from the Baltic continues only meagre and unimportant. The treacherous and barbarous conduct of the Russians at Hango, in firing upon the bearers of a flag of truce, ought to provoke prompt and severe retaliation. We see allusions made, in speaking of this outrage, to the fact that an English officer, having charge of a boat carrying a flag of truce on a former occasion, employed himself, under cover of it, in taking soundings of a Russian harbor; as though the barbarity of the Russian commander at Hango was but a fair retaliation.

The cases, however, are widely different, and though it is not honorable for a belligerent to take any advantage of a flag of truce, and any breach of the honor or sanctity of such a flag is to be deprecated and condemned, yet the only proper retaliation the Russians could have made, would have been to refuse the recognition of such a flag, giving honorable warning of such intention. The massacre at Hango is a piece of barbarity utterly without justification or palliation, such as no civilized nation should allow to go unpunished.—[N. Y. Commercial Advertiser, July 6.

A GREAT SNAKE FIGHT.

Mr. Daniel Terryman, communicates to the Massillon (O.) News, a thrilling encounter he had with a rattlesnake. On first discovery, his snakeship was preparing to appropriate to his use a squirrel by the side of the road, but probably fancying larger game, "put after" Mr. Terryman, who gave "leg bail" and ran. On finding that the gap between him and the snake was closing, Mr. Terryman sought the first weapon in the shape of a club, and turning gave the snake a blow, just as the reptile was pausing and gathering for the fatal spring. The blow came just in the nick of time, and just in the right spot, severing the head from the body. Mr. Terryman says after the head was severed, the body continued to run in different directions, as is generally the case previous to death—but in this case it continued for an unusual length of time, owing no doubt to the size of the reptile, and the amount of muscular power it possessed. After it became sufficiently quiet, so that it could be straightened out, I measured it closely, and found it to be exactly six feet and eleven inches in length, by nine and a half inches in circumference, being the largest one of that species, that had ever been seen in that region of country.

Traveling Elders generally will please act as agents.

We are pleased at all times, to hear from the Elders and brethren who are travelling, or who may be located for a season in the States. There is one class especially that we wish to hear from, and that is, those who have been in the Church some twelve, fifteen, or eighteen years, but have never gathered with the Saints. We wish to hear of such, that they are disposing of their houses, lands, &c., and are preparing to gather home to Zion. It is time that all such were in the vallies of Utah; that their strength and influence might be devoted and consecrated to building up the kingdom of God.

Elder Jas. R. Sharp, writes us under date of Nine Eagles, Decatur Co., Iowa, and says he has been in the Church eighteen years, and has been an Elder most of that time—has a numerous family—desires to go to Zion; but the difficulty was that he with three more families of Saints have four hundred acres of land they could not dispose off sufficiently early to go across the plains this season. We recommend our brethren to sell out as soon as a fair and reasonable offer is made, or they may have to stay another year for the same reason. We are not surprised at our brethren being so many years separated from the great body of Saints; thousands have remained scattered for less than four hundred acres of land, and for less than forty, or even four; but we feel glad to find that many of this class are beginning to bestir and shake themselves; they will have our prayers and blessings if they will step forward energetically and pay their tithing faithfully and make all their movements converge towards Zion, and the Lord will bless them, and pour out His spirit upon them, and they will yet be able to redeem much of the time that they have spent for that which is not bread, and labor for that which satisfieth not. They may then have the satisfaction of beholding their children in holy places, where they will be taught of the Lord, and prepared for important missions to the nations of the earth. We hope these things will stimulate our brethren to prepare themselves by the next years Emigration at latest.

Elder William Martindale writes us under date June 18th, Texas. He says, "I have not baptised any since I last wrote you, but I have engaged to baptise one person on the first day of July, and there will be more, probably, at the same time. The devil has got really mad since I baptised the last four—that, he thought, was taking them away too fast. Some sware they will use me up—that I shall not stay in the state—and some say I shall, and have the same privilege of preaching as others who behave themselves. The reported trial of the Indians for the murder of Capt. Gunnison and party, and the Governor's position has reached this place through the licensed liars of the day. The garbled statements made by the papers, have arroused the former prejudices of lucifer's messengers into a flame, so that I can almost smell the brimstone, and may feel the fire for aught I know; but think not, the Lord has given me wisdom to out general them so far, and will I am sure, through my faithfulness and humility before Him, unless He permits them to touch me to fill up the measure of their iniquity the sooner, although it seems to me it is full now, yet there are many honest hearted ones here who love to hear the truth, and who would obey it if they were away from here; but to obey the gospel and remain in Texas they say they could not stand it, to hear the insults and slanders heaped upon them; taking me for an example. There has been more convinced of the truth of the Gospel on this Mission, than on any Mission I was ever sent, but there are but very few who will be baptised at present. There are at least one hundred and fifty now within my circuit, who believe the truth of Mormonism, which circuit contains Territory eighty miles long by fifty wide, and I have invitations to extend it farther, but shall not do so at present."

Brother Martindale has labored under considerable disadvantages in regard to health, and has permission from the Presidency to return home. If our correspondence should reach him in time we shall probably see him shortly on his way to Utah, where a change of scenes and circumstances, we hope, will improve his health.

Elder William Cooper writes us from the plains under date of June 17th, and says: "we are generally well—very few sick—and those few are generally improving, and we hope soon to see all well. We have lost one old sister who was very sick when we started. She died the second day we were out. We travelled about forty miles the first week, and about one hundred miles the next. We are now nearly twenty miles beyond the Big Blue. The Indians appear very friendly."

We have received a letter from Elder J. Gregg, Tom's Creek, N. C., from which we learn that several families left that place this season, to gather up with the Saints to Zion, but have stayed in Ohio because of sickness. Our brethren must not allow these things to discourage them, but be assured that every means that can be used to prove the Saints will be tried, that those who can be shaken may be shaken, and those who cannot be shaken may remain and be numbered with those who have passed through great tribulation and obtain with them the blessings of eternal life.

Elders John L. Smith and David A. Curtis returned from Iowa on Saturday morning, 7th inst., and left with other Missionaries the same morning about 9 o'clock. They were well satisfied with their short visit. Their stay in this city was necessarily short. We learn by communication left in our office, that they rebaptised four persons at Keokuk, found some warm hearted Saints, and spent a good time in their society.

Gov. Young's Remarks on the Irregularity of the Mail over the Plains—On the Indian war.

He says: We have received the first number of the Mormon, and are well pleased with it, as also your paper, so far as we have seen it. The Mails are so very irregular that it renders it discouraging at least, to take Eastern papers. This operates not only against you and brother Taylor's getting subscribers, but many more copies of other publications would be taken by our people, if they could ever get them; but as it is if we get our letters we do exceedingly well, as for papers we have actually received them half and two thirds worn out, two or three years old, and scarcely ever within from two to six months. I trust the Mails will mend their ways a little as the season advances, although the prospect is rather dull, if what I hear is true, that the Government is going to make war upon the Indians.—If it is the wish of the Government to make peace with the Indians, $100,000 in blankets, cloth, shirts, amunition, tobacco &c., would make twice the peace that ten times that amount will make in fighting them, but the dignity of the petty officials must be sustained, no matter at what cost or sacrifice of life.

A Letter from Elder F. D. Richards which will be found in another column will be intensely interesting to the Saints, the indignation expressed concerning the depraved creatures who have been quartered in Utah we fully endorse, and hope our very liberal Government in the future will send these Gentlemen where their deeds of darkness will be appreciated, and save them the dread reckoning they must sooner or later satisfactorily settle with those they injure, for they must all be rewarded according to their works, and although they escape for a season, be assured the wicked will not go unpunished.

We learn from one of our exchanges that John F. Flourney has memorialized the Legislature of Georgia to pass a law legalizing Polygamy, with what success we have not yet learned.

Correspondence.

St. Louis, June 12, 1855.

Having recently removed from Cincinnati to this City, correspondents, will please address me at the Luminary office in St. Louis until further notice is given. In the mean time Eld. John Banks will take charge of the Church in Cincinnati during my absence. His Post Box is No. 488, Eld. Banks is also appointed agent for the St. Louis Luminary and Mormon printed at N. Y. and for the Sale of Church Books in Cincinnati, ORSON SPENCER.

36 Islington, Liverpool, June 23, 1855.

Elder Erastus Snow:

Dear Brother—The work of the Lord under my jurisdiction is on the increase. I from time to time receive intelligence of a highly cheering nature from those who labor under my direction in this great field. With the Saints more particularly the blessing of the Lord seems to abound. They appear to be daily realizing more and more the magnitude of the work in which they are engaged, and making still greater efforts, especially in financial affairs, for the urging on of the great car of salvation. A spirit of union and confidence pervades the Saints, and they feel determined to do their utmost for the welfare of the kingdom. You are aware that only now and then are we treated to "events" in the Church in this part of the world, especially in Britain. I may say, in short, that the truth is steadily advancing with us.

In Hindostan things seem to move very slowly. You are no doubt aware that Elder Hugh Findlay and others have left Bombay for the Valley. Elders N. V. Jones and William Fotheringham embarked, March 5, on board the American ship Beverly, at Calcutta, bound for Singapore and China, on their way to the Valley. They arrived at Singapore in twenty-three days, from whence Elder Jones wrote me March 30. They were expecting to leave that place in a few days. Elder R. Skelton, instructed by Elder Jones, has left Madras for a season, and arrived at Calcutta, to take charge of affairs there. Elder Skelton informs me that at Madras the meetings are improving, and there is a good prospect of baptisms. The spirit of the gathering has strong hold on the Saints there. The "Only way to be Saved" is being translated into the native language. Elder Levi Savage, at Rangoon, is preparing to publish in the Birman language a treatise on the gospel.

It is truly pleasing to me to hear of the goodness of God to the emigrating Saints this season, particularly those that have taken the new route, via the Northern ports of the U. S. The most conspicuous and cheering facts about the matter are that two of the vessels, the Juventa and the S. Curling, with near 12,00 souls on board, should make the voyage without a single death, and with no particular sickness. This manifest sanction by the Lord of the counsels of the first Presidency in Zion will no doubt be very gratifying to them. And truly all the Saints have abundant cause to rejoice that the Lord extends his preserving care to them, in an especial manner, in delivering them from the pestilence and the perils of the mighty deep. An old established emigration firm told me the other day that they never before knew an emigrant ship cross the ocean with so many passengers on board as had each of the ships named, and not lose a single soul. Even the U. S. papers are filled with admiration of our emigration, and extol its cleanliness and superior arrangements for the preservation of health, morals, and good feelings among the passengers. The world doubtless wonder how it is that the "Mormons" evince such superior management in emigration affairs. It is the Lord's work, and it may well be marvellous in their eyes. He has given to us the patent for conducting the gathering of Israel in a "more excellent way" than the Gentiles can divine, with all their learning, science, and skill.

The discourses on the relations of the Mormons to the Government of the United States, delivered by President Joseph Smith, at Nauvoo, June 30, 1843, and by President Brigham Young, at G. S. L. City, Feb. 18, 1855, are a mine of knowledge and wisdom. They are a balm for the wounds of the persecuted Saints, and a panacea for all Uncle Sam's ailments, if properly applied. But such does not appear to be the case. Jesus wept over Jerusalem, saying, "If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace, but now they are hid from thine eyes." So it seems the Saints will have to weep over the once fair and promising Republic of the United States. In fact there seems to be a class of men who are dead set upon Utah. They think that if she is not so bad as she is reported, she ought to be, and at all events shall be treated as though she were. Soldiers, notoriously the most reckless and dissolute portion of the community, must be sent into the midst of a people preeminently disposed to cultivate the principles of peace, industry, and public and private virtue.—Legal and military gentlemen are sent to Utah, the one to administer law, the other to support such administration. Three or four days' fuddle, and a debauch with Indian squaws, seem to be necessary to these immaculates to properly clear their intellects and strengthen their nerves for the solemn discharge of their responsible duties in trying their fellow-beings for life, in the midst of which, by the bye, the said ladies, uninitiated in civilized court etiquette, but strong in the perception of simple justice and the sacredness of covenants, introduce themselves, and in the silent but eloquent and universal language of signs make demand for wages on account of delicate services rendered as per said debauch, when honorable gentlemen acknowledge the claim, and hand over blankets, paints, &c., in payment for said services; and such curses are sent to Utah, and presume to teach her children—the Saints of the Most High, patriotism and virtue, and write back to the States that Brigham Young is dangerous to the nation an enemy to his country, and that the Latter-day Saints are worthy of being outlawed and exterminated, because, forsooth, it is plain that they will not permit their wives and daughters to associate with such pure minded, respectable, honorable gentlemen as those spoken of! Why it is a universal maxim, and all history corroborates it, that the greatest enemy a country can have is corruption, especially sexual corruption, in the hearts of its citizens.

Allow me to speak a word on my own responsibility. My grandfather, Joseph Richards took part, with the patriots of '76, in three different campaigns in the revolutionary war, being on one occasion without food for three days and nights; at the tender age of 18 he was at Dorchester Heights in a nine months' campaign. My father Phinehas Richards, shouldered his musket and marched to Boston, for the defence of his country in the late war. My younger brother, Joseph William Richards, entered the renowned "Mormon Battalion" of 500 men, and fell in the expedition to Mexico. My brother George S. Richards, was shot dead in the blacksmith's shop at the Hauns Mill massacre, and buried in the well. I myself, and family, in common with the body of the Saints, are exiles from Nauvoo, by the dicta of a mob, winked at by the Government of the U. S. I have also travelled thousands of miles to preach peace and virtue to the citizens of my own country and others. At the present time my family are in Utah—the only place in the wide world where I could leave them and feel conscious that they would be safe from desecration while I performed an arduous Mission in a far distant land for two years and upwards. And shall I, with my family, submit tamely and without remonstrance to see such corrupt specimens of authority sent to Utah as are some of those which are sent there? No, never. But I enter my solemn, unequivocal, and most emphatic protest against such characters being appointed and sent to administer justice in that territory. And I appeal to the President of the U. S. to either send honorable, highminded men, who will not practise debauchery and corruption among us or the Indians, or appoint faithful and true men which can be found in the territory, and in whom the people have the utmost confidence—men who will magnify their calling, uphold the constitution, and teach and practise virtue.

You have seen men, in digging their garden, pick up worms, grubs, slugs, &c., and throw them into a pan, when they co-mingled together, amid unsightly, lathery, slimy mucus, till taken to feed ducks or other poultry. So such rotten hearted reptiles as I have been speaking of, ought to be thrown together in some foul but congenial den, and left to riot in their abominations, and foam out their own shame together. And I trust that our beloved President Brigham will continue to have the power of the holy Gods resting mightily upon him, that he may be quick to discover iniquity, and fearless to rebuke it, that the wicked and corrupt may tremble and quake at less than the lifting of his little finger, and become unmistakably convinced that Zion is naught but hell to them, and that there is no place for them there until they become so refined as to be able to dwell in the midst of devouring fire and everlasting burnings.

In a word I will say that if the Government of our nation will treat us as citizens, and not as aliens, we will prove ourselves more worthy than she can conceive, and in fact we will do so whether she does right by us or not. Yet we are not such tee-total peace men as some men are, we believe in the doctrine of self-defence, we are not disposed to see our wives and our daughters defiled by the basest beasts in the form of men, neither shall we feel justified in permitting such fellows to trample roughshod upon our civil and religious rights without remonstrance or resistance. We have patiently borne much, we may patiently bear much again, we strive to put a charitable construction upon misunderstandings and mistakes, but, when trodden upon, even a worm will rise. And are we to be deemed more devoid of sensibility? Is there not a line which should not be overstepped by our oppressors, and which we ought unflinchingly to toe to a hairs-breadth? How long must we be priest-ridden, or ridden by judges, lawyers, or politicians? We wish to be free as the air of our mountain home. Is it not difficult to break the spirit of a mountain horse, though galled and jaded apparently to death? If our enemies attempt to ride us to death may we not be expected to rear, kick, plunge, jump stiff-legged, and cut a thousand more capers than a California horse ever dreamed of, to rid ourselves of our tyrannical riders? and if they do not quickly slide from our back, and run off home with the cry after them, as Elder Taylor says, of "blanket," "paint," "dirty shirt," &c, is there no danger of them being pitched off to meet a broken neck? Let the matter be fairly considered.

But let what may be said, the best of all is, God is with us—it is his work, he guides the helm, and he will deliver us triumphantly out of every emergency, as he has done heretofore. Amen.

F. D. RICHARDS.

The following extract of a private letter has been handed to us by Mr. Jas. S. Cantwell. The world is being filled with similar testimonies of the same great man; and were we to publish all, it would be said, surely a greater than Solomon is here.

Hitherto my letters have been of such a business character that I have had but little to say about my feelings regarding the place and people. It has not been, however, because I have had nothing to say. No! language would fail me to tell all I feel regarding this peaceful city and Territory and those who dwell therein. After some months experience, I can say without fear of contradiction, that this is the best place on earth, and the people who dwell here are the best that God ever made, i. e. if uprightness, virtue, and integrity, is the standard. Drunkenness, prostitution and their concomitants, are crimes unknown to this "Degraded people." They live in the fear of the Lord, and are led by a man whom I cannot praise more highly than to say he is in every way worthy of the position he occupies. I never met a man possessing such rare and inestimable qualities as President Young. He lives in the affections of the people, who feel almost to adore him because of his shining virtues. During my residence in this city I have never heard the first man—Saint or sinner say a word against him; but on the other hand, I have heard some of those not connected with the Church, and unbelievers in the faith express a wish that the whole world were like him. I firmly believe his bitterest maligners would be the foremost to praise him, if they had only the opportunity of gaining his acquaintance. A multiplicity of business is apt at some times, to make the best men short and hasty, sometimes indeed, irascible; but not so with our worthy Governor, in the midst of his multifarious business and duties, he never loses his equilibrium. Go to see him when you will, you will always find him in the same happy and cheerful mood, ever ready to hear and give advise on all subjects. No one can go to see him without being profited by his advice. He seems to have an intuitive knowledge of all branches of business, and one is astonished to see the ease with which he points out the path of success to those who are commencing in any profession or branch of home manufacture.

Regarding his public ministration my opinion is equally high. I never heard a man that can so arrest and rivet the attention of his hearers like him. I have heard many great orators in the world, but there is none I could begin to compare with him, he possesses a rich and sonorous voice, just elocution and graceful gesture, combined with a fluency of language choice and faultless; and what is still better every sentence, every word is good solid sense.

I never heard the man that can say so much in so few words as Brigham Young. Believe me, my dear Cantwell, faithfully yours.

GILBERT CLEMENTS.

Death of Elder James Ferguson Bell, Late President of the Malta Mission; and also of his wife, Mary Jane Bell.

It is with feelings of deep regret, that we have to record the death of our late beloved brother, James F. Bell, who died of the cholera, at "Mormon Grove," Atchison, Kansas Territory, U. S. A. June 8th, 1855, after an illness of about ten days.

Elder Bell was about thirty years of age at the time of his death. He entered the Church in Birmingham, England, in 1847, and in the same year he was ordained to the Priesthood, and sent to labour in the city of Lichfield; and subsequently in Wolverhampton, &c., in the same conference. He laboured diligently and successfully, until October 5th, 1850, when at a general Conference held in Manchester he was appointed to preside over the Staffordshire Conference. He continued his labours in the last named field, until November 13th, 1852, when he was appointed by President S. W. Richards to go on a mission to Malta. On that "Banner Island" he laboured most faithfully and diligently amongst the Maltese, the soldiers, and seamen in the British army and navy. He organized one Branch in Malta, one in the army, called the "Expeditionary Force Branch," and one in the navy called the "Mediterranean Floating Branch." Each of these Branches prospered under his general superintendance; for although far distant from two of them by land and sea, he kept up a written correspondence with them. While engaged in fighting the battles of the nations, the brethren derived much encouragement, and consolation from his counsels and instructions.

During his mission in Malta he suffered much privation; and also much affliction from the palpitation of the heart—which disabled him from labour, and kept him confined for some time. But as soon as his strength would admit, he renewed his exertions and unwearied zeal for the prosperity of the cause of God; and indeed, in the language of President F. D. Richards, "he proved himself a hero, whose heroism will be as lasting as eternity." In the latter part of the year 1854, he was released from his mission, and in the early part of 1855 he arrived in Plymouth Sound, England, on board H. B. M. ship Arethusa, where he was met by Elder Joseph Hall. On the 31st of last March he sailed from Liverpool, with a large campany of Saints, on board the ship Juventa, for Philadelphia, thence to St. Louis and up the rivers on the steamer Equinox for Atchison, Kansas T. He arrived at the last named place on the 27th of May, and on the 28th he removed to Mormon Grove in good health. But here he did not long escape the hand of the destroyer. His wife—sister Mary Jane Bell—died of the cholera, June 2d, six days before her husband. They leave behind them an infant son, Samuel Clements Bell, who is at present under the faithful watchcare of brother Thomas Stephens, and his wife, from Hull. All the goods and effects of Elder Bell, are in the charge of Elder Richard Balantyne, President of the P. E. F. Company at this place, who will appropriate them for the benefit of the child. Brother Balantyne will also take charge of the child and see that he is provided for. We would therefore say to Mrs. Bell in England, that she need not be under apprehension for the safety of her grand-son. Every care and attention will be paid to his welfare. We deeply sympathize with her in the loss of her worthy and beloved son, and daughter. But it should be a great consolation to her, as it is to us, to know that they died in the Lord; and in the path of duty; and that their last resting place is on the land of Zion.

Elder Bell has earned for himself a name that will never perish. It will be cherished in the hearts of thousands. In the resurrection of the just, he will, with his partner, come forth to stand in his lot and place amongst the sanctified and redeemed of all nations, kindred, tongues, and people of the Lord. In the mean time we pray that the blessings of heaven may rest upon his orphan son, and that he may live to rear up his father's house, and get honor and immortality to his name. We would not forget to state that much praise is due to brother Joseph Corbett, late of Wolverhampton, England, for his unwearied attention to brother Bell, from the time he was first taken sick until his decease.

WILLIAM GLOVER,
JOSEPH HALL.

Mormon Grove, K. T., U. S. A. June 15, '55

The following has been communicated by Elder Orson Spencer, who is now associated with this office, whose contributions will henceforth copiously inrich the columns of the Luminary.

Hiram, July the 1st, 1855.

Pres't. Spencer, Dear Sir: We received a letter from you, a few weeks since, it was truly a great satisfaction to us to learn of your health and prosperity. We are yet in this gentile land struggling amid the powers of darkness and superstition, we have much opposition to combat against, yet we give our testimony, both in private and public when ever we have a chance. We expect to remain here until fall, unless we are other wise counselled, prospects have seemed to be dark and gloomy, as it regards our doing much here, until of late the Lord has seen fit to touch the heart of a few honest souls, so that we have had the pleasure of leading five into the waters of baptism. I trust some more will soon fellow in the train, one of the number was rebaptized, We feel strong in the work, and fully determined to give them our testimony before we leave them, We expect to start for Geauga in a few days to preach to the people, my health is good, Brother Edwards is not very well, we would be glad to hear from you often, give us your prayers for we feel our weakness, I will close by saying the Lord bless you and all the Saints in Cincinnati, my love to all, I remain yours in the Gospel, EDWIN WHITING.

Brother Whiting has just finished his letter to you and he wishes me to relate to you a dream or vision that I had about 18 years ago, which was literally fulfilled the 17 of June 1855, after coming in to the church in 1836. I dreamt while upon my bed of being upon the banks of the cuyahoga river that ran through what was then my fathers farm at a place called the old ford, there appeared to be quite a flock of sheep on the bank with me and I thought that I went there to baptise some of them, so I went in and baptized a number of the sheep. In a few days after Brother Lorenzo Snow came to my house and I related the dream to him, Brother Snow said that if I was faithful in the kingdom of God that I would live to see that dream literally fulfilled, and it has ever been in my mind at times even since. Just as we started from Salt Lake City Bro. Snow said, Brother Edwards as you are going back to Ohio to your native land, I think thot you will have a chance to fulfill your dream or vision concerning the sheep that you baptized in your dream. I truly had faith to believe that it would come to pass, but when I got home to my native land, saw the unbelief of the people, I often exclaimed how will it be brought about. Bro. Whiting and myself have often talked about it. At my brothers in Hirams where I make my home, a young woman that lives with them became convinced that the doctrine that I taught was the truth of heaven, she said to me one day I desire to be baptised and she innocently told the family that she was going to join the Mormon church, they were mad at once and said it was a hasty move in her, suffice it to say they terrified her so that she feared to be baptized. At this time it looked like as though my dream might be fulfilled but how quick it was blasted, suffice it to say we continued to talk and preach to the people, at length there were 4 others of another family requested to be babtized, I then informed the young woman at my brother-in-laws that there were four others that were going to be baptized, she came out boldly and told them that she was going to be baptized, they raged and foamed for a few days and gradually got good-natured again, I and Bro. Whiting went to the water with them and I went in and baptised them, thus fulfilling the dream. We have not had any news from the valley of late except through the "Mormon" if Brother Spencer has any late news please inform us. May the God of Israel bless you.

ELISHA EDWARDS.

By a letter just received from Elder Franklin B. Woolley, written at Waynesville, Warren Co., O., it appears that Bro. Woolley is diligently engaged in the work of his mission encountering the prejudices of the people, and stirring up the scattered Saints to pay their Tithing and emigrate to Salt Lake. Bro. Woolley will probably labor, after a little, in some of the northern Counties of Ohio from whence we expect to hear from him in due time.—Yours Truly, O. SPENCER.

VINE GROVE, Washington Co., Texas, June 13th 1855.

TO PRESIDENT ERASTUS SNOW:

Dear Brother:—Through the blessings of my Father in heaven my life has been spared and my health is very good, notwithstanding I am here in this hot climate under a vertical sun and a good deal of sickness prevailing among the inhabitants. Good rains fell throughout Texas on the 10th and 12th of May and since that time two or three others have fallen, and for the last twenty-four hours abundance has fallen and the crops promise a pretty fair prospect, but full crops cannot be expected, as they are too much injured by the long continued drought in the early part of the season. The weather here is very warm to one unaccustomed to such a climate, yet I travel around a great deal and preach, I have baptized nine and the prospect seems to brighten for the future. Last Thursday I baptized a man and his wife who are most excellent people he is in fine circumstances and will do honor to the cause. I have now baptized the heads of three families who number in all about thirty souls, so you see my comyany is increasing pretty fast and if I should baptize no more but only get off those I have already baptized, I shall feel myself well paid for coming from Washington to Texas and preaching a year, but the prospect is that many more will be baptized before my present mission ends. I have great reason to thank the Lord and rejoice in his goodness, for he pours out his spirit upon me mightily.

I have received letters from the Guadaloupe and Trinity rivers inviting me to go and preach for them and accordingly I expect (if the Lord will) to leave this part of the field in a few days and go some one hundred miles west and labor in the Valley of Guadaloupe for a season and try to give the work a start in that region. The Saints here think of nothing else scarcely but gathering, and indeed the spirit of gathering gets into the people before they are baptized and no one will be baptized until they can see the way open for them to gather up, I have received several letters from different parts of the country asking me for information in regard to my plans &c., I would say to all such and indeed to all the Saints in Texas, that if the Lord will, I expect to go home next year and a company is going with me.

We expect to rendezvous some where near the three Forks of the Trinity, or say on Chonalios or Richland Creek, and there organize and as soon as the grass is sufficiently grown in the spring to sustain teams we expect to be off. Our route will be to cross the Trinity at Dollos and Red River at Preston known formerly as Caffee's Bend and thence across the two Canadian rivers to the Arkansas river at Fort Gibson, then the road forks, one goes up the Arkansas and the other to Fort Leavensworth on the Missouri, whether we shall take the route up the Arkansas or go up North and take the Platte route is not yet decided upon, but we shall decide hereafter. I have a pretty correct knowledge of both these routes, having travelled both, so I would say to all the Saints in Texas who wish to gather up with the people of God in the mountains to be ready and at the place designated by the last week in February for by the first day of March we wish to be ready to start. The distance from here to Salt Lake along the Arkansas route is about two thousand miles, the Platte route is considerably further. Let all who are going, fit themselves out with oxteams as they are best suited for this long journey and every family be supplied with one extra yoke of oxen for every waggon, and drive a few milch cows, but no family will be allowed to drive more than ten head of horn cattle; and as to horses and mules we wish to take none, only those for use by the way for riding and driving stock. Further instructions in regard to outfit journey &c,, will hereafter be given.

Please to remember me in your prayers that I may perform a good work in this land, do honor to the cause of God and gather out much people, and may the Lord bless you in St. Louis and at last save us all in his Celestial Kingdom is the prayer of your dearest brother in the Gospel of Jesus Christ! Amen! PRESTON THOMAS.

P. S.—Should Brother Clapp be in Texas and I find out his Post Office I would write to him immediately, but I presume the suggestions I have given to the Saints will not be materially changed. If you should have any counsel for us down here, or any suggestions to make I should be very thankful for them. P. T.

(Brother Clapp when last we heard from him was at Troy, Freestone Co., Texas.—ED.)

From the Deseret News.

Details of the Southern Tour of the First Presidency and Company.

MANTI, San Pete Co., May 13, 1855.

Brother Wells:—We arrived at Willow Creek about 6 P. M., of the 8th inst.—the day we left G. S. L. City—where we were hospitably entertained at the house of brother Ebenezer Brown.

On the morning of the 9th, at 8 A. M., we left for Provo; passed through Lehi about half past 10, dined with Bishop Harrington, in Lake City, and then passed through Battle Creek, or Pleasant Grove, at three P. M., and arrived in Provo at 5 1-2 o'clock. By 7 o'clock the Town Hall in Provo was densely crowded, and brother J. M. Grant and myself addressed the audience, on principles pertaining unto their immediate practical duties. Quite a good spirit and feeling prevailed; and I am happy to state that the people of Provo are awakening from their slumbering and lethargy, to animation and vigor in the scale of improvements. Brothers Kimball, Grant and myself, and some others of the company remained over night with brother Joseph A. Kelting.

We left Provo on the 10th, at 9 A. M.; passed through Springville, and Palmyra, and arrived at Payson about 12 1-2, P. M., from which I wrote to you on the same day. At 5 P. M. we preached to the people in the open air, and the most profound attention was paid to the principles advanced.

On Friday, the 11th, we started from Payson at 7 o'clock A. M.; passed through Nephi at 11 A. M. and camped for the night at Uinta springs, in Sampete valley, where our horses had a rather indifferent supply of grass.

On the 12th we started at 7 A. M., and at 9 1-2 halted near the ford across Sampete river. Several of the company tarried at this place, while others, with eight wagons, one carriage, and about fifteen on horseback, started for the coal beds, about five miles from the road, This company was piloted by two or three men from Fort Ephraim.

Between the point of starting, and the mouth of the kanyon where the coal was discovered, there is much sage and gresewood, and about midway there is a pretty rivulet of clear, cool water, which at a future day, can be made available for irrigating purposes in that section of country. The wagons broke the road to the mouth of the kanyon, where the animals were turned out to graze, under a guard, and the balance of the company proceeded one mile and a half up the kanyon to the coal bed. To our gratification we found that it was no hoax, for we both saw, and handled it, and secured to take home.—Brother Adams took a sackfull to Fort Ephraim, where it was tried in a blacksmith shop, and it made an excellent welding heat.

The part of the bed which we visited is in a cove in the kanyon, and its first appearance resembles a massive, stratified rock. At this point it is about twenty-five feet from the surface of the soil to the top of the outcrop, down which falls a small stream of water. The upper outcropping vein is three feet and four inches thick, and rests upon a stratum of rock, below which is another vein from twenty-two to twenty-four inches in thickness, succeeded by a layer of rock, about two inches thick, which it is thought will give out in a short distance. Below this seam of rock there is a vein of beautiful coal five feet thick.

As we were not prepared to mine, we could not determine the position of affairs under the surface; but from what we could discover, there is a fair prospect of almost an inexhaustible quantity. I am endeavoring to engage the people of Manti and Fort Ephraim to make a road to the beds, and to commence mining, so that we can have coal in G. S. L. City this summer.

We again started for Fort Ephraim, and arrived there about 5 P. M. Preached in the schoolhouse at early candle light, and this morning in the open air. The brethren here have been very diligent in making improvements; they are erecting a fort wall of stone, to inclose an area of sixty dy forty four and a half rods, and to be eighteen feet high, four feet thick at the base, and eighteen inches at the top.

In all the settlements we have visited, the people appear to be rubbing the scales from their eyes, and awakening more to righteousness and general improvement, which afford, me much pleasure.

As a general thing, so far as we have proceeded on our journey, the grasshoppers are much more numerous than in G. S. L. City; while fields of wheat, that a few weeks past promised a plentiful harvest, at present show not a spear. or blade. We have had only one small shower, and that while passing up Salt Creek Kanyon.

Doctor Sprague reports that the health of the people in the settlements we have visited, is good, as is also that of the company. We have not had a case of sickness, and the wether has been very favorable for traveling, with the exception of dust.

We have a goodly company, and an excellent spirit prevails throughout. We are making as much headway as we could reasonably expect, considering all circumstances. I remain affectionately your brother in the gospel of salvation,

BRIGHAM YOUNG.

IRON COUNTY.

PAROWAN, May 14, 1855.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE DESERET NEWS:

Henry Rollins, Esq., of San Bernardino, arrived in this city last evening, and will shortly proceed to G. S. L. City with a handsome assortment of goods, principally groceries. He came through in twenty-three days, with heavily loaded teams. No news of importance from California.

It is a general time of health in this county. The farmers are still sowing wheat, the spring being very backward. Grasshoppers of small dimensions are far more numerous than the contending armies in the Crimea.

One hundred and fifty men are wanted immediately in this county to carry on the Iron Works successfully; those most needed are wagoners, miners, colliers, lime-burners, lumbermen, quarrymen, brick and stone-masons, carpenters, joiners, machinists, charcoal burners, and furnace men. Fifty additional teams are necessary to keep the furnace supplied with fuel and ore. The people are in high spirits on the iron subject, the furnace having been kept successfully in operation two weeks satisfied the most sceptical that nothing was wanting but to continue the charge, as the furnace was blown out simply for want of fuel.

Mr. F. F. Whitney, of Parowan, is manufacturing a very good article of cut nails; the cutting machine was got up under the supervision of the Hon. C. C. Pendleton, and the header was constructed by Mr. Whitney, who is an ingenious mechanic. The work is principally done by Piede workmen, under his supervision.

Mr. Pendleton is erecting a machine shop; the walls are composed of gravel and lime mortar, which becomes very hard.

The lumbering business is at present at a stand still, and the saw-mills are idle, for the lumbermen are all engaged in farming. Eleven men are engaged in sowing grain and repairing the fences at Paragoonah.

The U. S. Rifle Company camped on Little Creek last night. Messrs. Geo. Bean and Alfred, Indian interpreters to that company, came in this morning, and report all well. Mr. Bean informs me that the horses in charge of the company took a stampede at Meadow Creek, and ran 30 miles, but were nearly all recovered; some of them were injured by the picket pins attached to the lariets. More anon. GEORGE A. SMITH.

Fame is as difficult to be preserved, as it was at first to be acquired.—[Spectator.

THE CRIMEA.

Believers in the Work—Deaths.

Camp, Crimea, May 21, 1855.

Dear President—I inclose in this letter an order for £2 of which we desire you to forward to sister Ross, the wife of our late brother Ross of the 95th Regiment, who died some time ago in Kulalie.—Brother Russell of the 49th has already written to you about him. Sister Ross cannot but be in straitened circumstances, and I am sorry that we did not send this money in this manner when it was first collected. But a son of Mr. Boynton, of Malta, who is in Balaklava, spoke of going to England in a few days after we had made the collection, so the money was given to him to be taken to England, but, about a month after, brother Russell went down to Balaklava, and found Mr. Boynton still there, who gave him the money back again.

What between going to England and Scutari, and deaths. there are very few here now who belong to the Church of the latter-days, or there should have been more sent to sister Ross in her affliction, but I hope the Saints at home will try to do something for her, for she is their sister. The other 10s. we wish you to keep, and send out Stars to us, to that amount, paying the carriage out of it.

The 3rd Buffs have lately encamped beside us, and I have been enabled to see brothers Coughlan and Barber. They are in good health and spirits, and are well affected towards the work of the latter-days. There are now only about twelve or thirteen of us in the Crimea. Two or three are in Scutari. The nature of our duties prevents our meeting together as we would, so that we are dependent upon our books for mental food. That is the reason we so eagerly look for the Stars being sent out to us.

My duties in the regiment multiply so much upon me that I have very little time left for writing as I would. Besides my duties in the Paymaster's Office, I am Saving's Bank clerk, and have to assist many of the Pay Sergeants of Companies with their own work.

I can say nothing of the war, but what you already know at home; nothing doing but the advanced pickets of both parties firing at each other out of the advanced trenches, and occasionally firing from the batteries.

The mail is just going, so I must conclude, with prayers for the upbuilding of the Kingdom of God, and remain your brother in the Everlasting Covenant. JOHN MCLEAN.

F. D. Richards.

SEBASTOPOL, 31st May, 1855.

Dear Brother F. D. Richards—God our Heavenly Father is good, kind, and merciful to me, and I feel to be more thankful than ever to Him for His kindness to me, and my brethren, who are all well, and desire to do their utmost to spread the work of God. But never have we had less time or opportunity to spread the work than at present, yet we are in hopes of soon being able to add to our number, if we only have a place opened to go to the water. Several that would have been in the Church if we had only had an opportunity of going to the water, have been taken from our midst, but I am happy to say that many who have departed believed the latter-day work.

I am sorry to say that brother Valentine has departed from this sinful world. He was wounded in the trenches, and lived for two days. He always said, after he was wounded, he knew it was the will of God for him to die, and he felt quite contented. Brother Valentine was baptized in Turkey, and I had great hopes that he would have been an ornament in the Church.

Brother McLean and all the brethren send their love to the Saints in England, and we all hope to be able soon to shake hands with them.

In a few weeks I will try and send some money for the Emigrating Fund, as all the brethren are desirous of contributing to it.

The time is come for me to go to my duty. May God bless you in your endeavor to spread the work. Amen. Yours in the Everlasting Covenant.

HENRY RUSSELL.

Miscellaneous.

IMMIGRATION FALLING OFF.

The returns of the Emigrant Commissioners at New York show, as was expected, a great decline in the immigration to this country. For the six months ending June 30th, of this year, the number of immigrant passengers arriving at New York was 69,476. In 1853, the number of similar arrivals there for the corresponding period was 126,617; and in 1855, rose to 134,751, which is the largest figure ever reached since the commencement of the immigration which has set in to our shores so strongly for the last quarter of a century. Heretofore, there has been a considerable immigration through the ports of Boston, Baltimore and New Orleans. But, this year, it has been confined almost entirely to New York. Probably, at all the ports entered by emigrant vessels, the total of arrivals in such vessels does not exceed, if it reaches, 70,000, for the last six months. During that time, some 15,000 foreigners have re-emigrated; leaving the net increase by immigration, so far, this year, 55,000. This immigration is divided in the proportion of 22,000 Irish to 26,000 Germans. We give the division as we find it in a New York newspaper statement, which takes no notice of any other race or class of foreigners. In point of fact, however, a large number of English, Welsh and Scotch Mormons—not less, it is believed, in the aggregate, than 10,000—have arrived in this country the present year. These, being deducted from the amount assigned to the Irish immigration, would reduce the number of immigrants from Ireland to 12,000. Independent of the Mormons, the whole net addition to our population by arrivals from foreign countries does not, for the half year just expired, exceed 45,000.

A poor woman in New York city complains that after promising to make half a dozen shirts for five cents a piece, she was compelled to find her own thread. Are the shirt-dealers in New York men or monsters?

FOR THE LUMINARY.

LINES SUGGESTED

By the wise policy of Col. Steptoe, and the Squawological propensities of the U. S. Officials in Utah.

Though but a tyro, yet I fain would tell
Some incidents, in verse, that please me well;
The scenes that I would here relate,
Refer particularly to a future State.
I'll not indulge in melancholy strain,
Nor seek by satire a single point to gain,
But plain unvarnished statements I'll declare,
So Judges, Priests and Editors beware!

'Twas said by these brave gentlemen some time ago,
And 'twas believed forsooth by high and low:
That in six months or less, the Mormon host
Would be prostrated; and Brigham's boast
That he would govern Utah, till the Lord
Should please remove him by his holy word,
Would be definitively brought to naught,
The Lion bearded in his den and caught.

Le Chef was chosen, and the troops were there,
And many a parson groaned in fervent prayer,
That God would fortify the Colonel's hand
So obliterate the Mormons from the Land;
All things were thus prepared for battle brave,
And some commenced to dig the Mormon grave,
When Steptoe nobly left by heavens will,
The Saints to live—Brigham to govern still.

The Colonel conscientiously refused
The honored Chair, by Brigham fitly used,
Nor did he thus the Gov'nors claims resign,
Without substantial reasons to assign;
But with good faith and hope he signed his hand,
That Brigham still might govern Utah Land,
Which policy was noble, bold and just,
It asked a Governor, the People trust.

The Saints exclaimed hosanah to the Lord,
Which echoed o'er the hills with thrilling chord,
Reverberating from each hill and dell,
Discomfiting both fiends of earth and hell.
Priests, Editors, & Co., who shouted loud
Against the Saints, last fall were sadly cowed;
For Brigham's God thus blasted all their hope,
With such an influence they cannot cope.

Some Lawyers too, by Congress have been sent
To Utah's fair domain, where they were bent
On perpetrating every damning deed
Of older sinners, who have run to seed.
'Tis said that one right honorable man,
Whose name I leave for those to guess who can,
Was sent as vindicator of the laws,
But went and played the rogue with Indian Squaws.

Before the Court, one morn, a Cyprien went,
And Arapeen, son frere, with fixed intent
Did plead for looking-glasses, blankets, paints,
And other trinkets small, to stop complaints.
The Attorney could'nt gain one point at law,
The case was therefore gained by Lady Squaw;
The Court was satisfied her claim was just,
And gave the paints, &c., to save a muss.

I might just mention Utah's Judges too,
To hear their speeches, you would think them true
And loyal friends to Gov. Young and suite,
Nor think them mean enough to crave his seat:
But let their selfish nature range awhile,
And soon you'll see displayed their cunning guile,
The most consummate cant of all, is he
Who seeks supreme control o'ppress the free.

But let him slide, Attorney General too,
And all the hungry office hunting crew,
Their boldest plans and schemes will surely fail,
And truth against their meanness will prevail.
Our ship is anchored safe in Utah Strait,
But soon she'll sail into a mountain State;
For 'tis, and ever will be, Mormon pride,
To boldly sail in spite of wind and tide.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., 1855. HENRIE LE CŒUR.

Attorney General Holman gives the Utahians rather a hard name, and speaks despairingly of the future prospect there; but upon compariug with our several correspondents, and reports of others who have come in, we find a wide differance in views and opinions.—[Bugle.

DEPARTURES.

Hon. Orson Hyde, Probate Judge of Carson County, Hon. Geo. P, Stiles, U. S. Justice for the third Judicial District, Joseph L. Heywood, U. S. Marshal, Enoch Reese Esq., of the firm of J. & E. Reese & Co., and several others started for Carson Valley on the 16th inst.

Messers Hyde, Stiles, and Heywood go out on official business pertaining to the organization of Carson county, and the holding courts therein. A part of this company, in connection with Col. Reese of Carson, intend to connect with a road being made by the people of California.

ARRIVAL OF THE PACIFIC.

BATTLE OF THE EIGHTEENTH.

NEW YORK, July 11.—Nothing important or additional from the Crima. The total loss of the Allies on the 18th is estimated at 4,774. The French had 37 officers killed and 66 wounded—total French loss, 3,337. The English sustained a loss of 1,434. Lord Raglan was ill, and had asked for a recall.

Sweaborg bombarded by the Allies, and the infernal submarine machines in the Baltic destroyed.

The imports of cotton since the last steamer were 60,000 bales. Stock on hand 536,000. Letters highly favorable, predict a speedy advance. In American stocks the market remained steady, with a moderate demand. Bacon declining. Beef dull. Pork quiet.

The official report of the loss of the Allies on the 18th, killed and wounded, over 5,000. Lord Panmure gives a nominal list, showing 93 officers killed and wounded, and 150 taken prisoners. Pelissier names 37 French officers killed, 66 wounded, and 17 taken prisoners; 1,544 privates killed and missing, 1,644 wounded.

Many rumors were circulating in Paris in regard to the defeat. One of them attributes the cause to the errors of the commanding British officers—first, in not passing fascines provided for filling up the trenches within the Redan; and secondly, for not having immediately apprized the French commander that they would neccessarily be compelled to retire. The British, on their side say they took the Redan but could not hold it, because the French failed at the Malakoff.

Gortschakoff telegraphed that the Allies who crossed the Tchernaya, had again returned to the left bank of the river. On the night of the 22d, the Russians observed a great movement of the Allied squadron. Pelissier telegraphs from the Crimea, under date of the 26th, "Nothing new. We are pushing our approaches against the Malakoff, and hastening the construction of our advancing battery, which will complete the investment of the port. We are also drawing closer with our left attack." Lord Panmure says, the French and English are proceeding in their approaches against the enemy's works, and erecting batteries which will be armed with heavier guns than the enemy's batteries contain.—The Allies retain possession of the Round Tower. The Russian fort in the Cemetery, from which the enemy was driven on the 18th, situated in the gorge of the valley which divides the English left attack from the right of South harbor, removed. The British bombarded Hango, and destroyed the telegraph station.

The Russians admit that the Cossack's boat displayed a flag of truce, but alledge that they feared a strategem.

At Dantzic, on Friday, forty-six infernal machines were discovered and destroyed. One bomb exploded on the poop of the Exmouth. Admiral Saymorn was severely injured.

Gen. Simpson is mentioned as likely to command the army in the event of the recall of Raglan.

The Paris correspondent of the Times speaks of a communication, having taken place between the French and English Governments, arising out of a combination, or energetic support upon the part of the English colleague.

Famine prevailed in China. Considerable fighting, with varied success, marked the course of the rebellion.

THE JOLIET CUT-OFF

The following letter explains itself, and is of great interest to travelers:

NIAGARA FALLS, June 24, 1855

Agent Michigan Central Railrond, St. Louis:

DEAR SIR: I left St. Louis with my family on the evening of the 21st inst., for New York; and by your suggestion, took tickets via Joliet Cut-Off. It is a real cut-off, and no mistake. We arrived at Detroit in twenty-five and a half hours after leaving St. Louis. Had there a good night's rest. Yesterday, from there in nine and a half hours.

Had I been alone, and wished to have gone on to New York at once, I could have reached there in fifty-three hours from St. Louis. Advise all my friends to take the same route. We were not detained at Joliet, or at Lake Station over ten minutes. Found the road a very good one for a new one, and made good time. The "Great Western" has greatly improved since I passed over it last season, and will soon be one of the best roads in the country. Of your own road, I need not speak. It is too well known to need commendation from any one.

Very respectfully yours, HUDSON E. RRIDGE.

ETIQUETTE.—The Yankee out West who wrote home to his mother that he had seen a live Hoosier, has sent her another epistle on western etiquette. Here it is:

"Western people go to their death on etiquette. You can't tell a man here that he lies as you can down east, without fighting. A few days ago, a man was telling two of his neighbors, in my hearing, a pretty large story. Says I, 'Stranger, that's a whopper.' Says he, 'Stranger, lay there!' and in a twinkle of an eye, I found myself in a ditch, a perfect quadruped, the worse for wear and tear. Upon another occasion, says I to a man I never saw before, as a woman passed him, 'That isn't a specimen of your western women is it?' Says he, "you're afraid of the fever and ague stranger, ain't you?' 'Very much,' says I. 'Well,' replied he, 'that lady is my wife, and if you don't apologise in two minutes, by the honor of a gentleman, I swear that these two pistols,' which he held cocked in his hands, 'shall cure you of the disorder entirely—so don't fear, stranger!' So I knelt down and apologised. I admire the western country much, but curse me if I can stand so much etiquette."

Meditate often upon eternity, and no accidents of this mortal life will trouble you.—[Fr. Sales.

The reason why it succeeds.—THE Mustang Liniment has attained its enormous popularity, and almost universal use, simply because it gives better satisfaction, accomplishes more good, relieves more pain, and heals more wounds and sores than any other preparation ever defore offered to the afflicted. Every bottle that is used, speaks for itself—tells its own tale in the relief it gives, and the cure it effects. And then one who has suffered, pehaps, long years with pain, without hope of relief, and finds in this Liniment an almost instantaneous remedy, cannot help but speak in its praise, and recommend it in the best terms to all he sees suffering. It needs no other recommendation than a trial.

Apr, 14 21.] JAS. S. CANTWELL.

On the death of Eliza, our eldest daughter.

The offspring of our early wedlock, and first years
Of our union, has left the stage of life—
Left father, mother, brothers, sisters, friends—left many
Of the daughters of the earth, whom much she Loved, and who in turn loved her. Her Days upon the earth were few. In bloom of Life and health, and animation lively—in joyous
Youth and beuty, she was called to lay her body down.
The finer feeling of the mind, just now,
Beginning to expand—the well filled bud of youth
Just bursting into womanhood; when, Lo! the withering
Blast of death swept by, and touched the opening
Flower. With buoyant heart and spirit
She sped along the walks of life—with pleasing
Voice, in song she cheered her friends and parents
Dear; and oft raised the drooping, saddened heart
To happiest reflections. She loved the pleasing
Scenes of gayest life, in innocence and virtue;
For scarce had she began to know the painful sting
That lurks unseen, beneath the garb of earthly joys,
Or stealthy coil of poisonous reptile, that too oft
Lies hid in blackest heart, though covered well
With garments gay, and cloth of finest texture.

We thank our God, that in her heart was virtue,
And in her eye was keen discernment. She Heeded words of counsel from her friends and Parents, whom she loved. And thus detected
Much, the poison mixed with sweet; and
Hidden bitterness of soul that follows evil pleasures.

If in my song I praise too much my own,
I ask forbearance; for, though she had her faults
And many too she had; yet she obedient
Proved, when called to seperate from early friends,
And oft obedient proved in other things.

Obedient to the gospel call, in these last Days, I left my native home. I summonsed
All who called me by the endearing name of Father, to follow in the train. I told them
That we would wend our way to Ephraim's promised
Land—to lands in far off West, in peaceful Vales of Zion's lofty mount. This is the Lord's command in these last days. All
Men who will be saved from threatened vengeance
Of an angry God, poured out in justice,
On the wicked nations of the earth, should Gather up to Ephraims mount, and hide them
Then, till pestilence and famine pass away.
There to abide in safety if obedient, and then Enjoy God's laws, revealed through Prophets, Seers and Revelators; and live on all the precious fruits
Of happy land—blessed for the righteous sake.

Obedient to my call Eliza proved, and Fixed, and planned, and worked, and helped to Pull up stakes and travel on. Though
Much was placed in front, by Priest and People—relations, friends and neighbors. All Friends so called. They said, "Eliza dont you
Go; your living here you now cat earn;
You're old enough, and able too, to gain your bread;
Your father much in error's path has strayed,
Said they; and you and he, and all will ruined
Be, who follow him throuh vain delusion's track."

Of her own age, and sex, she many Favorites had. They loved each other much,
And sorrowed much, when called to part.
She parted from all these, tand though 'twas
Hard, she turned her back to all these things,
And closed her ear to every sound, but that
Of parents orders.

We journeyed from our native home
And safe arrived in this fair land, en route
For Salt Lake Valley. Here disappointment
Met us face to face; and we obliged were
To spread our tents and tarry for a while.
The subject of our song loved not this place,
She much desired, and longed to travel on,
And eagerly she grasped, first chance that Opened up before her. A herald of
The Gospel, and champion bold, had just Returned from neighboring land of Texas,
And preparing was, to journey o'er the plains
With happy heart, to join his family in their Mountain home. He saw her, and
Her sister next in years, and said he'd take Them on, and take their older brother too—
God bless the man! With blessing,
Counsel, and consent of parents, they Parted from us; but she, our eldest Girl, we little thought to meet no more
On this side of the grave.

Death Scene of an old Tar.

Extracts from the "Watchman," a new work published by H. Long & Brothers.

In the course of a few years the rheumatism began to prey about the joints of the old sailor, and his limbs grew stiff, and he was no longer able to perform his duties on board of the yacht, with his former activity; by and by, by slow degrees, those pains and the concomitant infirmities of age increased upon him, and the yacht had to be given up altogether. Then in the ample chimney corner of the servant's hall, in his lordship's mansion, in winter, and on a seat covered with an arbor, overlooking the fish pond, which Lord Mordant had constructed for his especial benefit in summer, the old man passed his waking hours—telling his adventures by land and flood over and over again for years—until at last he was confined to his room—then to his bed.

He lingered, however, a long while, and Lord Mordant, who had become greatly attached to him, frequently spent an hour by his bedside. He was present when the old man died. No one supposed the last event so near at hand.

His lordship upon entering the room, asked Jack, as usual, how he felt.

"I'm drifting fast, your honor," was the reply. "Old Jack Jenkins 'll soon be drifted into eternity."

"Keep your courage, Jack," said his lordship, "I hope you'll be with us for many a day yet."

"No, your Honor. The order's been passed to slip old Jack's cable, and the chain's already unbitted."

"Can I do anything for you? Have you everything you wish."

"I should like a pipe of 'bacca, your honor.—These varmints of sarvants won't give it me though I've axed it twenty times—coz why—the doctor says how it's bad for my cough. The cough was plaguey bad last night, your honor."

"Then, Jack, I think they did right. You know they must follow the directions of the physicians."

"All right, sir. I don't blame 'em. I never axed for a pipe those three weeks till yesterday. I know its a seaman's duty to obey orders; but when a man's on his beam ends, and all the doctors in the service can't set up his rigging again—why, then I think it hard to thwart his humor. I shan't see daylight tomorrow, sir and I should like one pipe afore I drops off the hook. May be 'bacca aint served out in the other world.

Jack said this so earnestly, yet so innocently, that his lordship, notwithstanding that he saw the old man was rapidly sinking, could scarcely forbear a smile, and he ordered the servant to bring the much coveted pipe, which Jack smoked with much apparent pleasure. Then laying it aside, he said:

"Bacca and me cuts acquaintance, your honor; that's the last pipe old Jack Jenkins 'll ever smoke. Now, sir, please send for the parson, for the old sailor 'll take his departure for the unseen world."

"Do you feel so very bad, Jack?" asked his lordship, with great feeling expressed in the tone of his voice.

"I feels no pain, sir, but I know my cable's almost run out, the last bight's close to the hawse-hole, and there ain't no time to spare. I should like to make my accounts all square before I sheer off."

Lord Mordant sent immediately for the rector of the parish, who soon arrived at the abbey, and was shown into the old man's bed room.

Lord Mordant would have retired, but Jack begged him to stay.

"How do you find yourself now, Jack," said the clergyman, to whom the old sailor was personally known.

"I am dying, your reverence—dying—slipping away—quietly and comfortably—but my glass is nigh run out."

"Shall I read to you, or pray with you?"

"Thank you kindly—you may—I shall be glad to listen; but first I would like to ask your reverence a few questions."

"What are they, Jack? Speak freely," said the clergyman, "is your mind at peace with the world; do you possess the hope of happiness hereafter?

"I am pretty comfortable that way, Sir—as comfortable as a man well may be, who is passing, as I have heard you say, 'through the valley of the shadow of death,' where all beyond looks hazy through the spy-glass—but there is one thing troubles me sorely."

"Then tell me what it is my good old friend, and relieve your mind from all earthly cares."

"This ain't an earthly care, your reverence," feebly replied the old man, whose life was evidently now fast ebbing away.

"So much the better, Jack. It is well, if at this awful hour yon have been enabled to forget all earthly cares, and turn your thoughts entirely to that future, whose mysteries you are so soon to solve.—What is it you would speak to me about?"

"It's one of those mysteries, Sir, as I should like to have my mind made easy about before I slips off. I've been spliced on to two women, your reverence, both of whom have slipped their cables afore me. what troubles me is to know to which on 'em I shall be lotted on to when I gets up aloft."

"In the future world there are no marriages, neither is there any giving in marriage," replied the clergyman. "Let not such trifling thoughts occupy your mind now."

"Well." replied Jack, "if your reverence says so, and the bible says so, I suppose it's all right. Not but what I'd like to have tackled on to my first wife again, poor thing; but it would have been hard to have had to hook on through all eternity with old mother Shipley's daughter. I could never have heard the angels while her tongue was agoing, your reverence."

"Have you any thing else troubling you?" asked the clergyman, with difficulty repressing a smile, notwithstanding the solemnity of the occasion.

"No, your reverence, nothing. I've never harmed any one willingly; and though, may be, I haven't done all that I ought to have done, I hope the Lord'll have mercy upon me and take me to himself. You've eased my mind, considerable, sir, in telling me as I shan't be bound to Sally Shipley when I'm gone from this. But kneel and pray, sir; I feel my breath failing fast; the cable's almost run out; the last link'll slip through the hawse-hole in a few moments. Kneel and pray to your honor," addressing Lord Mordant. "Pray with his reverence, that we may all meet happily in Heaven."

The clergyman knelt, and poured out his soul in prayer for the dying man, who occasionally responded 'Amen' to portions of the petition, but at length he was silent. The prayer was long and earnest, and when the clergyman and Lord Mordant rose from their knees, they found that while the petition in his behalf had been ascending to the throne of grace the soul of the honest old sailor had passed away.

THE MAN-MONKEY OF BRAZIL

The captain of the French schooner Adrienne, who last summer was stationed at Pernambuco, Brazil, gives the following sketch of a tame monkey;

"A short time ago I dined at a Brazilian merchant's. The conversation turned upon the well-tutored chimpanza of Mr. Vanneck's, a Creole gentleman, whose slave had brought him the monkey, which he had caught in the woods. Every one praised the accomplished animal—giving accounts of its talents so wonderful that I could not help expressing some incredulity. My host smiled, saying that I was not the first who would not believe in these results of animal education until he had seen it with his own eyes. He therefore proposed to me to call with him on Mr. Vanneck.

I gladly consented, and on the following morning we set ont. The house of the Creole lies on the road to Olinda, about an hour's ride from town. We proceeded along splendid hedges of cactus, shaded by bananas and palm trees, and at last observed its charming villa. A negro received us at the entrance, and took us to the parlor, hastening to tell his master of our visit. The first object which caught our attention was the monkey seated on a stool, and sewing with great industry. Much struck I watched him attentively, while he, not paying any attention to us, proceeded with his work. The door opened; Mr. Vanneck, reclining on an easy chair, was wheeled in. Though his legs are paralyzed, he seemed bright and cheerful; he welcomed us most kindly. The monkey went on sewing with great zeal. I could not refrain from exclaiming, "How wonderful!" for the manner and process of the animal were those of a practical tailor. He was sewing a pair of striped pantaloons, the narrow shape of which showed that they were intended for himself.

A negro now appeared—announcing Madame Jasmin, whom Mr. Vanneck introduced as his neighbor. Madame Jasmin was accompanied by her little daughter, a girl of twelve years, who immediatly ran to the monkey—greeting him as an old friend and beginning to prattle with him. Jack furtively peeped at his master; but as Mr. Vanneck's glance was stern the tailor went on sewing. Suddenly his thread broke; and he put the end to his mouth, smoothed it with his left paw, and threaded the needle again. Mr. Vanneck then turned to him, and, speaking in the same calm tone in which he had conversed with us, said:

"Jack, put your work aside and sweep the floor."

Jack hurried to the adjoining room and came back without delay, with a broom in his paw, and swept and dusted like a clean housemaid. I could not perfectly make out his size, as he always walked upright, not on his four paws. He was about three feet high, but stooped a little. He was clad in linen pantaloons, a colored shirt, a jacket, and red neckerchief. At another hint from his master, Jack went and brought several glasses of lemonade on a tray. He first presented the tray to Madame Jasmin and her daughter, then to us like a well bred footman. When I had emptied my glass he hastentened to relieve me from it, putting it back on the tray. Mr. Vanneck took out his watch, and showed it to the monkey; it was just three. Jack went and brought a cup of broth to his master, who remarked that the monkey did not know the movements of the watch, but he knew exactly the position of the hands when they pointed to three, and kept it in mind that it was then his master required his lunch. If the watch was shown to him at any other hour he did not go to fetch the broth; while if three o'clock was passed without the lunch being called for, he got fidgety and at last ran and brought it; in this case he was always rewarded with some sugar plums.

"You have no notion," said Mr. Vanneck, "how much time and trouble, and especially how much patience I have bestowed in the training of this animal. Confined to my chair, however, I continued methodically. Nothing was more difficult than to accustom Jack to don his clothes. He used to take off his pantaloons again and again, until at last I had them sewed to his shirt. When he walks out with me he wears a straw hat, but never without making fearful grimaces. He takes a bath every day, and is on the whole, very cleanly." "Jack" exclaimed Mr. Vanneck, pointing to me, "this gentleman wants his handkerchief." The monkey drew it from my pocket and handed it to me. "Now show your room to my guests," continued his master, and he opened a door at which he stopped to let us pass, and then followed himself. Everything was extremely tidy in the small room. There was a bed with a mattress; a table, some chairs, drawers, and various toys; a gun hung on the wall. The bell was rung; Jack went and reappeared with his master, wheeling in the chair. Meanwhile, I had taken the gun from the wall; Mr. Vanneck handed it to the monkey, who fetched the powder flask and shot bag, and in the whole process of loading acquitted himself like a rifleman. I had already seen so much that was astonishing, that I hardly felt surprised at this feat. Jack now placed himself at the open gindow, and discharged the gun without being in the least startled by the report. He went through sword exercise with the same skill.

It would be too long to jot down all Mr. Vanneck told us about his method of education and training; the above facts, withessed by myself, bear sufficient evidence of the abilities of the animal, and its master's talents for tuition. We stayed to supper, to which there came more ladies and gentlemen. Jack again exhibited his cleveruess in waiting, at which he acquitted himself as well as any man servant.—Going home my companion missed a small box of sweets, out of which he had regaled the monkey with almonds. Jack had managed to steal it from his pocket; and on being afterwards convicted of the theft he was severely punished by his master.—[Chambers Journal.

MCLEAN'S VOLCANIC OIL LINIMENT is truly a celebrated remedy, and has done more to alleviate human suffering than any other remedy ever discovered.

One or two applications will relieve the most severe pain, bruise or sprain.

Two bottles will cleanse, purify, and heal the foulest ulcer or sore, and it will heal the most severe burn or scald without a scar.

Every family should have a supply constantly on hand, for use in time of need.

Read the following extract of a letter, which is incontestable proof of its wonderful efficacy:

A BLIND MAN RESTORED TO SIGHT.

J. H. MCLEAN—Dear Sir: * * * I have been suffering for four years with rheumatic sore eyes, being at times altogether blind. I procured the advice of several physicians, but none of them could do me any good. By the advice of a friend I applied your "Volcanic Oil Liniment," according to the directions around the bottle, and it has cured me permanently. I have used it since for bruises, pains, &c., and it has always given immediate relief. I live on the main road near Farmington.

Yours, respectfully, JOHN H. ALLERD.

Jefferson county, Mo.

For horses it is far superior to any other remedy for curing lameness, bruises, cuts, old sores, swellings, &c.

We say, then, to all who may be suffering from external diseases, call at once and get a supply. Thousands of bottles are sold (and used) daily, and we have never heard of a case where it has failed in giving relief when properly applied.

MEDICINE FOR THE BILLION!

A Certain Remedy for all Diseases of

MAN OR ANIMALS,

Requiring an External Application.

Warranted in every Case for which it is Recommended!

THE MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT!

Unlike all other popular medicines, it is used by many prominent members of the faculty, and many of the public Hospitals. Their prejudices have yielded to indisputable and incontrovertible demonstrations of cures performed where their remedies had failed.

It has cured more cases of

RHEUMATISM

than any other medicine ever used. Its efficacy in this terrible disease is acknowledged by all who have used it. It not only cures the complaint, but appears to give a vigor and elasticity to the limbs, before unknown, thus performing a double office.

A FEW TESTIMONIALS.

PATH FINDER OFFICE, May 11, 1854.

G. W. WESTBROOK:—

Please send me by the bearer three large bottles of your Mexican Mustang Liniment, as I wish to take it up to my place in Vermont, not thinking it advisable to do without it. I have used it in my family and on my horses, and have found it invaluable. Yours,

J. T. WHITNEY.

ELIZABETHTOWN, TENN., May 25, 1855.

MR. G. W. WESTBROOK:—

Dear Sir—It affords me much pleasure in saying to you that the Mexican Mustang Liniment outsells any medicine that I have ever had for sale, and comes nearer doing what it promises to do. Send me another supply, as I am nearly out. Yours respectfully,

JOHN SINGLETRAY, P. M.

PHILADELPHIA, June 11, 1854.

MR. G. W. WESTBROOK:

Sir—My son was afflicted with a swelling upon the knee joint, which confined him to the house. I had a doctor attending him for some time, but he did not do him any good. One of my neighbors told me to use the Mustang Liniment. I asked the doctor if I could do so, and he told me he thought I could not do better.

I procured one bottle, and in about a week he was able to go out. I can safely recommend it to the afflicted.

Respectfully yours, MRS. BENNETT.

W. S. Ladd & Co., of Portland, Oregon, writes that there is an immense demand for the Mexican Mustang Liniment in that country, and orders forty gross to be shipped by Golden Gate, that sails in a few days from New York.

Park & White of San Francisco, California, order 100 gross, to be forwarded by first clipper for that port.

PORT AU PRINCE, HAYTI, Jan. 16th, 1854.

I had the pleasure to receive invoice and boxes Mexican Mustang Liniment per Croton, and have no doubt it will have a brisk sale on the island.

GEORGE RACKSTER.

To give health, strength and elacity to the limbs, there is nothing can equal in effect, the

MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT.

FARMERS AND LIVERY STABLE KEEPERS

have need it for the following diseases with extraordinary success, certifying invariably to the efficacy of the Liniment, and the truthfulness of our assertions in its behalf:

Spavin, Splint, Ring-bone, Fistula, Wind Galls, Big Head, Bruises, Strains, String-halt, Scratches, Cracked Heels, Sweney, Saddle, Collar, or Harness Galls, Hard Lumps or Tumor, Film, or other diseases of the Eye, Poll-Evil, &c.

The small sizes retail for 25 cents per bottle;

The medium size retail for 50 cents per bottle;

The large sizes retail for one dollar per bottle.

The medium holds three times as much as the small;

The Large holds nearly three times as much as the medium,

Therefore the large bottles are the cheapest.

TWELFTH GENERAL EPISTLE

Of the Presidency of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, to the Saints in the Valleys of the Mountains, and those scattered abroad throughout the Earth,

GREETING:

BELOVED BRETHREN: Under the blessings of an overruling Providence for our preservation, we have renewed obligations of thankfulness and praise to our Father in heaven, whose protecting care has turned aside the shafts of death, and sheltered us, as with a mantle, from the scourges and devastations which have been poured out upon the earth.

We have truly realized that His power has been over us for good, and that these distant vales have thus far proved a safe retreat, wherein the Saints have found quiet, health, prosperity, and peace, while the indignation of the Lord has partially visited the nations. Our hearts are full of joy when we reflect how kindly the Lord has overruled seeming evil for good, and turned the wrath of man to his praise, by delivering so many of his Saints from wicked Babylon, and from the power of their enemies, before these scenes of woe, confusion, and distress spread desolation and affliction over the earth. At the same time we feel anxious for those faithful Saints who are still obliged to wait for deliverance in the midst of such fearful calamities.

The indications of the times and seasons, as they rapidly roll, are truly fulfilling the words of the ancient prophet, that "the Lord has decreed a consumption upon the whole earth." In the dispensation of the last days, we are truly gratified with the faithfulness of the Elders in going forth to proclaim the fullness of the Everlasting Gospel to the children of men.

Although a great work yet remains to be accomplished, still it has been carried to the most distant portions of the earth; and been preached to many of the principal nations in their native tongue. In North America, and Great Britain it has been extensively preached and published in the French, German, Italian, Danish, and Welsh languages. It is also translated, and ready for publication in the Hawaiian language, and will probably be published the ensuing season. In addition to the foregoing, it has been preached to the Spaniards, Norwegians, Swedes, Icelanders, and the inhabitants on the Danube, the Nile, the Indus, and the Ganges. It has been freely offered, by the Elders of Israel traveling without purse or scrip, to all these nations, and to the people of Malta, Southern Africa, Ceylon, Siam, Australia, the largest and most populous of the Pacific isles, and to many other nations and people in their native language. Among all to whom the gospel has been proclaimed it has found more or less of Israel; but it is worthy of remark that in those countries which were favored with the gospel in the early ages of christianity, that had the testimony of Jesus and his Apostles, we find the grossest darkness and Idolatry, and the least susceptibility to the principles of our holy religion, while among the more enlightened portions, such as Western Europe, the English settlements in Australia, and America, and in the United States, it is more readily received by the honest and sincere enquirer after truth.

The Missions during the past year have been usually successful. We have received intelligence from Australia which shows a considerable increase of numbers, and a constantly increasing inquiry after a knowledge of the truth. From brother Jesse Haven, who is still presiding and preaching in Cape Colony, we learn that quite a branch has been raised since his arrival, mostly among the English Settlers.

At Ceylon the missionaries were badly treated, and were soon obliged to leave the Island. In Siam they have been permitted to remain, but have made very little impression, except among the English, a few of whom have embraced the gospel. This Mission has been in the immediate charge of brothers Luddington and Savage, under the presidency of Bishop Nath. V. Jones, whose location is at Calcutta. In this place also, as well as Bombay, Burmah, and the Northern provinces of India, small interest has been awakened, and that mostly among the English; but the majority of them being soldiers in the British Army, the officers frequently prohibit their attending the meetings, or in any wise associating with the Saints. They also used a very powerful interest against our brethren in all their labors, even with the natives. In Hamburg, and in several of the European States, our Elders have frequently been imprisoned, and finally banished from their dominions. But in all of those places the word has been sown, and the native brethren, who have a right to remain, are preaching and teaching, as opportunity occurs, there by laying a foundation which will eventually result favorably to the cause of Zion, by opening the way for the spread of the gospel, and breaking asunder the bonds of bigotry, superstition, and darkness, which have so long enthralled the earth.

In England, Scotland, the Orkney Isles, Ireland, Switzerland, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, the Channel Islands, some portions of the United States, the British Provinces, and the Pacific Isles, the work has been, and is prosperous, continually adding to the Church, and opening new and more extended fields of labor.

In our own Territory we have been blessed with health, peace, and prosperity unequalled. Crops matured, and were more plentiful than ever before in these valleys, although much damage was done by grasshoppers in the month of July, and there was hard frost and ice on the 30th of May, and the 15th Oct. It is the first time since we settled in these valleys, that we could say there was a surplus of grain raised for the inhabitants, and although an expected, unusual, and large amount has been drawn for the U. S. troops who quartered among us during the winter, from the 2nd of Sept. to the present time, we still believe there will be an abundance to last until replenished by another harvest.

Our public works have steadily progressed. The adobie wall around the Temple Block has been completed, and a large amount of the stone caping prepared and some put on. The Endowment house on the Temple Block is finished, and a large share of the Temple foundation is laid. The Sugar Factory, on Big Kanyon Creek, has been put into operation, and the South wing of the State House, at Fillmore City, is in progress of completion.

The Seventies have built a commodious hall which has been very constantly occupied during the winter, although it was not began to be built until the 13th of August.

Country and City improvements have been extensive, astonishing every beholder with the eminent success and prosperity which have attended all our exertions. How truly may we attribute all these blessings to that kind Father who has shielded us from our enemies, and showered down his blessings upon us. He has caused the Earth to bring forth, in its strength, the grain and rich fruits thereof for the sustenance of man. The elements have also been propitious, and the moistening nurture of the "early and latter rains" has not been withheld; neither have the mountain streams failed to furnish their usual supply. There has also, a much greater supply of goods been brought into the Territory, than heretofore, for which however the demand seems constantly increasing, although large amounts of clothing are manufactured by the people. Home manufactures and productions have been a part and portion of our domestic economy, and should be practised by every Saint. It is the only path in which we can walk with any assurance of securing our freedom, and of perpetuating that liberty which we inherit, as a rich legacy, from our ancestors and our God.

Our Holy Religion brings us in contact with long established error, and the traditions of centuries, which are prevalent throughout the world; hence are we necessarily a peculiar and separate people, whose best interests and preservation depend upon union and self-dependence, upon practicing virtue, industry, and sobriety, and manifesting our faith by our works in magnifying our Priesthood, and in serving our God by keeping ourselves pure and unspotted in this wicked and adulterous generation.

For this cause we gather out from the world, and for this cause we should rely upon our own skill and ability to produce, from the native elements, every article of food, and raiment necessary for our use or comfort.

Brethren be wise, and eschew foreign productions as articles not suitable or designed for Israel, and draw your supplies from nature's great storehouse, the rich and abundant though undeveloped, resources with which we are surrounded, and which are clearly within our grasp.

As wickedness, discord, and confusion continue to prevail and increase upon the earth, the Saints will discern that the time is not far distant, when they will probably be obliged to pursue this course for their own salvation. How much easier then for them to be preparing when surrounded with peace and prosperity. How much better to do what is proper, and necessary to be done, under the most favorable circumstances than to wait until stern necessity compels. We say then, to the brethren and sisters in all these valleys of the mountains, learn now, to make your own clothing, and encourage the home manufacturer and producer; and let those who intend to come here to reside bring all manner of labor-saving machinery, and such articles for its construction as cannot be readily procured here.—Also bring cotton and tasel seed, and seeds for raising all kinds of vegetable dyestuff, and all kind of fruit and flower seeds, also grafts, and grape cuttings; procure and drive the best kinds of stock.—And let those who have the things now named preserve them with care, that the best of all kinds of fruit and stock may be cultivated, and the poorer qualities improved, that in our midst may be found an abundance of everything that will contribute to use and comfort, or that will delight the eye or beautify the earth. For the encouragement of fruit growers, we merely mention the fact that, for the last four years, peaches have ripened upon trees growing from seed planted by us, since our location in these valleys, and apple trees, have, though in less quantities been bearing two years, and bid fair to produce much fruit the present season.

On the 27th of June, the Conference appointed at the adjournment of the April conference, commenced and was held two days, during which many missionaries were sent to the United States, among whom, was Elder John Taylor, of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles who was to proceed to New York City, with the view of there publishing a newspaper. John Smith, son of Hyrum, was chosen, presiding Patriarch over the whole Church, and was ordained to that office, with all the keys and authority thereof, on the 18th of February. This was to fill the vacancy which occurred by the death of our beloved and lamented Patriarch, Father John Smith, who died on the 22nd of May, 1854, aged seventy-three.

Father John Smith was the brother of Joseph Smith, Sen'r who was the father of the Prophet and was the first Patriarch in the Church. He was succeeded in that office by his son Hyrum, upon whom he conferred it before his death, and after his decease, father John Smith was chosen, Hyrum having no son old enough to fill the office at that time. The respected and beloved Patriarch went to his rest full of days and honor, having run the race with patience, and endured unto the end, and was lamented by thousands upon whom he had laid his venerable hands to confer a patriarchal blessing, by virtue of his holy office and Priesthood. He will long be remembered by the Saints as a father whose blessings were counted of great value, and which will remain a comfort and consolation through all the various changes of life's pilgrimage in the flesh. Having suffered persecution in common with us and our brethren who have gone before, he was broken in body; and although permitted to live a few short years in quiet and peace in the valleys of the mountains, still the infirmities were upon him which were caused by the many exposures, and troubles through which it has been the lot of the Saints to travel; but the vigor of his mind and intellect remained unimpaired to the last.

Thus has another of the noble men of the earth gone to his rest, prepared to come forth with glory, immortality, and eternal life, when the Keys of the resurrection shall be given unto the Priesthood of the Almighty to again administer its power upon the earth.

During the past year we have enjoyed tranquility with the native tribes, having concluded a treaty of peace with the Indian Chief, Walker, whom we met for that purpose at Chicken Creek, in Juab county, on the 11th day of May last. We have great cause to acknowledge the hand of the Lord in restraining these savages from literally drenching our settlements with the blood of the Saints, and in preserving our brethren from utter destruction, for nothing but His almighty power has prevented such a catastrophy.

Some of the settlements seeing, and feeling by sad experience, the most imminent peril they were in, have undertaken to partially secure themselves by fortifications, &c; but we are grieved at being obliged to say that these defences generally remain in an unfinished condition, and many of them are of but little value. How long the Lord will continue to extend his protecting care, and indulge his people in such inexcusable carelessness, and indifference to his counsel and gentle admonition, remains to be seen. It appears that the very moment when peace again smiles upon us, danger is forgotten, and we at once relapse into the same careless indifference which has always characterized our actions in these valleys, so far as regards our being well prepared to meet our steadfast enemies. We say unto you, brethren, do not longer indulge in such criminal neglect, do not longer trifle with the counsel and urgent entreaties of your brethren, but improve the present moment of peace and prosperity for making yourselves secure, and in preparing against a day of trouble.

Towards the Indians continue to exercise patience, charity, and forbearance; give them your faith for their reclamation from their low estate; pray for them, and teach them also, that the principle of improvement and enlightenment may possess their minds never again to be rooted out, that they may learn the ways of the Lord and rejoice in the true knowledge of the God of their fathers.

We realize that the Lord has been gracious, and is answering the prayers and supplications of the Saints in their behalf. We realize that His spirit is being poured out upon them, and to this cause we attribute the power which has restrained them from more extended and active hostilities. We exhort you to feed and clothe them as heretofore, but never lose an opportunity of learning them to work, in order to gradually teach them the way to industriously provide for their own wants, a course mutually more beneficial than to sustain them in idleness.—Providentially, indeed, have we been thrown into their midst, bringing with us our holy religion, and our civilization. As we have been abundantly blessed with the good things of the earth since we came, let us impart freely unto these degenerate sons of Israel, of such as we have received, and not, as is too often the case in the conduct of the whites towards them, condescend to their level, thereby debasing ourselves and abusing their confidence, but seek to raise and exalt them to us, that they may in very deed become "a white and delightsome people," in whom the Lord can take delight, even as in days of old.

Indian chief, Walker, died after a few days' illness, near Fillmore city, on the 29th of January; and the Utans have chosen his brother Sen-a-rock, commonly known among the whites by the name of Arrow-peen, to be their chief.

Owing to the ignorance of the Indians, and to their having so little understanding of the nature and obligations known to civilization, the laws have seldom been enforced against them. However, in the case of the unprovoked murder of two of the boys of bishop Weeks, of Cedar valley, while engaged in getting wood and poles from the kanyon, two Indians, the principal actors in that scene were hung on the 15th of last September; having been tried and convicted before the U. S. District Court, the Hon. Judge Shaver presiding. Again, in the case of the massacre of Capt. Gunnison and party by the Pahvan-te Indians, in the fall of 1853, a number of them were tried at Nephi, before the Hon. Judge Kinney of the U. S. District Court of that district, which resulted in three of them being convicted of murder in the second degree, and they were sentenced to the extent of the law of the United States in such case made and provided. In this case, we understand that there were many extenuating circumstances which appeared to mitigate, on the part of the Indians, the perpetration of this horrid massacre. It was a time of war between the whites and the Indians, and this particular band had just previously suffered the loss of one of their chief men by a party of white emigrants, who killed him while passing through their country, without even a cause of provocation. This so enraged the Indians, that although they had not previously participated in the war, they straightway commenced gathering up their forces to come against the settlements, and to join the other Indians already engaged in hostilities. It was at this moment that Capt. Gunnison and party arrived in their country, while prosecuting his duties in exploring a location for a rail way across the continent, thus furnishing them that opportunity for retaliation which they were so earnestly seeking, and which was so fearfully visited upon the innocent. This should prove a lesson to all travelers who wantonly shoot the Indians; for though they may pass in safety, peradventure the very next traveler may fall victims, as a consequence of their inconsiderate and worse than savage barbarity. All persons having knowledge of law, and at the same time treating the Indians so inhumanly, should be held responsible for the results of their acts; which, as in the case of the lamented Gunnison, are almost certain to be visited on the first opportunity, upon some who were entirely unconnected with the aggression.

It cannot be expected of the Indians, in their present low, and ignorant condition, with all their traditions and ferocious natures upon them, to understand and act in accordance with the provisions of law which they never had the least knowledge of, nor any opportunity for obtaining such information.—Therefore it becomes those who profess civilization to set them an example, and not, while pretending to execute law upon them, be more brutal and murderous than they are with each other. Let all such persons consider these facts and act wisely, lest the blood of their victims be found upon their own skirts; and brethren, be careful lest you also trample upon the "oil and the wine," make shipwreck of your faith, and lose your salvation in the kingdom of our God.

At the October Conference several of the brethren, who had been absent on foreign missions, were present, having returned with many Saints; and although the last company did not arrive until the 28th of October, it was a time of rejoicing with us all, but especially with those who, having safely passed through death and suffering, were permitted to associate in peace with those having a common faith with themselves, and to listen to the instructions of the servants of God in Zion. Every countenance beamed with joy, and nothing occurred, during the three days which the Conference lasted, to mar, or in the least disturb the peace and unity which universally prevailed. Elder Horace S. Eldredge was chosen to take the place of Jedediah M. Grant, as one of the seven Presidents of the Seventies.

Since the October Conference, but little has occurred differing from the usual routine of our business.

The winter has been unusually mild, and work has progressed in many respects, almost as well as in the summer.

The Legislature held their usual session of forty days, and adjourned to meet on the second Monday in December next, in the new State House in Fillmore City.

Various associations for religious, literary, and scientific purposes have been formed, and much useful instructions has been imparted, as also in many evening and day schools, which have generally been kept in operation during the winter, in all the wards. Amusements have also had their time and place, and, with the exception of a little disturbance caused by a few disorderly U. S. troops, a general time of quiet, good order, and peace, has prevailed in all the settlements.

In accordance with their respective appointments, Elder John Taylor repaired to New York, Franklin D. Richards to Liverpool, Erastus Snow to St. Louis, Orson Spencer to Cincinnati, and Parley P. Pratt to California.

Owing to the irregularity of the Eastern mail, we have but little information concerning their success; but have learned that a Stake has been established at St. Louis, and that a newspaper called the "Luminary," is published weekly. We have not yet learned whether other Stakes have been established, or whether other papers have been published; though a press has been obtained in California which will be put in operation the ensuing summer, under the charge of Elder Geo. Q. Cannon.

Elder Amasa Lyman still labors at San Bernardino, California, and the remainder of the Twelve Apostles are at present with us, laboring as opportunity occurs in the various settlements of Utah. Elder Geo. A. Smith is still engaged on the History of Joseph Smith, and will in a few months, probably, have it finished and ready for the press.

At this April Conference just adjourned, the reports and exhibits of the financial affairs of the Perpetual Emigrating Fund Co., and of the Church were fully presented, from which it appeares that the capital stock of the Perpetual Emigration Fund Company, amounts to $71,005 14 3-4 although scarcely a dollar of it is at present in available means that can be used for the purpose of emigrating the poor Saints. This arises from those who are in debt to the Fund neglecting to pay for their emigration. There is now owing to the Fund, from this source, $50,000, which if it could be realized in available means, would very much increase the operations of the company, and assist many thousands to come, who are looking and praying for deliverance through this source. By every light in which it can be viewed, the brethren who have been assisted by this Fund, for their own, for their brethren's, and for the kingdom's sake, should cancel their obligations thereto. The subject of emigrating the poor Saints, taking them from the overpopulated districts of the older countries, where, with their utmost labor, they can scarce procure subsistance, and where lack of employment frequently renders life itself precarious, and bringing them to a land where by industry they can acquire a competence, and rise in the scale of intellectual existence; commends itself to all the Saints, and is worthy of their faith and most active benevolence.

The reports of the financial affairs of the Church show that the resources have been generally invested in buildings, and making public improvements, such as the Council and Endowment Houses, Tabernacle, wall around the Temple block, store houses, Temple, &c. In order to successfully prosecute our business, we find it neccessary to have a considerable amount of active capital to enable us to furnish material, and supply clothing and articles necessary for those who are constantly engaged in the public service.

The tithing furnishes our resources for all of our public improvements, and this is generally paid in grain, vegetables, stock, wagons, labor, and other property, and but very little in money, and with the exception of what is needed for the use of the men employed, has to be turned into cash to procure such other articles as are neccessary for properly prosecuting business. The constant investment of the funds of the Church in permanent improvements, trouble of changing, and delay in converting into cash, sometimes unavoidably involve us in debt; but if the brethren will be faithful and punctual in paying their tithing in kind, it will relieve us of all embarrassment, and furnish sufficient for all the needful purposes for which it is used.

Brethren, as you wish to hasten the building of a Temple, and the rolling forth of the work of Zion's King, put your shoulders to the wheel, render aid to her cause, and make her interest your own. Remember that all you do to favor Zion is only favoring your own interest, that it is for yourselves that you are laboring and toiling in the kingdom of God; rejoice therefore in your labors, and consider the reward which is laid up at the end of the race. It should be deemed a blessing as well as duty, to have this privilege. No greater favor could be bestowed upon this people than they enjoy in having a part and lot in this matter, in being the humble instruments in the hands of the Great Jehovah, in bringing to pass His purposes upon the earth in these the last days, in being the recipients of the eternal truth, light, and knowledge emanating from Heaven's King, in whom is all excellence, power, and glory.

Incomparable delight and happiness fill the soul of the faithful Saint, who has the testimony of Jesus and the spirit of the living God to enlighten his understanding. Happiness supreme and love divine fill his bosom, as he seeks to impart the gladsome intelligence to his fellow species, that they also may be partakers with him in this glorious cause, and share in its blessings. Thus our Holy Religion absorbs every feeling, desire, ambition, motive, and action of our natures, and renders every association in life tributary thereto; it enters not only into our spiritual but also into temporal organization, and controls us in all our affairs.—This is true of every person who has tasted the good word of life, has received the Holy Ghost, and continues to walk in the light, and be led by its gentle influence. This is salvation in the kingdom of God, it is glory celestial, and exaltation. This is the work that makes angry the adversary, who fears the overthrow of his kingdom and power upon the earth, that causes Satan to rage and seek to destroy the Saints of the Most High, as he did in the days of Jesus and of his apostles and followers.

Hence the persecutions and martyrdom which wasted the faithful from the earth, and caused the apostacy of the ancient church. The world overcame and destroyed them, and seeks to overcome and destroy us, for they are actuated by the enemy of all righteousness, the arch deceiver, who desires the overthrow of the work of God. Therefore brethren, be on your guard, be faithful in prayer and watchfulness, in faith and good works, lest you enter into temptation and darkness comes upon you; lest you get bewildered and led astray, and unwarily imbibe an apostate spirit which will lead you to deny the faith.

The consecrations of the saints have been delayed for a time, in order to obtain the form of a deed which should be legal, in accordance with the laws of the Territory. This has now been accomplished, and many are deeding their property to the Church. We wish it distinctly understood that no person deeds his property unless he feels it to be a privilege, and prefers to do so of his own free will and choice. Neither do we wish any person to deed any property which is encumbered by debt, or liabilities. Pay what you owe, and then if you would be independent, keep out of debt, improve upon your inheritances, and the stewardship which is committed to your trust, that being found faithful over a few, you may be made ruler over many things.

Let the Saints abroad in the world devote all they have for the spread of the gospel, the gathering of Israel, and helping the poor, who are faithful and true, to come to Zion; and it is believed there are means sufficient among the saints in England, and other places, if properly distributed, to emigrate all the faithful. If those having means would be liberal enough to freely impart to the needy, simply retaining sufficient to accomplish their own emigration, and trusting in the Lord for future means of subsistance, they would be blessed by the Lord and their brethren, and rejoice in having wrought salvation and deliverance to many of the meek who shall inherit the earth.

Let those brethren who are willing to devote their means in this way, do so in wisdom, by giving it into the hands of our authorized agents, whom we have appointed to that business, and not pay it, as is too frequently the case, to irresponsible persons who scatter it to the winds without doing any good. Let all things be done in order, and through the proper channel.

It is a very common occurrence, for those having means when they come into the church, to lose every dollar, by their business transactions with the world, before they gather with the Saints, or have contributed much to aid the cause of Truth. When stripped of every thing, they are ready to come, regretting that they had not devoted their means for the building up of the Lord's, instead of the Devil's Kingdom.

The best way is for the Saints, when they first come into the Church, to close up their business, as soon as they conveniently can without too great a sacrifice, and then "gather up for Zion," without unneccessary delay; for the devourer and tempter are abroad in the earth, and the Lord has commenced his pleadings with the people by "fire and by sword, by pestilence, famine, and tempest;" escape therefore, while the way is open before you.

To all the honest in heart throughout the world, both of high and low degree, we say "repent, and be baptised for the remission of your sins," obey the ordinances of the gospel through the administrations of the servants of the living God, for the judgements of the Almighty are upon you; flee therefore from the sinks of iniquity and corruption, lest the fiery indignation of the Lord also consume you with the wicked, of whom he has decreed that he will empty the earth.

Saints in the valleys of the mountains, unto you we say, raise grain, sow, plant, water, and harvest in the proper seasons thereof; cultivate no more land than you can cultivate well, save and preserve your grain, that nothing be lost; take care of your animals that they be not stolen by the Indians, or driven off by the white theives who anually make their predatory excursions through our settlemets; fence pastures for your stock, that you may preserve the grass in your immediate vicinity for their use; and let the transient herds pass beyond the settlemets, to where range is plenty and not occupied, and there will be less danger of their mingling with those belonging to the Territory.

Prepare good granaries for your grain, where it can be kept safe, and lay up your surplus in store, against a time of need.

Finally, brethren, be one in faith and in effort, and walk humbly before the Lord. Keep sacred His commandments, and your covenants. Seek continually unto Him for wisdom and knowledge, that you may enjoy the light of His spirit, and be thoroughly furnished to fulfil every duty incumbent upon you, by virtue of the Holy and Eternal Priesthood of Almighty God with which you are clothed, in a manner that shall best subserve the advancement and rolling forth of His Kingdom upon the earth.

At this season of the year, the following advice may be of some service. We know it to be true, for we can float for an hour at a time without moving a muscle of our body. We prefer stretching the arms out, as it prevents you from turning over. At Cape May most of the ladies float very well: "Any human being who will have the presence of mind to clasp the hands behind the back, and turn the face to the zenith, may float at ease, and in perfect safety, in tolerably still water—ay, and sleep there, no matter how long. If not knowing how to swim, you would escape drowning when you find yourself in deep water, you have only to consider yourself an empty pitcher, let your mouth and nose (not the top of your heavy head) be the highest part of you and you are safe. But thrust up one of your bony hands, and down you go; turning up the handle tips over the pitcher. Having had the happiness to prevent one or two from drowning by this simple instruction, we publish it for the benefit of all who either love aquatic sports, or dread them."—[Godey's Lady's Book.

Friends and Patrons: — We're about to leave you! 'Tis eight months since we first made our bow and entered upon our editorial career, craving the indulgence of our patrons for any blunders which we might make in conducting the "Luminary," and we now leave a discerning public to pass judgement upon us.

Our multipled duties during emigration season has prevented our devoting that care and attention to the Luminary which its position and importance demands, and which is necesary to ensure anything like accuracy in its Typographical execution. The fantastic pranks which the tale-telling types have played off upon us, have often been exceedingly annoying to us, and but for our inability to promise reformation with any hope of success, we should have made attempts at apologies and corrections.

Under existing circumstances, however, we have considered it the better part of valor to endure these buffitings with calm resignation, and trust to the good sense of our readers, to make their own corrections. We are not aware of the man of the types getting farther off the track than the width of the Atlantic, and if our Cape Town correspondent, whom the mischievous types once located in South America, has found his way back to South Africa, we trust that others who may have been lacerated and misrepresented, have ere this gained the equilibrium of their temper, so that we may venture to refer to the matter gently, and as we are about to take leave of them for a season, assure them that not even "aught was set in malice," and if we be permitted to meet again, we wish to count them still among our friends and contributors.

'Tis with much pleasure that we avail ourselves of the present opportunity, to announce Professor Orson Spencer as our successor in conducting the "Luminary," a few short months, while we retire behind the Sierra Madra, to luxurate upon the sweets of a mountain home. We do not — like our friend the "Mormon" — insinuate an absolute intention to "let the world wag," while we frolic on the sea shore. But we congratulate ourselves and the world with the prospect, that should disappointed office seekers and editors who have recently turned preachers, jostle the world out of its orbit, our friend, the "Mormon," in the East and the "Luminary" in the West, will serve her as ballast while perambulating in space.

Should any of our cotemporaries feel anywise sore over our freedom of speech, we would soothe their feelings with the hope that our successors "little finger will be heavier than our thigh."

In this connexion we beg to acknowledge the especial service rendered us during our Emigration season by Elder James H. Hart, late of the French mission, whose pen has contributed much to the interest of the "Luminary," and who will continue in the office and assist Elder Spencer in the discharge of his onerous duties.

All letters relating to the "Luminary," will be directed as heretofore.

The general interests of the church and the welfare of Saints in this Stake of Zion, will be as heretofore under the Presidency of Elder Milo Andrus.

Russian Notions of Priesthood and Marriage.

The following slip we cut from the evening Mirror:

"In Russia the priesthood are compelled to marry. A priest cannot hold a cure until he is married, so that a wife is of the first importance to him. If his wife dies he cannot marry again, according to the construction which they put upon the passage, which says—"A bishop must be blameless, the husband of one wife;" and the priest is obliged to leave his parish and go into a monastery where he must spend the remainder of his days."

It appears from this that the people of Russia entertain a much more extended view of the perpetuity of the marriage relation, than many other people of christendom are accustomed to do.

The Russians appear not only to regard a wife as a good thing for time, but to be equally as good for the long period of eternity. They don't believe in being joined to a good lovely wife, their "better half," and then let the grim king of terrors separate them permanently.

They seem to believe that connubial ties will be just as precious beyond this veil of mortality, as they are here, and foreseeing the evil of being without such a jewel as a fond wife, they lay in their contract for an endless futurity. Now, surely, this is not so dull for semi-barbarous Russians. Some of the acute orthodox Yankees might take a profitable lesson from their example; provided, they could banish some of their ridiculous notions of an airy evanescent futurity, in which the bodies of men and women are virtually supposed to pass off into phantoms, having neither "body parts nor passions," like the fabled God of certain religious creeds.

The Russians compel their priests to marry, while the Roman Catholics forbid their priests to marry.—Now, the Russians are in the right of it; if a priest's office require him to administer to thousands of people living in connubial bonds with all their appendages and et. ceteras, it is surely indispensible that he should be a married man. This was manifestly Paul's doctrine, and the doctrine of common sense, the world over. But we can't vote with the Russians to send a priest into the solitude of a monastery, because his wife happens to die, perchance in a week after he marries her. No, we dissent loudly from that, we would sooner vote to have him take two more wives than be doomed in this way. By the former course, he might learn some-things which even Mrs. Caudle never taught to her lord. It takes as many as Rachael and Leah at least to make out a full volumne of curtain Lectures; and if the fair brides are of gentile volubility, and schooled in the modern science of woman's rights, we argue that a polygamic priest—would always find fresh texts and varied matter of stereotyped certainty occurring to his mind, from one end of the week to the other, so that he would rarely have occasion to exchange or borrow sermons for Sabbath services.

In conversation with a Prussian magistrate on the subject of marriage, the distinguished official remarked that it was a customary practise of the inhabitants of Prussia, to marry for eternity instead of the short period of this present life only; but tell it not, lest these Eastern Nations should fall into disrepute for their doctrine of ultra materialism!

The prospect of our continuance in the editorial chair being only for so short a term, we had intended to sit down without a formal bow of introduction. Since President Snow's departure for Atchison we have heard that he ordered his supper to be prepared on the evening of the eighth of December next, at his usual boarding house. In consequence of this short term of absence the patrons of the Luminary will use all charitable indulgence with us, while we take the dropping pen which has been employed hitherto upon the Luminary, with so much wisdom and commendable independence; edifying and warming up the Saints, and checking the brazen impudence of calumniators, and the perverse progress of popular opinion. After performing the the duties of a short mission to the Cherokee Nation, with which we are privileged just now, it shall be our fervent desire and dilligent aim to give a more undivided attention to the interest and usefulness of the Luminary, hoping in the meantime that our excursion to that interesting remnant of the aboriginal inhabitants, will furnish some useful observations and reflections, for the perusal of our readers. We shall endeavor to carry out the sound enlightened policy of President Snow, and always express the truth in love, without fear or favor. We have no sympathy with the policy of a subsidized press, that instead of guiding public opinion, is ever seeking, like a menial cur, to follow its trail. We shall be free to commend good men and good measures, of all parties and creeds, and of all proclivities either north or south, east or west; and also to reprove both men and measures of an opposite character. With us Mormonism holds the carving knife and sits at the head of the table. We love to bear record of the liberal acts and speeches of high-minded statesmen, of whatever party, and pour scathing indignation upon that portion of the press which makes a pass-time of vituperating Mormons and transforming ingenuous tales of long currency, so as to make them belie the Saints. We shall give opportunity to the noble few, dispersed among all trades and parties, to discern who are the true and organized supporters of liberty, equality and virtue. They live in the Vallies of the Mountains, and a portion of them are dispersed abroad in the various States of the Union. We expect to see the first great struggle for liberty, virtue, and a permanent model government, sustained and made triumphant upon this very land, even in these United States.—For this end the Latter-day Saints, are taking their station in the heart of the Republic, where, the enemies of the Constitution and just toleration, if their proclivities are very belligerant, they can find the most substantial sort of gymnastics, near at home, without going to Utah in an Ox Telegraph. We don't like to do all our business at such a long distance off. We sometimes like to come near enough to see the whites of our enemies eyes. The United States is our lawful inheritance with all its commerce, manufactures, literature, science, and agriculture, for universal dominion and usefulness. And we intend to walk into full possession, just as fast as virture, benevolence, intelligence and undying patriotism will constitute a passport to the confidence and esteem of all good men. Twenty-five years experience in this sort of warfare has given the Church a knowledge of the true tactics — just such tactics as have been crowned with continued success and triumphs up to this day.

We have just enjoyed an interview with our distinguished Salt Lake merchants. The enterprising partners, Hooper & Williams are both in this city, only for a day or two. Their last Merchant train for the season is nearly ready for departure. Twenty-five fresh teamsters were called for, and the compliment was made up in a less number of hours. — The Captain's barbarous treatment in Galena, called forth some facetious allusions from his partner; and Elder Snow christened Capt. Hooper's detention in Carcere as an endowment. May the elements favor this late transit over the plains.

President Erastus Snow left for Atchison and the Plains on the Polar Star, Tuesday evening last.

GLEANINGS.

Arrests have recently been made in Buffalo and Cincinnati, of British officials for enlistment of men into the British service, destined for the Crimea.—In the latter city, the British Consul is held to trial under $2,000 bonds.

On the morning of the 17th inst., one of the most destructive fires occurred in this city that has been experienced for several years.

The people of Cincinnati seem to have an inkling for excitement, and to try the strength of parties, General Sargeant, who figured largely at the last election of city officers, and was conspicuous in the knock-down movement, if our memory does us justice, has ordered some companies of Irish and also of Germans to deliver up their arms and become disbanded under the pretext of disobedience. The exponents of the native and foreign parties in that city continue to cherish the recollection of old variances and wrankling animosities. Better be peaceable; both parties are about equally strong, which is equivalent to the confession that each party is emphatically weak!

The Convention at Lexington, made a show of retaliatory measures against the abolition movements of the Legislatures of Massachusetts, Vermont and Michigan. The Convention was largely attended by the leading dignataries of the State; General Atchison, Doniphan and Gov. King participating in the acts of the session. The following modified resolution was finally passed:

Resolved, That, in view of the acts of the Legislature of the State of Massachusetts and other Northern and Western States, practically nullifying the Constitution of the United States, and the laws of Congress relating to the rendition of fugitive slaves, and in vindication of the Constitution, and for the purpose of preserving the integrity of the American Union, we recommend to the General Assembly of Missouri to pass such retaliatory measures discriminating against the sale of the productions or manufactures of said States within this State, as they may deem proper for the purpose, and that such measures shall be made operative as long as the offensive legislation above referred to continue in the statute books of those States.

Lord Raglan died on the 28th of June 1855, the command of the British forces devolves upon General Simpson.

Correspondence.

Cedar City, May 8, 1855.

Elder E. Snow:—I take my pen to drop you a few lines in haste, to let you know of our prosperity in this part of the vineyard. When I wrote you last we had started our furnace; we ran it some three weeks and was obliged to blow out again for want of fuel to help it on. We also found that the rock we lined the furnace with had melted out below the boshes. We are now repairing it. We have found a kind of rock that proved good in our trial furnace and cupalo, and we think will stand the large furnace. We are making our hot blast pipes but we are hindered for want of help. Every man has turned farmer, and there is so much work on hand that it is dfficult to keep along. We have also put up a small pudling furnace and are making preparations for a trip hammer and rolling mill to make our own wrought iron, as we cannot get it from the plains. I think we are getting things in a shape that we shall go a-head soon and make an engine by the time Coal Creek freezes up We want a lot of files for the fitters up. How we shall obtain them I do not know, as they are scarce in the Valley. Good steel will be much wanted, also steel shovels, but it is too late to have any sent from the States this season. I hope you have succeeded in sending us some goods. Every thing is moving along as well as could be expected. There has been a large quantity of grain put in this season, but much fears are entertained from the grasshoppers that are making their appearance by millions throughout the Valley; but as the Lord reigns I feel perfectly safe, if the Saints will do right, all things will work for their good. We expect President Young and suite here in about a week, and then I am in hopes a new impetus will be given to the Iron Works. Col. Steptoe and company have left for California. All is quiet as far as I hear in Utah. My family are all enjoying good health and send their best respects to you.

With kind love I remain yours truly,

I. C. HAIGHT.

G. S. L. City, Utah, April 27th, 1855.

To the Editor of the Luminary:

The California mail arrived here yesterday, bringing us a single paper, viz. the Mormon, with the appearance of which we are much pleased. We would be much gratified if the Eastern mail service was continued so that the rays of the Luminary may gladden our anxious eyes; but we must wait till the parental care of Uncle Sam over our new and weak Territory shall see proper to feel after us.

The weather is very fine but dry; and unless the heavens give rain soon, the farmers will have to commence irrigating.

The young grasshoppers are beginning to be very hard upon us, and threaten destruction to the crops.

The Northern settlements are now enjoying a visit from Presidents Young and Kimball.

Elder Lorenzo Snow has gone to Box Elder to make a farm, and build a mill. He is accompanied by about twenty-five families in addition to the present settlement.

The Presidency intend to visit the Southern settlements during the month of May.

The Indians have elected Arrapeen their Chief in the place of Walker; and they evince a disposition to be quiet and peacable.

The gates are hung on the Temple wall, so as to entirely close up the square during the night.

The new Council House is now finished, and is a very convenient building.

The Iron Works in Iron county are in successful operation, the large furnace is turning out seventeen hundred pounds of good iron every twenty-four hours.

A company are about building a Fort at Paragona in Iron county; they made a commencement some two years ago, but abandoned it in consequence of the Indian War.

An attempt is about to be made to form a settlement in the Vegas on the South route to California; a company is organized, and will start in a few days.

There is a time of general health throughout the Territory.

We have about twenty heavy teams and waggons engaged in hauling rock for the Temple, and the canal from Big Cottonwood Kanyon intended to bring the granite for the walls is in progress, Surveyor Fox having taken a level for it. A beautiful row of trees has been planted around the Temple Square.

Lieut. Mowry takes a detachment of U. S. troops by the South route to California; report says they are to be stationed at Fort Yuma, on the Colorado. Another detachment is going to California by the North route.

Elder Hyde intends to start in about ten days for Carson Valley, accompanied by A. J. Stewart, Surveyor, and some dozen others whose names I do not know.

The President's new house is rapidly progressing. President Brigham Young has transferred his property to the Trustee in Trust to the amount of $199,625. Many others are following his example.

The Deseret Theological Institution held its first public meeting on Wednesday evening last the 25th inst. President Young delivered the opening address which occupied about an hour.

Yours faithfully, GEO. A. SMITH.

For the Luminary.

LETTER FROM ELDER JAMES CASE.

Springfield, Ills., July 4, 1855.

To President Erastus Snow:

Knowing that you love to hear from the Elders, I take this opportunity to write you a few lines. You see I am still here in Springfield. I have made my calculations a number of times to leave but some unexpected event would transpire to stop me; but I have not been still, I have been breaking into the ranks of the Methodist church in this place as well as among the people of the world.—Last Sabbath I organized a Branch here, and on Tuesday I baptized a good Methodist sister, which made quite a stir in the flock of the church of the Devil, and caused his members to inven every base lie, and cursed newspaper story, to stop her from being baptized; but she with a bold and determined mind was willing to be buried with Christ by baptism, that she might rise in newness of life, and live with the people of God. The gathering spirit she caught before she was baptized—her face is set Zionward. Yesterday I had a talk with her class leader, he told me if it was not for his family, he would go to the valley, to take up his abode with the Mormons, they are classed among the Mormon eaters. There are others that have promised, to be baptized, quite a number are believing. I think if I am permitted to return home next year, I should get a goodly number from this as well as other places where I have been, for I am determined to hunt up, dig up, and scare up not only the old Saints that have run well awhile but have got hindered; but I will by the help of God, break into the flocks of the hirelings, and get all I can to go with me to the valleys of Ephraim, to partake of all the blessings that God has in store for those that love and keep his commandments. The salvation of the honest in heart is what I am in for all of the time and nothing else. It does me good to hear from my brethren in their missions, and especially from my sweet mountain home, through your valuable paper, the Luminary. The Lord has blest my labors and my administration, thus far, to him be all the praise and glory.

I expect to leave for Peoria and other places as your council has directed and the spirit may direct, next Monday. I leave brother Thomas Jackson here to take charge of the Saints and gather in what he can into the fold. He has got into a shop here. I think he will do well, he is beloved by all who have heard him preach. The Saints here are making every effort they can to sell and create means for an outfit for Utah next year. The Lord may bless them is prayer. Even so, Amen.

With sentiments of high respects, I remain your brother in the new and evelasting covanant.

JAMES CASE.

Traditions—Dress—Manners and customs of the people—Appearance of the country—Movements of Elders, &c.

Calcutta, Nov. 5th, 1854.

President J. M. Grant—Dear Brother:—Seven months have elapsed since my last communication to our much beloved brother and President Willard Richards, deceased; and as I learn that you have succeeded him in office, I shall continue my correspondence with you, and once more enter the regions of description, relative to matters in the East. I desired to inform you of the progress of affairs with us some months ago; but the unsettled state of our prospects was such that I could not do so with any certainty. I have now just arrived from Burmah, where I have been for the last two months. Not being able to learn satisfactorily, the situation of matters there, I rather hurriedly came to the conclusion to go and see for myself.

I will say that I am well, and have been so, since I left here; though much exposed by sea and land. The ostensible reasons for my going to Burmah were partially, for the purpose of ascertaining the true situation of the people called "Kerrens," an account of which was forwarded to you by brother Luddington, besides many others coming from the same source, viz: the Missionary Baptists, have induced me to enquire into their situation, and character. And besides, my soul is sick of trying the people of Hindostan, and I felt as though I could ransack the furthest corner of the earth, to find a people that would believe our testimony, and obey the gospel. But when I found the people called "Kerrens," they were in many respects like all other Asiatics; laboring under the accumulated traditions of several thousand years, which are so strongly interwoven with their very existence, that it seems a thing almost impossible to make any inroads upon them, or raise their narrow minds, to the idea that there is a God besides theirs, who is in possession of knowledge and power. They suppose that we know nothing of the God whom we serve, only by fabulous legends, similar to their own.

The Burmahs I must say, as a people are far in advance of the Bengalies; they don't manifest that crouching, crawling, servile spirit, which the Hindoos possess. Besides, they are much fairer in complexion than the large majority of Hindoos; and in their features, they are another mould altogether. There is a slight resemblance to be traced in their out-lines, between them and the Malays; but they more strongly resemble the inhabitants of Siam, Cochin-China, and the Celestial Empire. These three are more or less scattered all through the Burman Empire, and can only be told from them by their dress, and sometimes by the mode of worship, but not always, for I have seen them and the Burmas both worshiping at the same time and place. From the great similarity in their language, and many of their traditions, I strongly incline to the opinion that they have sprung from the same Tartar origin.

In statue, the Burmahs are not more than five feet eight or nine inches, the tallest of them, and have very peculiar habits prevailing amongst them, one of which is, they will not take animal life, or kill anything for their own use at all, they do however, catch and eat fish; this is the only animal food which they make use of, except the animal should die, when they would have no scruples in eating it, it matters not what the disease might have been; this as a matter of course, makes the most part of their diet vegetable, in which may be included the leaves of trees, and jungle fruit; the latter I am told is very abundant during its season. They also make a free use of narcotics, such as opium; tobacco, and betel-nut; they are the most inveterate smokers I have ever seen; children, before they are weaned from the breast, often commence the use of the cigar.

The Burmahs cultivate the earth but to a limited extent. Their principal production is rice; but I am told in the upper parts of the country, about Ava, that some wheat is raised, of an interior quality; but it cannot be to any great extent. They live in poor miserable hovels, made of bamboo, and thatched with grass. They are set upon posts a few fee above the ground, and are often set over a stinking pond of water, where all the filth from the house can drop through the floor, which is left open for that purpose, and the foul effluvia which arises from the stinking cesspools is almost beyond endurance to a half civilized nose. Their wearing apparel, and everything which they use, is purely domestic, and there is no such thing as caste among them. You can find a loom in almost every house, and the cloth which they manufacture much resembles French Ginghams, or Scotch Plaid, and is very strong and serviceable. There are also large quantities of silk manufactured, but I did not see any of them at work, it is generally of a course quality, but very serviceable, and strong. For common apparel, the men wear a single piece of cloth around the loins, and a pugrah (cloth) around the head; they wear their hair long, and never shave; they pluck out their eyebrows. This is their every-day appearance.

The women are very singular in their costume; their dress consists of a single piece of cloth, which is nearly square, and a little more than reaches round them, with the open part in front; they draw the upper edge tightly around them, and the lower edge is hanging a little below the knees, after it is sufficiently tight, the outside corner is tucked under; this as a natural consequence, leaves the garment nearly all open before, and every time the wind blows, their whole person is exposed. They do not seem to mind anything about it, and cannot be prevailed upon to change their mode of dress. The women are much superior to the men, and as a general thing, are much fairer in complexion, and of a fine carriage, and very kind, civil, and courteous. There is none of that shy, sneaking, affected timidity, that characterizes the women of Bengal; they do all of the work in the house, and out of doors as we call it, but it is all out of doors to them, for they have no doors to their houses; they also do all of the buying and selling. The men are a very lazy, idle set. The Burmahs believe in and practice a plurality of wives extensively, and I must say, that there is the least immorality, and licentious habits, practiced amongst them of any people that I have ever seen, except the Saints. Adultery is punished by the death of the man, to be executed by the husband or friend of the woman; and they without any exceptions, far excel any nation in the East, for morality, and virtue; and such a thing as a public prostitute is not known amongst them; they are only to be found upon the track of Her Majesty's Army. With the march of civilization, and the enlightened etiquette of the Anglo-Saxon race, follows crime in all its horrid forms, licentiousness and treachery are in the front rank; and the condition of the natives in this respect, retrogades with the advance of British rule.

Tradition says concerning the dress of the women, that about one hundred and fifty years ago, the nation were so sunken in vice and wickedness, that they were about to become extinct, in consequence of a national evil, which prevailed to an alarming degree, which was the crime of Sodomy. The then reigning king and queen, enforced upon the females of the nation by decree, the kind of dress which I have already described, the queen herself setting the pattern first, then enjoined upon all others, with the hope of reclaiming the men, by the exposure of their persons, which it appears has had a salutary effect. The Kerrens are somewhat different from the Burmahs in personal appearance; they are more of a stalwart, hard-fisted race, and have long been oppressed by the Burmahs; many of them are much lighter complexioned than the Burmahs, the women in particular; they also dress different; they have not such uncomely fashions as the Burmahs. Their language is also different, and I think them a very good people for Asiatics. But their traditions, like all the rest, are the predominent and ruling features of the people. From what I heard I felt very anxious to establish the gospel amongst them; my mind was full of hope, and buoyant with anticipations, that the Lord had a people among them. Such were my feelings of them, from the best information that I could get.

At Rangoon I saw a few who belonged to the Missionary Station in that place; but this was not satisfactory; I wished to see them in their native villages, where they were untaught, and uncontaminated by the pernicious influences of missionary priestcraft which has money for its end, and beginning, and is incompetant to correct its own errors, much less to enlighten the benighted minds of the so called heathen. Most of the Kerrens speak the Burmese language. Brother Savage also speaks that language well. We accordingly began to make preparations for a trip amongst them. I first tried to obtain some conveyance by land, but I soon learned that in consequence of the incessant rains which prevail here six months in the year, that the road was not passable for anything except an amphibious animal. I am told that the country is filled with deep nullacks (ravines) and broad tracts of low land, which were most likely to be covered with water at this season. We then came to the conclusion to hire a boat, which we did, for four English shillings per day; after providing ourselves with the needful for the trip, we set off. The first day found us far beyond the reach of any except natives, who looked like the inhabitants of Neptune, that had just emerged from the watery element, a strange sight to American eyes! a whole village setting upon posts, from eight to ten feet above the surface of the water, with a countless number of hogs, dogs, and fowls, living upon the same platform. It brought to my mind in full force, the old adage, "that one half of the world does not know how the other half lives." The only means of conveyance from one house to another is by boats which every family is in possession of. The entire face of the country as far as the eye can reach is submerged in water, ranging from two to five feet in depth. There is a kind of water weed, and a course cane grass, which grows up from the earth, and floats upon the surface of the water, and forms a kind of a floating surface some six or eight inches thick, and upon this grows a short kind of grass, which makes its general appearance that of a continuous plain. All through this floating surface are channels, from six to ten feet in width, where they travel with the boats, and are to the natives what a public high road is to us, and afford thorough fare to and from the various market places. This district of country is chiefly settled by the Kerrens, who have come down from the hills for the purpose of raising rice, to which this country is particularly adapted. There are from fifteen to thirty houses in a village, and the villages occupy every few miles. There are often two and three families in a house; they are a very hospitable and kind people, but have no literary attainments.

As to their religious views, I did not find them as represented by the missionaries. They do not worship the "Great Spirit," as it has been stated; very many of them are "Buddhists," and those that are not, do not worship anything. Brother Savage told them who we were, and the nature of our message, but they could not understand it at all; they have no correct idea of God, and the whole affair was a new train of thought, and such a burst of new ideas upon their contracted minds that they had not the slightest conception of what we were talking about. They are governed by tradition, and instinct. All one generation knows of another is by tradition, and it is more firmly riveted upon the minds of this people than of those in any other country. We visited them from village to village, for some days, and what we saw in the first we saw in the last; they were all alike. We visited in one village, some who had been converted to christianity by the American Baptists. We asked them if they believed in God, and in his Son, Jesus Christ, and in the Holy Ghost; to which they answered yes. The fruits of their profession were not to be seen; I could not discern any change in them more than in those that made no profession; and I could not see that their condition was in the slightest manner bettered. It is true, they acknowledged that they believed in God, but that is all there was of it. It is far worse than it is with the Utah Indians; ask them if they believe in God, and they will say yes, every time, and have some very good traditions.

Lest I should be tedious in my details, I will say in a word, that to me there appears no chance for the old stock ever being brought to a knowledge of the truth. To commence with the young ones is the only hope, and that is like beginning with the raw material, or acting upon the native element, which perhaps may be brought into subjection in another generation, provided they are emigrated, which they are averse to. I do not think it can be done effectually in this country, at least not until the reign of righteousness is fully entered in, then perhaps will be their day of grace.

I found in Rangoon a small branch of the Church in a flourishing condition, under the guidence of Elders Willis and McCune, which now numbers about twenty-two. I stopped a short time with them, during which time I delivered two courses of lectures nightly; there were four added to the Church during my stay. Brother Levi Savage jr. will remain at this place, and labor with the Burmahs, and if possible obtain a footing amongst them; he has already spent about one year amongst them; but he has not been able to make any converts yet. I frankly confess that I have no faith in their obeying the gospel, until a different spirit prevails from the one which they are in possession of at present. Brother Willis embarked for the valley, via Panang and Singapoore, on the 9th of Sept. He arrived safely at Singapoore on the 8th of Oct. and found brother Luddington who had returned from Siam some three weeks previous, and was then lecturing in Singapoore, but expected to leave in a day or two, for Mallacca. There being no opportunity of shipping for America for some months to come, brother Willis concluded to ship for England, which he did about the 15th of Oct., on the Gazelle, Capt. Leslie, bound for Liverpool.

In Calcutta matters remain much as they were six months ago; brother Woolley has been here for some months past. Brother Fotheringham is near Cuttack, and brother Meik is at Cuttack; he says, there is some hopes of adding a few in that place. The prospects for our emigration this cold weather, are not very flattering at present; I however shall do my best to accomplish something in that way; I trust in the Lord that I may be able to gather a few. Brother Woolley had embarked for the United States; he sailed on the first of Nov., on board the John Gilpin bound for Boston. I am now alone in this place, and expect to be for some time yet to come.

Brothers Woolley and Fotheringham have faithfully warned the inhabitants of the north western provinces of India, and in every place the people have manifested the most perfect indifference, and there has not been for some time past enough to occupy the attention of one Elder. Brother Robert Owens sailed for the valley via Australia, in July last. Brother Ballantyne sailed for England the last of the same month. Brother Skelton remains at Madras, still trying to do them some good; no accession to our numbers. Brother Hugh Findley at Belgium, has baptized a few during the summer, amidst much opposition. The military authorities of India, will have much to answer for; they have opposed our Elders in every station where they have attempted to preach the gospel, and in some instances, when we had found those that were favorably inclined towards us, as soon as the officers heard of it, they would commence a regular system of oppression against them, until they would break their spirit, and make them cower before them, for their prosperity depends upon the approval of their superior.

Brother Leonard and Musser are in the Scinde country where they have been since last March; they have baptized two; prospects dull. I cannot tell when I shall be able to leave here. Remember me kindly to Prests. Young and Kimball, and may they live long to bless the people of God, and build up Zion, is my prayer in the name of Jesus; and may His choicest blessings rest upon you, in connection with them. I wish to be remembered to all who "express a wish or a thought after me," especially to brother Carrington, and those that have sent me the Deseret News.

With much love to yourself and family, I remain your affectionate brother in the gospel,

N. V. JONES.

SALLY SLY AND JANE McKEARN.

HUMOROUS REPORT ON BUTTER.

We copy the following from the Farmers' Monthly Visitor. There is a good moral conveyed in it, told with a rich vein of humor that is capital. It is from the pen of S. D. Little, of the Merrimac (N. H.) Agricultural Society.

The benificence of the Creator is manifested in so disposing our tastes, and so adapting these to the varieties with which we are surrounded, as to make a scene of enjoyment instead of a burden. It might have been that neccessary food would have been noisome as it is sometimes to the deceased stomach, had it not have pleased the Creator to have ordered it otherwise. Bread is the staff of life, but butter is given to make it slip down easier, and with a better relish. But it depends something on who makes the butter, whether it answers this purpose. Butter made in Joe Bunker's house, needs to be eaten in the dark; then to make it pass well, one or two other senses should be laid aside—while that made by his brother may be eaten in the full blaze of noon; you would wish that your neck was as long again, that you might have the pleasurable sensation of swallowing prolonged. Perhaps a bit of history of their better halves will explain the whole matter.

Joe's wife was Sally Sly—when a small girl she was sly—she would not half wash the milk pail, but sly it away and let it sour. She was sly at school and did not half get her lessons, but would have her book in sight when reciting; but as she grew older she learned that to get well married, she must appear well, and so she bent all her cunning to get a superficial education in every thing, from roasting a potatoe to playing the piano. Poor Joe fell in love with her, and "love has no eyes," so he married her. But soon after he entered on housekeeping, his eyesight came, and he saw his fix, that it was "for better or worse," and he thought it was all for worse. Like a true philosopher, he concluded to endure what he could not avoid or cure, and got along tolerably well, only when he came to her butter, for his mother was a real butter maker. Every time he saw or tasted of Sally's butter he felt the horrors. Her manner of making butter is somewhat as follows:

She thinks it of no consequence whether the milk pail is sweet or sour—sets the milk in a warm room because it is easier than to go into the cellar, and if some dirt should blow into the pans she thinks every man must "eat a peck of dirt," and in no place will it slip down easier than in butter—she lets the cream pots be open, and when she churns forgets the poke; leaves the cream at blood heat that it may come quick. When she takes it out of the churn, she picks out the bodies of all flies and spiders—the legs and wings are so small they can be swallowed.—She works out half the buttermilk and sets it away in a warm place for use. Poor Joe has seen so much of this kind that he declares butter does not agree with his health, and will not taste it. Yet his wife wonders why he does not try it, and marvels that he does not keep a dairy and make butter for market.

Jonathan was a younger brother of Joe, and he had occasion to eat at his prother's enough to know why he did not eat butter; and he declared he never would marry without knowing what his bread would be buttered with. Following the bent of his fancy, he made several attempts at matrimony, and Julia Jumper almost caught him—for there was always good butter on the table for tea, but he was determined to know who made it. On inquiry, she says: "La me! mother makes the butter; I take lessons on the piano."

"Well," says Jonathan, "I want a wife that takes lessons on the churn—I shall look further."

After several unsuccessful attempts, and just ready to despair, he started in pursuit of stray cattle before breakfast, and wandered through the forest in the next town, and weary and hungry, called at a decent looking house, and asked for some refreshment, which was most cordially granted, for the family were what are called Scotch Presbyterian, and in hospitality boundless.

Here he found the butter exactly right, though the weather was hot, the butter kept the shape as well as beeswax. He catechised the old lady about her housewifery, for bread was as right as the butter. The old lady said her health was feeble—she could do but little, and Jenny had the whole management. He made some roundabout inquiries concerning Jenny, and heard that she was a hearty black-eyed lass of two and twenty; she had never seen a piano or attended a ball, but knew the assembly's catechism, and could sing Old Hundred to a charm, spin flax and darn stockings, and was then gone to town with butter. He lingered but she was delayed, and when his excuses for staying were exhausted, he started. He could not get the good butter out of his mind, and how it happened, I know not, he soon found his way there again, and the result of his adventure was, he made a wife of Jane McKean. And now one lump of his butter is worth more than Joe's wife would make in a month.—There's no trouble in going to market—the keepers of the genteel boarding houses in the neighboring villages send and take it at the highest market price.

Now the main difference between these two women arises from the manner of training, though there is no differance in general disposition. Old Madam Sally never looked on to see that Sally did up her work right, but suffered her to sly off her work as she chose, and though a good housekeeper herself, was altogether too indulgent, and, like some others, thought more of getting Sally well married, than of making her fit for a wife; while old Madam McKean was determined Jenny should be fit for any man's wife, whether she got married or not. Perhaps, there is no more certain criterion by which to judge of a woman's general character for neatness and good housekeeping, than by the quality of her butter. Find on the farmer's table a good, solid, properly salted, well worked slice of butter, and you need not fear to eat the cakes or hash; but see a splash of half worked butter—salt in lumps, and a sprinkling of hair and flies' legs, you may be sure that if you board there very long, death will not be obliged to wait much for you to finish your peck of dirt.

My advice is to young farmers, to make it a sine qua non in a wife that she makes prime butter, and the young ladies who aspire to be farmers' wives had much better be imperfect in filagree and music, than be deficient in that most important art of making butter, which smooths, not only the sharp corners of crust and crackers, but will smooth asperities of the busband's temper.

FRANCE.

Opening of the French Chambers—Speech of the Emperor.

The following is the speech, delivered by the Emperor of the French on the opening of the Legislative Assembly on the 2d inst.

MESSIEURS LES SENATEURS, MESSIEURS LES DEPUTES: The diplomatic negotiations commenced during the course of our last session already made you foresee that I should be obliged to call you together when they came to a termination. Unhappily the Conferences of Vienna have failed in procuring peace, and I come again to appeal to the patriotism of the country and to your own. Were we wanting in moderation in settling the conditions? I do not fear to examine the question before you.

One year already had passed since the commencement of the war, and already France and England had saved Turkey, gained two battles, forced Russia to evacuate the Principalities, and to exhaust her forces in the defence of the Crimea. We had, moreover, in our favor the adhesion of Austria and the moral approbation of the rest of Europe.

In that situation the Cabinet of Vienna asked us if we would consent to treat upon bases vaguely formulated. Before our successes a refusal on our part seemed natural. Was it not to be supposed, forsooth, that the demands of France and England would increase in proportion to the greatness of the struggle and of the sacrifices already made?

Well, France and England did not turn their advantages to account, or even make the most of the rights given to them by previous treaties, so much had they at heart to facilitate peace and to give an unchallangeable proof of their moderation.

We restricted ourselves to ask, in the interests of Germany, the free navigation of the Danube, and a breakwater against the Russian flood which continually obstructed the mouths of that great river.

We demanded, in the interest of Austria, and of Germany, a better constitution for the Danubian Principalities, that they might serve as a barrier against these repeated invasions of the North.

We demanded, in the interest of humanity and of justice, the same guarantees for the Christians of every confession under the exclusive protection of the Sultan.

In the interests of the Porte, as well as in those of Europe, we demanded that Russia should limit to a reasonable degree, sufficient to shield her against any attack, the number of her ships in the Black Sea, a number of which she could only maintain with an aggressive object.

Well, all these propositions, which I may call magnanimous from their disinterestedness, and which were approved in principle by Austria, by Prussia, and by Russia herself, have evaporated in the Conferences.

Russia, who had consented, in theory, to put an end to her preponderance in the Black Sea, has refused every limitation of her naval forces, and we have still to wait for Austria to fulfill her engagements, which consisted in rendering our treaty of alliance offensive and defensive if the negotiations failed.

Austria, it is true, proposed to us to guarantee with her by treaty the independence of Turkey, and to consider for the future as a casus belli an increase of the number of Russian ships-of-war exceeding that before the commencement of hostilities.

To accept such a proposition was impossible, for it in no manner bound Russia; and, on the contrary, we should apparently have sanctioned her preponderance in the Black Sea by treaty.

The war had to follow its course.

The admirable devotion of the army and navy will I trust, soon lead to a happy result. It is for you to provide me with the means to continue the struggle.

The country has rapidly shown what resoures it has at its command, and the confidence it places in me.

Some months since it offered me 1,700,000f. more than I demanded. A portion of that sum will suffice to maintain the military honor and its rights as a great nation.

I had resolved to go and place myself in the midst of that valiant army, where the presence of the Sovereign could not have failed to produce a happy influence, and a witness of the heroic efforts of our soldiers, I should have been proud to lead them; but serious questions agitated abroad, which have always remained pending, and the nature of circumstances demanded at home new and important measures. It is, therefore, with regret that I abandon the idea.

My Government will propose to you to vote the annual Recruitment Bill. There will be no extraordinary levy, and the bill will take the usual course neccessary for the regularity of the administration of a recruitment bill.

In conclusion, gentlemen, let us pay here, solemnly, a just tribute of praise to those who fight for the country; let us mingle our regrets for those whose loss we have to deplore.

So great an example of unselfishness and constancy will not be given in vain to the world.

Let us not be discouraged by the sacrifices which are neccessary, for, as you are aware, a nation must either abdicate every political character, or, if it possesses the instinct and the will to act conformably to its generous nature, to its historical traditions, to its providential mission, it must learn how to support at times the trials which alone can retemper it, and restore it to the rank which is its due.

Faith in the Almighty, persevdrance in our efforts, and we shall obtain a peace worthy the alliance of two great nations.

A RICH JOKE.

A gentleman played off a rich joke on his better half the other day. Being something of an epicure, he took it into his head that he should like to have a first rate dinner. So he addressed her a note, politely informing her that "a gentleman of her acquaintance, an old and true friend, would dine with her that day." As soon as she received it, all hands went to work to get everything in order. Precisely at twelve o'clock she was prepared to receive her guest. The house was as clean as a new pin—a sumptuous dinner was on the table, and she was arrayed in her best attire. A gentle knock was heard, and she started with a palpitating heart to the door. She thought it must be an old friend—perhaps a brother—from the place whence they once moved. On opening the door she saw her husband with a smiling countenance.

"Why, my dear," says she in an anxious tone, "where is the gentleman of whom you spoke in your note?"

"Why," replied her husband complacently, "here he is."

"You said a gentleman of my acquaintance—an old and true friend, would dine with us to-day."

"Well," said he, good-humoredly, "am I not a gentleman of your acquaintance, an old and true friend?"

"Oh!" she cried, distressingly, "is there nobody but you?"

"No."

"Well, I declare, this is too bad," said his wife, in an angry tone.

The husband laughed immoderately—his better-half said she felt like giving him a tongue-lashing—but finally they sat down cosily together, and for once he had a good dinner without having company.

An illiterate person, who always volunteered to "go round with the hat," but was suspected of sparing his pocket, over-hearing once a hint to that effect, replied: "Other gentlemen puts down what they think proper, and so do I. Charity's a private concern, and what I give is nothing to nobody."

An editor out west has such an antipathy to a new doctrine of spiritualism, that he will no longer have his paper printed in the medium size and objects to its being enveloped in 'wrappers.'

A fool in a high station is like a man on the top of a monument—everything appears small to him he appears small to everybody.

The reason why it succeeds.—THE Mustang Liniment has attained its enormous popularity, and almost universal use, simply because it gives better satisfaction, accomplishes more good, relieves more pain, and heals more wounds and sores than any other preparation ever before offered to the afflicted. Every bottle that is used, speaks for itself—tells its own tale in the relief it gives, and the cure it effects. And then one who has suffered, perhaps, long years with pain, without hope of relief, and finds in this Liniment an almost instantaneous remedy, cannot help but speak in its praise, and recommend it in the best terms to all he sees suffering. It needs no other recommendation than a trial.

On the death of Eliza, our eldest daughter.

(Concluded.)

She joined the camp of Israel, and Commenced her journey o'er the plains. One
Short day's march was scarce performed,
They scarce had spread their tents, and eat
Their evening meal, with thankful hearts,
When lo! a pale-faced visitor began to hover
Round about the tents; and ere the shades
Of night had passed away, his withering
Blight passed through their midst, and Left the mark of sure decay, and death, on Many Saints. The morning sun
Beamed forth his light around the camp,
But naught of mirth was heard, nor joyful
Morning song. All dark—all sad and Dreary was the scene within. The Groans of dying Saints, and shrieks of living
Ones, might now be heard within the tents;
Outside, the hollow sound of pick
And spade—click, click, click,
In place of morning songs of joy, which they were Wont to offer up, as they at other times had done.

All sobs, and shrieks, and groans,
Had changed the scene. O! cruel death,
Thou dreadful monster! Thou enemy
To human happiness and joy. How
Oft thou cheatest the sons and daughters
Of mankind,, of all their happiness and joy,
Laid out for future years
And many years to come. Not so,
Foul monster, canst thou cheat the Saints
Of God, of happiness to come. At best,
'Tis all thy power can do, to seperate
For time, not long, the father, mother,
Sister, brother in the flesh. Thou only
Open[illegible]
Of God, pass though and join their Brethren in the spirit world. There they
But wait and rest a while, the proper time
When they shall come again, and realize
The joys they long anticipated. When they Shall come and reap the joys and happiness
They sowed when here before—and join
To part no more with father, mother, brothers
Sisters, friends, and carry out the mighty
Works, they here on earth begun.

Some twenty-five in Israel's camp
Are numbered with the dead!—the work
Of four short days! Among this number
In the earth is laid our daughter whom
We loved. But eighteen summers
Had passed o'er her head, when shafts
Of cruel death had pierced her vital parts,
And sent her to her temporary rest—the Rest of death! Can it be true? And Has she left us here to mourn her absence?
'Tis true! O! God, thy will be done. Thou
Giv'st—thou tak'st away, and we Will not repine. But for a time we'll Mourn. Our nature's such, that Stoutest hearts sometimes give way, and Force the bitter tears, in copious streams
To flow. Forgive, O! God, our weakness—
Accept our thanks, because we sorrow
Not, without sure hope. But hark!
Methiuks I hear Eliza's mirthful voice
Resounding through the abodes of life
Again! Methinks I hear her voice of melody,
In songs of sweetest tones. I listen!
Methinks I see her pass me in full stature,
And feel the keenest glance of her bright eyes,
And see her smiling face. I start!
I look! Her form has vanished—her
Smile has passed away. The sound
Of her sweet voice is lost in distance—
She is not here. Ah! No. 'Tis all a dream—
A vision of the brain! She's gone from earth.

Awake! arouse my soul
From this sad dream of earth; shake off
Thy sadness, and put the Gospel armor
On. Our rightful sovereigh—Jesus Christ—still lives
And guides the helm. His kingdom,
Now established on the earth, dispenses
To His faithful sons and daughters, through Prophet, Seer, and Revelator, all, and more
Than man can ask—the offspring of obedience.
And shall we then repine, and mourn
When we are blessed with hope
That's sure and certain? That we, and all
Shall meet again, who faithful are, to enjoy
Eternal life with those we love, and Reign with Christ in an inheritance
That is eternal, to part no more forever.

Enough! My soul much comfort
Finds, in all these things. The spirit of my God, sheds life throughout my soul—
A positive assurance, no man can give,
Nor take away. And I can say, with
All the hope and consolation of a Saint
Of God, 'tis right!
Thy will O, God, be done.

St. Louis, July 2, 1855. JOHN A. JOST.

Preparations for Continuing the War.

The Washington National Intelligencer, of the 9th, publishes the following private letter from a gentleman in France to his friend in Washington City:

Paris, June 21, 1855.—The telegraphic advices from Sebastopol as regards the attempt at assault on the 18th, and the decided and dreadful repulse, created a great sensation here. The details are awaited with the most intense anxiety, particularly as to the extent of the loss, of which as yet we have no information, but which doubtless has been most dreadfully severe, and the worst anticipations are entertained. I will not say that this repulse renders more certain the final capture of Sebastopol, (for to take it may be an impossibility,) but it certainly assures a more extensive and determined effort on the part of the Allies to effect that object; for the pride both of England and France will now be still more deeply involved in the issue, and the most gigantic efforts will be made to accomplish the desired end. It is really horrible to think of the destruction of human life which has already taken place, and the worst is not yet.

The French army of reserve, as it was called, that was near Constantinople, has been forwarded to Sebastopol, but a new army of reserve will be sent immediately from France, consisting of 45,000 to 50,000 men, which will be entrenched near Constantinople, and will not be sent to Sebastopol except in case of great necessity. The full force before that place will be kept up by other troops which will be forwarded direct from Toulon, Marseilles and Algeria. Arrangements are also making and will no doubt be promptly concluded for the embarkation of another contingent of 15,000 Sardinian troops.

To show how great are the exertions of Russia, it is now said that they have, by the most incredible exertions, so far advanced with a railroad from Moscow to Perekop that it will be completed and in full operation in the Autumn. This will enable them to pour into the Crimea soldiers and supplies without limit. The French are so well aware of this that they are fortifying Kamiesch and will render it the strongest fortress in Europe, and sooner or later they will probably retire to it. They are also strongly fortifying Varna, and everything indicates that they do not intend to quit Constantinople, where they are constructing buildings on the most extensive scale and of very massive nature, which will require years to complete. These structures are intended for defence and protection, as well as for accommodations for troops and material. The French will take the lion's share by holding the European coast of Turkey, while the English may take the Asiatic side of the Bosphorus. England will hereafter regret the alliance with France, as it has not only estranged her from the other great European powers, but has and will injure her greatly in other ways.

All agree that the Turks are fully convinced that they never again will be masters of "Stamboul," as they call the City of Constantine. They would decidedly prefer the Russians as rulers, and those returning thence say they will not be at all surprised if in the course of a year the Turks should be on the side of Russia, and the Allies forced to entrench themselves. The stronghold of the latter will be at Constantinople, which being open to them on the sea, could never be taken, nor could Kamiesch, and perhaps one or two other points on the Black Sea, which would in like manner be strongly fortified and held by them. Strange results may grow out of this unnatural alliance of France and England with the bitter and eternal enemy of the Christian religion. Every step of it makes it more [illegible] not to say unjust, under the new system of destroying defenceless trading towns and private property. Of the vessels captured in the Black Sea, nine out of ten belong to the Greeks of Constantinople, Smyrna, or Greece proper and the Islands. This destruction of Greek property only serves to increase the hatred of that ignorant, fanatical and vilely revengeful people. They (the Greeks) are to a man in favor of the Russians. Some French troops, with their officers, recently went in an American clipper from Constantinople, and a colonel told the Captain that while they were encamped one hundred of his men were taken sick and forty of them died, and that he had no doubt the water had been poisoned by the Greeks. One day they seized on three Greeks in the camp, and on searching them found poison concealed in their clothes, and they were immediately shot.

The French officers assure me that the engineers in the Russian army are equal to any in Europe.—Their army in the Crimea is composed of their finest troops and fight with great skill and desperation.—Their riflemen are equal to the "Chasseurs de Vincennes," and are "dead shots," as all admit.

The sufferings of the Allies have recommenced. There is even a want of water, and under a burning sun to which they are exposed, the cholera has reappeared, and several distinguished officers have died of it. Typhus and other fevers, with dysentery, are all very prevalent, and othalmia is also making progress among them. They say the same evils exist among the Russians, but I should doubt very much if any thing like the same extent, as the Russians are by no means so much exposed, and particularly in the city, where they have fine, comfortable quarters, and are well fed and properly clothed. Even if their field service is equally severe and exposed as that of the Allies, the Russians having free access between their outside camp and the city, can relieve their different divisions, and give them alternately camp and garrison duty, and thus allow them to rest and recruit. Under the most favorable circumstances, however, too daily waste of life from exposure and fatigue, on both sides, exclusive of the loss in battle, must be very great.

In battle, however, the loss of life is also very great. On the 22d and 23d May, the Allies suffered severely. A body of 3,000 of the Imperial Guard that were sent to support a retreating division were twice obliged to fall back; but on the third advance they succeeded, with a loss of 850 men hors du combat. It is even said that the Zouaves fired upon them, as there is a bitter hatred between those two corps, for the reason, as the Zouaves pretend, that in a former battle they were abandoned by the Guards, and were in consequence cut to pieces by the Russians. The Zouaves are also jealous, as the Guard has various advantages and a higher position, being considered as the elite of the army.—The Zouaves and the Scotch troops fraternize in a most wonderful manner. In the fighting of the 7th inst. the French acknowledge 4,000 men hors du combat. Private letters state that the loss was even greater than that. The sudden change in sending off more troops, material, &c., indicates that the loss must have been very great.

In my last I mentioned various American clippers that were embarking troops, material, &c., since which most of them have sailed from Toulon and Marseilles. The Great Republic was towed by the Navarino, of 100 guns, a screw three decker; the Queen of Clippers by the steam frigate Eldorado.—The Monarch of the Sea, the Gauntlet, the Nonpareil, and the Alleghanian, all went under their own canvas. The above six vessels took on the aggregate 1900 horses, 2800 troops, and more than 10,000 tons of military stores and supplies, beside what was on board the two ships of war, both of which were loaded down with similar articles. One of the above vessels had on board 500 tons of bombs, and an officer connected with that branch of the service told me that within the last sixty days more than 8000 tons of missiles (bomb-shells, balls, &c.) had been shipped to the Crimea. All this is exclusive of 500,000 bomb-shells that had been previously sent. I asked whence came all these missiles for the destruction of human life, and was answered, "From the arsenals; not an item manufactured since the war."

The saying of Lucullus, "poor is that house where plenty has not stores that miss the master's eye," has been celebrated for nineteen centuries, but what will be said of the stores in the house of Napoleon III?

I dread to think what may be the nature of this war of giants, but fear it will be most disastrous for the human race, and particularly for the lives, happiness and property of the people of those nations already engaged in it, and for those that may be drawn into the horrible maelstrom.

Every good scholar is not a good schoolmaster.

Mortality and Public Health of England.

A blue book of 250 pages, contains the report of the Select Committee on Public Health and Nuisance Removal Amendment Bill. From the evidence of Dr. Farr, who is at the head of the statistical department of the General Register office, we gather that among the working men of London, Birmingham and Manchester, the mortality is probably double what it is in the healthy districts whereby they are surrounded, the mortality of males in Manchester having been from 1838 to 1844, 37 in 1,000, and the mean life-time 24-2 years, whereas Dr. Farr holds that the natural rate of mortality should not exceed 17 in 1,000. The average mortality in England is 23 in 1,000. "The town population of Great Britain," says Dr. Farr, "is now above 10,000,000, and the mortality is greater in proportion to the whole population than it was in 1821 or 1831. It is found that recruits for the army from the towns are much less vigorous than those taken from the rural districts. The average mortality in the metropolis is 25 in 1,000. It has been shown that the mortality in London is 24 to 25 in 1,000; in Berlin it is the same; in Turin it is 26 in 1,000; in Paris 28 in 1,000; in Genoa 31 in 1,000; in Lyons 33 in 1,000; in Hamburg 36 in 1,000; in Moscow 37 in 1,000; in St. Petersburg 41 in 1,000; in Stockholm 39 in 1,000, and in Vienna 49 in 1,000. As a specimen of the state of society in the Austrian capital, it may be stated that more than half the deaths there occur in the hospitals and asylums, and that more than half the children are illegitimate, 3,525 having died in the foundling hospitals in a single year. The mortality of the different countries is as follows: In England 23 in 1,000; in Denmark the same; in Holland 24 in 1,000; in France 23-5 in 1,000; in Sweden 24 in 1,000; in Prussia 28 in 1,000; in Sardinia 30 in 1,000; in Austria 31 in 1,000; and in Russia 36 in 1,000.

THE MISCREANT RUSS.

An infamous act was perpetrated by the military authorities at the Russian Baltic port of Hango on the 26th of May. On that day, a British boat, carrying a flag of truce, was ordered to convey into port and return to their countrymen seven Russian [Finnish] prisoners, who had been captured by a British cruiser. The boat entered the port, and, as she approached the quay, or jetty, displayed her white flag for half an hour before she reached land. A body of Russian soldiers, full armed, appeared at the jetty before the boat touched the shore. The officers and prisoners having landed, the officer in command of the boat, waving his white flag, explained the object of his visit to be the return of Russian captives. A Finnish officer on board the same boat took the flag, and also, in Finnish and English, repeated the explanation. To all this, the Russian officer, who spoke both Finnish and English, replied that he cared not for the flag of truce, and that he would show their enemies how the Russians could fight. Thereupon, these barbarians commenced firing on those who bore the flag of truce, killing every man of the party who had landed, including their own countrymen, the restored Fins! They then fired into the boat several times, until they supposed they had killed all the sailors. They then took possession of the boat, on which they found only two men alive. One of these poor fellows, who was wounded, was dragged ashore and bayoneted on the jetty! The other, after being roughly handled, was, by some strange fate, suffered to live. And he was the only survivor out of twenty-three persons!

The inhuman baseness and barbarity of this act have hardly a parallel in the annals of civilized warfare. But they are perfectly in keeping with the best authenticated accounts of Russian barbarity.

'I Say, stranger,' said a cottage urchin in the neighborhood of Montreal, Canada, to a Yankee pedlar, 'don't whistle that dog away.'

'Why, he aint no use, no how—he's too homely.'

'Oh, but he saves heaps of work.'

'How?'

'Why, he licks the plates and dishes clean, so that we wouldn't part with him no how; for our new dog aint got used to mustard yet.'

A Kentucky lawyer thus appealed to a jury: 'The thunders rolled, the moon stared, the sky was completely wedded, gentlemen of the jury, with darkling darkness on that night; and yet this ere man did with malice aforethought steal forth into the quiet shades of a lone farmer's house, and there maliciously pizened his yaller dog! Convict him, and the prayers of the nation is yours!'

Strike the iron while it is hot.

M'CLEAN'S VOLCANIC OIL LINIMENT is truly a celebrated remedy, and has done more to alleviate human suffering than any other remedy ever discovered.

One or two applications will relieve the most severe pain, bruise or sprain.

Two bottles will cleanse, purify, and heal the foulest ulcer or sore, and it will heal the most severe burn or scald without a scar.

Every family should have a supply constantly on hand, for use in time of need.

Read the following extract of a letter, which is incontestable proof of its wonderful efficacy:

A BLIND MAN RESTORED TO SIGHT.

J. H. McLean—Dear Sir: * * * I have been suffering for four years with rheumatic sore eyes, being at times altogether blind. I procured the advice of several physicians, but none of them could do me any good. By the advice of a friend I applied your "Volcanic Oil Liniment," according to the directions around the bottle, and it has cured me permanently. I have used it since for bruises, pains, &c., and it has always given immediate relief. I live on the main road near Farmington.

Yours, respectfully, JOHN H. ALLERD.

Jefferson county, Mo.

For horses it is far superior to any other remedy for curing lameness, bruises, cuts, old sores, swellings, &c.

We say, then, to all who may be suffering from external diseases, call at once and get a supply. Thousands of bottles are sold (and used) daily, and we have never heard of a case where it has failed in giving relief when properly applied.

MEDICINE FOR THE BILLION!

A Certain Remedy for all Diseases of

MAN OR ANIMALS,

Requiring an External Application.

Warranted in every Case for which it is Recommended!

THE MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT!

Unlike all other popular medicines, it is used by many prominent members of the faculty, and many of the public Hospitals. Their prejudices have yielded to indisputable and incontrovertible demonstrations of cures performed where their remedies had failed.

It has cured more cases of

RHEUMATISM

than any other medicine ever used. Its efficacy in this terrible disease is acknowledged by all who have used it. It not only cures the complaint, but appears to give a vigor and elasticity to the limbs, before unknown, thus performing a double office.

A FEW TESTIMONIALS.

Path Finder Office, May 11, 1854.

G. W. Westbrook:—

Please send me by the bearer three large bottles of your Mexican Mustang Liniment, as I wish to take it up to my place in Vermont, not thinking it advisable to do without it. I have used it in my family and on my horses, and have found it invaluable. Yours,

J. T. WHITNEY.

Elizabethtown, Tenn., May 25, 1855.

Mr. G. W. Westbrook:—

Dear Sir—It affords me much pleasure in saying to you that the Mexican Mustang Liniment outsells any medicine that I have ever had for sale, and comes nearer doing what it promises to do. Send me another supply, as I am nearly out. Yours respectfully,

JOHN SINGLETRAY, P. M.

Philadelphia, June 11, 1854.

Mr. G. W. Westbrook:

Sir—My son was afflicted with a swelling upon the knee joint, which confined him to the house. I had a doctor attending him for some time, but he did not do him any good. One of my neighbors told me to use the Mustang Liniment. I asked the doctor if I could do so, and he told me he thought I could not do better.

I procured one bottle, and in about a week he was able to go out.

I can safely recommend it to the afflicted.

Respectfully yours, MRS. BENNETT.

W. S. Ladd & Co., of Portland, Oregon, writes that there is an immense demand for the Mexican Mustang Liniment in that country, and orders forty gross to be shipped by Golden Gate, that sails in a few days from New York.

Park & White of San Francisco, California, order 100 gross, to be forwarded by first clipper for that port.

Port au Prince, Hayti, Jan. 16th, 1854.

I had the pleasure to receive invoice and boxes Mexican Mustang Liniment per Croton, and have no doubt it will have a brisk sale on the island.

George Rackster.

To give health, strength and elacity to the limbs, there is nothing can equal in effect, the

MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT.

FARMERS AND LIVERY STABLE KEEPERS

have need it for the following diseases with extraordinary success, certifying invariably to the efficacy of the Liniment, and the truthfulness of our assertions in its behalf:

Spavin, Splint, Ring-bone, Fistula, Wind Galls, Big Head, Bruises, Strains, String-halt, Scratches, Cracked Heels, Sweeny, Saddle, Collar, or Harness Galls, Hard Lumps or Tumor, Film, or other diseases of the Eye, Poll-Evil, &c.

The small sizes retail for 25 cents per bottle;
The medium size retail for 50 cents per bottle;
The large sizes retail for one dollar per bottle.
The medium holds three times as much as the small;
The Large holds nearly three times as much as the medium,
Therefore the large bottles are the cheapest.

MINUTES

Of the General Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, convened in the Tabernacle, Great Salt Lake City, commencing Friday, April 6, 1855, at 10 A. M.

President Brigham Young presiding.

In the stand, Presidents B. Young, H. C. Kimball, J. M. Grant.

Of the Twelve Apostles: O. Hyde, O. Pratt, W. Woodruff, G. A. Smith, E. T. Benson, C. C. Rich, L. Snow.

Seventies: Joseph Young, Z. Pulsipher, A. P. Rockwood, H. Herriman, L. Hancock, H. S. Eldredge.

High Priests' Quorum: David Pettegrew.

Presiding Bishop: Edward Hunter.

Presidency of the Stake: David Fullmer, Thomas Rhoads, P. H. Young.

Clerk of Conference: Thomas Bullock.

Reporters: George D. Watt, John V. Long.

Conference called to order by Elder Hyde. Tabernacle crowded.

Choir sung a hymn. Prayer by Ezra T. Benson. Choir chanted, "Hosanna in the highest."

President Brigham Young said that twenty-five years ago to-day, the Prophet Joseph Smith organized this Church with six members, reviewed the rise, building up, and marvellous increase of the Church, and gave much useful instruction, all of which will be found in the full report.

Choir chanted a psalm. Benediction by President J. M. Grant.

2 P. M. Singing. Prayer by C. C. Rich. Singing.

President Kimball took up the business of the Conference, and presented Brigham Young as the President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, Prophet, Seer, and Revelator, who was unanimously sustained, as were also Heber C. Kimball as his first, and Jedediah M. Grant as his second Counsellor.

The following persons were also unanimously sustained:

Orson Hyde as President of the Quorum of the Twelve Apostles, and Parley P. Pratt, Orson Pratt, Wilford Woodruff, John Taylor, George A. Smith, Amasa Lyman, Ezra T. Benson, Charles C. Rich, Lorenzo Snow, Erastus Snow, and Franklin D. Richards, as members of said quorum.

John Smith (eldest son of Hyrum) as Presiding Patriarch.

David Pettigrew as President of the High Priests' Quorum, also Reynolds Cahoon and George B. Wallace his counsellors.

Joseph Young, Levi W. Hancock, Henry Herriman, Zera Pulsipher, Albert P. Rockwood, Benjamin L. Clapp, and H. S. Eldredge, as Presiding Presidents over all the Seventies.

John Nebeker as President of the Elders' Quorum, also James H. Smith and Aaron Sceva his counsellors.

Edward Hunter as Presiding Bishop of the Church.

Lewis Wight as President of the Priests' Quorum, also George Dockstader and William Whiting his counsellors.

McGee Harris as President of the Teachers' Quorum, also Adam Spiers and David Bowman his counsellors.

Oswald Barlow as President of the Deacons' Quorum, also Alexander Herring and John Carpenter his counsellors.

Brigham Young as Trustee in Trust for the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

Daniel H. Wells as Superintendent of Public Works.

Truman O. Angell as Architect for the Church.

Brigham Young as President of the Perpetual Emigrating Fund, to gather the poor: also H. C. Kimball, W. Woodruff, O. Hyde, G. A. Smith, E. T. Benson, J. M. Grant, D. H. Wells, Edward Hunter, Daniel Spencer, Thomas Bullock, John Brown, William Crosby, A. Lyman, C. C. Rich, Lorenzo D. Young, P. P. Pratt, O. Pratt, F. D. Richards, and Daniel McIntosh, as his assistants, and agents for said Fund.

David Fullmer as President of this Stake of Zion, also Thomas Rhoads and P. H. Young his counsellors.

Heman Hyde, Eleazer Miller, Phinehas Richards, Levi Jackman, Ira Eldredge, John Vance, Edwin D. Woolley, John Parry, Winslow Farr, William Snow, Daniel Carn, and Ira Ames, as members of the High Council.

And George A. Smith, as the Historian and General Church Recorder.

Not one negative vote was given, thus demonstrating a union which the world cannot realize.

The Conference then voted that John Lowry be dropped from his office, as bishop of Manti, in San Pete County; and that Warren Snow be ordained bishop of Manti.

Also voted that Noah W. Bartholomew be dropped from the office of bishop of Fillmore, in Millard County.

President B. Young then spoke on placing young men in responsible stations; those who are not filled with traditions, superstitions, or cast iron creeds.

Conference voted that Isaac Higbee be dropped as President of the Stake of Provo, in Utah County; and that James C. Snow fill that office.

Conference voted that Asahel Perry (who has been ordained a Patriarch) be relieved from the duties of President of the branch at Springville, and that Aaron Johnson be the President of said branch at Springville.

Fifty-three persons were voted to take missions.

President Grant said that active and energetic men, those who will do their duty, and magnify their priesthood, are the men who are generally wanted to fill offices, go on missions, &c.

Elder Hyde related a portion of his experience down the river Danube, when he went as a harbinger to Jerusalem.

Fifteen more young men were voted to go on missions.

Singing by the choir. Benediction by Elder Hyde.

April 7, 10 A. M. The Tabernacle not being large enough to accommodate the thousands of Saints present, the Conference convened in the skeleton for a new Bowery, at the north end of the Tabernacle, which will seat about 12,000 persons.

Choir sung a hymn. Prayer by Elder Lorenzo Snow. Choir chanted, "We praise thee, O God."

President B. Young gave notice that a report of the affairs of the Trustee in Trust would be the next business of the day, and it was read by Elder Thomas Bullock; and, on motion, Conference voted that the report be accepted.

President Kimball made a few remarks on the report, and rejoiced in our present situation.

Conference voted to drop William Davis from the bishoprick of Box Elder, and that Elder Eli Harvey Pierce be ordained bishop in his place.

President B. Young spoke on the Tithing report; the action and duties of Bishops; the building of the Temple; and on Consecration; and said if the Bishops will not do their duty, we will drop every one of them, and put others in their places.

Elder Bullock read the report of the Treasurer of the Perpetual Emigrating Fund, also a Circular to the Presidents and Bishops of the several wards, signed by President B. Young, which were accepted. He also read the following Preamble and Constitution of the Deseret Theological Institute:—

PREAMBLE AND CONSTITUTION OF THE DESERET THEOLOGICAL INSTITUTE.

Having in view the promotion of knowledge, and the extension of those principles of light and truth which we have received through the instrumentality of the holy Priesthood; and believing that the science of Theology embraces a knowledge of all intelligence, whether in heaven or on the earth, moral, scientific, literary, or religious; and being desirous of receiving and imparting such light, wisdom, and principles as have, or may come to our understanding, for the benefit of society, and the building up of the kingdom of our Lord upon the earth: Therefore, resolved, that we form a society by the name of "The Deseret Theological Institute," which shall have one president, three vice-presidents, twelve directors, two corresponding, and one home secretaries, and one treasurer, whose term of office shall be one year, and until their successors are elected. In the first instance, they shall be elected by the congregation of the Saints in general conference assembled, and thereafter by the members of said society.

Resolved, that the presidency and directors have authority to direct, manage, and control all matters pertaining to said Institute, as they shall be led by the Holy Ghost.

The following persons were unanimously voted to fill the several offices in the Institute:—

PRESIDENT.
Brigham Young.

VICE-PRESIDENTS.
Heber C. Kimball, Jed. M. Grant, Geo. A. Smith.

DIRECTORS.

Orson Hyde,	Joseph Young,
Orson Pratt,	Horace S. Eldredge,
Wilford Woodruff,	James W. Cummings,
Ezra T. Benson,	Samuel W. Richards,
Charles C. Rich,	William Hyde,
Lorenzo Snow,	Jesse C. Little.

TWO CORRESPONDING SECRETARIES.
Daniel H. Wells, Robert Lang Campbell.

HOME SECRETARY.
Thomas Bullock.

TREASURER.
Hiram B. Clawson.

President B. Young said that a few years ago, the Seventies started a Hall of Science, but they had not yet seen the time to build it; but we have now the privilege of forming a society to occupy it when it is built; it will be nothing more than a schoolhouse, an academy, a seminary to teach the brethren all that is good, and then try to get more.

Choir chanted a psalm. Benediction by Elder Geo. A. Smith.

April 7, 2 P. M. Singing. Prayer by Elder P. H. Young. Singing.

A report of the lumber that has been brought for the building of the Bowery was then read by the Clerk, and Elder Hyde spoke on the subject.

Elder O. Pratt referred to the progress of the work during twenty-five years, and to its present prosperous position; spoke on the subject of consecrating property to the Church, and of proclaiming the gospel.

Sixty-nine persons were voted to go on missions.

The missionaries were notified to meet the Presidency at the Seventies' Council Hall to-morrow at early candle light.

Choir sung, "Come all ye sons of Zion, who have received the Priesthood."

Benediction by Elder Lorenzo D. Young.

7 P. M. The Presidency of the Seventies met in their Council Hall.

Singing. Prayer by Elder Zerah Pulsipher.

President Joseph Young explained the objects of the meeting.

On motion, the vote of the Seventies of the 15th Ward, which cut off Robert Plunket of the 7th quorum, for apostacy, was sanctioned.

Samuel Stratton Thornton was dropped from the presidency of the 20th quorum, he having apostatized.

President J. Young showed that when the body of Seventies cut a man from the quorums, that man must have previously cut himself off by transgression; they only sever the nominal tie, after he himself has severed the spiritual tie; and exhorted the Seventies to be pliable in the hands of their superiors.

Dismissed with benediction.

SUNDAY, April 8, 10 A. M.—Singing. Prayer by Elder Geo. A. Smith. Chanting.

Conference voted that Lewis Bronson, son of Seymour Bronson, be ordained Bishop of Fillmore.

Elder George A. Smith alluded to our meeting house being too small, (although it holds 12,000), but it fulfils the words of the Prophet Joseph Smith. Has defended the Book of Mormon since he was 13 years old; spoke on the prejudices and traditions of the people; in favor of the Word of Wisdom, and on union and prayer; and bore testimony of this being the work of God.

Elder Ezra T. Benson bore testimony to the truth of the remarks made during this Conference, and preached on the Word of Wisdom.

Choir sung "Redeemer of Israel." Benediction by Prest. Grant.

2 P. M.—All who could find room convened in the Tabernacle, on account of the lowering appearance of the weather.

Called to order by Prest. Brigham Young. Choir sung a

HYMN.

BY BERNARD SNOW.

AIR—"God save the King."

Our God, we raise to thee
Thanks for thy blessings free,
We here enjoy;
In this far western land,
A true and chosen band,
Led hither by thy hand,
Would sing for joy.

Bless thou our prophet dear;
May health and comfort cheer
His noble heart;
His words with fire impress
On souls that thou wilt bless,
Nor gold may they caress,
But free impart.

So shall thy kingdom spread,
As by thy prophets said,
From sea to sea,
As one united whole
Truth burn in every soul,
While hast'ning to the goal
We long to see.

O may the Saints be one,
Like Father and the Son,
Nor disagree;
United heart and hand,
So may they ever stand,
A firm and valiant band
Eternally.

Prayer by Elder P. H. Young. Singing.

Elder P. H. Young exhorted the Saints to constant prayer and diligence, and asked a blessing upon the bread.

Elder Lorenzo Snow compared the present day with twenty-five years ago, and alluded to the time when the Elders were traveling without food or shelter to proclaim the gospel to nations afar off, and asked a blessing on the water.

Elder Woodruff said, that the more conferences we have, the more they improve in interest; it was music to his ears to hear testimony of the truth; referred to the dedication of the Temple in Nauvoo, and to the wars and distress among the nations.

Elder C. C. Rich said: for the past twenty-three years I have known of a surety that this work was true, and that this Church is led by the hand of God; spoke on the union of the people, and living to receive the blessings; if we do the best we know, we shall do first rate.

Prest B. Young adjourned the Conference to the 6th of October next, remarking that if we were to continue a whole week, but a few of the Elders could have the privilege of bearing their testimony; he that imparts truth as fast as he receives it, will grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth. The first mission of Joseph, who was a pure Ephraimite, was to gather Israel; instructed the Saints how to live and avoid desease, and strenuously advised them to observe the Words of Wisdom; and to cease using Tea, Coffee, Tobacco, Spirits, and all such articles, and raise their children healthy, this people have got to do it. He then blessed the Saints.

Choir sung "Come let us anew." Benediction by Prest. Kimball. THOMAS BULLOCK, Clerk of Conference.

[Those instructions given during the Conference, which it may be deemed advisable to print, will appear in the News as fast as the reporters can prepare them.—Ed.

THOMAS BULLOCK, Clerk.

Sunday Law in London—Administrative Reform.

A London correspondent of the Philadelphia Bulletin writes the following:

Next to the war, the most exciting subject in London is the Sunday Law, which has strengthened the array of the popular forces against the privileged classes. The law, which forbids trading, and closes the shops, beer-houses, &c., except during certain hours of Sunday, is an excellent one in principle; but while it operates seriously against the lower classes, it interferes not at all with the Sunday occupations and amusements of the aristocratic and wealthy. So, on Sunday afternoon last, an immense crowd of people assembled in Hyde Park, about the hours when the nobility turn out to drive. They lined both sides of the great drive on the right of the Serpentine, and, as their carriages arrived, their occupants were greeted with shouts of "Go home!" "Go to church!" "You have no business out of doors on Sunday!" along with derisive cries of "Does your mother know you're out?" "Have you got the key?" and other good-humored absurdities.

At length they became so violent, that carriages were actually stopped, and noble ladies in sumptuous dresses were compelled to alight, send home their equipages, and walk quietly back to their residences like common people. The crowd at one time is said to have reached 15,000 or 20,000. About 6 1-2 o'clock when I, not knowing of the commotion, walked down toward Hyde Park to see the stylish turn outs, I found a crowd of several hundred policemen at Hyde Park corner, one of whom told me the meaning of the gathering. They were stationed there as a corps of reserve.

I hastened up to the Park and found still a crowd of many thousands, but the carriage-way was absolutely vacant. Not a carriage was near it, but occasionally an adventurous horseman (but not a fashionable) dashed through the gauntlet, and was hailed with all sorts of good-humored shouts. The police on the spot were numerous, but as there was then no breach of the peace there were no arrests. But the "nobility and gentry" had been taught a severe lesson, and it was demonstrated that in England in this age, there can be no law enacted controlling social customs, which is not made equally applicable to rich as well as poor.

If the petty shops are to be closed, and if working people are to be deprived of their Sunday recreation, the great club-houses of Pall Mall must also be closed, and the nobility must cease their Sunday driving and their grand Sunday dinners. The titled gentlemen who have been urging these restrictive measures against the lower classes were much alarmed by the Hyde Park demonstration.

Government has disavowed Lord Robert Grosvenor's plans, and it seems likely that Sunday will soon be a day of as much license as ever, simply because noble lords and members of Parliament have not the self-denial to bring themselves within the operation of a law which is offensive to the people at large. The firm stand taken by the people is but one of the many signs of a great social revolution now going on, which alarms the privileged classes, since it threatens to break down the barriers of rank and make England more truly republican than it has ever been.

Administrative reform is a phrase heard now in every one's mouth, and the weekly meetings at Drury Lane Theatre are beginning to excite much attention. On Wednesday evening, Charles Dickens made his first political speech there, and it was a spicy, slashing bit of satire that is keenly felt by those in power.

The Government organs try to throw ridicule upon it, and condemn Dickens for going out of his proper sphere to meddle with topics belonging to another class of people, apparently forgetting that all the evil complained of is attributed to the custom of confining politics and office to one privileged class.

Layard, the Nineveh explorer, is the leader of the reform movement; but Dickens, as a great popular author, is regarded as an invaluable acquisition to the party, and it is gratifying to see that a man of his influence, who has been accused of toadyism to the nobility and aristocracy, has the manliness to come out boldly on the popular side of the question, which is now regarded as the vital one to England.

JAPANESE PECULIARITIES.

It seems that the national exclusiveness of this peculiar people is also exhibited in their social habits. The streets of their towns present only a dead wall upon each side, the houses being situated in gardens behind them, and hidden as much as possible by trees and shrubbery. Being under constant servilance, the people are much given to hiding themselves.

Their dress consists of one loose robe with a girdle about the middle. This is a very cool arrangement for summer weather, but in winter is not quite so comfortable. However, they manage to keep warm by levying contributions upon each other, for whenever one member of the family goes out in the cold weather he borrows the garments of all who remain within, and put them on one over the other.

The Japanese idea of a shoe is peculiar. The article with them is simply a sole, and is worn, not for the protection of the foot—which in fact it does not cover—but for the preservation of the matting on the floors; the sole being always slipped off at the door, the wearer going barefoot in the house. The shoe, therefore, is only intended to keep the feet from contact with the earth, and thus from soiling the matting, which is a matter of pride to keep very clean. This indeed, is a very essential matter, as the matting is used not only for a carpet, but for a table-cloth and mattrass as well, being in fact the only article of furniture in the house. The inmates sit, eat and sleep upon the floor.

The Japanese pillow—for they indulge in that luxury—is a very curious affair. It consists of a little block of wood, with sides of unequal width, so that by turning it over—which is often done, even in sleep—the head may rest at different points of elevation. This peculiar pillow is made necessary from the fact that the hair is worn upright upon the head, matted together with grease and secured by pins, which by their material indicate the rank of the wearer. This pillow is considered a very comfortable affair, and altogether superior to the bag of feathers on which we outside barbarians are wont to recline our heads.

The Japanese, like the Chinese, take the food with chopsticks, and indicate their enjoyment of it by a loud snoring noise, not at all agreeable to civilized ears.

Being always accustomed to sit with their legs bent up upon the floor, they find it painful to sit on chairs, complaining that the part of the leg which hangs down "is all the same as if it were cut off!"

The mandarins, when they go abroad, have always great retinue; an umbrella capable of covering thirty or forty persons, is held over their heads, while two men go before with brooms to sweep away evil spirts in the air! They believe in spirits, but not in the immortality of the soul.

When a Japanese gentleman walks abroad, he is always accompanied by a servant; whose duty it is to carry three essential articles—an umbrella to shade his master—his slippers (for it is a genteel thing to go barefoot) and an eating box containing food, lest his master should become faint on the way. When this happens, the gentleman sits down on the ground, opens his box, and eats his dinner.

The Japanese are bound to support their fathers while living, and to worship them after death. This worship is the only social enjoyment they have, for they make an amusement of it, though one would think it must be a very grave one. In fact the grave yard is the only place of public resort, and is made a place of sensual enjoyment. Every day the household resorts to the family tomb, and there indulge in eating and drinking, and waiting alternately. This is their worship. Formerly they were required to spend fifty days by the graves of their parents, now three days will do, and they sometimes hire men to watch in their stead. This indicates a lamentable decline of piety, which, however, is not without its parallel among professors of a higher faith.—[Portland Transcript.

The Press has been remarkably quiet of late upon the subject of Utah and the Mormons, and as to the subject of another Governor being appointed for Utah but a feeling whisper, is all that has been heard. The gentlemen of the quill probably consider it the better part of valor to keep quiet and say nothing. The fact is they have been so disappointed and chagrined at the truth of Brigham Young's prophecy that he would govern Utah as long as the Lord wished him, coupled with Colonel Steptoe's non-acceptation of the Governorship and the disreputable conduct of the U. S. officers in Utah, civil and military. that they are confounded and almost paralyzed and may now be considered in that quiescent state called 'dumb saucy' or sulky. They are not so disgusted at the disreputable and beastly conduct of the officers aforesaid, as at the fact that they have been so clearly found out, and so openly exposed. It is a well known Indian maxim "steal boys and plunder as much as you can, but hang you if you are caught at it—for if we don't, pale face will." What policy our cotemporaries would use towards the rotten hearted wretches whose private correspondence concerning the Mormon women, during the last winter excited such sympathy in their bosoms we can only conjecture, but we question whether they would have as much sense of honor as the untutored savage would have under like circumstances. If an Indian was disgraced before his tribe, he would be forbidden to associate with the "braves," and would be compelled to wear les jupons, and associate with the squaws, our genteel officers might not fancy changing their pants for petticoats, but their conduct in Utah proves that an association with the squaws would not be the least objectionable.

It might be said that such minutia as whoredom prostitution and rape are not considered any particular disgrace in this enlightened age, such things are of every day occurrence among the refined genteel Christian Societies, they are simply affairs of honor or gallantry, that are considered a mere bagatelle, with which they are so accustomed, that they wonder the Mormons do not respect and honor those fashionable debauchees as much as they do.

And these are the Gentlemen who were sent to teach Utah wisdom, and administer the laws of righteousness between man and man, and were expected to teach us outside barbarians morality and virtue, instead of which they have grossly abused, our hospitality, by violating innocence and virtue by outrages upon childhood, and other damning deeds which cause a feeling of indignation in our bosom that nothing but the withering blast of the Almighty upon their guilty heads will ever quiet, and it will as surely fall upon them as they live, and they will fall into a premature grave with the everlasting curses of their victims upon their heads.

And how long shall these things continue? how long is Utah to be cursed with such depraved monsters? how long will such venomous reptiles be permitted to sit in high places, mingle with the pure and virtuous, and consummate their hellish purposes? in the language of Ebenezar Elliott we say:—

"Shall crime breed crime forever
Strength aiding still the strong,
Is it thy will, O Father,
That man should toil for wrong."
No! says the Prophet of the Lord,
No! say the Saints with one accord,
The wicked who among us dwell,
Will soon be d—d and sent to h—l.

The character and conduct of those officials sent to Utah by the U. S. Government, have been, with few exceptions, so contemptibly mean, and notoriously corrupt, that they have completely disgraced themselves and those who associate with them—and the very name of a U. S. Officer in Utah has become almost synonymous with what is considered most heartless and depraved; and if the Government should have occasion to send other officers among us, we hope men will be sent who have some respect for themselves, men who will conduct themselves with decency and honor, for we feel completely disgusted with the conduct of those miserables with which we have been hitherto burdened.

We recommend as a more excellent way that men be appointed who live among us, men of integrity and righteousness, who are sworn enemies to all that is evil, and who are known to be interested in the prosperity and interests of the citizens of Utah. Let Gov. Young or the Marshal for Utah nominate the men most competent to fill the several offices, let them be duly sanctioned by the President, and installed in office. Such men would by their judicious policy obviate a thousand difficulties, and save the General Government the disgrace consequent upon the conduct of worthless office seekers, they would establish order where confusion reigns, and restore the equilibrium so essential in political as well as religious government.

The twenty-five years experience of the church of Jesus Christ of L. A. Saints has given it a name, character and influence that will increase until all people acknowledge its heavenly origin, and endorse its representatives as the best, noblest and wisest of all the earth, and not only competent to govern 60,000 Saints in Utah, but competent to adjust the affairs of a disordered world. It will then be known who are the rightful Judges and rulers, until then we are content to stand on the platform of liberty, and contend for the truth of God, and the rights of man, and we will never ground our arms until "the kingdom and the greatness of the kingdom be given unto the Saints, and all people shall serve the Lord.

GODEY'S LADY'S BOOK.

This very fashionable and excellent Book for August has just come to hand, and commands its usual interest and attraction. It would be superfluous for us to say much in praise of this work, for it is such a general favorite of the ladies, who have so many pretty things to say in its favor, that they have exhausted the fashionable vocabulary in its laudations long ago, and we merely reiterate what has been said a thousand times, when we say that Godey's Lady's Book contains the most interesting tales, and the latest and most approved fashions, and is altogether the best and most interesting Book of the kind. It may be had of all respectable Booksellers.

On Tuesday the twenty-fourth instant was the eighth anniversary of the entrance of the Pioneers into the valleys of the West; a day ever to be remembered by the Saints of the Most High, as one of the most memorable of the great events of the last days. For seventeen years the Church had suffered buffitings, mobbings, murders, and finally an unreserved banishment from the soi disant christians of the land. And when first the lovely vallies and Alpine heights struck their gaze, their souls were filled with joy, and they raised their hands to heaven and shouted simultaneously Hosannah, Hosannah, Hosannah, to God and the Lamb. It was not an outburst of enthusiasm brought forth by some vague hypothesis, or wild chimera of the brain, no; it was a feeling incited by the indwelling spirit of the Gods, by which the spot was immediately recognized as the temporary resting place of the Church of Jesus Christ, "the tops of the Mountains" where a temple should be reared unto the God of Jacob, unto which the people of all nations should gather to serve the Lord.

At the time the Saints were rejoicing because of their deliverance from the power and influence of their merciless persecutors, the latter were exulting in the thought that we were so completely routed and used up, that we would never dare again to lift up our heads, and when it was affirmed by the public journals that "the Mormons had turned Cannibals, and had eaten each other up upon the Plains," the story went to the nations as quick as steam and electricity could convey it, and the ill disposed and vitiated of all nations believed it, and rejoiced in the presumed fate of the unhappy victims. But they had scarcely swallowed the wonderful story of the "Mormon eaters" when our real position as a mountain Territory was officially announced, and the supposed Cannibals were transformed into Governers, Judges, Legislators, and Plenipotentiaries, and commanded the astonishment of all people. and the admiration of not a few.

The rise and progress of the Church of Jesus Christ is the most extraordinary subject of the age, and its flight to the wilderness and entrance to the vallies are among the most important features of its checquered history. The courageous and indomitable Pioneers and their followers were American citizens, who by mob violence had been driven from their homes, and robbed of their houses, lands, and cities, and had endured and overcome a thousand schemes and plans most engeniously concocted for their overthrow and destruction; but every scheme was neutralized in its execution, and instead of pulling down and destroying, tended to build up and establish. So it has been in every case of opposition, no matter how flattering the modus operandi, the Lord has overruled all things for our good, and has made the wrath of the wicked to praise him.

FROM SALT LAKE.

We received on Sunday 22d, a copy of the Deseret News, dated 6th June, from which we learn that the prospect for breadstuffs is quite gloomy in the valley. The nearest point for getting supplies from, in case of need, is San Bernardino, some eight hundred miles.

Some of our friends in the States begin to feel considerable interest upon the subject, and some sympathize so much that they hope we may all starve to death, and thus save the General Government the trouble and expense of killing us off. We feel of course profoundly grateful for this gratuitous sympathy in our behalf, but we advise our friends not to be too prodigal of their favors unsolicited, for they may soon be wanted nearer home.

This is not the first grasshopper difficulty the Deseretians have had to contend with. The first year they were in the valley, they met a force larger than the hosts of Pharoah, but they lived and prospered. The old settlers may therefore be expected to brave the ravages of the present army with perfect indifference.

Those newly arrived must try to live by faith, as our fathers did. If that kind of food is not agreeable, let them try President Kimball's prescription "chew some India rubber" until they learn how to live, not by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth from the mouth of God.

The News says: "A pack party of from eight to twelve persons arrived from California on the 4th inst., on their way to the States. They came by the Northern route, crossed the mountains the latter part of April, and had much cool, snowy and rainy weather until within four days' travel of this place. They report fifty more returning emigrants between here and Ogden, and that from six hundred to one thousand will return home by the overland route this season.

The Eastern mail, due the last of May, arrived at 7 P. M., of the 5th inst. It was said to have been detained at Fort Kearny, waiting for an escort.

All the mail matter put aboard at Independence was brought through, and some belonging to a former trip.

Dr. Bernhisel was the only passenger.

Dr. Dotson, who passed the mail seventy miles East of this city, brings word that there is no overland emigration on the route for California and Oregon."

The Schooner "Emma," chartered by Col. Kinney for the expedition to Central America, was wrecked on the 20th ult., in the neighborhood of the Caycos Islands. She struck a Coral Reef and fell into the hands of the gentlemen who live, gloat and fatten on such disasters. We were once threatened with a similar disaster off the coast of Florida, where we ran on a reef, where we stuck fast for twenty-four hours. The wreckers proffered their services, which were unceremoneously refused, and by dint of genuine faith and lusty hauling we cleared the reef and proceeded on our voyage, leaving the wreckers to curse the fates for our good fortune, which robbed them of their plunder, which they consider a sort of divine right. The Col. and his company did not fare so well. After the position of the vessel was determined, she was quickly boarded by several wreckers, and by nightfall, but very little remained that could be carried off.

A letter from one of the expedition speaks very highly of the Colonel's intrepidity amid the dangers of shipwreck. The writer of the letter referred to, says:

About six o'clock in the afternoon the last boat load of passengers, among whom was the Colonel, left the schooner, and it was with no little pain that we viewed the beautiful craft lying on her side among the rocks, the helpless victim of the winds and waves, or our no less merciless assailants, the wreckers. To the Colonel especially, who had struggled against every conceivable embarrassment and had expended over fifty thousand dollars in hard money to promote his darling undertaking, the wreck was distressing indeed.

Nevertheless, though after passing a sleepless night, he had worked in the water all day, and had seriously injured himself by lifting heavy articles and timber from the vessel to the boat, his courage and resolution never failing him an instant. He has never quailed before any obstacles heretofore, and even now, while so sick that he can with difficulty move about, he works with the dispatch and energy of ten ordinary men in full health, to forward his great design. His conduct during and subsequent to the wreck, has only served to increase the confidence of his men in his abilities as the leader of the work in colonizing Central America.

Our adventure on the beach of Caycos Island, where we slept for two nights, miles from any human habitation, as well as at Turk's Island, which we reached in two small vessels, one a sloop of seventeen tons, and another a schooner of fourteen, after a rough and dangerous passage of ninety miles easterly over the Caycos Bank, I reserve for another letter.

I will merely mention that the mainmast of the latter was so strained, in addition to other damages, that she was obliged to put ashore at what is called East Harbor, some twenty miles short or her destination, and did not arrive till two days after the sloop which started on the same day, and arrived here on Monday, the 25th inst. We have been very kindly treated by the American Consul, Mr. Nelson, in whose building most of our men have found comfortable lodgings, and by Mr. B. Everett Smith, his predecessor, now a merchant on the island. We are also under particular obligations to his Honor, Mr. James Misick, the Vice-President of the Colony of Turk's Island and the Caycos, as well as to other members of the Government, whose courteous attention to Colonel Kinney were doubly welcome in consideration of the circumstances under which he arrived.

We leave to-morrow, by a British vessel, for our port of destination in Central America.

GLEANINGS.

Sebastopol was bombarded on the 13th of June, without effect.

Formidable works were being erected by the Allies against the Malakoff and Redan; the Russians were erecting equally strong in opposition; 40,000 men were said to be employed on the works.

The Russians made a sortie on the night of the 7th, on the works in front of the Mamelon, but effected nothing.

Another general assault is shortly expected.

The Allied fleet, continued cruising and destroying property on the coast of the White Sea.

The British ship Antelope had bombarded and destroyed the town of Olstoun-Calabar.

Queen Victoria's visit to Paris is fixed for August seventh.

Lord John Russell has resigned office in consequence of certain anamadversions from Mr. Lytton Bulwer upon his negotiations at Vienna.

The Yellow Fever is increasing at New Orleans, sixty-three died at the hospital last week; the disease is of a mild type.

The difficulties of Gov. Reeder and the Kansas Legislature, are daily increasing. The Assembly is in session at the Shawnee Mission. The Governor stands aloof and vetoes all its resolutions, and whether they will become law, yet remains to be seen.

The law creating the Territory locates the seat of Government at Fort Leavenworth, pro tem; but Governor Reeder called the Assembly together at Pawnee—an imaginary town—at which there was no conveniences for the transaction of public business. The Assembly met and passed a law changing the seat of Government, which the Governor vetoed, but in despite of his veto, the Assembly adjourned its sittings, and is now in session at the place specified by its vote, and hence the difficulties pending between the Governor and Assembly.

A few weeks ago David F. Mayberry was tried at Janesville, Wisconsin, for the murder of Andrew Alger, and was found guilty and sentenced to death; Judge Doolittle presiding. Public feeling ran so high against the prisoner, that he was seized by the populace when returning to the jail, and after considerable fighting and struggling, he was sumarily executed.

The Janesville Standard Extra, contains a lengthy article upon the subject, from which we clip the following:

We were startled by the cry of Hang him! Hang him! when on stepping to the window, we saw the officers and prisoner coming towards the jail, surrounded by the infuriated mob. A rush was made for the jail, the door of which was barricaded at once by the crowd, and the approach of the officers cut off. The officers—though resisting the populace with all the energy they possessed, and protecting the prisoner to the utmost of their power—were borne down and overpowered. The prisoner was almost alone; but he defended himself with superhuman strength. He fought with the utmost desperation, and possessing a most athletic physical frame, for some ten yards the crowd fell like chaff before him. A blow, however, with a bludgeon from behind felled him to the ground, and he was powerless. A rope was then passed round his neck, seized by the crowd, and a rush made down Court street. The prisoner, though dragging in the dust, caught the rope with his hands and thus prevented strangulation at once. Arrived in front of our office, a desperate effort was again made by the officers and citizens to rescue him. The rope was cut three times by Mr. Orrin Guernsey, who exhibited the most determined bravery in his behalf, but as often was he thrust aside and the rope readjusted.

At this time a scene almost indescribable was exhibited; a crowd of between three and four thousand persons swayed to and fro. In the centre was the doomed prisoner lying on the ground—above him stood friends begging and struggling for his life—while a far greater number were intent upon his death. This state things lasted about ten minutes, and as we looked from our window the hope predominated that the friends of law and order might yet prevail. But it was a vain hope. The fearful cry of "Hang him!" rose louder than before, and a rush with the prisoner was made to the cluster of trees on the public square; the rope readjusted upon his neck, the other end thrown over the limb of a tree, and, for the first time in our life, the horrid spectacle of a human being hanging by the neck until he was dead met our view.

Correspondence.

The following Items from the Emigration will be read with interest. We are glad to learn of the general health and prosperity of the camps of Israel, now journeying across the plains; and we trust that no accident or danger will befal them, but that they will reach their destination in safety:

Fort Kearney, July 3d, 1855.

Dear Brother Snow:—We have thought it well to commence writing you a letter at this point, with the intention of forwarding it by any means that may present itself on the road. We reached this point, all well July 1st, and found six wagons with brethren from Kanesville, who had been waiting one week for us; and we have waited the same time on the road for Elder Ballantyne or orders from him, after we received orders from you on the Little Blue. We travelled only short distances, never staying more than a day at a time, so as to keep the camp in motion and thus prevent sickness coming into the camp. We have had two deaths one of which (Sister Avery's) you have reported in our former note. The other is brother George Waters who died at the point where the road strikes the Little Blue River, of consumption. He took cold from exposure before we started, and gradually got worse till the time of his death.

July 6.—We hurriedly close this note to forward it by some Officers who are returning to the States. We are ten miles from Fort Kearney, doing blacksmith's work for the camp. All well—no news from Elder Ballantyne. JOHN HINDLEY,
JOHN PARSON.

Snake Creek, (15 miles beyond the Big Blue, and 120 miles from Atchison, K. T.,)
July, 10th, 1855.

My Dear President Snow:—Yesterday morning I wrote you from the Big Blue; but having another opportunity to send, I write a few items for your information. Every thing prospers with us thus far. We have had no cholera nor sickness of any kind, except what may reasonably be expected among so many people.

We have kept moving every day except on Sabbath, since we left the Grove; and we still have nothing to hinder our future progress. All is well, and the Lord our God is with us.

A man has just met us, who left California two months ago. He states that times are very dull in that State, and further states that every thing is eaten up in the Valley, by the grasshoppers. He left the latter place on the 9th June. The grass for fifty miles on this side of the Valley is all eaten up by the grasshoppers also. The Saints intend sowing, and planting, until the 4th of July. If judgement thus visits the house of God, and the faithful, what shall the ungodly do when they are visited?

Good feed and water the rest of the way. The same gentleman states that the Sioux Indians are anxiously waiting to fight the U. S. Troops, and that the latter are afraid of them.

Some depredations have been committed on emigrants. One Captain of a train was killed near Laramie. While he shook hands with one Indian, another shot him with two bullets. Another train has been robbed of eighteen horses, near the same Fort; one woman was speared, but otherwise nothing serious has been reported. It is said the Indians are willing to let the Emigrants pass through, but are very eager to fight "Uncle Sam."

Captain Hindley's company of our people, was at Fort Kearney ten days ago, moving forward.

Blair's company, now in charge of Capt. Stevenson, was, one week ago, at the head of Little Blue, and Captain Secrist's company of Saints was, about the same time, about half way up the same river.—Health generally good in all the companies.

Having nothing more of importance to say, I conclude by wishing you good health, and long life,

As ever, yours truly, R. BALLANTYNE.

Mormon Grove, K. T., July 20th, 1855.

To the Editor of the Luminary:

Dear Brother—I hasten to drop you a few lines to let you know the situation of the camps of Israel at this place. We have had an uninterrupted time of peace and good health up to the 19th inst., when the destroyer made a sudden appearance and the victim that he selected was our true hearted and well beloved father John Parry, who only survived his stroke eight hours—he now sleeps in death with the full assurance of meeting with his brethren tha remain alike faithful with himself, in the morning of the first resurrection, then to be clothed upon with immortality and eternal lives.

Father Parry was on his return to Salt Lake City, from a mission that had been appointed him in the British Isles, which he had fulfiled with honor to the cause of truth and with glory to himself. I can say of a truth, that since he has been at this point of outfit, that he has been one of the most faithful and industrious servants of the Lord that we have had around us, and was just appointed captain of one of the companies to cross the plains, and although we sincerely mourn and sympathize with his bereft family who are now residing in the Valley, yet it is not without hope and assurance that he will have part in the first resurrection. We realize in this providence that his wife has lost a kind husband and his children a tender father; but we say to them, be comforted; your husband and father died standing at his post of duty; he therefore will come forth and his works shall follow him.

His remains were interred on the morning of the 20th of July, at Mormon Grove. He breathed his last in this life at quarter past nine on the evening of the 19th.

I will still say further, that there has been no new cases of sickness or death, but the blessings of the Lord are still with us.

We are preparing to start thirty wagons to-morrow. We are in hopes to clear the ground of the present encampments by the 1st day of August.—We have now on hand all the oxen and other outfits necessary for the journey, and hope soon to be released to see you and the Saints in St. Louis.

Please give my kind regards to the Saints in general, not forgetting yourself and family, and the brethren of the office.

I remain yours, MILO ANDRUS.

From the Millennial Star.

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

Journey to the Isles—Character of the Natives—The Gathering Place—Purchase of a Vessel—Locations of the Elders—Prospects.

Honolulu, Oahu, Sandwich Isles,
April 14, 1855.

Elder James Ferguson—Dear Brother—Feeling that a few lines from me might not be entirely uninteresting to you, I cheerfully sit down to pen you some little account of my doings since we last met, my whereabouts at present, and my prospects in the future.

The Elders for the Pacific Mission left Great Salt Lake City on the 4th and 5th of May, in company with Governor Young and suite, who were making a visit to the southern settlements, in whose agreeable company we travelled to Cedar City, where we parted, they returning home, and we pursuing our way to the Pacific. Our company was under the charge of Elder P. P. Pratt.

Of our detention in California suffice it to say, that we got away as fast as we obtained means.—We went in three companies. I was in the last company, and left San Francisco on the 2d December, and arrived here on the 24th, enjoying tolerable good health. The rainy season had set in when we got here, and we could scarcely leave the house for a month, for it rained more or less I believe every day.

I found that we had our fields of labor allotted to us before we arrived. I was chosen for this Island Oahu. This is the seat of Government of the natives, and also the head quarters of our mission. I first expected to go to the opposite side of the Island from here to live, while I studied the language, but, as Elder B. F. Johnson, who had always done the correspondence of the mission, was about leaving for home, President Lewis counselled me to reside in or about this city, that I might be on hand to correspond, or do any other writing that might be necessary for the mission. I accordingly took up my residence with a native family about 1 1-2 miles out of the heart of the city, and I like my location very much, it overlooks the city, harbor, and bay—thus I have a fine view of the shipping, which are continually coming and going to and from this port. I here enjoy the mountain breeze, pure atmosphere, and good water, all of which are great requisites to health in this warm climate. I have a most magnificent shower bath, in the shape of a little waterfall, about twenty yards from the door, which luxury I indulge in generally every day. My health, generally speaking, since I left home, has been good, and at present it is excellent, never felt better in my life. My time is occupied in studying this language, visiting this people from house to house, tending meetings, writing, &c., &c.

I have read some extracts from letters from you and Elder Dunbar in the Deseret News, of your preaching and baptising. O! you are greatly blessed in being among a people who can understand your own language. I wish these people could understand me, for I long to speak to them, and tell them the things that pertain to life and salvation, but I must wait until I can learn their language, perhaps a year, before I can talk to give any satisfaction. I have not made much progress yet, it comes rather hard to me, and my field is rather against my learning fast, there are so many foreigners here, with whom I have to talk more or less in English, and this puts me back. If I was, as some of my brethren are, right out among the natives, where they do not see a white man from one month's end to another, I believe I could acquire it pretty fast, but I am contented where I am. There was some one wanted here, and the Presidency thought I was the one; so I am perfectly satisfied with my lot and calling.

In the future there is a great work before us. All the old Elders expect to return home after our next Conference, on the 24th July, so that we boys will have to assume the responsibility of carrying on the work. You know our youth and inexperience; pray for us, that we may have strength sufficient to the task. Some of the brethren who came here first (I mean of our company) have advanced considerably in the language, and are speaking publicly. Among these, the most forward in the language is Joseph Smith, son of Hyrum, John Young, son of Lorenzo, is the most forward on this Island. They have been here I think about seven months, and have done well for the time. Boys get it the quickest. These brethren, with several others, have been among the natives all the time.

This people resemble in many characteristics the Indians of America, but are more civilized. They are a kind-hearted, sympathetic people, but very much given to licentiousness, and its attendant evils, and are somewhat indolent and filthy. On the whole group there are about five thousand that have joined the Church, but we cannot do much with them in their present scattered condition. They are first-rate while an Elder is right in their midst, but as soon as his back is turned they are apt to indulge in their old habits, and they are so much surrounded by evil influences, that it is almost an impossibility to control them. Their only salvation lies in gathering them together, but such is their poverty at present that it would be impossible to emigrate them to America. In view of these difficulties we have appointed a temporary gathering place on a small Island called Lanai, where we have procured, free of charge, to experiment on, a piece of land for four years, with the privilege, if we succeed, of renting or purchasing at the end of that time. A city has been laid out, and a farm opened, the labor being accomplished by pioneers from the different Islands. Crops have been put in, and they promise to yield well this present season.

We are now negotiating the purchase of a small vessel, to ply between the Islands, to carry the Elders back and forth, to take our produce from Lanai to this place and other ports to market, and to gather the people. We were very much puzzled how to accomplish this purchase, for lack of means, when brother John Young fell in with a German, on the other side of this Island, preached "Mormonism" to him, convinced him of its truth, and baptised him into the Church, and, strange but true, this man was building just such a vessel as we want, and is willing to sell half of it to the Church on reasonable terms, waiting for the most of his pay till the vessel earns it. Truly the hand of the Lord is in this matter. We have good anticipations in the future, for I firmly believe that the work is only commenced on this land

Having written so much about myself and the work, I will tell you where some of your acquaintances of this mission are, &c. M. D. Merrick did not come here. Brother Pratt appointed him a mission in California. Brother O. K. Whitney is on the Island of Kauai, and was well a few days ago. Brothers Partridge and Simpson Molen are on the same Island. H. P. Richards, Ward E. Pack, son of John, Geo. Spiers, and four brethren from the southern settlements, are on the Island of Hawaii, the largest of the group. They were all well and progressing finely in the language when last I heard from them. Joseph Smith, Silas Smith, brother of the Judge, Smith Thurstin, W. B. Rogers, and Joseph A. Peck are on Maui. They are all well and doing well, except Peck; he has been sick for some time, and hence has not made much progress. William Clough, son of David Clough, Provo, S. E. Johnson, son of Joel, John Young, son of Lorenzo, and your humble servant are on this Island, which is proud of the cognomen of Oahu. I have seen but very few of the brethren since they left me in California. But we anticipate a good time at our Conference in July, when we shall all meet for the first time on a foreign land.

I suppose you hear from home quite often. I have not had many letters. Brother Horace wrote to me when I was in California, and brother Candland since I came here. I also hear from my family every month. My last was Feb. 1st. All well, and getting along first-rate, for which I feel to thank my Father in heaven.

O! James, I long to hear from you and the other brethren with whom I have so often associated on the mimic stage and in the social circle, and my prayer continually to my Father in heaven is that we may all be preserved to meet again and enjoy each other's society in Zion's peaceful vales. Is it not indeed a blessed land, compared with what you and I see every day? Here licentiousness and other evil passions of mankind run "scot free;" in vain do the King and Parliament legislate against these corruptions, which are daily sweeping away this people. Their whole system is corruption from head to foot. As with the priest so with the people. The Calvinistic missionaries have great influence here, and the laws are the offspring of sectarian bigotry and superstition. The King and nobles are mere automatons, who jump just as the wires are pulled by able wire pullers behind the scenes, who hide their rascality under the garb of religion. But we hope for better times, for I think the popularity of these missionaries is on the wane. There are lots of Americans settling here, and the people begin to get their eyes open, and to feel the weight of the pious incubus which has crushed them for thirty years. But enough of this, I no doubt have by this time tired your patience.

Well, to draw to a close, James do write to me a good long letter, and give what news of your doings you see fit, for I am pretty much excluded here from the news of the world, and more particularly of the doings of the Church.

Give my love to President Richards, and to my old and often thought of friend, brother Dunbar. I should esteem it a great favor to receive a letter from him.

May the God of heaven bless you in all your labors, and bring you safe home to your family in the due time of the Lord, is the prayer of your old friend and brother in the New and Everlasting Covenant,

JOHN T. CAINE.

P. S.—When you write you will please pay the English and American postage, which will be 25 cents on a half ounce letter, or your letter cannot reach me. I will pay the Hawaiian postage here.

Miscellaneous.

Deseret, Deseret, tis the Home of the free,
And dearer than all other lands 'tis to me,
Where the Saints are secure from turmoil and strife,
And enjoy to the full the rich blessings of life.
'Tis a land which for ages has been lying waste,
Where the savage has wandered, by darkness debased,
Where the wolf and the bear unmolested did roam,
Away, far away, Deseret is my Home.

Deseret, Deseret, O I long to be there
With my brethren and sisters each blessing to share,
Nor regret I've forsaken the land of my birth
To dwell in this sweet favor'd spot of the earth,
Where Brigham and Heber, and Jeddie preside,
With all the full quorum of Priesthood beside,
Where the Law of the Lord is the standard of life,
Apart from old Babylon's darkness and strife.

Deseret, Deseret, she's the pride of the World,
Where the banner of Freedom is widely unfurled,
Where Plenty and Peace they are smiling around,
And Wretchedness, Poverty, Strife, are not found,
Where labor is honor'd, and workmen caress'd
And children instructed and age finds a rest,
And society frowns upon vice and deceit,
And adulterers quickly do beat a retreat.

Deseret, Deseret, she has long been oppressed,
But now for a while she is taking her rest,
She feels like a giant refresh'd with new wine,
And enjoys from Jehovah His blessings benign,
She's a heart that can feel for another's deep woe,
And with charity, blessings on others bestow,
Returns Good for evil to to those who oppress,
And await the time coming to gain her redress.

Deseret, Deseret, shews the pattern to all,
That all may take warning, ere Babylon shall fall,
And flee to the mountains when trouble shall come,
To be safe from the Plagues in this beautiful Home.
O, how I long for the time to draw near
When the earth will be freed from oppression and fear,
And the truth rule triumphant, o'er the sea and the land,
And Jesus our Saviour will take the command.

June 14, 1855. WM. WILLIS.
EAST INDIA MISSION.

A SKETCH IN UTAH.

It was a fine evening in April of 1853, when Capt. I——s waited on the Col. of the Company stationed in the heart of the city of the Saints, and requested permission to visit the encampment just formed, previous to marching to Rush Valley. This visit was peremptorily refused. He then left the Colonel's quarter's in high dudgeon, and called to his counsel other officers whose object was like his own — seduction; and by their assistance obtained an escort for the contemplated abduction of a widow's only child, just turned of 12 years. The carriage and fine team ready they pranced through the city, evidently expecting a signal from some source, or the appearance of some person.

We will now change the scene to a small house situated in the 17th ward, where around the table are seated three persons at the evening meal. The first to be noticed is the widow and owner of the house. The second her only child, whom for many years she has struggled with poverty and adverse circumstances, to rear this pledge of affection, left her by her husband to raise and prepare for usefulness in this world and the next. Hopes great and fair, were now on the eve of consumation. But little thought that anxious mother, and unsuspecting daughter, that a serpent sipped the other cup of tea. This third person was the Captain's lady of convenience, and by him sent to get into the net this new and unfledged bird. The table cleared and a walk proposed, the two sallied forth to promenade the city, on the streets less frequented, and presently a dashing team came by, and from a signal by the minion of the Captain, the coachman was ordered to stop, and the gallant Captain alighted, and gracefully bowing asked the ladies to ride. The unitiated one by great pressing consented. By the Captain's order the carriage took the direction of the bridge crossing Jordon. Presently the escort came in sight, and by a secret signal they quickly rode up on either side of the carriage. The younger lady at this became alarmed and anxiously asked whither they were going; when the Captain assured her for an evening ride beyond the Jordon. She plead her mother's ignorance of her whereabouts, her desire to return home, and for the carriage now to be driven towards her home. What a word? And what associations for this home, will prove no more a home to her, or if it does she crosses not its threshold pure and clean again. She is now in the fangs of the serpent. The slime of seduction was already on the victim, and a little longer and she will be devoured. The bridge is gained and on the other side the word is given "press on." The spur and whip answer to the excited command of the Captain. Soon the city is lost to view. Darkness settles down, and the anxious mother goes frequently to the door to watch her daughter's coming, but she comes not. She shuts the door, her heart beats as she hears the foot fall of the passer by, but yet she comes not. She never knew her daughter out so late before. Being poor she could afford no light to cheer her now doubly lonely apartment. — Nine, ten, o'clock, and no daughter yet. She seeks her bed to rest her weary limbs and heavy heart in slumber. A doze came on her. She dreamed and in her dream she saw her daughter clasped in the arms of a man. She saw her hair dishevelled, and her dress disordered. She saw her child struggling and heard the piercing scream, and mother, help, help, met her ear. She rushed from her bed, and ran to a neighbor's house, and told her dream, they then ran through the city seeking who could give them a clue to the desired information. The mother stopped the police, they knew not. In her anxiety for her child she sought the Gubernatorial residence, and to the governor her tale of sorrow was quickly told. She rehearsed her dream, described the man her dream portrayed, and like lightning the truth flashed on his mind, and a note was dropped to the Colonel desiring the immediate return of the girl.

Here again we change the scene.

The carriage and escort have reached the place known as the Cook's quarters. The Captain alights, Soon refreshments are served, which all partake. — The repast finished another drive to the soldiers camp. A neat little tent is prepared and the ladies enter. Soon the minion leaves the Captain and the child alone.

Here we drop the curtain of the tent and leave the reader to fill up the balance of the scene.

Orders were issued from the Captain for ten rounds of cartridges to be given to the soldiers and that every man sleep on his arms. This fulfilled we now retrace our steps to the Colonel's room and at the table we see a tall figure carefully reading a note, just handed him by a soldier in attendance. He reads it with anxious gaze. The lip curls and an expression escapes, not polite, he hastily snatches a paper from his portfolio and writes:

CAPTAIN: — Your premature love affair is likely to produce mischief. Bring back the girl. The Governor threatens hard. Return forthwith we must observe appearances. Yours, &c.

The soldier was summoned and ordered to mount the favorite charger and haste as fast as possible to Rush Valley.

Here we leave the express and again visit the Colonel's room.

Now midnight. He is striding the floor with hurried steps and occasionally bringing his hand down, muttering some harsh word. His reverie is broken by a rap at the door. "Come in," was all the reply given, when the door opened and an elderly lady entered. She takes the seat indicated by the wave of the hand, for in his deep thoughts were sunk his usual polite address. By the light of the candle we discover the reddened eye of grief and sorrow. In hurried strains she told the cause of her sorrow. Her child, her only child had been taken from her. She sought his interference to rescue her child from infamy and disgrace. She sobbed aloud and the mother's heart would seem to beat, demanding outlet in bursting from its encasement. The Colonel promised and even told her he had dispatched a messenger to bring them back. He bid her go home and the morning should see her child returned pure. (Uncertain word.) She left the apartment and again sought her pillow, but not natures repose, for it came not.

Here we leave her on that bed alone with her sad thoughts.

Meanwhile the express sped its way. A commotion is in the camp as the sound of horses hoofs is heard. The sentinel cries, "Who comes here?" The answer gives admittance. By this time the camp was under arms to resist what they supposed and the Capt. expected — a rescue. The messenger seeks the tent of the Captain, who had by this time hastily put on his clothes and struck a light. He drew aside the curtain of his tent and asked the cause of this sudden uproar. The messenger in soldier style, brings his hand to his cap, and gives a letter to the Captain. He lets drop the curtain and throws himself down on the buffalo robe, and reads the letter just handed him. He tells the inmate of his bed, the child, the contents of the same. He takes one more embrace and bids her hurry, while he goes and prepares Miss ——, his minion, to return, he passed two tents and calls at the door of the one occupied by Lieut. T., and told the lady he is search of, the news. They all prepare for town. The morning sun sees them at the mother's door, and the Captain under arrest. A petition is circulated for an extra sitting of the court pursuant to the Organic Act. The requisite signers being obtained the court convenes. The Grand Jury presents the Captain for abduction, Between the time of calling court the Captain and Lieutenant called on the mother and offered gold to pay for outraged honor and virtue. Her Son-in-law, Mr. Davis, rushed in indignant, with pistol in hand and demanded clearance of these pests of society, these debauchees. — They left, the house, but the fatal evidence of accomplished purpose was plainly read on the features of the girl, for she was now the brazen hidious thing the Captain's gallantry had made her. The Deputy Sheriff Mr. Johnson, armed with a process issued by the court waited on the Captain to arrest him. He refused to be arrested as he was under th arrest of the military power. The question now arrose which should take the precedence, the civil or military. The Colonel solicited and obtained an interview with the Judge, which resulted in the Captain being placed under the charge of the civil law. Now came the busy time for the Captain and his friends. Gold flew plenty. Witnesses, and ladies of the army bribed. Some fled to distant parts of the territory to keep out of the way, until the case was over. Council after council was held at the Hotel of a certain high functionary. Officers civil and millitary met in grand conclave to determine what to do. At the close of some councils, met the lawyer and attorney, prices, fees, and all agreed on. Liquor, oaths, jests, obscene and strong-handed denunciations ran high. With the liquor flowed the recital of the number of dupes under promise of marriage and now in camp, was the theme of these midnight revels. The court sat, and the gallant Captain accompanied by his friend in all things, Mr. R., appeared in court. These two were recently admitted to the practice of law in the Supreme court of the United States; now the one a criminal and the other his friend; yet mutual helpers in seduction. The cases being territorial, the Hon, A. Carrington prosecuted. The Hon, A. W. B. defended. Flaws were found by him in the indictments, these were overuled and the case proceeded. The prosecution found to their dismay that the principal witness was gone. And then on whom could they depend — on none but whores made by the soldiers and officers. To prosecute was but to fail. The main stays were gone, and the only chance was to with draw the case. Yet the eager multitude, who knew the facts, knew the accused to be guilty. He was discharged but not clear; he left the court room congratulated by Mr. R., and three Lieutenants, L., M. and T. Rum, segars, &c., at somebody's expense, closed the ride through the ci., accompanied by the girls. Heavy bills of fancy dress were now run up, and now the grand cortege moved again to Rush Valley. Meanwhile orders were issued by the Colonel that no girls should accompany the soldies; but in spite of the order twenty-three went. The effect of the sojourn here is the fruitful cause of dire calamity among themselves, as quarrel after quarrel was the result.

Here we leave them, the girls on the road to California, and to common prostitution, and a premature grave, and the men followed by the curses of heart-broken mothers, and the anguish of sisters robbed of sisters, lovers of their plighted ones, and scenes more horrible to relate than the most sanguine need require to form a volumne of well dressed facts.

The winter of 1854 has been one of the dryest kind, to the peace, tranquility and usual order of the city. Gambling at the Hotel above referred to, and the intercourse of the United States Attorney with Ammon's Squaw, was most disgraceful, at the trial of the Indians for the murder of Capt. Gunnison, the whole affair came out before the court. The trial of the Indians was a perfect burlesque, which burlesque cost the United States considerable money and resulted in the Indians putting on the officers of the army a blind Indian, and crippled one, and two old squaws and a boy, and they had no more to do with the murder than Baalam's animal had to do with speaking Latin. Further Details of the Southern Tour of the First Presidency and Company.

Left Manti at 7 1-2 A. M., May 14th; crossed Pine creek at 10 1-2, Sanpete creek at 11 1-2, nooned on Gresewood creek, and at 6 1-2 P. M., camped in a cove of the mountains two and a half miles south of Sevier river. The ground was moistened with a shower in the evening.

15th, started at 6 1-2 A. M., reached Lake Valley springs at 9 1-2, rested at Cedar springs at 11, and arrived in Fillmore at 3 P. M. Weather warm, with a high wind driving heavy clouds of dust all day. At 5 o'clock a meeting was held in the school house, which is quite a good building, for a beginning. Each of the First Presidency addressed the congregation.

16th, started at 7 1-2 A. M., arrived at Meadow creek at 9 1-2, and at 11 1-4, having traveled several miles to the left of the main road, we reached the settlement of the Pahvante Indians; went into Kanoshe's house, and found him quite friendly, as were also his band—a number of whom, with Kanoshe, concluded to accompany the camp. Nooned at Black Rock Point; left there at 2 1-2, and camped on Cove creek. The water was scant, and one and a half miles above the camp—where it sank.

17th, left Cove creek at 5 1-2 A. M. On Pine creek, at 9, met a company from California with eight wagons, with mule teams, laden with groceries. One P. M., camped on Beaver river. Kanoshe was sick to-day, but Dr. Sprague gave him some pills, and he is recovering. The brethren guthered with the natives round a cheerful fire, whilst the hymn was sung, "Oh stop and tell me red man,"—with other appropriate songs. Kanoshe, when informed of what we sang, replied, "good," and felt much pleased. Brother W. Woodruff has enjoyed himself along, angling; at which he exhibits much skill and patience. It is but fair to say that he paid his tithing of two fish to Presis Young and Kimball, to-day.

18th, left the Beaver at 6 A. M., halted at 1 P. M. on Little Creek, and arrived at Parowan at 4 P. M., where we found brother Geo. A. Smith, in the enjoyment of good health. President Brigham Young addressed a meeting in the evening, at some length on the subjects of consecration and general improvement, and enjoyed much of the spirit of the Lord.

19th, started from Parowan at 9 1-4 A. M., weather windy, and clouds of dust flying. Arrived at Cedar City at 1 P. M., and stopped at H. C. Haight's. At 4 P. M., Presidents B. Young, H. C. Kimball, and J. M. Grant visited the Deseret Iron Works, and found the operatives casting machinery to expedite the heating of the large furnace, by what is termed "the warm blast."

20th, meeting in the school house at 10 A. M., when President B. Young, by unanimous agreement, turned the meeting into into a special conference, as business had to be transacted pertaining to that stake.

The following named persons were unanimously elected to fill the offices named:—

I. C. HAIGHT, President.

High Councilors:

RICHARD HARRISON,
JONATHAN PUGMIRE, sen.,

The new Emperor of Russia.

An American gentleman, who has the entree at the Court of St. Petersburg, writes in these terms to a friend in New York city, largely interested in steam machinery: "Do not believe that the Emperor Alexander is of any softer material than his father Nicholas, or that he will let England and France off before he has taken the starch out of them. He has either repeated, or very soon will repeat plainly the offer his father made to our government. He will give the United States the whole of Russian America, (which carries with it immense whale fisheries, and the unlimited control of the Pacific coast,) for the privilege of buying and fitting steamships and privateers in our ports. As it is not known in Russia that English agents have been permitted to recruit for the Crimean army in New York, the allies cannot complain if the American cabinet accepts this fine offer. In case it does, thirty millions of dollars will be spent among our laborers and mechanics by the Russians, and our clipper-built ships will find a prompt market. Alexander speaks English like one born to it, and keeps the run of American papers with surprising accuracy. Soon after his accession, he said to a party of Americans who were presented to him: "Our countries have at heart one interest in common—to cure England of her mania for giving law to other nations."

FROM THE RIO GRANDE.

The Brownsville Flag of the 10th instant has the following in regard to matters in North-Eastern Mexico:

"Though no actual fighting has yet occurred between the insurgents and the Government troops on this frontier, the two parties are assuming positions which will render such a result inevitable ere the lapse of many days. By the arrival from Monterey of a gentleman of undoubted varacity, we learn that the insurgents, under the leadership of the intrepid Vidauri, are marching upon Matamoras in strength numbering some twenty-five hundred men, composed of artillery, cavalry, and infantry. He represents them as well armed and equipped — provided with every thing requsite for a regular campaign. The second in command is Carvajal, whose advanced guard he passed at Las Cuevas, between Camargo and Reynoso. The latter town is the first one on the river above Matamoras, some sixty miles distant. There, we presume, the first battle will be fought, as the Government troops are said to have fallen back from Camargo upon Reynoso, on account of its strong natural position, which they are sull further strengthening by fortifications. In Reynoso there are said to be some six hundred regular troops, who are doubtless at this hour manaced by Carvajal's command of a thousand men.

To reinforce the garrison at Reynoso, Gen. Woll has left Matamoras at the head of something near 300 men — his whole available force — leaving in Matamoras barely men sufficient for garrison duty; while Vidauri is marching with more than thrice the number of liberators from Mouterey to the aid of Carvajal. The Government troops are represented as discontented and reluctant — driven forward by the bayonet — while the insurgents are fired with the greatest enthusiam.

Thus matters stand at the time of our going to press. Doubtless before our next issue, a bloody and decisive battle will have taken place. If the insurgents prove victorious, thus the existing Government will have but one other foothold on this frontier — Matamoras, will alone remain, and that place will not be able to hold out many weeks. — While on the other hand should the Government win, the hunted liberals need expect no quarter from their infuriated enemy. Unfortunately, the narrow river that divides us offers too great an inducement to cross on to neutral ground when danger presses closely.

It is evident, however, that never before had the insurgents so great a promise of success. More than half the country is already in their hands. We are credibly informed that the insurgents of this frontier are in constant communication with those of the South—that a post of couriers has been established from Camargo to Acapulco, traveling the whole distance over the revolted districts.

MARRIED.

On Monday July 23d, by James H. Hart, at the house of Samuel Guy, GEORGE C. OSMOND and GEORGINA HUCKVALE, both from the London Conference, England. They left this city the following day bound for Utah, by Hooper and William's last train, intending to spend the honey moon on the plains. They are accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Meadows. We wish them a safe and happy transit across the plains to their Mountain home.

The reason why it succeeds.—THE Mustang Liniment has attained its enormous popularity, and almost universal use, simply because it gives better satisfaction, accomplishes more good, relieves more pain, and heals more wounds and sores than any other preparation ever before offered to the afflicted. Every bottle that is used, speaks for itself—tells its own tale in the relief it gives, and the cure it effects. And then one who has suffered, pehaps, long years with pain, without hope of relief, and finds in this Liniment an almost instantaneous remedy, cannot help but speak in its praise, and recommend it in the best terms to all he sees suffering. It needs no other recommendation than a trial.

LIFE'S HARVEST.

BY WM. EDWARD KNOWLES.

Ho! reaper of Life's Harvest,
Why stand with rusted blade,
Until night dawns round thee,
And day begins to fade!
Why stand ye idle, waiting
For reapers more to come!
The golden morn is passing—
Why sit ye idle, dumb!
Thrust in your sharpened sickle,
And gather in the grain;
The night is fast approaching,
And soon will come again.

Thy master calls for reapers,
And shall he call in vain?
Shall sheaves lie there ungathered,
And waste upon the plain?
Come down from hill and mountain,
In morning's ruddy glow,
Nor wait until the dial
Points to the noon below,
And come with the strong sinew,
Nor faint in heat or cold;
And pause not till the evening
Draws round its wealth of gold.

And mount the crumbling watch-towers,
And herald on the truth;
Preach out the golden precepts
To wild and wayward youth;
Mount up the heights of Wisdom,
And crush each error low;
Keep back no words of knowledge
That human heart should know,
Be faithful to thy mission,
In service of thy Lord,
And then a golden chaplet
Shall be thy just reward.

A LITTLE TOO PUNCTUAL.

A STEAMBOAT SKETCH.

BY THE OLD 'UN.

The hour was fast approaching for the departure of the New Haven steamboat from her berth at New York, and the usual crowd of passengers, and friends of passengers, news-boys, fruit venders, cabmen, and dock loafers, were assembled on and about the boat. We were gazing on the motley group from the foot of the promenade deck stairs, when our attention was attracted by the singular action of a tall brown Yankee, in an immense hat, chocolate-colored coat and pantaloons, and a fancy vest. He stood near the starboard paddle-box, and closely scrutinized every female that came on board every now and then consulting an enormous silver bull's eye watch, which he raised from the depths of a capacious fob, by means of a powerful steel chain. After mounting guard in this manner, he dashed furiously down the gang-plank and up the wharf, reappearing on board almost instaneously, with a flushed face, expressing the most intense anxiety. This series of operations he performed several times, after which he rushed about the boat, wildly and hopelessly ejaculating:

"What's the time er day? wonder if my repeater's fast? whar's the captain? whar's the steward? whar's the mate? whar's the boss that owns the ship?"

"What's the matter sir?" we ventured to ask him, when he stood still for a moment.

"Haint seen nothing of a gal in a blue sun bonnet, with a white Canton crape shawl, (cost fifteen dollars) pink gown and brown boots, hey? come aboard while I was looking for the captain at the pint end of the ship—have ye?"

"No such person has come aboard," we replied.

"Tormented lightning! she's my wife, married her yesterday. All her trunks and mine are aboard, under a pile of baggage as high as a Connecticut steeple. The darn'd black nigger says he can't hand it out, and I won't leave my baggage, any how. My wife—only think of it—was to have come aboard at half-past four and here it is nearly five; what's become of her? She can't have eloped—we ain't been married long enough for that. You don't think she's been abducted, do ye, mister? Speak, won't ye? Oh! I'm raving distracted! what are they ringing that bell for, is the ship afire?"

"It is the signal for departure—the first bell. The second will be ringing in four minutes."

Thunder! You dou't say so—whar's the captain?"

"That gentleman standing by the capstan."

"Captain stop the ship for ten minutes, won't ye?"

"I can't do it sir."

"But you must. I tell ye. I'll pay you for it. How much will ye ax?"

"I could not do it."

"Captain, I'll give ye tew dollars," cried the Yankee.

The captain shook his head:

"I'll give you five dollars and a half—a half—and a half—and a half and a half," he kept repeating, dancing about in his agony like a mad jackass on a hot iron plate.

"The boat leaves at five o'clock precisely, sir," said the captain, shortly, and turned away.

"O, you stunny hearted heathen," murmered the Yankee, almost bursting into tears "parting man and wife, and they jest one day married."

At this moment the huge paddle-wheels began to paw the water, and the walking beam descended heavily, shaking the huge fabric to her centre. All who were not going to New Haven went ashore.—The hands began to haul in the gang-plank, the fasts were cast loose.

"Leggo that plank!" roared the Yankee, collaring one of the deck hands. "Drop it like a hot potatoe, or I'll heave you into the dock."

"Yo—yo!" shouted the men in chorus, as they heaved on the gangway.

"Shut up you braying donkeys," yelled the maddened Yankee, "or there will be bloody work."

But the plank was got aboard, and the boat plashed past the pier.

In an instant the Yankee pulled off his coat, flung his hat beside it on the deck, and rushed wildly to the guard.

"Are you drunk or crazy?" cried a passenger seizing him.

"I'm going to fling myself into the dock and swim ashore. I musn't leave Sairy Ann alone in New York city. You may divide the baggage among ye. Leg go me, I can swim.

He struggled so furiously that the consequences of his rashness might have been fatal had not a sudden aparition changed his purpose. A very pretty young woman in a blue bonnet, white Canton crape shawl, pink dress, and brown boots, came towards him.

The big brown Yankee uttered one stentorian shout of "Sairy Ann!" clasped her in his arms, in spite of her struggling, and kissed her heartily, right before all the passengers.

"Where did you come from?" he eagerly inquired.

"You told me at half past four," replied she, "but I thought I'd make sure, and come at four."

"A little too punctual," said the Yankee, "But it's all right now. Hallo, captain, you can go ahead now, I don't care about stopping. Come nigh losing the passage-money and the baggage—come nigh gittin' drowned, Sairy, all along of you—but it's all right now—go ahead, steamboat—rosin up there firemen—darn the expense!"

When the sun set, the loving couple were seen seated on the upper deck, the brown Yankee's arm encircling the slender waist of the young woman in the blue bonnet and pink dress. We believe they reached their destination safe.

THE WHEAT CROP—PRICES.

It is a difficult matter to determine what an average crop, reduced to bushels, would amount to in any State, for the reason that statistics, collected under the authority of Government, have been exceedingly defective. The yield of 1850, according to the census returns, was, in round numbers, 54,000,000 bushels, in the States of Ohio, Pennsylvania, New York and Virginia, but an average crop in those States is estimated at about 75,000,000 bushels. The crop of the present year, however, is slightly below the latter. The severe drought of last summer and fall prevented farmers from sowing the usual amount of seed, and it is generally admitted that the breadth of land planted is less than usual.—The increased yield per acre, and the improved quality, make it up in part, however, for this decrease, and it is safe to estimate the yield in the four States named at 65,000,000 bushels, which, though below an average, is an increase as compared with last year of at least 15,000,000 bushels.

In all the other States, however, that grow wheat to any extent, there is a large increase, some of them having produced twice as much as in any previous year. Taking the products as stated in the census returns of 1850, for the basis, and estimating the probable increase this year over that, we have the following result:

	1850.	1855.
Ohio, bus.	14,487,000	16,000,000
Pennsylvania,	45,367,000	18,000,000
Virginia,	11,212,000	12,000,000
New York,	13,121,000	15,000,000
Alabama,	294,000	500,000
Illinois,	9,414,000	13,000,000
Indiana,	6,214,000	10,000,000
Iowa,	1,530,000	2,500,000
Kentucky,	2,142,000	3,000,000
Maryland,	4,494,000	4,000,000
Michigan,	4,925,000	6,000,000
Missouri,	2,981,000	4,000,000
Tennessee,	1,619,000	3,500,000
Wisconsin,	4,286,000	7,000,000
Totals	92,086,000	114,500,000

The above figures show an increase as compared with the crop reported in 1850—of twenty-two million bushels. The aggregate yield in 1850 was doubtless much larger than indicated by the figures above, as is also the crop of the present year; but the statement shows the comparative yield. Last year the crop was smaller than in 1850, by at least twenty-five per cent. so that the increase this year as compared with last, is over forty million bushels. while it appears, from the figures thus furnished, that the crop is not excessively large, it is also shown that there is a sufficient quantity in the country to supply the home demand at moderate prices, and leave a large surplus for export. It may be said that it will require this surplus to fill the vacuum that exists, with reference to stocks, as compared with ordinary years, and the amount to be marketed will not be sufficiently large to secure any material reduction in prices.

It must be considered, however, in this connection that the exhaustion of supplies of wheat, this season, is attributable fully as much to the failure of other crops, as to the short yield of this grain. There was not a full crop of any cereal, and in addition to this there was not more than one-fourth of a crop of vegetables. Consequently, wheat was consumed to a much greater extent than it would otherwise have been. This year, we have not only an average crop of wheat, but the crops of other grains, and all kinds of vegetables promise to be usually large.

We must therefore look for a very material decline in prices of flour, and all kinds of grain. There will be an abundant supply of all kinds for home consumption, and as large a surplus for export as foreign countries may require. England has a prospect of a very fine harvest, and not withstanding the probable cutting off of supplies from the wheat-growing regions of the Black Sea, it is not likely, that with a large home yield, she will take any great quantity from us, except at reasonable rates; and in determining what reasonable rates are, we must not look into the past season for a comparison.

It is impossible, that in the face of good crops, present prices could be maintained. Even when the famine prevailed in Europe, and the exports of breadstuffs from this country were larger than at any time before or since that period, no such prices have been realized as those current for six months past. To ascertain the probable range of prices for the product of the incoming harvest, we must therefore look to the averages of ordinary years.—[Cincinnati Price Current.

THE EARTH'S RING.—The Boston correspondent of the New York Tribune says:

"In one of my letters I gave you some account of the earth's ring, discovered or rather identified by Lieut. Jones of the navy—as I called him I have since learned that the fortunate finder of our planet's ornament is not a lieutenant but a chaplain. He is the Rev. George Jones, I believe—certainly he is the reverend Jones. He was a clergyman at Annapolis, Md., and was appointed a chaplain in the expedition to Japan. By the advice of some scientific friends he devoted himself during the voyage to observations on the zodiacal light, a phenomenon of the natural history of the heavens which has puzzled astronomers for a long while, and of which the only theory previous to that of Mr. Jones, was the unsatisfactory one, that the light, was a ring around the sun between the earth's orbit or Mars. By a series of observations carefully made morning and evening, for two or three years, in all the latitudes traversed to and from Japan, Mr. Jones has come to the conclusion, supported by a chain of apparently irresistable reasoning, that the zodiacal light is a ring around the earth inside of the moon's orbit, and probably in the same plane within that orbit. It is not so dense as the ring of Saturn apparently, though on that point, as well as on its breadth, thickness and exact distance from the earth, it is not possible at present to form a reliable opinion."

One Month later from New Mexico.

INDEPENDENCE, July 24.—The Santa Fe mail reached here day before yesterday. From the correspondence we glean only a few items of news.

Col. Fentleroy returned on the 28th from his pursuit of the Utah Indians.

The troops overtook a party of them on the head waters of the Arkansas, killed forty and took four or five prisoners. They also took thirty head of animals and a lot of camp equippage, tents, &c. One of the soldiers in Major Brook's Company was killed.

Notwithstanding the vigilance of the troops, small parties of Indians slip into the settlements and kill and rob at their pleasure.

Bishop Lemy had a portion of his stock run off, his herdsmen killed, and one of the boys captured. In the latter part of June a Mexican was shot within eighteen miles of Albuquerque, and other instances of the kind occur in many parts of the Territory.

A convention was held in Albuquerque on the 26th, which nominated Miguel Otero, as a candidate for Delegate to Congress. He will be opposed by Gallegos, who, it is thought, will be elected.

Business throughout the country small and money scarce.

The Paymaster and Quartermaster's Department as to money, is in low condition.

Some of the merchant teams had arrived at Santa Fe, and the remainder were met at different points.

The troops were seen by the mail party at Little Creek, Arkansas, and Walnut Creek, going along well.

The Kiowas, Comanches and Cheyenne Indians were at the crossing, receiving their annuities from the Government.

A settlement at Walnut Creek was just being made by a party of Missourians, making the distance now between civilized points on the Santa Fe route, about 350 miles

The gold fever here is yet unabated. Several small parties left to-day for the diggins.

Rains have been abundant lately, enlivening up, and calculated to give corn without stint or at low prices. Nothing of interest from the Kansas Legislature.

Discovery of a Petrified Indian.

We learn from a friend that as the workmen on the Milwaukee and La Crosse railroad were at work upon an excavation near Schleisingerville, a few days since, the petrified remains of an Indian were found and with his remains, relics of olden times. The remains are perfect, not having suffered by decay. His height, at the present day, would be considered gigantic—his body measuring seven feet and two inches in length. On his breast was a plate of copper, on which were engraved numerous hieroglyphics, the meaning of which can hardly be imagined. But there they are a record of the past. Could these hieroglyphics be read, they might, perhaps, unvail some of the mistery which hangs like a dark cloud over the history of the red-man. An arrow of considerable strength and curious construction, was also found with him, and especially invites the attention of antiquarians.

These remains may be seen at the store of Caspar Liver, in Schleisingerville, for a few days. In a short time, they will be forwarded to Madison.—[Washington Co. Organ, June 9th.

Attorneg General Cushing has confirmed the sentiment, that we are to be "well off with the old love, before we are on with the new." He has decided that a new appointment does not take effect until the incumbent is duly notified of it by the President, or by the new officer exhibiting his commission; unless some special notification of discharge is given. The old officer continues to be entitled to compensation until he ceases to perform the duties of the office.

MC'LEAN'S VOLCANIC OIL LINIMENT is truly a celebrated remedy, and has done more to alleviate human suffering than any other remedy ever discovered.

One or two applications will relieve the most severe pain, bruise or sprain.

Two bottles will cleanse, purify, and heal the foulest ulcer or sore, and it will heal the most severe burn or scald without a scar.

Every family should have a supply constantly on hand, for use in time of need.

Read the following extract of a letter, which is incontestable proof of its wonderful efficacy:

A BLIND MAN RESTORED TO SIGHT.

J. H. MCLEAN—Dear Sir: * * * I have been suffering for four years with rheumatic sore eyes, being at times altogether blind. I procured the advice of several physicians, but none of them could do me any good. By the advice of a friend I applied your "Volcanic Oil Liniment," according to the directions around the bottle, and it has cured me permanently. I have used it since for bruises, pains, &c., and it has always given immediate relief. I live on the main road near Farmington.

Yours, respectfully, JOHN H. ALLERD.

Jefferson county, Mo.

For horses it is far superior to any other remedy for curing lameness, bruises, cuts, old sores, swellings, &c.

We say, then, to all who may be suffering from external diseases, call at once and get a supply. Thousands of bottles are sold (and used) daily, and we have never heard of a case where it has failed in giving relief when properly applied.

☞For sale by J. H. MCLEAN, the proprietor, corner Third and Pine streets, St. Louis, and by all respectable dealers in Medicines everywhere

MEDICINE FOR THE BILLION!

A Certain Remedy for all Diseases of

MAN OR ANIMALS,

Requiring an External Application.

Warranted in every Case for which it is Recommended!

THE MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT!

Unlike all other popular medicines, it is used by many prominent members of the faculty, and many of the public Hospitals. Their prejudices have yielded to indisputable and incontrovertible demonstrations of cures performed where their remedies had failed.

It has cured more cases of

RHEUMATISM

than any other medicine ever used. Its efficacy in this terrible disease is acknowledged by all who have used it. It not only cures the complaint, but appears to give a vigor and elasticity to the limbs, before unknown, thus performing a double office.

A FEW TESTIMONIALS.

PATH FINDER OFFICE, May 11, 1854.

G. W. WESTBROOK:—

Please send me by the bearer three large bottles of your Mexican Mustang Liniment, as I wish to take it up to my place in Vermont, not thinking it advisable to do without it. I have used it in my family and on my horses, and have found it invaluable. Yours,

J. T. WHITNEY.

ELIZABETHTOWN, TENN., May 25, 1855.

MR. G. W. WESTBROOK:—

Dear Sir—It affords me much pleasure in saying to you that the Mexican Mustang Liniment outsells any medicine that I have ever had for sale, and comes nearer doing what it promises to do. Send me another supply, as I am nearly out. Yours respectfully,

JOHN SINGLETRAY, P. M.

PHILADELPHIA, June 11, 1854.

MR. G. W. WESTBROOK:

Sir—My son was afflicted with a swelling upon the knee joint, which confined him to the house. I had a doctor attending him for some time, but he did not do him any good. One of my neighbors told me to use the Mustang Liniment. I asked the doctor if I could do so, and he told me he thought I could not do better.

I procured one bottle, and in about a week he was able to go out. I can safely recommend it to the afflicted.

Respectfully yours, MRS. BENNETT.

W. S. Ladd & Co., of Portland, Oregon, writes that there is an immense demand for the Mexican Mustang Liniment in that country, and orders forty gross to be shipped by Golden Gate, that sails in a few days from New York.

Park & White of San Francisco, California, order 100 gross, to be forwarded by first clipper for that port.

PORT AU PRINCE, HAYTI, Jan. 16th, 1854.

I had the pleasure to receive invoice and boxes Mexican Mustang Liniment per Croton, and have no doubt it will have a brisk sale on the island.

MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT.

FARMERS AND LIVERY STABLE KEEPERS

have need it for the following diseases with extraordinary success, certifying invariably to the efficacy of the Liniment, and the truthfulness of our assertions in its behalf:

Spavin, Splint, Ring-bone, Fistula, Wind Galls, Big Head, Bruises, Strains, String-halt, Scratches, Cracked Heels, Sweeny, Saddle, Collar, or Harness Galls, Hard Lumps or Tumor, Films or other diseases of the Eye, Poll-Evil, &c.

The small sizes retail for 25 cents per bottle;
The medium size retail for 50 cents per bottle;
The large sizes retail for one dollar per bottle.
The medium holds three times as much as the small;
The Large holds nearly three times as much as the medium;
Therefore the large bottles are the cheapest.

DISCOURSE

By President Brigham Young, Tabernacle, April 6, 1855.

Twenty-five years ago to-day this Church was organized with six members. More had been baptised by brother Joseph, but he having received a revelation to organize the Church, and only six members being present they were all that were then incorporated. Many of the faithful brethren and sisters, who embraced the gospel of salvation in the early days of the history of this work, have no doubt often looked over the ground this Church has traversed, and have been enabled to discern the invisible hand of the Lord in the preservation of this people in the various scenes they have passed through.

Many times, to all human appearance, there was no temporal salvation for the Saints. Again, those who were not faithful, beholding things as the natural man beholds them, have left the Church; yes, scores of them, hundreds of them, thousands of them, both male and female. They looked at this kingdom and, considering its progress upon seemingly natural principles, discovered it was best for them to leave it, and if possible save their lives. Those who have been faithful can witness this day, that those who have sought to save their lives have lost them, while those who have sought diligently to build up the kingdom of God, who have clung to the commandments of the Lord, who have not counted their lives dear to them, have saved their lives.

It is marvelous, it is marvelously strange, and truly it is a marvelous work and a wonder, to those destitute of the revelations of Jesus Christ, when they reflect upon the history of this people, in their travels and progress; and it has been a wonder to all who have been acquainted with it.

Those who were acquainted with the rise of this Church, with the lives and acts of the few who then believed the gospel, and with the lives and acts of many who surrounded them, discovered then that the powers of darkness, the power of the enemy of all righteousness were leveled against the few who believed in the Book of Mormon, and who believed that Joseph Smith was a Prophet. Whether they were six in number, or six times six, or whether there was but one it made no difference. Just as soon as the Book of Mormon was declared to the people, or to a neighborhood, and proclaimed to be the history of the aborigines of our country, and to contain the will of God to the people formerly, and that the Lord Jesus appeared to the inhabitants of this continent and revealed to them the gospel; that the kingdom of God was built up here; that the Lamanites were a remnant of the house of Israel; and that the set time had come for the Lord to favor Zion and gather Israel; at that very time, on that very day, the powers of darkness were arrayed against the Prophet, against the Book of Mormon and those who believed it to be what it purported to be.

Has this spirit of persecution ceased? No, not in the least, but it has steadily increased. I was somewhat acquainted with the coming forth of the Book of Mormon, not only through what I read in the newspapers, but I also heard a great many stories and reports which were circulated as quick as the Book of Mormon was printed, and began to be scattered abroad. Then the spirit of persecution, the spirit of death, the spirit of destruction immediately seemed to enter the hearts of the pious priests more particularly than any other portion of the people, they could not bear it. Among those who professed great faith and great piety, and believed in the blessings of sanctification and professedly believed in the ministering of angels, and in the gift of the Holy Ghost, and that it was the privilege of christians to enjoy the gifts and graces of the spirit now, as well as in ancient times, as quick as the Book of Mormon was introduced into conversation, a spirit would rise in them, causing them to wish to destroy that book and every person who believed in it. They would say, "it is from hell, it is from the bottomless pit, it is of the devil; and those who believe in it ought to go to hell; it is a pity that such a delusion should be permitted to rise in our christian country." Such expressions came from the mouths of religious priests, from the mouths of leading characters in society, from those who professed to hold the keys of salvation, and to teach the people the way of life. Has this spirit ceased? No, it has not, but it has constantly increased. And to my certain knowledge, through the visions of the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ, I did know, I did see, I did understand, before I went into the waters of baptism, that this spirit of persecution would increase. As the kingdom of God increased upon the earth, so would the power of the enemy increase in like manner, to keep pace with it; and there never would be a time, except for a short period, that this people would have rest until Israel was fully gathered, was redeemed and built up, and the Lord had drawn the dividing line between the righteous and the wicked.

This Church has lived twenty-five years and is not dead yet, although a great many of its members have gone behind the vail. Those who were first baptised into the Church have almost entirely left this stage of action. I presume there is not a single person in this congregation who embraced the Book of Mormon in the fall of 1829, or in the fore part of the year 1830. The Prophet, his father, and his brothers, except one, are gone behind the vail. I suppose that Martin Harris, and Joseph's mother are living, but Oliver Cowdery has gone to his long home, and most of the witnesses of the Book of Mormon have died; and I know of but very few in these valleys who embraced the faith of the gospel in the early days of the rise of this Church. When I call to mind the multitudes with whom I have been acquainted in this kingdom, and reflect how few there are who have stood firm, and how many have apostatized, I often at first think it is strange, but again, it is no marvel, realizing as I do that every person who lives in this Church must be faithful. They cannot run by sight, but must actually exercise faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, in order to enjoy the light of the Holy Ghost. When they neglect this the spirit of the world takes possession of them, and they become cold and fruitless, and pine away into darkness, and spiritual death, and finally leave us. Will this continue? Yes.

Perhaps there are many who are astonished to see people apostatize, but it really is no marvel, it is no astonishment at all. If you wish to know the reason why they apostatize, it is because they neglect their duty, lose the spirit of the Lord, and the spirit of the holy gospel that they received when they first embraced it. Many receive the gospel because they know it is true; they are convinced in their judgment that it is true; strong argument overpowers them, and they are rationally compelled to admit the gospel to be true upon fair reasoning.—They yield to it, and obey its first principles, but never seek to be enlightened by the power of the Holy Ghost; such ones frequently step out of the way.

Say they, "Mormonism is true, but I am not going to stand it; I am not going to abide this severe temporal loss; I am not going to stay here and have my rights trampled upon; I am not going to be checked in my career; I do not wish to be trammeled in my doings, but I want my liberty perfectly; still I believe it to be true with all my heart."

Well, right upon these statements, if such men only believe Mormonism to be true, and that too, no stronger than they do, they are not so far ahead, in this particular, as the devils in hell, for they both believe and know that the gospel is true. They believe and know that Jesus is the Christ, they believe in the old and new Testament, and in the Book of Mormon, and know that they are true. They know when a true prophet comes forth upon the earth, if they did not they would not raise up persecution against him. Not only believing, but knowing that the gospel is true they are arrayed in opposition to the truth, and lay every plan and scheme, that it is possible for devils to invent, to overthrow the kingdom of God on earth, that they may retain possession of the world still longer.

Will there still be apostacy? Yes, brethren and sisters, you may expect that people will come into the Church, and then apostatize. You may expect that some people will run well for a season, and then fall out by the way. For example, take the parable of the sower that went out to sow, "and when he sowed, some seeds fell by the way side, and the fowls came and devoured them up; some fell upon stony places, where they had not much earth, and forthwith they sprung up, because they had no deepness of earth; and when the sun rose up, they were scorched; and because they had no root, they withered away. And some fell among thorns, and the thorns sprung up, and choked them; but others fell into good ground and brought forth fruit, some an hundred fold, some sixty fold, some thirty fold."

When the seed falls into good ground, it takes root, and brings forth fruit; such individuals will be faithful to the end. The seed that falls by the way side, for want of root cannot endure the scorching sun of persecution. Those who are represented by the seed among thorns cannot endure, because of the cares of the world, and the pride of life. The influence and power of the world, and of the adversary surrounding such individuals they are by and by turned away, and cease to be Saints, cease to serve the Lord, and turn every one to his own way. Is this strange to you? Yes, for a moment, you say it is very strange. What did you embrace Mormonism for? Some have embraced it for the truth's sake; some love the gospel because it is the gospel—because it is based upon true principles, and because it is the only system of doctrine revealed to the children of men, that is built upon a sure foundation. They love truth because it is truth, because it is light, and there is no darkness in it; and they fear not to come to the light that their deeds may be reproved, for they wish to get rid of their evil deeds. They love virtue because it is a holy principle by which the angels live; they love all the gospel principles because they are connected with eternity. and are the foundation of eternal lives, and will exalt the faithful to happiness and felicity, to kingdoms of glory, power, and immortality, and to all the knowledge and happiness that can be enjoyed by the intelligent beings who inherit eternity.

It is not for me to say how many embrace the gospel for the sake of the loaves and fishes; but really think from their conduct, that many have embraced the gospel to see if they cannot make gain of it; to see if there is any temporal advantage in it. Let this kingdom, or this people prosper—let them be free from persecution at this day—let our friends, our relatives, our former neighbors speak well of us and tell the truth with regard to our temporal prosperity, as they would of other people, and what would be the result? Thousands would professedly embrace the gospel for the advantages to be derived therefrom, to get a good name, and to obtain the riches which are of this world, and to be perfectly free from restraint. Let this kingdom prosper in a manner that all men will speak well of it, and let there be no trials, no threatenings, none to say "you shall be killed, you shall be destroyed," but let all say "peace shall be with you, we will bless you, we will neighbor with you, and hail you as our friends and brethren;" under such a state of things, thousands would professedly embrace the gospel for the sake of living in peace, and to obtain the riches of this world; thousands would professedly embrace the Book of Mormon, and the Book of Doctrine and Covenants for political advantages, for a great name, and to obtain what they are seeking after continually. What is that? To be spoken well of by everybody, to obtain power and great influence among men. Were I to give my own private opinion concerning the matter, I cannot say that a great many have come into this Church solely for the worldly advantages which they would derive therefrom. On the other hand, do all people join this Church with a pure intention; A great many embrace the gospel to be free from the iron hand of oppression, under which they are laboring continually, from year to year, in servile chains, toiling to get a morsel of bread to subsist upon. They are ground down and afflicted; their wages are cut down to the last penny they can live upon, when they know that they must labor or die.

Thousands are in this pitiable condition, and would embrace anything, I do not care what under the heavens was preached to them. You may go and preach the doctrines of Universalism, of Infidelity, or of any other belief in the world, you may boil them down and get their very essence, and with it tell those who are oppressed and borne down by the rich and the great, "you shall be delivered from your factories, you shall make your escape from your shops of toil; we are preaching this to the poor, now embrace our system and our doctrine, and you shall be delivered from this iron hand of oppression. We will take you to a land of plenty, to a land of freedom, where you can enjoy your rights and be blessed. and have the privilege of obtaining, with comparative ease like other men, all the comforts of this life." What is their reply? "O we will embrace your religion, if you will only take us away from these toils and this starvation." Many embrace the gospel actuated by no other motive than to have the privilege of being removed from their oppressed condition to where they will not suffer. They will embrace any doctrine under the heavens, if you will only take them from their present condition.

Are there any with us who act upon the same principle? O yes, you may, once in a while, see one who is acting upon that principle. Let persecution be heaped upon this people as it has been heretofore, even let the persecutors threaten, at the great distance from us that they are now, and those who have embraced the gospel with motives that are not in every sense pure, will say, "I am for embracing something else to get rid of persecution; I am for leaving these Latter-day Saints, lest affliction, trouble, and persecution come upon me and I be killed, or be made to suffer in the flesh. I am going to leave for California, or for the United States, or I am going to do something; I want to do that which will free me from all earthly suffering and trouble." Do these considerations touch one who has embraced the gospel because of its principles? No. Those who feel like forsaking the religion of Jesus Christ for such considerations, embraced it at first to better their temporal position in life, and for nothing else. This has always been the case with many, and when persecution has come, men and women have said, "I cannot bear it, I thought I was going to have happiness, and to enjoy life; I really supposed that my sorrows were all ended."

A great many have embraced the gospel believing that their sorrows would come to an end, at a certain period in this Church and kingdom, on the earth, and that too, speedily. I am a witness to this in my own experience and feelings. When I yielded obedience to the commandments of the Lord, the brethren were preparing to gather to a place that was called Zion, in Jackson county, on the western borders of the State of Missouri. I then actually had faith and the spirit of Zion to such a degree, that I supposed that if we got to Zion, our worldly sorrows and afflictions would cease. I had not however a disposition to go there myself, for I wanted to go to the world and proclaim the word of the Lord that was revealed to me, and on that account I never had the privilege of settling in that county.—The spirit of Zion which I then possessed is the spirit that inhabits the heavens and fills them, it is in and round about all heavenly beings.

When that spirit is imparted to individuals, they realize it as it is in its purity, and are not mindful, at all times, that they are still embodied in a tabernacle of clay that is subject to the power of the devil, and that is liable to be afflicted at any moment, and to have severe trials, and be opposed and persecuted as long as they are in the flesh. But when the spirit that fills eternity, is breathed into a person everything else is dispersed in a moment, and he sees Zion as it is in its purity, he then enjoys the spirit of Zion.

A great many people imbibed the same idea which I did in the beginning, and really believed that in Jackson county all the earthly sorrows, afflictions, disappointments, and weaknesses pertaining to the flesh would be at an end, and that every one would be sanctified before the Lord, and all would be peace and joy from morning until evening, and from year to year, until the Saviour should come.

The brethren who went then found themselves mistaken, in a very short time. Those who went there, and those who were acquainted with their going and coming, found the world, the flesh, and the devil there, just as much as any where else, unless they had faith to turn every spirit of the world out of doors, that is, out of their hearts. They found the same tempter, the same covetous feelings, and the same allurements there, as in other places.

When our Elders go out to preach the gospel, they tell the people to gather to Zion. Where is it? It is at the City of the Great Salt Lake, in the valleys of the mountains, in the settlements of Utah Territory, there is Zion now. But you perceive when you come here the same covetous feelings imbibed in the hearts of many, as in other places, the same tempter is here, and there are plenty of allurements; and unless the people live before the Lord in the obedience of his commandments, they cannot have Zion within them. They must carry it with them, if they expect to live in it, to enjoy it, and increase in it. If they do not do this, they are as much destitute of Zion here as they are in other places. Some enquire, "why cannot we serve God in other countries as well as here? You can just as well in England, in France, in Germany, in Italy, on the Islands of the Sea, in the United States, in California, or any where else, as you can here.—"Well then, let us go," say they. But hold on, you can serve him just as well any where else, when it is your duty to be there. If it is not your duty to be any where else, if you would serve him acceptably, it must be where he calls you. To what part of the earth is the Lord now calling his Saints? He has opened up their way far into the interior of North America, they are widely removed from all surrounding civilization.

"SNAIKS."

Every child knows that it was a serpent that charmed our common mother Eve, in Paradise, and there yet appears to be a most singular power of fascination remaining, not only in the persons of snakes themselves but also in the stories, that are told about them. Every one reads such stories, and we peruse them with a sort of strange delight that other tales equally thrilling fail to produce.

The papers of New Hampshire have lately contained a very strange snake story, of which we give below a full account:

A man and his wife in humble circumstances, by the name of Hill, live th Gilmanton, about two miles from London Ridge. They have several children, and among them a bright little girl six years old, who, some six weeks ago, got in the habit of going out and spending part of the day away from home. The father worked out at days work, and the mother was busy at home, and not much notice was taken of it though the girl remarked what nice times she had with her pets in the bushes, and several times she spoke about the snakes. It was supposed she spoke figurately, as children are apt to do, representing their dumb playthings as alive and possessed of intelligence.

One night she stayed out till past 9 o'clock, and her parents went out and called for her, but she did not answer. After a while she came home, and reluctantly told that she had been playing with the snakes. The mother's anxiety became great, and the next morning she persuaded her husband, before he went to his work, to go with the little girl and see if she found any snakes. They went off, and waited a moment, and out came two black snakes, one a little over four feet long, by measurement, and the other a monster of his kind, judged between six and seven feet long. The father looked with astonishment and fear, as he saw the snakes hasten with joy to the feet of his child, and yield delighted to her fondling caresses, coil themselves about her neck and bosom, crawl into her lap, and cuddle down together in child-like security and apparently fall to sleep while she patted and gently stroked them with her tiny hand. It reminds one of a few verses in "Dear Speckle-Back," by Mrs. Sheridan Cary:

"With wondrous gambolling, it crept
Straight to the infant's feet,
And, fawning joyously, appeared
Its visitor to greet.

"And pleasure did the nursling child
All touchingly reveal.
While with the gentle snake it toy'd,
And shared its little meal.

"On this side of the porringer
The bonny lambkin sat;
And lapping up its given share,
The serpent lay on that.

"So lovingly blithe Alice fed
With her strange chosen mate;
But ever as the creature sought
To pilfer from the plate,

"She softly tapp'd it on the head,
And lispingly did chide,
'Fieb, Spettie bat! dear Spettie bat!
Teep on de oder thide!'"

The father became indignant and ordered his daughter to go home, if those were her playmates. He went off to his work and she remaied with the snakes in spite of the orders. So things rested for a few days, an older sister going with her and seeing her play with and feed the disgusting reptiles. At last the parents became much excited about the matter, the mother threatening to shoot the snakes if her husband did not kill them, the child protesting against it. But the prevailing idea that if you kill the charmer, the charmed one will languish and die, induced him to consult Dr. Wight, who advised him not to kill the snakes.

Last Sunday morning, Mr. Hill with gloves upon his hands, started in pursuit of the snakes. He found the smallest one, and chased it a long distance before it stopped, so that he could catch hold of it. At last he succeeded in catching it, and now keeps it secured in a sugar box. It is cross to the family, but some of our informants have seen it coil itself about the neck of the little girl, fold itself to sleep in her lap with the fondness of a pet lap dog. It eats freely when fed by her, but seldom when fed by others.

The parents of this child exhibited her at Rumford Hall, Concord. A thousand people visited them, so great was the curiosity to see them. The girl is very pretty, only six years old next month. Only the smaller snake goes with the party; that is four feet three and a half inches long, and is idolized by the girl. Her father says that when she sleeps now she curls up like a snake, incredible as it may seem. The girl has a wild look and fears are entertained that she will in time languish and die, in consequence of the magnetic power exercised so strangely over her by these reptiles.

EXCELLENT.

We are glad to see that a bold and decided stand has been taken by many excellent ladies against the present indelicate fashion which is raging amongst the females, of exposing the bosom, as demoralizing in its tendency; and not only immodest, but calculated to excite unhallowed feelings in the minds of the opposite sex. At a meeting of the Moral Reform Society, comprised of ladies, assembled in Boston, a short time since, the following preamble and resolution was adopted, which we recommend to the careful consideration of our readers, from the fact, that we believe this love of fashion creates a desire to mingle in promiscuous parties of pleasure for the sake of display, where they present temptation, and are in turn tempted.

Whereas, the present mode of dress, adopted by many females, not only the young, but those more advanced in years, of exposing the bosom is indelicate in appearance and, in its tendency, demoralizing to young men, therefore,

Resolved, That, as Moral reform women, we discountenance it by all proper means in our power.

We consider this fashion one of the most disgusting that has ever come in vogue, and we would to God that we had a writer in this country, like Addison, to correct public opinion with regard to the errors of the popular fashions of the day.—[Virginia Telescope.

INTERESTING TO TEA DRINKERS.—The unhealthful effects of some parcels of tea which are dealt out in our cities, is owing to their being adulterated so extensively by the Chinese. Damaged and old tea is taken by them, and placed over hot pans of charcoal to dry; the dried leaves are then put into cast iron pans—a few pounds of tea in each pan—and placed over furnaces; a little tumeric is now stirred in, but in order to secure a good green hue, lumps of Prussian blue and gympsam are added. These are then stirred before the fire until the tea has taken the fine bloom color of hyson, with very much the same scent. The transformed leaves are then picked, sifted, chopped small, and sold for excellent young hyson.

RUSSIA.

A letter from St. Petersburg states that the state of Russia, is most menacing to its rulers. The peasants, ground to the earth by despotism, and thinned in their numbers by conscription, and the nobles themselves do not attempt to conceal their scorn towards the present Emperor for what they term "his vacillating and pusillanimous conduct;" while on the other hand, his brother is exalted to the skies as a hero, and as the only individual worthy to sway the destinies of the Empire. A revolution is spoken of as not being at all improbable with the object of driving Alexander II., from the throne, and of placing there his brother, the Archduke Constantine.

"Georgiana! Georgiana! where's the butter paddle?"

"Tim's got it in the wood-shed, spanking Roxy-Ann."

EXCHANGE ON SALT LAKE.

Emigrants, Missionaries, and all persons wishing to carry or send money to any part of Utah, are hereby notified that we have made the necessary arrangements, and are prepared to furnish SIGHT DRAFTS on Gov. B. Young, or on any of the principal Mercantile houses in Salt Lake City. Bring or send your money to the Luminary Office, and drafts for the same amount will be returned to you, or forwarded by succeeding mail to any person in Utah, as you may direct. Duplicates will be furnished, whenever required, so that in case of failure of mails, no loss will be sustained, and you will avoid the risk of transporting specie, besides the Church wish to use it here.

ST. LOUIS, 1855. ERASTUS SNOW.

Interesting from Omaha concerning Utah and the Mormons.

The Evening News of Saturday last, contained a short and pithy article upon those very turbulent people, "The Mormons" in Utah. One would imagine from a simple perusal of the statement of the editor of the News and his correspondent, that the Deseretians were about to set fire to the Salt Lake, hurl the Rocky Mountains at their adversaries, and take the world by storm. They must surely be an extraordinary people, and some means should be taken to avert such dreadful calamities. If these things be permitted, what will Mrs. Grundell say? and what will the poor editors and other anties do? Mr. Ramsey fearing some dreadful retribution should fall upon him, in the anticipated coup d' etat, shows signs of distress, and tremblingly calls for help, that the Rocky Mountains may be kept in their place, that the "News," and "Intelligencer," may be permitted to live a little longer, poor fellow; 'tis a pity that so fine a "Ram" should be caught by the horns, we would like to do something to help him out of his dilemma, but his case appears hopeless, he has got too much entangled in the bushes, and if he escapes with his horns, and a whole skin it will be a miracle.

The article we have referred to has for its caption the following:

"The Mormons defying the Government!" which has been so often insinuated and published, and so often proved a lie, that the bare announcement has become a burlesque, and the man who may seriously publish it, is at once known as an ignoramus and a fool. It is well known by every man who knows anything of Utah and its inhabitants, that they are the most loyal people that can be found on this Continent, both to the Constitution and laws of the United States, and to the Constitution of the kingdom of God, and the laws of heaven. Their loyalty has been tested under the most trying and disadvantageous circumstances, and was proved beyond all doubt to be the most genuine article of which the United States could boast. When Gen. Kearney was about to be disgraced by the perfidious conduct of Col. F—t and his volunteers, the Mormon arms were raised in his defence, and the honor of the country was sustained. The usurper was clothed in chains, and conducted to the District of Columbia. Who were then the traitors to the U. S. Government? and who had the greatest reasons for repudiating the authority of the general Government? let our calumniators answer these questions: we may then propound a few others.

The correspondent of the "News" writes to that paper from Omaha under date of July 1st, and says:

"There is every prosdect of a difficulty between the Mormons, and the U. S. Government.

"They openly defy the Government, do not live under the glorious stars and stripes of the country, but have a flag of their own, representing a Bee Hive, and embellished with portraits of Brigham Young, and Joe Smith, and other Mormon dignitaries. They have every man drilled once a week, who is able to bear arms. They have a Factory of their own, and manufacture Colt's celebrated revolvers, and every soldier has from one to three, and is bound to obey Brigham Young implicitly in every thing. He has sent from 150 to 200 Missionaries out among the Sioux, and they are exerting all their influence to bring on hostilities between them and the U. S. Government. This is the opinion of Dr. Garlanhurst, the Indian agent at this place."

The correspondent ashamed of the ugly features he had drawn, makes a scape goat of Dr. Garlanhurst. But how did this gentleman obtain the above intelligence of which every one else is so profoundly ignorant? some may be ready to ask. It is certainly an enigma to the uninformed how the Omaha correspondent should be possessed of such astounding information as the above. The Utah mails have arrived some three or four weeks, several gentlemen have been here who came through with the mails, files of the Deseret News have been received to the 6th June, and not a word has been heard or said about any difficulty between the Deseretians and the U. S. Government, until a few days ago the Evening News published the above. Has Attorney General Holman informed our correspondent? We think not. Has he received private correspondence from some of the black legged gentry in Utah? He has not even so good an authority as this to support his statements. We learn from the introductory remarks of the News that Omaha had been conversing with some of Mr. McGraw's understrappers, who seeing his gullibility concerning the Mormons, amused themselves by pouring a volume of revolution thunder and anti Mormonism into his extended bouche, which he swallows as greedily as though he had been long deprived of so rich a feast. With stomach surcharged and inflamed, he sat himself down and disgorged a portion of the undigested matter which is finally served out as an evening repast by the editor of the News. So the case stands between Mr. McGraw's understrappers, the Omaha correspondent, Dr. Garlanhurst and Mr. Ramsey, and which of the parties is most guilty we must leave for the judgment of our readers, we think the publisher more responsible and more guilty than the scribbler, although both are tared with the same brush, and bedaubed with the same mire, and both may merit the same condemnation, but as the "Ram" is caught in the thicket he must be considered answerable for his fellows. We therefore charge the whole budget of lies upon the lying News, and have no hesitation in refering to any statements he has ever made concerning Mormonism; in proof of the above, we are personally acquainted with gentlemen in this city who have written and sent to the News counter-statements of certain base lies, published in his columns concerning our friends, but every article in our favor has been rigidly proscribed, and never to our knowledge has any such article been published concerning us, which establishes the editor of the News in our estimation, as a poor, mean, contemptible bigot. Had he the soul of a man, he would act as a man, and would open his columns for truth as well as falsehood, and would be prepared to say as a celebrated Infidel said: "Though every wind of doctrine be let loose upon the world, no matter, so that truth be in the field, let them grapple. Who ever knew truth worsted in a fair and open encounter?" Such is the spirit and policy of Mormonism. It has ever taken the broad open field of controversy, and has never yet been worsted in fair and open conbat, and we should judge from past experience, and from present appearances that it never will. So you may blow your Ram's horn around the walls of Jerico, Mr. Editor. Let off your squibs, and discharge your canister, they will have as much effect against Mormonism, as the sparks that fly from the anvil.

Had it been said that the Deseretians were defying mis-government, we would have endorsed the statement, we have given her the cold shoulder, and protested her claims for the last twenty-five years, but she has closely followed us up in the character of Judges, Lawyers and Military Officers unto this day. These gentlemen have executed her nefarious laws, administering confusion, misery and corruption, as far as her influence has extended, but the time is near at hand when we will shake off such reptiles, as Paul did the viper that fastened upon his hand, on the Island of Melita, and when they have fallen into hell, we shall be found as free from harm as the Apostle, when he had shaken off the beast into the fire. This may be recorded as a prophecy in our own name, and we will stake our soul upon its fulfilment.

Escaped Convict from Utah Among the Aristocracy of St. Louis.

It was said by our cotemporaries a few months ago, that substantial reasons had been deduced by Col. Steptoe and his officers, that the Mormons connived at, if they did not actually aid in the massacre of Capt. Gunnison and his party. The strong reasons alleged by the gentlemen of the quill in proof of the above, were, that the prison doors had been thrown open, and the prisoners allowed to escape.

They forgot to publish, we presume, the escape of two gentile prisoners, who made their escape just previous. The Mormons did not open their prison doors certainly, but they were opened, and the convicts cleared the Territory, and are now sporting among the aristocracy of these lower regions; the atmosphere is probably more congenial to their constitution.

Mr. Sullivan one of the ex-prisoners, dined in this city on Tuesday last, at the Planters Hotel, where he was boasting of his travels, and particularly of his visit to Salt Lake. A gentleman from Utah, sitting at the table, recognized him as the escaped convict Sullivan, who was prosecuted by Benjamen and James Simonds, two Deleware Indians, for embezzlement, and was sentenced to seven years imprisonment, and made his escape with another convict, some time last fall.

As the anti-Mormon press appears to be run out of materials of which to compose a decent article against Utah and the Mormons, we recommend the services of Sullivan, who would be able to render considerable aid in exposing Mormonism, or, if he will call upon us, we will recommend him to such gentlemen as will be likely to fraternize with him, and appreciate his services. Our opponents should not lose sight of this gentleman for he can most likely be hired cheap.

GLEANINGS.

Col. Walker has met with a warm reception at Rivas, which may be considered a death blow to his Nicaragua expedition.

Walkers party numbered sixty-two, and assisted by one hundred and fifty Central American troops, took a small outpost by surprise and marched upon Rivas, where some Government troops were concentrated. An immediate engagement followed, when Walker and his party of sixty-two, abandoned by the revolutionary troops, took refuge in a Planter's house, where they sustained themselves pretty well for some time, but the house was surrounded by the Government troops, and was finally set on fire, when Col. Walker and party broke through the troops and succeeded in making their escape by a schooner which they took by force, at San Juan del Sur.

The Government party lost thirty men, dead, and about the same number wounded. Walker's party lost about thirteen, killed, and their bodies burned.

This is the end of the great project of Col. Walker, Ex-President of Sonora.

We learn from various journals, that a new and extraordinary disease has recently made its appearance in the country. It is called the Plague, or Plague Spot, from its supposed resemblance to the terrible disease known by that name, which nearly depopulated London at one time. It appeared first in the city of New York, where at first nearly all who were attacked died. It has since made its appearance in other States.

Gov. Reeder is removed by President Pierce from the Gubernatorial chair of Kansas; Mr. Dawson of Pennsylvania, has been appointed his successor.—The N. Y. Herald says; "It is believed in Washington, that Mr. Dawson will not accept, in which event it will be given to a Southerner."

Erastus McComb, the principal witness against Maybery, recently lynched at Janesville, for the murder of Alger, has been arrested, and is now in jail at Rockford, charged with stealing $175 from an old man in Minnessota, last winter.

A Missouri editor announces that the publication of his paper will be suspended for two weeks, in order that he may visit St. Louis with a load of bear skins, hoop poles, shingles, oak bark, pickled catfish, &c., which he has taken for subscriptions.

"Down East," somewhere, a pious old lady was summoned as a witness in an important case. Being told that she must "swear," the poor woman was filled with horror at the thought. After much persuasion she yielded, and exclaimed—"Well, if I must, I must—dam!" The court adjourned immediately.

BAPTISMS—ORGANIZATION OF A BRANCH.

KINGSTON, Peoria Co. Ills., July 24, 1855.

Dear Brother Snow:—Since I wrote you last, the Lord has greatly blessed me in preaching the gospel that I love, and in my labors to build up His kingdom that I want to see fully established in all the earth.

On the 9th of July I baptised six into the Church and re-baptised one in the Sangamon river near Springfield Ill. I left the next day for this place according to your counsel, feeling to enjoy much of the Spirit of God. I slept at Bloomington over night—found a very pious old Mormon, who professed to have the powers of old, and appeared to know so much more than I did about Brigham, and the Saints in Utah, that I thought it best to stay with him over night and take lessons of him, particularly as the lessons, lodging and breakfast, would be free gratis. The old man appeared to be getting fat, and kicked mightily against the pricks, and after breakfast I was glad to get out of that polluted atmosphere, and take the stage for Peoria.

On the 12th inst. I arrived at this place, found the Saints looking for an Elder to come that very day, but who, they knew not. I was received with great kindness by all. Following your counsel I found brother Joues, and I lodge with him. He with his wife are worthy members, though young in the Church. A very different atmosphere prevails here from that I have spoken of above.

I came here just when I was needed, I re-baptised seven, and baptised one the day after I arrived here. On the Sabbath following, I organized a branch with twenty-four members including the officers. I have since re-baptised an old member, Anoralia Harnan a worthy woman. While I was organizing the branch, the Devil had some of his Elders standing outside to see how it was done, and from what I have heard and seen, I think the Old Gentleman has a very large branch here, and is much afraid I will break into his Church, but he can't keep his members from coming to hear me, and some of them are almost persuaded to be Saints. I love to proclaim the gospel to them, although the first time I preached here, their teachers came with their good old whiskey, expecting to administer in some of their ordinances, and get some of the Saints to partake with them; but they found they were getting aboard the wrong cars, they were rebuked by the Priesthood, and they left with shame.

This is a hard place for the Saints in temporal things, and it is a very sickly place, a number of them are very sick at this time; I have as much as I can do to administer to the sick, and to teach and instruct the Saints in that whereunto I am called.

I must now conclude, asking still to be remembered in your prayers. Yours faithfully,

JAMES CASE.

FORT REILEY K. T., July 21, 1855.

Dear Brother Snow:—Having landed here, at Fort Reiley, on the 17th of this month, in general good health, I feel to write you our proceedings.—We left St. Louis on the 6th day of July, being all shipped as cabin passengers we were well accommodated on the boat, and by the kind permission of Major Ogden we held our Sabbath meeting in the cabin. Before coming up to Fort Leavenworth, the Major got notice of cholera being there, so we were not permitted to stay there, but hurried about six miles into the country, and there encamped for the first time. It rained very heavy, and you may judge of the confusion, as only one of our men had seen a tent put up before. The next two days brought us up to Chelton's creek, forty-five miles from Fort Leavenworth, in which time I watched over the Saints, and having two large companies traveling with us of the opposite spirit, we felt ourselves very small. At Chelton's creek, on the 14th day of July, being called upon to administer the ordinance of healing, to sister Hunter, having gathered the Elders into the tent, which became filled with the spirit of God, I felt it a favorable opportunity of organizing into a branch, which we named the Fort Reiley branch of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Not being experienced in making branches, I will give you the manner of my proceedings, and if you see any thing out of order please counsel me upon it. Having called a meeting of the brethren apart from the noise of the camp, which I opened by prayer, I then called upon brother Hunter to ascertain if the brethren were still willing to abide the counsel of brother Snow, and to uphold me as their President. In this they were unanimous. I then called brother William Hunter, Priest, to the office of an Elder. We ordained him. I then chose him to be my first counsellor and appointed him to that office. I next chose brother Samuel Judd, Elder, to be my second counsellor. We appointed him to that office. We appointed brother John Shephard to be clerk, and brothers John Clark and John Thorp to visit the Saints.—After some other business relating to the branch, we dismissed with prayer by brother Hunter.

There are at present between three and four hundred men brought here, now living in camp for the building department of this Fort.

Yours in the bonds of the Everlasting Covenant,

CHARLES CHARD.

MEDINA RIVER, Baxter Co., Tex., July 7, '55.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LUMINARY.

DEAR SIR:—Hearing through the medium of other papers, that you are publishing a Periodical under the above title, I am desirous of corresponding with you, and thereby secure a copy of your paper.

Thinking you might want to hear from us in this obscure part of the world, some times, as also our desire to hear from you, has caused me to take the liberty to ask a correspondence.

I do not know that our present news will be of much interest to you.

The crops in this immediate vicinity are promising, that is in the mountains; and farther down in the country, the corn crops are very poor; but generally, throughout the State, we will have a full average yeald. I learn that wheat is very good in the more Northern part of the State. Cotton looks well in many parts.

Like you, in the Great Bason; we are much troubled with the Indians. Our losses this year have amounted to twenty-nine head of horses and mules. Others have lost much more, and some their lives.

The Indians come down in small parties from the mountains, and steal horses and cattle from the frontier settlers, as also to take the lives of men, women and children, whenever they can catch them unprepared.

Many overtures of peace have been made to the tribes on our frontiers, but to no purpose; and we have always to carry our arms in our hands when we leave our houses, and are even then in danger of losing our lives. Last week there was twenty or thirty horses stolen between here and San-antonio, forty-three miles via Costraville. One man was shot at with his own rifle which he had left in his house, to go only fifty yards distant.

The United States Government in Texas seems to be very ineffectual in the Indian affairs of this country.

Father and his company are doing quite well since they settled here, and gave up going to California.

I have received no letters from Utah since last fall—would like to know the reason. Has the mail stopped? or have my friends in Utah, not received some four or five letters which I wrote last fall and winter? or have they concluded not to write to me any more? Those questions I ask of my friends in Utah.

There will likely, soon be some Mexican news, as the people of that country seem to desire a more liberal Government.

Yours truly, O. L. WIGHT.

UTAH, OREGON, AND CALIFORNIA.

The Ecocomical disbursements of Governor Young, compared with other Governors.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 1, 1855.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LUMINARY:

Dear Sir—Having been to the City of Washington last May, with drafts from Gov. Young, and officers of Utah, on the various Departments for a considerable amount, I had a good opportunity of learning particulars concerning the relative accounts of appropriations, and disbursements, of the various Territories. The accounts I wish to allude to particularly are those of Governor Young, as I was delegated by him to settle and adjust his accounts with the Departments, I consider it nothing more than justice due to him that the following facts should be known by the public. I therefore seek this opportunity through the columns of your paper, to get them published.

You are no doubt as well aware as I am, that the enemies, and opposers of Brigham Young, have published many articles concerning him, and have accused him of squandering public monies. Now I merely wish to show how it has been squandered. For instance; he had the superintendence of public buildings for Utah. How did he manage that? He gave the Legislature the first year, the use of the Council House, a building which probably cost $40,000 to build. What next? He sold the building to the Government for $20,000. What next? The Government being dissatisfied, Gov. Young authorized the Department to draw on him for the $20,000, but they did not do it. What was the next proposition made by Gov. Young? He proposed to keep the Council House, and spend the $20,000 in building a State House, and has done so. What does Dr. Galen Hurt say concerning the house? He says it would do credit to any State to have such a house as he is now building for a State House. It will when completed, probably, cost not less than $75,000.

I was furnished with an abstract, by the Governor, of his disbursements made on that building, on account of the Government, up to April 1st, 1855, which was, fifteen thousand and some hundred dollars, out of the twenty thousand dollars appropriated by Congress for that purpose, which his enemies have harped so much about.

The Governor has acted as Ex-officio Superintendent of Indian Affairs, where he has had large amounts of money to disburse, as his opponents say. How has he acted in that capacity? We will examine the subject a moment, and see how much he has had to disburse, and how much he has disbursed of the Government monies, and what he has accomplished with it.

In 1847, the Mormons first settled in Utah.—What was the situation of Utah at that time? It was a wild wilderness country, inhabited by none but a wild and barbarous tribe of Indians, who, for many years had made a practice of going to California, and taking captive, towns and villages, and helping themselves to all the stock they wanted. This was the situation of Utah, when Brigham Young first colonized that country. Had he any aid from the general Government? No! He had no troops to call to his aid or defense, but had to rely wholly and solely upon his own resourses.

In 1851, if my memory serves me right, Utah was organized as a Territory of the Government. And now comes Gov. Young's disbursements. It is not necessary for me to give in detail the various sums appropriated by the Government. I need only to say, that the Governor's entire disbursements made on the account of Government, during the whole time he has acted as Superintendant of Indian Affairs, amounts in sum total, to thirty-one thousand and some few dollars, of which six thousand dollars has been suspended by the Department, as not being legal in form, which leaves twenty-five thousand dollars as the enormous amount of money passed through his hands during four years; and he has disbursed that amount by first buying goods of the merchants on his own account, and dealing them out to the Indians, and then drawing on the Government for the amount, and then waiting from six to twenty-four months for his pay. If it be asked, how I know this? I would answer, that, last May, I collected $12,500 of the Department, for disbursements made in 1852-3 and 4; monies he had advanced the Government from one to three years back. These are the disbursements he has made in his Official capacity, from the time he has been in office, and these the circumstances he has had to act under. Has the general Government sent Utah monies to defray the expenses of the Government, as to other Territories? No! Has the Governor been allowed to draw for the amount previous to disbursement? No! He has been compelled to become banker for Uncle Sam in Utah; and before his drafts can be honored, vouchers must be had to identify his disbursements, or the drafts are protested and returned, and bills must be reduced merely because they appeared high to a man who had never been accustomed all his life, to any thing but life in a seaport town, and consequently, unacquainted with the expense of getting out goods to an inland settlement, such as Utah. All this skinning and shaving must be endured by the Governor, and why? simply because he had advanced his own money to purchase goods for the Indians. Now, what has been accomplished during the four years by the paltry sum of money furnished by the Government?—No treaties have been made with the Indians by the Government, no titles to the lands extinguished, no troops stationed in the country to preserve peace, but left without any aid from the Government, except the $25,000 which he had to advance, or he would not have had even that, but being left so to his own resourses, he has by his wise policy, and kind treatment of the Indians, managed to preserve peace with them, without any serious difficulties. He has found means to sustain and find homes for sixty thousand souls in Utah, at the enormous sum of $25,000.

The Government has now sent their Surveyor General to Utah, to survey the country; that those expensive lands may be brought into market, and be sold to the people who have civilized the Indians, constructed substantial buildings, made the roads, killed the crickets, besides hosts of grasshoppers.

You will bear in mind that the inhabitants of Utah have been denied the privilege of settling the lands, like those of Oregon and other Territories, and why? Is it because Utah has fought her own battles, made her own roads, and furnished her own money? and not only this, but furnished homes for thousands of the citizens of the United States and their troops; did they not winter among us last winter? and what is the report Capt. Ingalls has given of their wintering? He says their stock wintered fine, and at less expense than he could have wintered them in any part of the States.

Let us examine what the situation of other Territories has been. We will take Oregon for example; have there not been treaties made with her Indians? There have. Has she had the lands given to her actual settlers in large tracts? She has. Has not the general Government appropriated $75,000, to re-emburse her for Indian hostilities? It has.—Has not her superintendent for Indian affairs spent $87,000 in the same time that Governor Yonug has spent $25,000? He has.

And what has California done in the economy of disbursing Government monies to the Indians? Has not Lieut. Beal spent $300,000, in the same time that Governor Young has spent $25,000? Yes, he has. Does his report show that he has any more Indians to take care of, than Governor Young has? No, it does not. Does Oregon show more? No. And if the treatments of Utah and other Territories is not making fish of one, and fowl of another, I don't know what is.

Now, Mr. Editor, these are a few of the facts I wish to appear before the public, and let us see, after these statements, if the enemies of Brigham Young, will still accuse him of squandering public monies, or, say that he is not a fit man to govern Utah. Where is there a Governor of Territory or State, that can show as clean a sheet as he can? And where is there one who has displayed as much wise policy, or has accomplished as much to promote the interests of the general Government as he has? I believe there is none.

Governor Young has not even drawn to the amount of the appropriation made for Utah last year; but there still remains, to the credit of Utah, at the end of the fiscal year, ending the last of June, 1855, $12,000, and upwards, unexpended in the Indian department. Now, if Governor Young is such a man as some have represented him to be, why did he not spend that amount? It would have been an easy matter to drum up accounts against the department, to have covered the small amount remaining in his hands. Why did he not do this if he has embezzled so much money? No, gentlemen he aspires to something more noble than to drum up unjust accounts against the department, but would be highly pleased to have the means refunded to him he has already advanced the Government.

And farther, has Utah had to petition Government to pass relief bills for the overdrawing of her officers as other Territories have done? No! Now you opposers of Governor Young's reappointment for Governor of Utah, what have you to say to these things? If you have a man in your ranks, you can guarantee as possessing more wisdom, who could govern Utah the same length of time at less expense and is more competent to govern Utah, than Governor Young. He is the man we want. But without you have such a man it is useless for you to offer one. I am inclined to think that if Governor Young had squandered and thrown away to the Indians and his friends $300,000, as did Lieut. Beal, he would with all ease be reappointed; but because he has only spent $25,000, in four years, among thirteen or fifteen thousand Indians, and that without any aid, by treaty or troops, like others, he is no longer fit to hold the strings of Uncle Sam's money bag. We must have a man that will spend all that Congress appropriates, who will overdraw his accounts, and petition for more, and not be satisfied with that, and in fact we want a man that will turn up jack. and kick up merry hell, like Governor Reeder, or he is no man at all; and a man that has not brains enough to spend more than $25,000, in four years, will not suit us; there is no chance for clerks to have a little of the precious metal sticking to their fingers, no chance for friends to borrow a few thousand dollars, no chance for understappers.

Now, if any doubt my statements, I have only to refer them to the records at Washington City, where they can see for themselves as I did. T. S. W.

ITALY.

Encouragging Prospects—Baptisms—Condition of People —Protestant and Catholic Bread and Cheese Arguments.

Chez mon. G. M. Gianetti, Docteur, La Tour de Luserne, Piedmont, June 13, 1855.

Dear President F. D. Richards—Thinking that a few lines from Piedmont will not be unacceptable, I resume my pen to inform you of our labors, with their results, in the Italion Mission, also to describe the state of the people, and the influence of the priest, and to pen a few of the judgments that have been and are visiting this nation.

Since my last, of December 14th, we have continued to push forward with our little force, most of the time through deep snows, or heavy showers of rain, which have hindered us from visiting the people as much as we otherwise would have done.—The prospects mentioned in my last, which cheered our hopes for a while, soon disappeared through the influence of the Protestant priests, exercised in the shape of presents of money, wheat, potatoes, and other things, which is the strongest influence they can use among the poor ignorant souls of these valleys. From those places, we continued our course to others, and so continued a slow progress, kindling new hopes again to see them destroyed, until all around seemed impenetrable obscurity. Our hopes for the moment appeared annihilated. But still, I heard the "still small voice" whisper within, saying, "As the summer's sun chassera au loin the winter, and melts the deep snows that hide the wheat beneath, so will the influence of the Holy Spirit disperse the present darkness and enable the servants of God to find the honest in heart among these valleys."

Thus encouraged and comforted, we renewed our energies, and I am happy to say, by the assistance of the Holy Spirit the gloom is being removed, and we have the prospects again of augmenting our little band soon. The week before last, an intelligent young man, the eldest of a large family, all of whom are favorable to the work, gave in his name for baptism. But, before the time appointed arrived, the devil attacked him with a violent fever, which has prevented the fulfillment of his appointment until the present. I pray God speedily to heal him, so that he may be the means of salvation to the rest of the family.

Since my last, we have baptised three; these, with the three emigrants baptised in Liverpool, make six—rather a small figure, brother Richards, for six months. I hope better for the next six months.—We have been obliged to use the pruning knife a little this spring. In these valleys, a great many lovers of emigration join the Church, expecting to get a free emigration to America. The Protestant ministers, thinking that we tempt the people to join our Church with emigration to the valley, have opened emigration to Algiers, to oppose us, and this winter, the ministers have offered several families of the Saints a free passage there to leave the Church. We are heartily glad of this, for it is the best thing that could be put into operation to find out those who join the Church for emigration; you see they are determined to give us hard battle in these valleys. And after the emigration season is over, we find out these customers. This season we have found nine, six of whom we have cut off, and the other three are in a strong state of decline.—Next year we shall find some more. One of these customers told me plain, that if he thought we should not emigrate him, he would never come to meeting again. I leave you to judge of the feelings of the people, relative to emigration, from the picture below.

Although I have begun to speak the French language with some little freedom, it is very difficult with my English accent to make myself understood. One half of the people in these valleys do not know ten words of French, and two-thirds of the others, understood it, but cannot speak it. In the schools, the children are taught French and Italian, but out of school they speak Piedmontais, or a corruption of Italian mixed with a little French, which changes in nearly every town and village. This also presents difficulties to my progress among the strangers.

I have begun to hold regular Council meetings among the brethren, to teach them their duties, and devise means for operating against the enemy this summer. This week, for the first time, I have given my fellow travelling Elder, J. J. Rubair, a mission among the Catholics in the mountains. The Catholics have been much more civil to us than the Protestants for some time, perhaps it has been because we have not menaced their positions heretofore. We shall see soon.

The state of the inhabitants in these valleys, has not been so bad as at present for many years. Since the construction of the railway from Turin to Genoa, and more recently, from Pignerolo to Turin, the most of the wheat raised in this, the northern part of Piedmont, is taken to Genoa, and from thence to England and other places, which has doubled the price of wheat in the valleys for the past two years. This, with the destruction of the vines, the potato disease, and a falling off of labor, accounts for the state of the inhabitants at present. The poor, who had but a little piece of ground on the side of the mountain, have been obliged to sell out, and climb to the tops of the mountains to commence new cultivation, where the soil is less productive, and the snow rests for seven months in the year. The whole of our Saints here at present, are of the poorer class, and depend mostly on others for labor, or, as stated above, have a little piece of ground on the tops of the mountains, which no one cares to purchase. And this winter, they, with many of their fellow mortals, have been the sufferers of indescribable poverty.—Among these valleys there are no "Unions," or institutions to support the poor, more than the trifling collections in the churches, and presents from England and other Protestant countries, all of which are placed in the hands of the minister, who is also supported yearly by the presents from England. The poor apply to the minister for assistance, and if he has any he will supply them, but I need not tell you that he will give nothing to the Saints, unless they renounce "Mormonism." Thus, the poor Saints are deprived of all charity, and have no hope, but in God. This winter and spring have been a severe trial; the rough hardy faces, that came so joyfully to the meetings, as described in my last, have been obliged to rest at home from weakness, caused by want. And the weather, which has been very severe this winter, has deprived us of the privilege of visiting them, to administer consolation, as much as we could have wished. If they could only get two meals per diem of black bread, or soup made from Indian corn, they would be contented. They never expect meat, and seldom see butter or cheese, and if the fowls should produce a few eggs, they carry them to market, to buy a little salt for their soup.—Amid these scenes of poverty, the ministers have visited many of the Saints and tempted them with various articles of food to leave the Church, and, in some instances, the soft, smooth voice of the minister's wife has sought by these temptations to draw the Saints away. And more, the oily words of English ladies also, who have visited the valleys this spring, have breathed their pollutions in the ears of many of the Saints. And one English lady actually told one of our young sisters, that she knew an old man or gentleman in England, who had plenty of money, and had no relations to bestow it upon, and promised the sister that if she would leave the Church, she would take her to England to serve the old gentleman, intimating that without doubt he would leave her his money. But I am glad to say the sister refused all her flattering temptations. Some of the Saints have fallen among these circumstances, and others have had a hard struggle. You may judge, brother Richards, what our feelings have been, under these things. The Protestants will keep families of Catholics, if they will change their religion; and Catholics, on the other hand, will keep families of Protestants, if they will turn Catholics; so there is a continual war, not of arguments, but of bread and cheese. The "Mormons" leave them to themselves in this battle, and simply hold forth the principles of eternal life.

Through the deep snows, and their continuation until the latter part of last month, the wheat has suffered severely in the mountains, in some places there is not enough for seed for next year. A great quantity of the fruit has also been cut off by the late frosts. Walnut trees, from which they make their oil, have suffered extremely. And now, after a few weeks of sunshine, the clouds "o'ercharged with their growing burdens," have commenced the work of destruction, by washing away the wheat at the foot of the mountains, covering the fields by the sides of the roads with grit and stones, and in other places carrying away the bridges. These scenes, with many others that I have no room to name, coupled with the war against Russia, in which this nation is engaged with the Western Powers and signs of eternal revolutions, because a law has passed the senate, for the suppression of convents, is enough to tax the wisdom of this nation, which is struggling hard for life and liberty. While the judgments of God are distracting the world, and the ominous future is shaking the hopes of the most obdurate minds, we can lift up our heads and rejoice, because we know that the day of our redemption draweth nigher. Knowing this is the work of God, and being sure of its ultimate triumph over every opposition, through poverty or wealth, persecution or peace, I feel determined to run to the end.

I must not forget to name the kind and wise counsel I receive from time to time from Elder D. Tyler, under every emergency, nor the consolation I receive from his encouraging communications. They manifest that God is with him.

Having already trespassed upon your time more than I intended, I close this rather lengthy epistle, praying the God of heaven to abundantly bless you in your high and holy responsibilities, and the brethren in the office with you.

I remain your fellow soldier in the cause of truth,

SAMUEL FRANCIS.

Miscellaneous.

COULDN'T GET HIM.

The following is from the last number of the Southern Military Gazette. It reads like one of Hooper's stories:

Old John Sarchem was for many years known as one of the shrewdest men about Montgomery. In fact there were many persons who did not hesitate to say that his shrewdness was nothing but rascality. The chief peculiarity of old John was, that he could prove anything under the face of the heavens, if he choose to do so, in a court of justice. Even the lawyers got to be afraid of him. One of their number had a note for $100 on old John, and for some time he was afraid to sue on it, lest John should prove a set-off of some sort against it, although there was nothing of the sort existing in reality. A bright thought occurred to Greenbay. He would sue in the name of Peter Squizlefanter, and as no such man ever existed, it would be difficult to show that he ever owed Sarchem anything. He did so. At the trial Sarchem proved by three witnesses that Peter Squizlefanter was an old "residenter," and was indebted to him, the said John, at the time of the supposed transfer of note, and continually since, in a sum double the amount due on it! Nobody ever "took issue" with Sarchem after that!

THAT which opposes right must be wrong.

THE MORAL CONFLICT.

Grasp thy sword, gird on thine armor,
Free the country from its foes,
Meet the giant forms of evil,
Firmly all their powers oppose.
Take the side of God and virtue,
If it need be in the van,
Shrink not, faint not, do thy duty,
Stand erect and be a man.

Fear not thou the numerous forces
That the enemy can boast;
Small indeed was Gideon's army,
To subdue the Midian host.
Yet, how gloriously they conquered,
Not indeed by human might,
But the sword of God and Gideon,
Put their enemies to flight.

Act thy part in the great conflict,
Seek not men, but God to please,
If thou be appointed leader,
Sigh not for inglorious ease.
Fire the signal, give the watchword,
Lead us on, our foes to meet,
And like the small band of Spartans,
We will fall but not retreat.

Courage, then, for the stern warfare,
Let our hearts and hopes be strong,
Truth shall triumph over error,
Though the contest may be long.
Thrones shall tremble, and oppression
Reel with terror and affright;
Nations shall unloose their captives,
Earth's dark dungeons see the light.

For the giant powers of evil
Fully shall be overthrown,
And upon the ruined kingdoms,
Righteousness erect a throne.
When its reign shall bless the nations
With the olive branch of peace,
Then may we lay down our armor,
Then alone from warfare cease.

WAVERLY, ILLS., July, 1855. ANNA.

FROM UTAH AND THE PLAINS.

The last Weston Reporter publishes a letter from a recent traveler across the Plains, which contains a good deal of interesting information. The writer left Salt Lake City on the 29th May, at which time business was very dull, and the prospect for crops very poor, owing to the dry weather and the destruction of almost every thing by the grasshoppers.—Many of the fields of wheat were entirely eaten off, and the ground looked as bare as when it was first ploughed. Even with the most favorable change, the crop would not come to one-fourth of an average, as the grasshoppers were increasing and the weather dry.

Mr. Holman, District Attorney of the United States for Utah, was left at South Platte. He is on his way to Washington, and is bearer of dispatches from Col. Steptoe to the War Department.

The roads were in fine condition, but the grass was very poor until the party got to Fort Bridger, beyond the grasshopper region.

No Indians or whites were met on the road until the party reached Sweetwater river. There, they found some thirty or forty persons exploring for gold, where it is supposed it will be found in pretty large quantities.

"Gold signs were seen and particles of gold had been found, but not in qualities satisfactory to seekers. They were, however, at work very energetically, confident of full success. Mr. C. L. Craig of St. Joseph, Mo. was at the head of the principal party, all of whom were Mormons from the Valley, and were industriously engaged at damming and turning the bed of the Sweetwater. This is a portion of the Indian country where I would fear as many Indian troubles as any other. In fact, a few miles below, at Devil's Gate and Independence Rock, the traders were much alarmed, having had several threats from the Indians about the time we passed. Every animal about Independence Rock had been stolen by the Sioux.

I saw a letter to C. L. Craig, from one of the gold-seekers, who was one hundred miles from the body of the party, and near the Devil's Gate, which stated that he had found large quantities of silver, and that a man in that vicinity had taken $40 worth of gold in a day. There is no donbt in my mind but rich deposits of gold will be found in the Sweetwater country. Numbers of the emigrants last year found it in passing up that beautiful stream. I saw and brought home some of it with me.

Gold has also been discovered on the Medicine Bow, a stream South-west of Fort Laramie."

A band of two hundred Arrapaho Indians were encamped a short distance from Medicine Bow river. They were peaceable, but told Mr. Archambeau, the Indian trader, that they were waiting the arrival of the troops from the States, if war took place between the Sioux Indians and the troops, they intended to join the strongest party.

Emigrants were first met at Platte Bridge, about the 9th of June. They were in good health, and getting along well. The Sioux Indians had stolen twelve horses from them at Ash Hollow.

Indians were first seen at Deer Creek, where the party "met Mr. John Richard, with a number of mountaineers, half-breeds and friendly Sioux Indians, returning to Platte Bridge, to build a fort for the protection of this bridge. At Leabonte Creek about fifty miles above Laramie, near the trading-post on that stream, we met a small war party of Sioux, who let us pass without interruption. They informed us that they were impatiently waiting for the United States troops to arrive, and had stated that if they did not arrive within ten days they would not come at all, or did not intend to come, and that they intended to kill every white man they found on the road from Laramie to Devil's Gate. I mentioned this threat to several of the old traders as I came down, who seemed to place but little confidence in their carrying it into execution.

"We proceeded towards Laramie on the upper road, and while we were encamped about twenty miles this side of Leabonte, a party of Sioux came up to us and professed to be friendly. They viewed our horses very closely and proposed several trades with us, which we refused. We made them a small present of flour. They then told us that on that day they had seen a portion of the savage band in the vicinity who murdered the soldiers of Laramie, and they had dodged out of the way. They warned us to be on our guard, as they were satisfied of the bad intentions of that party. We took the hint. Fearing more from those who were warning us than those whom we were warned against—having no doubt that it was the intention of the Indians to come upon us that night and steal our horses—we left and encamped until after dark, and after a short rest we started and traveled all night, dodging their evil intention. Arrived at Fort Laramie on the 13th, found a few lodges of friendly Sioux encamped near Ward and Garms. We were informed that sixty lodges of Sioux were encamped at Ash Hollow, waiting until the troops came up, but did not see them; we saw only one at that point, who seemed to be watching the road.

We had in company with us a man by the name of Thompson, from San Francisco, who said his home was in Philadelphia, from which city he had been absent for five years, and where he had a family. This man was traveling alone when we overtook him, very bare of clothing, without money, nor had he anything to eat. I first saw him at Salt Lake; he had then just arrived from California; he left the Valley some time before us, and up to the time we overtook him he had traveled alone. He had eaten but a few times, going as much as three days at a time without anything. This man we took in as one of our party; he encamped with us at Ash Hollow, and, as usual, when we were about breaking up camp he started in advance of us. After we had started and traveled a short distance, seeing the single Indian on the watch, it caused inquiry for Thompson. We looked for his track and missed it; we went back and found that he had taken a road which led to a crossing lower down on the South Platte. We, however, supposed that it led around the hill, and that it fell in to the road a short distance ahead; after this time we did not see or hear anything of him, though we made every inquiry possible.

We met emigrating parties at the crossing of the South Platte, who were from Illinois and South-western Missouri, getting on well. The grass was good from the head of Platte to that point. The immense numbers of Buffalo from there to within five miles of Kearney, had eaten the grass very bare. Met Woodward & Marshall's corn train near Cottonwood Springs; Majors and Russell's first train thirty-five miles above Fort Kearney, getting on well, and also Mr. Patterson, in charge of a train for Messrs. Livingston & Kincaid, Salt Lake City. Passed Ward & Guernier's and Maj. Gratiot's trains laden with furs, coming down same day; they were bound for Fort Leavenworth. Met Majors & Russell's second train at Fort Kearney, where it had been lying for ten days; a number of their cattle stampeded with the Buffalo.

Left Fort Kearney on the 25th, met the Dutch train of California and wagon emigrants at a point ten miles below, in good health. Between Kearney and the Blues, met several trains of Mormon emigrants. No sickness on the road except amongst the Mormons. One of the Texas trains had lost thirty by Cholera. Met Gilbert and Garish on the Little Blue, and T. S. Williams & Co.'s train at Big Blue, all well."

"The number of emigrants on the road this year and cattle for California and Oregon are very small, and the whole number of cattle will not number four thousand head.

"We had comparatively a very fortunate trip, until we were within one day's drive of this city, when our highly esteemed friend and fellow-citizen, Mr. James F. Loan, who went out and returned with us, was taken suddenly and violently ill of cholera. He died in a few hours.

"In the loss of Mr. Loan, Platte county has lost one of its most moral, upright and honorable young men and his wife a devoted husband."

LATER FROM EUROPE.

ARRIVAL OF THE ASIA!!

HALIFAX, August 1st.—The Royal mail steamer Asia, Capt. Lott, arrived here at an early hour this A. M. She left Liverpool on the P. M. of the 21st. Her advices are one week later than by the Atlantic. She will be due at Boston at about noon Thursday, so that her mails will reach New York at night.

The week had been entirely unproductive of any news of importance in the Crimea or the Baltic, the position of the belligerents remaining about the same. In the British Parliament Mr. Roebuck's motion of censure upon the government had been debated, but finally rejected by 100 majority. The Palmerston Ministry, therefore, remains in office.

The vacancy created by the retirement of Lord John Russell had not been filled, although rumor says Sir William Molesworth is the most probable successor in the Colonial Secretaryship.

Several Russian sorties have been made, but were repulsed. The French works have approached close to the Malakoff, and the capture of that place was considered probable at an early day.

Lord Raglan's body had been shipped to England. The French troops formed an avenue for it to pass through from the camp to the sea, two miles long.

Sir John Campbell died within Sebastopol, and under a flag of truce. His sword was returned.

Trifling operations in the Baltic are reported.

Austria is reported to have secretly issued a strong peace circular to the German Diet to which the Diet responds that fresh measures do not seem called for.

The Austrian and Prussian Cabinets are on most friendly terms.

Don Escalanta is appointed Minister from Spain, at Washington, in place of Cueto.

The rupture between Spain and Rome is said to be complete. The clergy at Madrid have demanded passports.

The Black Warrior difficulty is settled by indemnity of one million reals.

Denmark protests against the demands of the United States respecting abatement of sound dues, and deems it impossible to comply on so short a notice.

A Vienna letter, in the Cologne Gazette, repeats the assertion that difficulties have arisen between the Czar Alexander and his brother Constantine, and the Prince of Prussia goes to St. Petersburg as mediator.

NEW YORK, August 2.—The steamer Washington, from Southampton, arrived here this morning at 11 o'clock. She brings 219 passengers. We glean some additional news from her papers.

A dispatch from Gen. Pellissier states that the Russian Admiral Machinoff was killed in the attack on Sebastopol on the 11th.

The Crimean correspondent of the London News says some time must elapse before anything decisive can occur. We are still far from the enemy's work, and the space that separates us from them being quite small and exposed and swept in every direction by the Russian projectiles, the approaches progress very slowly.

In the attack on Nystadt by the British frigate on the 24th of June, twenty-four Russian merchant ships were destroyed, amounting in the aggregate to 20,000 tons.

THE "GREAT EASTERN" STEAMSHIP.

A gentleman of this city who recently visited the ship yard of Messrs. Scott, Russell, & Co., in London, has favored us with the following memoranda of the dimensions of the stupendous iron steamship now building at that place for the Australian trade, and which is expected to be launched about next Christmas.

The hull measures in length 675 feet; greatest bredth of beam 83 feet; depth of hold 63. The hull even with the upper deck is to be iron plate; and from the keel to eight feet above the water-line she will be double, or two hulls one within the other, leaving 36 inches space between the walls. The hull is built in ten water tight compartments, 60 feet each, all of iron an inch in thickness, with two longitudinal iron walls extending the whole length of the ship. Her bottom is flat fourteen feet on either side of the keel. Her capacity by measurement is 25,000 tons; draft 20 feet, and when loaded 30 feet. She has four decks, and saloons to accommodate 600 first class, and 1,800 second class passengers, and 10,000 troops.

Her engines will be of 3,000 horse power, with four cylinders, each of which will require 35 tons of melted metal, and when clean will weigh about 30 tons each; 20 flue boilers, 6 by 30 feet in length.—Her engines are low pressure and will give motion to side wheels or paddles, and screw propeller The engine when put together will be 54 feet in height. The weight of her machinery will be about 3,000 tons, hull 10,000; making an aggregate of about 13,000 tons of iron employed in her construction.

The "Great Eastern" will be rigged with six masts with fore and aft sails, and is expected will be capable of a speed of from 18 to 20 knots—enabling her to make the passage from London to Australia in 30 days, and to return by the way of Cape Horn in an equal time. She is building by a company at an estimated cost of £400,000, or $2,000,000; and when completed will be launched broadside to the water. Her architect is I. K. Brunel, and about 500 men are now employed upon her in various departments.—[New Bedford Mercury.

A NUMBER of native Congoes—real Guinea negroes—lately arrived in Salem, Mass. One of them being asked how he liked this country, answered: "Ah, me no like Merican land—cold morning, cold night, make nose leak like a basket."

A man died lately in England, whose estate was valued at seven million pounds.

IF a thing be not proper, do it not; if it be not true, speak it not.—[M. Aurel.

The reason why it succeeds.—THE Mustang Liniment has attained its enormous popularity, and almost universal use, simply because it gives better satisfaction, accomplishes more good, relieves more pain, and heals more wounds and sores than any other preparation ever before offered to the afflicted. Every bottle that is used, speaks for itself—tells its own tale in the relief it gives, and the cure it effects. And then one who has suffered, pehaps, long years with pain, without hope of relief, and finds in this Liniment an almost instantaneous remedy, cannot help but speak in its praise, and recommend it in the best terms to all he sees suffering. It needs no other recommendation than a trial.

THE STATE OF THE TIMES.

The times look stranger every year,
Events so marvellous appear;
Indeed, all things seem quite ajar,
For Europe's nations are at war;
Disease is stalking to and fro,
In every nation laying low
The dwellers of the earth, while death
Sits watching o'er their latest breath;
Foul famine, too, whom nations dread,
Begins to raise her hoary head,
And many who have been well fed,
She soon will number with the dead;
Earthquakes in various lands appear,
Which fill men's hearts with woe and fear;
And tribulation's dismal sound
Re-echoes all the earth around.
Ye men of wisdom, now draw near,
And tell me why all these things appear;
Show me the cause that gives them birth,
To desolate our native earth.
But ah! alas! your tongues are mute,
Your wisdom fails, no more acute.
Then pray give ear to me, and pause,
While I to you relate the cause.
A man of God has been sent forth
To teach the nations of the earth
The Gospel of the Son of God,
Who bought redemption with his blood:
And being authorized of God,
He trod the path the Prophets trod—
He raised his voice, the echo flew
Both to the Gentile and the Jew.
The words were these—"The time is come,
To gather scattered Israel home,
For God his strange work has begun,
Which he foretold he would perform
Among the nations of the earth,
'Before creation's second birth.'"
But though these words were very sweet
To those who righteousness would greet,
Yet he being authorized of God,
Many there were who sought his blood.
Oh! was it so? could one be found
To cause his blood to stain the ground?
It was, and awful to relate,
He had to meet a martyr's fate.
'Twas then the tears of heaven were shed,
And angels whispered—"Lo he's dead;
His race on earth is run, but he Shall with the blest assembly be."
This is the cause, then, why we see
Destruction spread o'er land and sea;
O, then repent, ye rich, ye poor,
Behold, redemption's at the door.

RICHARD COLEMAN.

FROM RUSSIA.

ST. PETERSBURG, June 28, 1855.—The first impression of an American upon arriving at the Russian Capital, are three in number. First, that years, wealth and a lavish hand have laid the foundation. Second, that the management of its erection was entrusted to few hands. And third, that Royalty is the proprietor.

The public buildings of St. Petersburg make the city. Her lofty palaces and gilded domes, which for a great distance are visible to the approaching traveler, at once impress one with the idea of splendor, and prepare the mind for a minute examination of her hoarded jewels, princely wealth and refined elegance.

The Government is a military one, and all the departments have their officials clothed in peculiar uniform, save the universal double headed Eagle, which is always visible upon their persons, even down to the street droshky boy. Every other man is dressed in uniform, wearing on his head the massive helmet adopted by Nicholas, but which is about to be laid aside by the present Emperor for something more bearable. The military schools of Russia are probably not surpassed by any in the world, and simply for the reason that it is the only school of any moment that she possesses. Parents who belong to a class entitling them to educate their children, place them where they can be qualified for becoming officers; so that the schools of Cadets are very large and very thorough.

I had the pleasure of attending an Imperial review of the Cadets a few days since at the Champ de Mars, where were assembled something like three thousand, presenting as pretty a sight as it has ever been my good fortune to see. The movements of the troops were said to be excellent, and especially did the flying artillery—manned by mere boys—elicit the admiration of all beholders. The peculiar dress of the Circassians, who composed the cavalry, attracted every eye, and their splendid horses, with their curved necks, prancing to time, made a spectacle worth seeing. The Emperor was surrounded by a heavy corps of aids, yet gave all the commands himself, in a loud and distinct voice. He is a fine looking man and an admirable horseman, and seemed to be familiar with military tactics. I observed one old General with massive epauletts, and only one leg, which he had been fortunate enough to save from the disasters of the battle-field, hovering close to the Czar's side, and watching his every movement, and toward whom his Majesty frequently turned to speak. I was unable to learn his name, but saw on his shoulders the figures XXXV., showing the number of years he had been in the service.

After the parade was concluded, the Emperor rode, as usual among the Cadets, saluted them, and they in turn rushed toward him, kissing his hand and making their obedience, which occupied near three quarters of an hour, after which he promoted three hundred to the rank of Lieutenant, &c., to supply regiments recently recruited. He then dismounted, saluted his officers, sprang into his carriage, and left for Peterhoff, his summer residence.

The latest news from Sebastopol is up to the 18th. The allies had been most gloriously repulsed, after a repeated and prolonged storming, with a murderous sacrifice—all of which you will have heard by the time this reaches you, though it may be differently shaded by the hands through which it will pass in going to you. It requires four days courier posting to receive news from the theatre of war at this place.

I yesterday visited Cronstadt, per steamer, and had a full view of the allied fleet lying off that port, some five miles distant from the line of Russian guard ships. Cronstadt is a very respectable sized town, of 25,000 inhabitants, nearly all of whom have left the place, however. All branches of business have suspended operations, so that it may be said now to be only occupied by soldiery. Four large massive forts guard the channel. Steamers, three-decked men-of-war, smaller craft, and an ocean of gun boats, are standing ready to show the Western Powers another Sebastopol, should they presume to protrude their noses too far into the Gulf of Finland. Our steam packet had on board a naval brass band, which discoursed to us music most delightful. While cruising around the Russian fleet, our band played some national airs, that seemed to arouse the enthusiasm of officers and crew, for they mounted their ship's rigging and greeted us with prolonged cheers, all Americans joining in the return salute.

On our return from Cronstadt, we landed at Peterhoff, where we remained some five hours. Partaking of an excellent dinner.

The Imperial Palace and grounds were not remarkable, save for their water works; there being between two and three hundred fountains playing in such a variety of shapes, and from so varied sources that to our unaccustomed eyes the sight was highly novel. Every jet of water emanated from a piece of statuary, which was either gilded, bronzed or marble. Old Neptune and his brother gods, were all here. Father Adam, and his better half, and all zealously engaged in the cold water cause. Immediately in front of the Palace, in the main basin, is a very large gilt statue representing Sampson, opening the lion's mouth, from which proceeds a stream of water two and a half inches in diameter, which is thrown some twenty feet in the air. This is surrounded by many smaller streams, producing a remarkably fine effect. On Sunday the walks and roads are filled by visitors from the crowded city, in search of recreation and pleasure. At ten o'clock, P. M., while it was yet quite light, we again stepped on board our packet boat and returned to the city, delighted with our trip.

The fortress of St. Petersburg is on the opposite side of the Neva, from the main part of the city. It is a massive fortification, commanding a full view of the city, and presents a very imposing appearance. In the center is a lofty church, surmounted by the tallest spire, richly gilt. Here are deposited all the deceased members of the Imperial Families, since the time of Peter the Great, inclusive. The tomb of Nicholas is clothed in royal robes, and lighted tapers are still burning upon it. His many devoted admirers daily deposit their tokens of remembrance upon it, so that it presents a reflecting contrast to those lying beside him, incased in bare massive stone. Mass was being celebrated while we were there, affording an excellent opportunity of witnessing this ceremony as performed by the Greek Church. There were present the Commander-in-Chief of all the military corps in the city, with their officers, making a gaudy display of rich uniforms. They were generally fair looking men.

A description in detail of a visit to the "Hermitage" would require more space in your columns than I feel justified to ask, did I feel competent to the task. Here an artist could feast for years upon a collection requiring centuries to accumulate, and a gold mine to procure. The statuary and paintings could not but intoxicate him, and were he tinctured with avarice, the jewels here assembled would set him raving. Lovers of antiquity could luxuriate upon the work of past years, and they would not turn coldly from the work-bench, lathe, and tools of Peter the Great, here in a state of pious preservation, together with the articles of his manufacture, some of which would do credit to the best of mechanics of the present day. The Hermitage was build by Catharine. Addition after addition was made to it till the year 1804, when it was finally completed. It now stands unrivalled, as containing the finest collection of the works of art in Europe.

The Neoski Prospekt is the principal street of St. Petersburg—her Broadway. It is well built up with brick edifices, stuccoed, presenting the appearance of massive stone, in good architectural taste. The street is very broad, and on both sides a very level and beautiful road is made of pine blocks, sexagonal in shape, so neatly fitted as to make the joints scarcely observable, and over which a sea of droshkies pass almost noiselessly. Towards evening crowds of beautiful (and St. Petersburg has many) ladies with their gallant escorts, can be seen promenading this quarter, making it for the stranger, a delightful time to exercise.

I regret not being so situated as to be enabled to give you some detailed account of affairs that are attracting the eyes of the whole world to this quarter; but shall, I hope, soon be able to let you hear from me again. when I may have something of more interest to communicate. T.

The Suspension Bridge at Niagara Falls.

The Buffalo Democracy gives a very interesting description of that magnificent triumph of art, the suspension bridge which carries the Great Western Railroad across the Niagara river, and so connects the United States with Canada. It speaks of it as the proud and enduring monument of the engineer, Mr. John A. Roebling.

We were aware that the bridge had the tremendous span of upwards of eight hundred feet, and that it stands two hundred and forty-five feet above a flood that no man has been able to ferry; but we were scarcely prepared to find that the structure is of such majestic strength as it appears to be. The deflection in the middle, when fully loaded with a freight train, is only ten inches!

"Delicate as lace work, and seemingly light and airy, it hangs there high between heaven and the boiling flood below, more solid than the earth bed of the adjacent railways. The concussions of fast-moving trains are sensibly felt miles off through solid rocky soil. In cities, locomotives shake entire blocks of stone dwellings. The waters of the Cayuga Lake tremble under the wheels of the express train traversing John A. Roebling's Monument at the speed of five miles an hour, communicates no jar to passengers walking on the carriage way below.—The land cables of the bridge do not tremble under it—the slightest concussion of the superstructure does not go over the summits of the towers. This last fact in the stiffness of the great work is of much importance. It furnishes a guaranty of the durability of the masonry. Fast anchored with stone, and grouted in solid rock, cut down to the depth of twenty-five feet, the great cables are immovable by any mechanical force incidental to the use of the bridge, or the natural influences it will be subject to. The ultimate strength of these cables is 12,000 tons.—The total weight of the material of the bridge, and of the traffic to which it will ordinarily be subjected, is 2,262 tons, to sustain which the engineer has provided, in his beautiful and scientific structure, a strength of 12,000 tons! He demonstrates, too, that while the strength of the cables is nearly six times as great as the ordinary tension, that strength will never be impaired by vibration.

There are in the bridge 624 "suspenders" each capable of sustaining 30 tons—and all of sustaining 18,720 tons. The weight they have ordinarily to support is only 100 tons. But the engineer has skillfully distributed the weight of the burdens by the means of "girders" and "trusses." These spread the 34 tons weight of a locomotive and tender over a length of 200 feet. How ample is this provision made for defective iron or sudden strains?

The anchor chains are composed of nine links, each seven feet long save the last which is ten feet. The lowest link is made of seven bars of iron, 7 inch by 1 1-2. It is secured to a cast-iron anchor-plate 3 1-2 inches thick, and 6 feet 6 inches square. The other links are equally strong. The iron used was all made from Pennsylvania charcoal, Ulster county, N. Y., and Salisbury pig, and can be depended upon for a strength of 64,000 pounds to the square inch. The central portion of the anchor-plates through which the links pass is 12 inches thick. The excavations in the solid rock were not vertical. They inclined from the river. The rock upon which the work may most rely on the New York side of the chasm is 100 feet long, 70 feet wide and 20 feet deep. It weighs 160 pounds to the cubic foot, and presents a resistance of 14,000 tons, exclusive of the weight of the superincumbent masonry and embankment.

The towers are each 15 feet square at the base, 60 feet high above the arch, and 8 feet square at the top. The limestone of which they are built will support a pressure of 500 tons without crushing. While the greatest weight that can fall upon the tower will rarely exceed 600 tons, a pressure of 32,000 tons would be required to crush the top course. There are 4,000 tons weight in each of the towers on the New York side.

The cables are 4 in number, 10 inches in diameter, and composed each of 3,640 small No. 9 wires. Sixty wires form one square inch of solid section, making the solid section of the entire cable 60:40 square inches, wrapping not included. These immense masses of wire are put together so that each individual wire performs its duty, and in a strain all work together.

Among the interesting characteristics of this splendid architecture is its elasticity. The depression under a load commences at the end, of course, and goes rapidly across. After the passage of a train the equilibrum is perfectly restored. The elasticity of the cables is fully equal to this task, and will never be lost.

The equilibrum of the bridge is less affected in cold weather than in warm. If a change of temperature of 100 degs. should take place, the difference in the level of the floor would be 2 feet 3 inches.

So solid is this bridge in its weight, its stiffness and its staying, that not the slightest motion is communicated to it by the severest gale of wind that blows up through the narrow gorge which it spans.

Next to violent winds, suspension bridge builders dread the trotting of cattle across their structures. Mr. Roebling says that a heavy train running 20 miles an hour across his Bridge would do less injury to it than would twenty steers passing on a trot. It is the severest test, next to that of troops marching in time, to which bridges, iron or wooden, suspension or tubular, can be subjected. Strict regulations are enforced for the passage of hogs, horses and oxen, in small bodies and always on a walk.

This great work cost only $400,000. The same structure in England (if it could possibly have been built there) would have cost $4,000,000. It is unquestionably the most admirable work of art on this continent and will make an imperishable monument to the memory of its Engineer, John A. Roebling.

[The tubular bridge built by Robert Stephenson over the Menai Staits for the Chester and Holyhead railroad, in England, cost the company a million sterling.

GRAFTING LILAC UPON THE ASH.—The common lilac, as well as the Parisian lilac, may be grafted on our common ash, and thus be made beautiful ornamental trees of a second-class growth. So may also the rose acacia be grafted on the locust.

"It's a very solemn thing to get married," said Aunt Bethany. "Yes, but it's a deal more solemn not to be," said her niece.

SOME are very busy, and yet do nothing.

M'CLEAN'S VOLCANIC OIL LINIMENT is truly a celebrated remedy, and has done more to alleviate human suffering than any other remedy ever discovered.
One or two applications will relieve the most severe pain, bruise or sprain.
Two bottles will cleanse, purify, and heal the foulest ulcer or sore, and it will heal the most severe burn or scald without a scar.
Every family should have a supply constantly on hand, for use in time of need.
Read the following extract of a letter, which is incontestable proof of its wonderful efficacy:
A BLIND MAN RESTORED TO SIGHT.
J. H. MCLEAN—Dear Sir: * * * I have been suffering for four years with rheumatic sore eyes, being at times altogether blind. I procured the advice of several physicians, but none of them could do me any good. By the advice of a friend I applied your "Volcanic Oil Liniment," according to the directions around the bottle, and it has cured me permanently. I have used it since for bruises, pains, &c., and it has always given immediate relief. I live on the main road near Farmington.
Yours, respectfully, JOHN H. ALLERD.
Jefferson county, Mo.
For horses it is far superior to any other remedy for curing lameness, bruises, cuts, old sores, swellings, &c.
We say, then, to all who may be suffering from external diseases, call at once and get a supply. Thousands of bottles are sold (and used) daily, and we have never heard of a case where it has failed in giving relief when properly applied.

MEDICINE FOR THE BILLION!
A Certain Remedy for all Diseases of
MAN OR ANIMALS,
Requiring an External Application.
Warranted in every Case for which it is Recommended!

THE MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT!
Unlike all other popular medicines, it is used by many prominent members of the faculty, and many of the public Hospitals. Their prejudices have yielded to indisputable and incontrovertible demonstrations of cures performed where their remedies had failed.
It has cured more cases of
RHEUMATISM
than any other medicine ever used. Its efficacy in this terrible disease is acknowledged by all who have used it. It not only cures the complaint, but appears to give a vigor and elasticity to the limbs, before unknown, thus performing a double office.

A FEW TESTIMONIALS.
PATH FINDER OFFICE, May 11, 1854.
G. W. WESTBROOK:—
Please send me by the bearer three large bottles of your Mexican Mustang Liniment, as I wish to take it up to my place in Vermont, not thinking it advisable to do without it. I have used it in my family and on my horses, and have found it invaluable. Yours,
J. T. WHITNEY.

ELIZABETHTOWN, TENN., May 25, 1855.
MR. G. W. WESTBROOK:—
Dear Sir—It affords me much pleasure in saying to you that the Mexican Mustang Liniment outsells any medicine that I have ever had for sale, and comes nearer doing what it promises to do. Send me another supply, as I am nearly out. Yours respectfully,
JOHN SINGLETRAY, P. M.

PHILADELPHIA, June 11, 1854.
MR. G. W. WESTBROOK:
Sir—My son was afflicted with a swelling upon the knee joint, which confined him to the house. I had a doctor attending him for some time, but he did not do him any good. One of my neighbors told me to use the Mustang Liniment. I asked the doctor if I could do so, and he told me he thought I could not do better.
I procured one bottle, and in about a week he was able to go out. I can safely recommend it to the afflicted.
Respectfully yours, MRS. BENNETT.

W. S. Ladd & Co., of Portland, Oregon, writes that there is an immense demand for the Mexican Mustang Liniment in that country, and orders forty gross to be shipped by Golden Gate, that sails in a few days from New York.

Park & White of San Francisco, California, order 100 gross, to be forwarded by first clipper for that port.

PORT AU PRINCE, HAYTI, Jan. 16th, 1854.
I had the pleasure to receive invoice and boxes Mexican Mustang Liniment per Croton, and have no doubt it will have a brisk sale on the island.
GEORGE RACKSTER.

To give health, strength and elacity to the limbs, there is nothing can equal in effect, the
MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT.
FARMERS AND LIVERY STABLE KEEPERS
have need it for the following diseases with extraordinary success, certifying invariably to the efficacy of the Liniment, and the truthfulness of our assertions in its behalf:
Spavin, Splint, Ring-bone, Fistula, Wind Galls, Big Head, Bruises, Strains, String-halt, Scratches, Cracked Heels, Sweeney, Saddle, Collar, or Harness Galls, Hard Lumps or Tumor, Film, or other diseases of the Eye, Poll-Evil, &c.
The small sizes retail for 25 cents per bottle;
The medium size retail for 50 cents per bottle;
The large sizes retail for one dollar per bottle.
The medium holds three times as much as the small;
The Large holds nearly three times as much as the medium,
Therefore the large bottles are the cheapest.

DISCOURSE

By President Brigham Young, Tabernacle, April 6, 1855.

(Concluded.)

If you will examine the map you will find that we are located in an isolated portion of what? Of Zion. And what is Zion? In one sense Zion is the pure in heart. But is there a land that ever will be called Zion? Yes, brethren. What land is it? It is the land that the Lord gave to Jacob, who bequeathed it to his son Joseph, and his posterity, and they inhabit it, and that land is North and South America. That is Zion as to land, as to Territory, and location. The children of Zion have not yet much in their possession, but their Territory is North and South America to begin with. As to the Spirit of Zion, it is in the hearts of the Saints, of those who love and serve the Lord with all their might, mind, and strength. We have opened up the way, and come here, and what will you see? Just as much weakness and trouble as in any other place, if you have a mind to make it—which you will if you do wickedly, and perform that which is derogatory to the principles of righteousness. We can make the Territory of Utah one of the greatest sinks of iniquity upon the face of the whole earth, and exceed the abominations of the ancient Sodomites, if we are so disposed.

The first founders of this Territory, those who dug their way through the mountains, cut the sage brush, killed the snakes, made the roads, built bridges and houses, opened farms, laid out and built cities where no white man ever thought that civilized people could subsist, unless they brought provisions from a distant country, can now assemble together surrounded with the comforts, and many of the luxuries of this life. No white man who ever passed through this country believed that a settlement could be made in these mountains, and prosper in cultivating the earth.—The Lord has brought us here, and what have we brought? Most certainly ourselves, and after we get here some want to go away, and say "that the place is not holy enough for them, that they will not endure it, but will withdraw from this society, until we are pure enough, and then they will come back again." Such persons are like those who stayed in Jackson County, they are too pure and holy for themselves. But if they stay, they stay with themselves, and if they go, they take themselves with them, and that is their great difficulty. If they could leave themselves behind, we might succeed in cleansing them from sin, but no, they go and have to take themselves with them.

The Saints who first came into these vallies necessarily brought their tabernacles with them, but we endeavored not to bring any selfishness with us, any erroneous prepossessed notions, any feelings, laws, rules, or acts pertaining to ourselves, except such as the Lord should dictate day by day.

Suppose that every person who comes into these vallies should come with a determination to be led by the Lord, from day to day; suppose they should say, "I will serve my God and keep his commandments, I will not set a stake here, or there, or any where else; I will not say that I will rise up to-morrow, and go to this city, or to that town, to exchange and trade to get gain, only as the Lord will say, and this will I do from this time, henceforth and forever;" and then let each one faithfully maintain such a determination, and we could truly say that we have the Territory of Zion, and the spirit, light, glory, and power thereof, and that the God of Zion dwells with this people.

But if we bring our old traditions with us, our prepossessed feelings and notions of this, that, and the other; and set our stakes, build our habitations, and locate our position in accordance therewith, and say, "I will do so and so, this is the path I will pursue, and I am determined to walk in it, regardless of every thing else," then we may expect to be overthrown, and the spirit of the holy gospel will depart from us. Then you would soon learn that there was no temporal, no natural prospect for this people to escape from utter destruction; and you would rise up and say, "I am off to California to save my life." But those who try to save their lives by their skill and craftiness, will lose them, both temporally and spiritually.

A great many say, "I believe the gospel," but continue to act wickedly, to do that which they know to be wrong. I wish you to fully understand that merely believing the gospel, that Jesus is the Christ, in the Old and New Testaments, that Joseph Smith was a Prophet sent of God, and that the Book of Mormon is true, does not prepare you to become angels of light, sons and daughters of God, and joint heirs with Jesus Christ to a divine inheritance. Nor does mere belief entitle you to the possession of the crowns and thrones that you are anticipating. No, such preparation can be made, and such objects attained only by doing the work required of us by our Father in heaven, by obeying him in all things, letting our will, dispositions, and feelings fall to our feet, to rise no more, from this time henceforth, and actually operating upon the principles that we will do the will of our Father in heaven, no matter what comes upon us. Then, if you are going to be killed by your enemies, or destroyed by the adversary, you can say "kill away, destroy away."

True the enemy of all righteousness, Lucifer the son of the morning, the devil, is in possession of the world, and of nearly all that is in it, and says, "I am determined to destroy every man, woman, and child that will not yield to my kingdom, obey my mandates and renounce the Lord Jesus Christ." But my determination is, not to renounce the Lord Jesus Christ and his commandments, but to keep his commandments faithfully, and let this people pursue the same course, and wait until the final issue, and see who will come off victorious in the great contest.

At present the enemies of all righteousness have the lead, and say, "Now you poor Mormons, are you not afraid that we can muster our thousands, and destroy every one of you?" Go to hell, say I, and be damned; for you will go there, and you are damned already. I can prove from the scriptures that they are in hell, though sanctimonious persons consider it wicked to make such remarks. I also say, stay in the hell you are in, if you choose, or go to another if you can.

Are the people going to fear? If fear is in the hearts of any of you, it is because you do not pray often enough; or when you do pray, you are not sufficiently humble before the Lord. You do not plead with Him until your will is swallowed up in his. If every one of the Latter-day Saints lived up to their privileges, they would not fear the world, and all that they can do, any more than they fear that the cranes, that fly croaking three quarters of a mile above them, will drop their eggs upon them to dash their brains out. You might as well fear that event, as to fear all the forces of hell, if the people were sanctified before the Lord, and would do his will every day.

Are these ideas strange to you? Read and learn how the Lord protected the children of Israel in former days, even during their wickedness, and rebellion against him.

Whenever a good man would say, cease your wickedness, turn from your idols, and seek to the Lord, and they hearkened to his counsel, then the Lord would fight their battles, and kill their enemies by scores and hundreds of thousands. And on one occasion the angel of the Lord slew one hundred and eighty-five thousand of those who came against His people to destroy them, "and when they arose early in the morning, behold they were all dead corpses." So reads the Bible. The Lord fought their battles.

Again, Elisha's servant saw that there was more for them than all who were against them; he saw that the sides of the mountains were covered with "chariots of fire."

When the Lord commands those invisible beings, shall I say, those who have had their resurrection? yes, millions and millions more than the inhabitants of this earth, they can fight your battles.

Now, since one angel could fight their battles in former times, and overcome the enemies of the people of God, who shall we fear? Shall we fear those who can kill the body, and then have no more that they can do? No, but we will fear Him who is able not only to destroy the body, but has power to cast both soul and body into hell fire.

There is an item of doctrine that I will now present just as it occurs to me. You are aware that many think that the devil has rule and power over both body and spirit. Now, I want to tell you that he does not hold any power over man, only so far as the body overcomes the spirit that is in a man, through yielding to the spirit of evil. The spirit that the Lord puts into a tabernacle of flesh, is under the dictation of the Lord Almighty; but the spirit and body are united in order that the spirit may have a tabernacle, and be exalted; and the spirit is influenced by the body, and the body by the spirit.

In the first place the spirit is pure, and under the special control and influence of the Lord, but the body is of the earth, and is subject to the power of the devil, and is under the mighty influence of that fallen nature that is of the earth. If the spirit yields to the body, the devil then has power to overcome both the body and spirit of that man, and he loses both.

Recollect, brethren and sisters, every one of you, that when evil is suggested to you, when it arises in your hearts, it is through the temporal organization. When you are tempted, buffeted, and step out of the way inadvertantly; when you are overtaken in a fault, or commit an overt act unthinkingly; when you are full of evil passion and wish to yield to it, then stop and let the spirit, which God has put into your tabernacles take the lead. If you do that, I will promise that you will overcome all evil, and obtain eternal lives. But many, very many, let the spirit yield to the body, and are overcome and destroyed.

The influence of the enemy has power over all such. Those who overcome every passion, and every evil, will be sanctified, and be prepared to enjoy eternity with the blessed. If you have never thought of this before, try to realize it now. Let it rest upon your minds, and see if you can discover in yourselves the operations of the spirit and the body, which constitute the man. Continually and righteously watch the spirit that the Lord has put in you, and I will promise you to be led into righteousness, holiness, peace, and good order.

But let the body rise up with its passions, with the fallen nature pertaining to it, and let the spirit yield to it, your destruction is sure. On the other hand, let the spirit take the lead, and bring the body and its passions into subjection, and you are safe.

It is instructive to reflect upon the acts of men, to observe what prompts them to action, and to see how liable they are to get out of the way, how weak they are, how short-coming, how failing in their spirits to do the will of the Lord, and how fearful they are. Afraid of what? Do you reflect, and realize that your fear is all pertaining to your bodies, that it is not pertaining to your spirits? Let me tell you, when the spirit is once separated from the body, it is one of the most beautiful and delightful objects that you could contemplate, and there is nothing that can give a pure spirit so much joy as to have the privilege of being separated from the body, and of going back to its Father in heaven, to await the morning of the resurrection.

Remember this when you are afflicted with fear and trembling, and are exclaiming, "O what shall we do!" Do you recollect what has been said here? I recollect that when I chastised certain individuals who were really not worth any body's notice, the cry of some was, "O dear! we are all going to be destroyed, where shall I go to save my life, to the North, South, East, or West?" That fear arose from the organization of the tabernacle, and not from the spirit within it.

The fear and trembling, the misgivings, and wavering arise from the anxiety we have to know how to save ourselves pertaining to the flesh. That weakness is not exhibited in the spirit.

I am afflicted with it just as you are, but what do my judgment, the revelations of Jesus Christ, the scriptures, and the spirit of the gospel teach me? That my tabernacle is of comparatively small value, although it is a pretty fair one, and one that I am willing to take in the morning of the resurrection. The Lord gave it to me, and I am thankful for it.—When it is the will of my Father that my spirit should return to Him, what do I care about the mouldering tabernacle, so that the spirit is unlocked, and set free from its prison house of clay? It can go to the Father who gave it, until the body is resurrected, when the spirit will again be reunited with the tabernacle, to be exalted to thrones, kingdoms, principalities, and powers, and spread abroad, and to the increase there shall be no end.

Fears arise from the weaknesses of the flesh, over which the devil has power. We should care comparatively, but little about it; let it crumble, let it fall, and go back to its mother earth, and be reserved to the morning of the resurrection. I shall have this body again, then what need we care, how quickly our bodies dissolve? All I care for it, in my spirit, in my judgment, and in my moments of reflection and revelation, is merely that I wish it to endure here to fight the tabernacles which devils dwell in, until the last one is driven from the earth. Then let my tabernacle stay here and contend with the fallen nature that it is heir to, and let my spirit rise triumphant over it, until every passion, feeling, and appetite is brought in subjection to the will of God. Let me stay here until I have accomplished this, and have done the work I was designed for in this my probation, then my spirit will be free from mobs, and strife, and I can soar far above those who have power over them, even death, hell, and the grave.

I say to the Latter-day Saints, who are coming here by thousands, and thousands, and who are coming into the church by tens of thousands, begin to think, especially some of you first Elders, and ask yourselves how many you can bring to mind of those who are now in good faith in the Church, in proportion to the number that you have known to have come into it, and you will find that there are only a very few.

If you should hunt up many of those who have been baptised for some time, but have not yet gathered, and ask them if they believe that Joseph Smith was a true prophet of God, and that the Book of Mormon is true, several of them will reply, "O yes." "Then why don't you gather with the Saints?" "O, I don't know; I am poor now; but I would very much like to gather with them." At the same time, I know that their feelings are, "if I go there I shall be persecuted, but if I live here I shall have peace with my neighbors, so long as I let religious matters alone, and here I can live without persecution, until my tabernacle is ready to return to the earth." What makes them have that fear of trials and persecutions? It is on account of their tabernacles. The spirit is not afraid. If it was free of the encumbrances of the tabernacle, no such fear would be manifested; and while we are in the flesh the gospel is calculated to deliver those who live by its principles from all those fears.

I recollect many times when brother Joseph, reflecting upon how many would come into the Kingdom of God and go out again, would say, "Brethren, I have not apostatized yet, and don't feel like doing so." Many of you, no doubt, can call to mind his words. Joseph had to pray all the time, exercise faith, live his religion, and magnify his calling to obtain the manifestations of the Lord, and to keep him steadfast in the faith.

Do you not know others who had manifestations almost equal to those Joseph had, but who have gone by the board? Martin Harris declared, before God and angels, that he had seen angels. Did he apostatize? Yes, though he says that the Book of Mormon is true. Oliver Cowdery also left the church, though he never denied the Book of Mormon, not even in the wickedest days he ever saw, and came back into the church before he died. A gentleman in Michigan said to him, when he was pleading law, "Mr. Cowdery, I see your name attached to this book, if you believe it to be true, why are you in Michigan?" The gentleman read over the names of the witnesses, and said, "Mr. Cowdery, do you believe this book?" "No, sir," replied Oliver Cowdery. "That is very well, but your name is attached to it, and you say here that you saw an angel, and the plates from which this book is said to be translated, and now you say that you do not believe it. Which time was you right?" Mr. Cowdery replied, "There is my name attached to that book and what I have there said that I saw, I know that I saw, and belief has nothing to do with it, for knowledge has swallowed up the belief that I had in the work, since I know it is true."—He gave this testimony when he was pleading law in Michigan. After he had left the church he still believed Mormonism; and so it is with hundreds, and thousands of others, and yet they do not live it.

If the Saints in the midst of these mountains would live their religion according to the best of their knowledge, according to what they see, feel, and hear, there is no power that could move them out of their place.

A great many of the new comers have been in the church but a short time, but you may take the Saints as a body, from those who have been in the Kingdom twenty, and twenty-two years, to those who have embraced it but a few years past, and, according to my feelings and faith, and I will call upon every man and woman, who has got the Holy Ghost, to say whether I am right, faith and good works are rapidly increasing among this people.—You know whether I tell the truth, or not. If they have not increased, for heaven's sake, for God's sake, for your own soul's sake, for Zion's sake, for Jerusalem's sake, and for the sake of scattered Israel, let them increase from this time henceforth. Let "Mormonism," the faith of the gospel, which is "Mormonism," continue to increase, and cease all your evil deeds, and return to the Lord, and be honest and true. I tell you that a man cannot believe "Mormonism" as I do, and be a bad man.

You will find in the scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, and in the other revelations of God, that there is a clear distinction made between the sinner and the ungodly. A person to be ungodly must have known godliness, and must have a knowledge of what the Lord requires concerning him. There are many in the midst of this people who believe the gospel with all their hearts, but yet do wickedly; this makes them ungodly. Do wickedly no more, but follow good works, and cherish faith and benevolence one to another.

Serving a Subpœna, or Love vs. Law.

It is singular what shifts love will make to accomplish its object. Bolts, gates and bars are of little avail against Cupid's picklock contrivance—his cunning will devise ways and means to open them all. A young gentleman had courted a fair lady of this city, and it was supposed the two would become one. Some little quarrel of a trivial nature, as lover's quarrels generally are, occurred. Neither would confess the wrong to be on their side—presents and correspondence were mutually sent back, and the match was broken off. The young gentleman started for New Orleans immediately, to enter into commercial business, thinking that distance would lessen the attachment he really felt for the young lady. When woman is injured or thinks she is injured by the one she loves, she is more apt than the male sex "to bite off her own nose," as the saying is, to inflict pain, and be revenged on the offending object. A gentleman the young lady once rejected, renewed his proposals, and was accepted, within a week from the time her old lover had embarked for the South. On reaching New Orleans he found that distance, instead of weakening his attachment only made the lady dearer, and he became melancholy and low spirited. The first letter he received from New York, informed him, that his old flame was shortly to be married to another. His course was quickly taken; the next morning found him on board a packet bound for Gotham.

The passage was unfortunately long, and the poor fellow chafed and fretted so much that the passengers began to think him deranged, or else a fugitive from justice. The instant the vessel touched the wharf, he darted for the office of his friend, the lawyer; it is to be supposed the latter was surprised to see his friend, imagining him a couple of thousand miles away. After the usual salutations, he exclaimed—

"My dear fellow, you are just in time to see the wedding, Miss———, your old sweetheart is to be married this morning at 11 o'clock. To tell the truth, I dont believe there is much love about it, and that the girl really thinks more of your head than she does of the fortunate bridegroom's whole body."

"Good heavens! where is she to be married—in church?"

"No. At her father's house."

"My dear fellow—I—I—yes—no—yes, I will have it. Have you any case coming on in either of the courts at 11 o'clock?"

"Yes."

"Then fill up a subpœna with the bridegroom's name. Don't stop to ask any questions. It matters not whether he knows anything about the parties in the suit. By heavens, Julia shall be mine!

His friend saw the object at once and promised to carry out the matter. A subpœna was made out and placed in the hands of a clerk to serve on the unsuspecting bridegroom the instant he was seen to leave his residence, and was dispatched in a cab to watch the house. About 10 minutes before 11, as the soon to be happy man was about entering a coach before his residence he was served with a subpœna.

"Can't help it," said the clerk in reply to his gesticulating about not knowing the parties, going to be married, &c." "We shan't reach the Hall now before 11, the case is the first on the calender, heavy fine, imprisonment for contempt, &c."

The bridegroom who was rather of a timid nature, finally consented, particularly as the clerk promised to send a friend of his who sat in the cab, wrapped up in a large cloak, to the house of his bride in expectation, explaining the reason of his absence.—The reader can easily imagine who this person was.

Eleven o'clock came but still no bridegroom.—The guests were staring at each other—the priest began to grow impatient—and the bride that was to be, looked pale and agitated, when a carriage drove up, the bell rang, and "There he is!"—A gentleman entered whose appearance created almost as much astonishment as that of Edgar Ravenwood in the hall of Ashton Castle, at the marriage of Lucy Ashton, in "Scott's Bride of Lammermoor." The lady fainted—private explanations ensued between her parents and the lover—the two real lovers were joined in the sacred bonds of matrimony, much to the satisfaction of all.

The bridegroom that was to have been, afterwards made his appearance puffing and blowing. What he said and what he did, on beholding his rival, and being made acquainted with the condition of affairs, was really tragi-comical.

The story of the subpœna shortly after leaked out, and created so much amusement that the poor fellow declares he will sue the lawyer for $100,000 damages in summoning him as witness in a case of which he knew nothing, and by which he lost his wife. It would be a novel case if he should do so. —[Exchange.

THE MORMON TRADE.

The Southern Californian says: "A new feature in the business of Los Angeles henceforth, will be the trade to Salt Lake City, already commenced through the energy and enterprise of our citizens.—It has been demonstrated that merchandise can be taken through this route to that point in much less time than from Missouri, and now that the hostility of the Indian tribes scattered along the route from the States, has presented insuperable obstacles in the way of a safe transmission of merchandise, attention has been turned to the Pacific, and as there is no difficulty in obtaining every variety of goods, on as reasonable terms as can be found in the East, there is no reason why the entire trade of the Great Basin should not hereafter pass through our hands. Already have several invoices of goods left this point within the last few weeks, amounting to thousands of dollars. Messrs Hopkins & Rollings, of San Bernardino, started last week with several wagon loads, and Messrs Alexander & Banning, and W. T. B. Sandford will send off in a few days as invoice of $20,000. The road to Salt Lake, since the repairs made under Col. Steptoe, is completely free from obstacles, and no difficulty is experienced in taking loaded wagons through in about twenty-five days. These movements are significant of the future importance of the business relations destined to bind us in interest to the immense territory occupied by our Mormon brethren."—[San Francisco Herald, May 1.

ARRIVAL OF ORSON HYDE AND COMPANY AND COL. STEPTOE AND COMPANY AT CARSON VALLEY.—The Sacramento Union publishes a telegraph dispatch from Placerville, announcing the arrival at that place from Salt Lake of Hon. J. P. Stiles, Associate Justice of Utah, and Orson Hyde.

Col. Steptoe and command will remain at Carson Valley about ten days, to recruit, previous to crossing the mountains. Mr. Hyde says that the last report gives him many more wives than he really has, and none came over with him.

COMPLIMENTARY.—A Massachusetts editor has found time to visit the West, and henceforth is in raptures at the enterprise of Western cities. His ideas of Cleveland and Toledo are not imperfect, and his enthusiasm about Erie is as brilliant as it is true. He says: "Erie, Pa., is a God-forsaken looking place, the men looking like bull-dogs and the women like furies. The boys and girls are a ragged, dirty and saucy set, and run in the streets with the pigs and geese. Cleveland is dirtier, and more filled up with foreigners than I expected to find it. Business appears to be overdone, and the place is cursed with lawyers and doctors. * * * Chicago is the hottest place I have been in this year."

EXCHANGE ON SALT LAKE.

Emigrants, Missionaries, and all persons wishing to carry or send money to any part of Utah, are hereby notified that we have made the necessary arrangements, and are prepared to furnish SIGHT DRAFTS on Gov. B. Young, or on any of the principal Mercantile houses in Salt Lake City. Bring or send your money to the Luminary Office, and drafts for the same amount will be returned to you, or forwarded by succeeding mail to any person in Utah, as you may direct. Duplicates will be furnished, whenever required, so that in case of failure of mails, no loss will be sustained, and you will avoid the risk of transporting specie, besides the Church wish to use it here.

ST. LOUIS, 1855. ERASTUS SNOW.

The Change of Country and its effects upon the Unstable.

It is commonly observed by a certain class that Mormonism is not the same in St. Louis as it is in the "old country" and much has been said and written upon the different features that it assumes in different localities, letters out of number have been written to friends in England, concerning the supposed metamorphosis of Mormonism. We have often studied the men who hold these sentiments, and compared their spirit and character in St. Louis with the spirit they possessed, and the character they sustained in England, Scotland, Wales, or other places where they have lived and labored, and we find an entire change of feeling spirit and character, and if we thought that these men were true representatives of Mormonism in this city, we should be ready to say with them that Mormonism was indeed changed; but inasmuch as we discover in them a spirit of opposition to principles they once testified were true, an hatred for things they then loved, and love for things they then despised, we are bound to conclude that the change is not in Mormonism but in the men who have professed to believe in it.

We see men occasionally whom we have known years ago, men who were considered staunch believers, and firm advocates of the gospel of Jesus Christ, who have travelled for many years to preach the truth as revealed by angels and Prophets, and have been eminently successful in their ministry; they have scarcely crossed the ocean and ascended the river before their mouths are filled with cursing and bitterness, and they begin to blaspheme and curse God, eat and drink with the drunken, mingle with the vulgar and profane, and then perchance crawl into the reunions of the Saints on the Sabbath, and if permitted, will exclaim with sanctimonious look, and canting expression, "I'm a real Mormon, to the backbone." These are generally known as Mormons of the polecat order; if they were genuine specimens of Mormonism in St. Louis, it might be said that Mormonism was bad indeed.

There are others too, we might just notice en passant, who though they are not so notorious for mischief and devilry, as those we have discribed, have certain characteristics which indicate unmistakably their respective order, they are not known to have done much harm, and they have never been known to do any particular good from the time they set their feet upon these shores unto this day, they think it is of no use for them to attend the congregations of the Saints, for they have learned all there is to be learned, years ago, (and forgotten it). They think it entirely unnecessary for them to take the Mormon, Luminary or other organ of the church, because they can get the current news by the daily papers, or, because they have not read through all the old papers their fathers left them. They are afraid to pay their tithing lest it should be improperly used, they would give a few dimes occasionally for general church expenses, but they have so much to pay the Doctor that they really can't afford it, they find Mormonism so very different with what they embraced, cultivated and cherished in the "old country," the Millennial Star was such a sweet little visitor, 'tis true they could have it in St. Louis, but they would have to pay the postage upon it, four cents per week, total, six cents, and that would more than purchase a small bottle of whisky, besides when they were in the "old country" they were healthy and strong, and their children also, and if they were ever sick they were healed by anointing of oil and the laying on of hands; but this country is so unhealthy, and they are so week and sickly that they must take a little whisky to keep their strength up, and if they are sick they must have the Doctor immediately lest they should die, they perhaps call in several, and swallow all the physic they choose to proscribe, forget the Lord and the healing ordinances of His house, and then wonder why they are not healed, and because sickness and death lays hold upon them and their families, they think Mormonism cannot be the same here as it is in their native land. The reason it is not the same to them is because their ears are turned from the truth, their hearts are fixed upon idols of their own invention, their eyes are blinded by the God of this world and they are led captive by the devil at his will, and instead of being ministers of righteousness are the very meanest servants and slaves of sin.

These characters feel it hard they are not appointed Presidents, High Priests, Bishops, or to some other important office in this Stake of Zion, they think the Presidency must have committed a great blunder in neglecting to appoint them to some office of trust, they have talent and ability to preach and expound, they have presided over districts branches and even Conferences; then why are they not chosen in preference to those less experienced? The reason is this, they have lost their equilibrium, and have fallen among the sons of Bacchus, and have mingled promiscuously among the sons of Lucifer, and their conduct proves them to be unworthy any higher position than that they occupy, and place them in a position of honor and responsibility and strive to redeem them from their debased condition and they will plunge into greater follies and inconsistencies, and convince you that the nigger's skin or the leopard's spots will change as soon as you can change the course of their ungovernable passions, their race is soon ended.

There are those who have held rank and station among the rulers and authorities of the church, circumstances now require them to fall into the ranks and be governed as they have sought to govern others, this is an entire change of scene, a disagreeable revolution in the affairs of government, instead of being looked up to, and obeyed as formerly, they are required to look up and obey; this is not because Mormonism has undergone some change, but because the position and circumstances of those individuals are changed. It happens sometimes that men have been so long accustomed to looking down that their neck grows stiff, and they cannot look up to save their souls, when this occurs their case is hopeless, their nose is continually in some puddle, they cannot see but the dirty surface of the meanest objects, and when they speak, they speak of them, and when they write, they write concerning them; they think Mormonism is strangely altered, when they first boarded the Mormon cars all was sunshine, and they loved it, and they determined to make the entire journey of life with Joseph, Brigham and the Saints, but inconsiderately stepping from the cars, they are left in the rear, when they take a dead stand, and commence cursing the conductors for driving so fast, but their voice is soon lost in the distance, and they are left a sport to the devil and every passer by.

The elementary principles of Mormonism are always the same, they have never changed from the day they were taught by our first parents until this day, and though worlds be demolished, and systems destroyed, these principles will remain eternally sure. Neither plagues, pestilence, famine, earthquakes, nor death in all its ghastliness can in any way effect their truth. Apostates cannot corrupt them, devils cannot destroy them, and our opponents cannot refute them, they are unchangeable as the mind of God, and as immutable as his throne. The kingdom of God established upon these principles is a progressive kingdom, and in its progress develops features the most beautiful and glorious.—It has grown from infancy to youth, and from youth to manhood and is prepared to endorse every righteous act of its representatives, but if they pursue a corrupt and unrighteous course they alone are responsible. It is therefore useless attempting to blockade Mormonism by accumulating the inconsistencies and follies of men, for before its impetuous motion, barackades and mountainous obstacles recede; and "like the baseless fabric of a vision leave not a trace behind." Mormonism is pure and unsullied as when it came from the Father; its position and influence in the world has changed commensurately with its growth, and instead of a few thousand isolated fanatics as some suppose, we behold a concentrated phalanx of Philosophers, Patriots and Heroes, who if wontonly outraged would cause nations to tremble.

MORE BAPTISMS.

Elder E. M. Peck, writes us under date of Wheeloch Va., July 30th, and says: "We are enjoying good health and the Lord has blessed us beyond measure since we arrived in this country, the Saints feel well with but few exceptions, and have renewed their covenants, and are determined to walk by every word that proceedeth from the mouth of God, they are devising every means to gather out from among the wicked. There is a branch at Irasburg, numbering sixteen members, and we organized another at Jay, with twelve members, of which eleven are new members, and there are good prospects of some four or five more, all are determined to leave this fall if possible."

We are happy to learn of the success of our brethren in the work of the ministry, there are yet many honest hearted souls scattered among the States, who have never heard the fulness of the everlasting gospel, who, when they hear it will receive it with rejoicing; the printed word now being circulated through the land will aid materially in searching out the upright and virtuous, and in informing their judgment concerning the true principles of our most holy religion. A young farmer came into the city a few weeks ago from Salem Ills., who had never known anything concerning our faith, until within the last few months, he subscribed for the Mormon, when he became so firmly convinced of the truth of Mormonism, that he came and was baptised without hearing the first discourse. If Elder Case could visit Salem and call upon Joseph Benson Elder, he would meet with a hearty welcome, who would render all the aid in his power to preach the gospel in that locality; those who were children in the days of our trials and persecutions in Illinois, have grown up to manhood, and many of them will obey the truth when presented to them, and thus save themselves from the curse, pending over them, through the unrighteous deeds of their fathers.

THE SALT LAKE MAIL, &c.

The Salt Lake Mail arrived at Independence about the 4th inst., and may be expected in this city in a few days.

The report of the celebration at Mormon Grove held on the 24th ult., has come to hand per favor of Elder Daniel Spencer; but was too late for the present issue, it may be expected in our next.

Elder D. Spencer is enjoying excellent health, and will leave for England immediately.

GLEANINGS.

Louisville has been the theatre, during the last week, of a most disgraceful and sanguinary riot, between the Americans on the one side, and both Irish and Germans on the other. Ten on one side, and fifteen on the other, are said to have fallen victims to the demon of mobocracy. Several blocks of buildings were fired by the American party, in order to dislodge their antagonists who had taken refuge in the houses, to protect them from the fury and vengeance of their opponents. Thus fortified, they fired upon all indiscriminately. Their strong-holds being set on fire, many tried to escape, but were shot in the attempt. In some instances, the blazing buildings crushed their inmates in their fall, and roasted carcasses were left to attest the horrors of the scene. The murderer of Graham was captured and hung, but a policeman cut him down whilst still living; he was afterwards shot and died. This is probably, one of the most horrid affairs recorded in the history of electioneering mobocracy in this country.

A gentleman from Sullivan, reports that that town is deserted, there being but one family in the place who have not been attacked by the Cholera, and that there will not be persons enough to bury the dead, (unless the Doctors do it,) as about all who were able to leave, having become alarmed at the ravages committed by the scourge around them, have fled from the town, and are scattered in the adjacent country.

On the 23d ult., the cupola of the Court-house in Taylor county, Va., was struck by lightning while the Court was in session. One man, Rev. Hezekiah Dunham, was instantly killed, and several others prostrated and severely injured. A few days previous, Mr. Alexander Williamson and four of his sons were binding wheat in a field, when the entire party were prostrated by lightning, but they all recovered.

A Presbyterian preacher, named W. H. Wiley, was arrested on the 2nd inst., in Western Missouri, and was arraigned before the Court at Harrisonville, upon the charge of preaching Abolition doctrines, and of circulating Abolition documents. When asked their authority to arrest him contrary to law, he was told that the great misfortune was, that the laws were not strict enough, and that they had taken the law into their own hands. He was ordered to leave the State in seven days, or the consequences whatever they might be, would be on his own head. Mr. Wiley is now in this city—his friends think the prospect dark and forbidding.

A bill has been introduced into the Kansas Legislature, to make negro stealing a capital offence. The Committee to whom the bill was referred, report that they have had the same for some time under consideration, and. though on the first presentation of the subject, there appeared a severity that seemed not to be consonant with the crime; but upon viewing the offence in its peculiar bearings upon our institutions at this particular time, it assumes more the character of treason against the laws, than an ordinary crime, which affects the parties immediately interested, and are therefore prepared to sanction the penalty of death, and respectfully recommend the passage of the act. The first section of the act comprehends the whole subject which reads as follows:

"If any person shall entice, decoy, or carry away out of this Territory any slave belonging to another, with intention to deprive the owner thereof of the services of such slave, or with intent to effect or procure the freedom of such slave, he shall be adjudged guilty of grand larceny, and on conviction thereof, shall suffer death.

The murderer, De Bar, was tried by Judge Larabee on the 7th inst. The jury brought in a verdict of murder in the first degree. The prisoner was seized by the mob, when returning to the jail, and was struck senseless by a blow on his head with a stone. A rope was then tied to his feet and he was dragged through the street, the distance of a half mile. They then hung him by the heels to the limb of a tree. The body remained hanging until 6 P. M., the following day.

The steamer Baltic arrived at her dock, on the 8th, bringing dates from Liverpool, to the 28th ult. The war news is unimportant; neither sorties nor assaults of any note are reported since our last dates. An omenous silence and significant calm seems to prevail, such as generally precede a violent storm. Nothing of any moment has been reported since the 18th of June, when the Allies suffered a severe loss. They appear to have acted with greater caution and reserve since this defeat; but cautious and reserved as they may be, they must engage in the grand struggle, to which each day brings them nearer.—When all the impetuosity of the French, and cool bravery of the English troops will be required to cope with their antagonists, who are at length discovered to be, not as was supposed, undiciplined Bears, but well drilled troops, and courageous and indomitable men, whose valor, bravery, and perseverence is only equalled by their beseigers.

Dr. Snow, President of the Medical Society of London, has written and published a work on the subject of cholera and its mode of diffusion. The Doctor is convinced from facts, gathered from various sources, that it is communicated from one person to another, although being present in the same room, and attending upon the sick person do not necessarily expose a person to the morbid poison. He asserts the general proposition that diseases which are communicated from person to person, are caused by some material which passes from the sick to the healthy, and which has the property of increasing and multiplying in the systems of the persons it attacks. He instances small-pox, vaccina, &c., as physical proof of the increase of the morbid material. In relation to cholera he says it commences with an affection of the alimentary canal, the morbid material producing cholera, must in fact be swallowed, and the increase of the cholera poison must take place in the interior of the stomach, with these views partly confirmed by experience and investigation, Dr. Snow presents the following theory on the propagation of cholera:

"The instances in which minute quantities of the ejections and dejections of cholera patients must be swallowed, are sufficiently numerous to account for the spread of the disease, and on examination it is found to spread most where the facilities for this mode of communication are greatest. Nothing has been found to favor the extension of cholera more than want of personal cleanliness, whether arising from habit or scarcity of water, although the circumstances, till lately, remained unexplained. The bed linen nearly always becomes wetted by the clolera evacuations, and as these are devoid of the usual color and odor, the hands of persons waiting on the patient become soiled without their knowing it; and unless these persons are scrupulously cleanly in their habits, and wash their hands before taking food, they must accidentally swallow some of the excretion, and leave some on the food they handle, or prepare, which has to be eaten by the rest of the family, who, amongst the working classes, often have to take their meals in the sick room; and hence the thousands of instances in which, amongst this class of population, a case of cholera in one member of the family is followed by other cases; whilst medical men and others, who merely visit the patients, generally escape.

The post mortem inspection of the bodies of cholera patients has hardly ever been followed by the disease, that I am aware, this being a duty that is necessarily followed by careful washing of the hands; and it is not the habit of medical men to be taking food on such an occasion. On the other hand, the duties performed about the body, such as laying it out, when done by women of the working class, who make the occasion one of eating and drinking, are often followed by an attack of the cholera; and persons who merely attend the funeral and have no connection with the body, frequently contract the disease, in consequence, apparently, of partaking of food which has been prepared or handled by those having duties about the cholera patient, or his linen and bedding."

The mass of facts drawn from all imaginable sources, which Dr. Snow has compiled, would seem to sustain beyond dispute the theory advanced. At all events the subject is of sufficient importance to present to public attention; and we can but urge upon those who may be anywhere exposed to this or kindred diseases to which the theory of Dr. Snow applies, the practical use of it.

A Western editor thinks Hiram Powers the sculptor, a swindler, because he chiseled an unfortunate Greek girl out of a block of marble.

In answer to certain editors who have expressed themselves opposed to admitting Kansas into the Union without the restoration of the Missouri Compromise, the Squatter Sovereign says: "It is a matter of small consequence whether the Abolitionists of the North permit us to enter the Union as an independent State. One thing we can, and will do, when the proper time arrives, Kansas will apply for admission into the Union as a slave State. If we are refused we will proceed to organize a government of our own, independent of the Abolition Republic. We feel strong enough to resist oppression, whether it comes from the General Government or other sources."

We learn from one of our Presbyterian exchanges that "a Mormon has been convinced of his error, by the tracts of the London Tract Society, we recommend the honorable members of that association to send out a few thousand copies to Utah, who knows but they would effect the conversion of the Mormons in the mountains.

Correspondence.

MORMON GROVE, K. T., August 3d, '55.

TO THE CHURCH OF JESUS CHRIST OF LATTER-DAY SAINTS IN ST. LOUIS:

Beloved Saints:—It has seemed wisdom to call Elder Milo Andrus, to take charge of the last company of the P. E. Fund emigrants over the plains, and during his absence, or until the Lord shall otherwise direct. I would nominate Elder James H. Hart to take the presiding charge of the Church in St. Louis, under the counsel and direction of Elder Orson Spencer, who will exercise a general supervising control over all the affairs of the Church in the Valley of the Ohio and Mississippi, until otherwise directed by the First Presidency or some of the Apostles of the Church.

The last company of the Saints are now moving off the ground, Elder Bassett and myself, intend to leave to-day for the Salt Lake Valley; time does not permit of a lengthy epistle, but we leave our blessing and prayers for your continued welfare, and trust that we have yours also, to accompany us across the Plains. Yours in the bonds of the Gospel.

ERASTUS SNOW

LETTER FROM ORSON SPENCER.

MORMON GROVE, K. T., Aug. 4, 1855.

DEAR BRO. HART:—This city of camps and Saints is now nearly depopulated. These beautiful hills that a few days since were lighted up with the camp-fires of eight or ten hundred Saints, (even since I came) and since the first of June, with several thousands of glad hearted Saints are now comparatively vacated. The great herds of lowing cattle are now gone. The whips are now cracking to move the last lingering wagons of the last company of the season. A great work has been accomplished in fitting out with teams and provisions about three thousand Saints. Imagine more than half the the thousands of cattle, to be wild and unaccustomed to the yoke, and a much larger portion of the drivers as unacquinted with driving as their oxen are to the yoke, the labor of supervision becomes considerable. A system of order in the distribution of provisions and cattle, and wagons and drivers, and conductors has been arranged mostly out of the raw materials, with all the precision that attends a regular army, and all without salary or pay. Some indeed have sunk under the accumulating circumstances, and their bodies now lie under the turf of the green prairie, until the resurrection morning. But the number is few out of the large multitude. But sympathy with surviving friends pays tribute to their graves as we linger where distant friends are even denied this melancholly office to the departed. Peace to their ashes and blessings upon the heads of absent mourners.

The Camps are healthy and in good spirits. President Erastus Snow gave us the parting hand yesterday at four o'clock P. M., in company with Elder C. H. Bassett. They went in a light carriage drawn by four mules. The Mail Stage bearing Captain Hooper and Kinkead left our grove the same hour for Salt Lake with two carriages—six mules to each carriage.

The whole company will probably reach Salt Lake about the same time. And while I am now writing, the Salt Lake mail due at Indpendence five or six days ago is passing in sight of us. Most gladly would we snatch some letters from their bags and learn some news from our dear friends and Zion. But we have no such right. But we had just petitioned the General Post Master to establish a post office in this Grove to be called Mormon Grove post office. This place is situated about seventy-five miles distant from Independence, Mo. It is a charming spot. The farm is large and the crops look flourishing. Claims for settlement are multiplied on every hand. Brother Daniel Spencer leaves to-day for St. Louis, and thence to England, to renew his former labors in Britain, having shared in the multiplied duties of forwarding the entire emigration of Saints over the plains.

You with many others will be surprised to learn that brother Milo Andrus was yesterday suddenly appointed to take charge of a company over the Plains to Salt Lake. Several circumstances combined to render this appointment prudent and desirable. The absence of brothers' Snow and Andrus will be deeply felt in St. Louis and the Mississippi Valley. May the blessing of the Great Shepherd continually attend them in all their labors.

You will receive by brother Brown the statistical account of all the companions and the time of their departure over the Plains, &c. I intend to proceed on my journey to the Cherokee nation to-morrow or next day, in company with Elder James McGaw, who is appointed to take charge of Mormon Grove station. Accept my kind regards and remembrance of all the Saints.

Yours, truly, ORSON SPENCER.

FOR THE LUMINARY.

OFFICE SEEKING IN UTAH.

MR. EDITOR:—Having read an article in an Eastern paper a few days since, which announced the arrival of Mr. Half-man, as the bearer of "private dispatches" from Colonel Steptoe, to the President of the United States, concerning Utah, I thought if it would not be intruding upon your columns, to give a few hints to the public, concerning the probable contents of these all important dispatches. There must have been some strong reasons, good, or bad, that induced our worthy and honorable Attorney General to desert his official position, and leave the interests of our Government unprotected, that he might be the bearer of these "important dispatches" there is more in his Philosophy probably, than many would suppose. Now, I am not a Prophet, nor the son of a Prophet, but a tolerable good guesser; I never went to a guessing school, as many of our Editors have, as it would appear from their constantly presuming and guessing that there will be great trouble and difficulties between the Mormons and this Government; but I don't guess this way, when I guess or prophecy, it is when I am pretty certain of the truth of what I guess or prophecy, otherwise I keep quiet.

In regard to these "private dispatches," here's the secret. In consequence of the high living, and necessary luxuries, that some of our Profesional gentlemen have to take for the preservation of their health, in so dry a country as Utah, it is necessary that their salaries should be increased, or that they get a better paying office, or their luxuries must be dispensed with; for Government has decided that those luxuries considered necessary by these Professional gentlemen, cannot be allowed in contingent expenses; it was necessary therefore that our worthy Half-man should desert his profession for a time and become an express for the Colonel. Now for the contents of the "dispatches." As I said before, I never guess, or say anything but what I have some knowledge of. I therefore guess that the contents of these "private dispatches" are something like this: there is an office in Utah that has become vacant by expiration of term, which interests our friends consideraby more than the interests of the Government; for if there had been no vacancies, nor likely to have been any, I think the bearer of those "private dispatches" would have been some other man, and the contents on some other subject, but as Col. Steptoe would not accept the Governorship of Utah, Mr. Blank said to the Col., 'if you don't accept it, you may say to the President that I will accept, if he appoints me, for though it does not pay any better than the office I now hold, there is money to be disbursed by the Governor, and there may peradventure be an overplus and I might as well have that overplus as any other person; besides I could then sell my goods, for I could take a few wagon loads with me when I go to visit the settlements, as I did when I went to hold court last fall; I can say to the Indians as I said to the jury on that occasion, that 'tis very uncertain when the Government will pay them their claims, but I will pay them in goods, for I have friends in Washington, who can get through any claims that I may send; but you poor ignorant Mormons who have done the labor, the Government would pay no attention to you.

Well, says Mr. Half-man, if you will accept the Governorship, I will the Judgeship; for it is just as necessary that one should be Judge, as the other Governor, for our bills of Courts will not be paid if not duly certified. All right, says Mr. Blank; now, you to Washington must go, and I will follow you shortly, but whilst you are on the way, be sure the people hear you say "private dispatches." I am on my way to Washington to-day, and when you get to Washington, keep aloof from the President, but call on the Editors and say, "private dispatches." The President will then send for you, and if he makes me Governor and you Judge, Brigham Young will no longer say that gambling is contrary to law, as he did when Capt. I—s gambled away his horses and carriage, which Drummond and I won. We can then gamble as much as we please, and poker, and euchre, and enjoy ourselves to our hearts content.

Mr. Half-man arrived at Washington—was soon heard to say as instructed, "private dispatches"—"great secrets from Utah." He called upon the Editors on his way, and on his arrival, who published and commented upon the announcement. But a few days after the arrival of this Legal gentleman, lo, and behold! our honorable friend becomes suddenly sick of Utah, and declares that there is not sufficient money in the Treasury to induce him to return. He tells how he had been tendered the office of Marshal, and Judge, but he would not accept—he considered it would be useless; for to his astonishment and mortification, he found that the new-code of morals introduced by him and his associates among the feminine Copper Colors, had been published, and finding it did not take well, he says that when the President offered him the several appointments, he most respectfully declined.

The case is something like the nigger and his rabbit. An old nigger caught a rabbit, and placing the rabbit under his arm, he commenced rubbing him down, and said: "Good to boil, good to fry, good baked, good stewed, and good any way." At this moment, the rabbit made a jump and away he goes. The old nigger looked after him as he scampered through the woods, and said: "Damn dry meat anyhow;" so with Mr. Half-man, after looking over his new code of morals, he says: "Damn bad morals—damn red skin—I won't go back; No! there aint money enough in the Treasury to induce me to return."

These are a few of the secrets of the "private dispatches" of which we have heard so much about through some of the public journals. I think it would be well for some of our Editors to learn a rule given by Gov. Young, how to judge men correctly. For instance; he says to strangers, whenever you meet a man on the road, professing to have some private buiness in hand, for Brigham Young, you may know that he is out to steal cattle, or some other business equally bad. I think this will apply to "our express," and the bearer of all similar dispatches; if they are not out after cattle, they are after something worse. Men do not desert their post, and engage in such a business, without some sinister object; so beware of "private dispasches," for they are terrible.

Now, I think I can suggest a plan to those Editors who are so often predicting trouble between Utah and the Government, how they might probably accomplish it. If you will get the Government to send out to Utah, a few more Brock-asses, Har-asses, Hol-asses, and every-day-asses, and in fact, a general assortment of asses, such as have been sent during the last few years, then, probably, your surmises and forebodings of trouble with Utah, may be realized, for peaceful as Utah is, and pure as she might be, she cannot, and will not stand every outrage; for when it comes to daubing it on three or four deep, and then appointing asses to rub it in, you may expect her to turn Kansas. Our motto is the Bee Hive, which represents industry and perseverence; but innocent as the little Bee is, he can be made to sting, and when the Old King bears from intruders and asses all he can bear, and turns out the little Bees upon the asses, you may expect to have some more "private dispatches" to announce, and these borne by asses like the former.

St. Louis, August 8, '55. T. S. W.

FROM SERGEANT BLUFF CITY.

Sergeant Bluff City, Iowa, June 8?., 1855.

To the Editor of the Mormon:

Sir—I observed a communication from your paper, in the Council Bugle, headed "The Pacific Railroad." In that communication the writer seems to be informed on almost all the routes, and speaks my mind in relation to Major Stephens' route, the Benton route, and I might say also in relation to all other routes, except what he states in relation to the Mormon, or South Pass route, and on that route, he, it appears, is not fully informed; on the routes that converge and form the Pacific route from St. Louis and thence west he is correct; but on the routes that converge from New York, or Boston, to Albany by Buffalo, and to Chicago; here, he seems to be in an error; and by reference to a map of the United States, you will bear me out in my correction. He turns the track south to Burlington, a distance of more than a degree, out of the natural course it should travel; the correct route is to Dubuque, and thence to Fort Dodge, and Seargeant Bluff City.—Dubuque is about forty miles north of Chicago, and Fort Dodge is three miles north of Dubuque, and Austanville six miles south of Fort Dodge, and New Ida, two miles south of Austanville, and Sergeant Bluff City is four miles north of New Ida, or four miles south of Dubuque. So you see from Dubuque, the present terminus of the Chicago and Galena Railroad, we have a direct route to this place, (Sergeant Bluff City,) and from here the road will run direct west to DaKota City, and thence to Hebron, the former resting place of some of the Mormons in their pilgrimage west, and to the Ralo pass, in the Bralo Mountains or Landbutes at the Snake Fork Keho Paka Branch of the Neobrasah, or Running Water River; thence up the Keho Paka to the Black Hills, within fifteen miles of Fort Laramie, and thence to the South Pass. And in connection with this route the roads from Rock Island, Burlington, &c., to Council Bluff, they very properly connect themselves by a road up the Valley of the Platte, making one grand trunk from Fort Laramie west, with its three grand branches, one from DaKota City, N. T., (immediately opposite this city,) and one from Omaha City, N. T., (opposite Council Bluff,) and one from Kansas, the terminus of the St. Louis road, and I am of an opinion the branch from this place west, will present inducements more than either of the other branches; first, the shortness of the route and the shortness of the distance, as by this route; Fort Laramie is not more than six hundred and fifty miles from Dubuque, nearer than any other place on the Mississippi by two hundred miles; and this road passes through a heavy pine forest, and running water, and the largest and best farming district in Nebraska. And I would invite eastern capitalists to examine this route, and also I would invite emigration to settle along this line, and especially at Sergeant Bluff City, Io., DaKota City and Hebron, N. T., we wish more population, as our country is new, but first rate, and we are not choice, only we want honest and industrious persons, Mormons, Catholics, Protestants, Democrats Whigs, and a few Know Nothings, but no Do Nothings. Yours, &c.,

J. D. M. CROCKWELL.

DAMASCUS.

Damascus is probably the oldest city in the world, it is mentioned in Gen. xiv. 15v., and in xv. 2v., as the birth place of Eliezer, the steward of Abraham. It is said by Josephus to have been founded by Uz, the grandson of Noah. In the time of David, Damascus was an important independent State, and reduced to subjection by that monarch, In the reign of Solomon, Damascus regained its independence, and during the wars arising from the separation of the kingdoms of Israel and Judah, it was engaged in a series of contests. until Ahaz king of Judah, purchased the aid of Tiglath-Pileser, king of Assyria, by whom it was destroyed. It afterwards became a province of Babylon; then of the Persian and Macedonian Empires; next of Arabia, subsequently of the Greek Empire, when it was the most celebrated city of the east, remarkable for its wealth, luxury, magnificence, and numerous christian population. Soon after the establishment of Mahommedanism, Damascus became the capital of the Musselman world, and was famed during the history of the Crusades. Since the time of Saladin, it has been a Mahommedan city, and is now a pachalic of Turkey. It occupies the centre of a tract of productive fields and luxuriant gardens, with about 80 villages—it is one of the "four paradises" of Eastern poetry—it has also been termed, "an emerald in the desert," the "eye of the east," "one of the gates of the Kaaba," the Eden of the Mahommedans. The plain on which the city stands is bounded on three sides by lofty, bare and rugged mountains; the approach is surpassingly beautiful,—through groves of cypress, olive, and walnut trees; with murmuring rivulets on all sides, supplied by the river Burada, the ancient Pharphar. The "City of Joy" as it has been also designated, forms a triangle, one side of which extends nearly three miles, is surrounded by the remains of its ancient walls, and has a castellated citadel. Khans, baths, cupalos, and minarets, flower and fruit gardens are dotted here and there, with numerous Kiosks shaded with trees, In the centre of the town is a spacious bazaar, constructed of white and black marble in alternate courses.—Christians, Jews, and Turks, Bedouins, with their long flowing dresses, and long spears tipped with black ostrich feathers, the Druses of the Hauran, with their peculiar turbans, black and white striped, ample cloaks, and long match-lock guns slung at their backs, present a picturesque and animated scene. The city contains some 200 mosques, the houses are constructed of sun dried bricks, and have a mean exterior, but internally are fitted with great magnificence; the city is more Oriental than Cario or even Bagdad. It is celebrated for its numerous coffee-houses, confectioners, and cook shops, of the latter there are about 400. Damascus contains 4,000 looms employed in the silk and cotton manufacture, and it has many jewellers, silversmiths, white and coppersmiths, trunk and tent makers, and excels in articles of leather manufacture. The population with the addition of Bedouins and Druses, is estimated at 200,000 souls, of whom about 150,000 are permanent residents; about 12,000 Jews, and 12,000 Christians, a great part of the remainder are Turks. THE CRIMEA.

Narrow Escape of Brother Higgins.

Camp before Sebastopol, June 7, 1855.

Dear Brother Richards—It is with feelings of great pleasure and gratification to my mind that I sit down to pen you these few lines, in hopes they may find you and the remainder of the Saints enjoying good health, as this leaves me and the remainder of the brethren up here.

We thank our heavenly Father for all His goodness towards us. I have to inform you that I had a very narrow escape of my life while on guard in the trenches in what is called the Right Sap. It was on the night of the 11th of May. The Russians made a sortie on our trenches, a musket ball hit me in the back, but, thanks be to my heavenly Father, it did me no injury, for as soon as the ball hit me it dropped at my feet, and the Russians were repulsed with great loss. A few nights afterwards, while proceeding up the trenches a 32-pound ball passed within a few inches of my face. The wind of the ball nearly knocked me down. In fact, I have had several narrow escapes, but, thank God, I am all right so far, and I hope the Lord of heaven will spare me to see this over, and that both myself and the remainder of the brethren up here may live to see Zion. O, my heart burns within me when I think of the joy and happiness that await those that escape this war.

I wish the war over this present month, for I am both sick and tired of it, yet I am willing to put up with the dispensation of the Lord, and say, "Thy will be done, O Lord." The brethren all join with me in sending our kind love to you and the remainder of the Saints, and hope the time will not be long before we have the pleasure of having a most glorious meeting with the Saints in England. I hope you will excuse me for not writing to you before, but on account of some of the other brethren writing I thought one letter would do for us all, but on conversing upon the subject with brother Russell, he said it would be better for me to write one myself. I hope you will excuse this letter, as I know myself it is not put together as well as it ought to be, and the writing is not very good, but to sit down on the floor with my knapsack on my knees to write is not very convenient.

I now conclude in hopes that the Lord will spare us to meet, for I hope to see that happy day when the army is returning to England.

From your brother in the New and Everlasting Covenant, W. HIGGINS.

DESERET.

Fort Ephraim, San Pete co., Jan. 10, 1855.

Beloved Brother and Sister Mellor—I feel happy at this time to write a few lines to you, hoping you and family are well. I am glad to inform you that the health of myself and mine is very good.

No doubt you will be glad to hear from us, as two years have nearly expired since we left old Leicester, the place of my birth. Since then I have travelled over nearly one half the globe, to seek a home amongst a people despised by the world, but, thank the Lord, I am still a Latter-day Saint. You may wonder how I like a mountain life. The answer is, first-rate, and I never desire to leave these mountains, except the bosom of the Church moves, then I go with it, let it go where it will.

Some people think we shall again be driven by the gentiles, because we hold with polygamy. We hold with it because it is the law of God. Let them drive us if they like, we will sooner be driven than give up the rights of the Holy Priesthood. Our women are as valiant as we are. If they drive us, they will drive us to a better place, but they will find it a great undertaking to accomplish, for the "Mormon" boys do not care what comes first, as long as they obey the law of God.

I need not do much preaching to you. But, to proceed, I am very fond of Salt Lake City, it is a beautiful city. I saw a statement in the Leicester Chronicle, speaking of the city and the authorities, and I can assure Mr. Thompson his report is not true, for a more beautiful city was never raised in so short a time. I have a city lot in Great Salt Lake City, a beautiful place for building, and garden, near by John Horton's and brother Johes', both from Leicester. I have made myself a large cellar, and shall build my house when I have finished my mission south. I was sent here to San Pete valley on mission last fall, when the Indians were at war with the "Mormons." Brother Brigham says, "Go, brother Farmer, and you shall be blest and shall prosper." Though I have been to the city and worked a short time until the emigration came in.

About Oct. 1st, sister Bateman came in, and we were married on the 10th. She is well and in good spirits. The Saints from Leicester are all well.—Brother John Wilson and wife live seven miles from here, and also James Killpack.

I and twenty-four others were appointed to build a fort here. We did so last winter. This winter we are building another of good rock round the first, four feet thick, and fourteen feet high. We have our houses, cattle, and grain all inside.

I came here without the first dollar, and with no cattle. Last summer I raised 4 1-2 acres of wheat, and about one-third of an acre of garden stuff. I have just killed a hog weighing 105 pounds, so we have plenty of meat for the winter. I have a good house here, 15 feet by 16, in this small fort. I have another house at Manti, nearly finished. Manti is seven miles from here, and one hundred and forty miles from Salt Lake City. I have two cows, one gives milk, the other is in calf. Next week I am going to take up twenty more acres of land, this will cost me two dollars and fifty cents. Since I came here I have labored hard, but, thank the Lord, I am getting things around me. Here we have abundance of wood and water. This winter I have spent in the mountains, getting rock. There is an abundance of the best kind of rock, there are beautiful flag stones, such as the pathway is flagged with in the Leicester market-place, all free as the air you breathe. The wood, water, rock, and soil are all free. We have only to pay for surveying. Indeed we are a free people, and with no one to molest us. Here is the place for the industrious to live and enjoy the fruits of their labor. . . .

Brother James, this is the place for you. Here you can build your own house, and inhabit it. It is so good to have a house of your own, stacks of wheat, farm, &c., of your own, to see your pigs, chickens, ducks, &c., all playing about—it is what I a long time longed for. I often heard you speak of these things when I was in England, but hold on, brethren, your deliverance will come. Be faithful, and you shall be delivered.

My friends may inquire, "Does he not want to come back to England?" I, with my partner, answer, no, no, no, never. We should like to see our father, mother, brother, and sisters, but if they do not love the truth, and flee to Zion for salvation, we have no desire to come to Babylon to enjoy its plagues, except sent by authority to preach salvation to a fallen world. While war, and blood, and famine are the order of the day in Babylon, the Saints are living in peace and plenty in Zion.

A great deal is said about Brigham Young, but let me say, in short, that a better man never stood upon the earth, save Jesus only. This is the faith of all true "Mormons."

Wednesday night, 15th.—I again take up my pen, having come home from the mountains, for we have to get our rock from the mountains, for our fort wall. I have thirty-three feet of wall to build in our new fort, four feet thick, and fourteen feet high, so I have plenty of work for the winter. The weather here is beautiful, snow about two inches deep on the plains, on the mountains about ——— inches deep, but in the day time the weather is beautiful, and our red brethren here are very friendly, some few will do a little work. They are living in their wickeups close by our small fort. They are very often in our fort and in our houses. We feed and clothe them, for they will yet be the battle-ax of the Lord, and will fight for the kingdom of God. A great many of the chiefs and braves have been baptised into this church, and ordained Elders. I am learning their language, and can talk some little to them.

Sister Farmer, formerly sister Bateman, sends her love to all the Saints. Say to the girls, that instead of being confined in a warehouse, she has to milk her cows, or is learning to milk, and make her own butter, candles, soap, treacle, salt, &c. All this is new to her, but she likes it first-rate. She says, "Give me a mountain life in preference to being in England."

My brethren and sisters, this is the place for all good Saints. Come home, as soon as you can get, and do not fear.

Please give our love to all the Leicester Saints. I conclude, praying for the blessings of deliverance upon you in the name of Jesus. Amen.

JAMES FARMER.

BUTTER AND CHEESE MAKING.

The American Agriculturist thus concludes an article entitled "Hints on Butter and Cheese Making."

The oil of milk, or butter, is contained in very small sacks or bags diffused through the water which holds the casein (curd) and sugar in solution. As before stated the butter is lighter than the other fluids, and when the milk is allowed to stand quietly for a time, the greater portion of it will rise to the surface in the forn of cream. Cream is composed of the oil sacs mingled with some casin, and it is impossible to separate these substances before churning, and not wholly afterwards.

Material for Milk Pans.—Various kinds of milk pans are in use, such as tin, glass, porcelain, stoneware, glazed iron, wood, zinc, &c. The requisites for these are. cheapness, coolness, and cleanliness. Glass milk pans are undoubtedly the best, as regards coolness and cleanliness, but the cost and their easy breakage will prevent their being generally used. Porcelain (earthen or China ware) is liable to the same objections, though not so easily broken as glass, but if of a fine quality, more costly. Well glazed stoneware pans are not so easily handled or cleaned, but where a cool room cannot always be secured, they are probably the best, as they are not expensive. Glazed iron pans are very good, but are somewhat objectionable on account of their not being very cool. Wood vessels are not easily kept clean and sweet, and are objectionable. If used, great care should be taken to have them well scalded after every using. Zinc pans have been highly commended, but we consider them very objectionable on account of their easy corrosion and liability to produce poisonous salts. We would not use them if furnished to us, free of cost, unless they were well glazed internally. For general use, where a cool milk room can be secured, there is no kind of milk pan to be preferred to the old-fashioned "tin pan." They are cheap, light, and easily kept clean. If the atmosphere is not, or cannot be kept at a low temperature, stone or earthenware vessels are the best.

Depth of Milk Pans.—Milk should be kept in shallow vessels, and the fluid should never exceed 2 1-2 inches in depth, as in proportion to the rapidity and perfection of the cream's rising. We believe the best English butter-makers set the milk about two inches deep. In this country, those who have received prizes for the greatest product of butter from a given amount of milk, report 2 to 2 1-2 inches as the proper depth.

Milk Room.—This should combine dryness, coolness, ariness, and neatness. It should be upon the north side of some other building, or in some manner be sheltered from the sun, and have its windows open on the north or north-east. A milk room and an ice house can be well combined. Where but a few cows are kept, however, the cellar is generally used as a milk room, and it answers a very good purpose if kept clean and well ventilated. Where two or three cows only are kept, it is always best to partition off a portion of the cellar, and give it a hard, dry floor, white-wash it well, and provide for a good current of air. The temperature should be kept as near 50 degrees as possible. Opening or closing the windows and doors in hot, damp, or cold weather, will facilitate this. Perfect neatness, or the removal of every thing like filth or decaying materials, is of the first importance. A little milk left to sour upon the shelves or in the milk vessels, will do much to deteriorate all the milk, cream, or butter in the room. Scouring the shelves with sand, and washing every shelf and vessel with water, should be practised very frequently.

Raising the Cream.—To facilitate the raising of cream, the pans should not be moved about, nor should the surface of the milk be agitated by currents of air. Prof. Way, of England suggests that a gentle, uniform motion might facilitate the butteraceous particles; but until some machinery is invented for this purpose, a safer rule is to keep the pans unmoved. We think, however, an occasional gentle tapping with a small stick upon the sides of the milk vessel, so as to jar the contents without agitateing the surface, may hasten the perfect separation and ascent of the cream. If the temperature of the room is kept low, the skimming should be deferred 30 or 40 hours, or longer if the milk remains sweet. The first skimming should be made before any souring takes place, The cream is usually removed with a skimmer punctured with small holes. There is the objection to this, that the milk dripping through mingles the remaining cream with the milk in the pan. This is avoided by using a tight skimmer, having a straight edge. Some dairymen draw off the milk slowly through a small spiggot or tap in the bottom of the pan.

Preserving the Cream.—We think it better to keep the cream in two portions, one consisting of that removed at the end of 24 hours, and the other removed after souring and curdling has commenced. Let those two portions be churned separately. In this way a larger yield of butter will be secured; and the greater part of it will, other things being equal, be of a very superior quality. As milking is, or should be, done at regular intervals, a convenient plan is to draw a single chalk-mark upon all pans in use at every milking, so that the number of marks upon any pan tells at once how many milkings old it is. The cream should be kept in the coolest place possible until ready for churning. In warm weather the churning should take place very frequently, once in two or three days at longest, and while the cream is still sweet, always bearing in mind that the decay of any of the casin, which always takes place in connection with scouring, by so much deteriorates not only the taste, but especially the keeping quality of the butter.

RIPE OLD AGE.

In the last number of Hunt's Merchant's Magazine is a table of the average age attained by men pursuing different occupations. Some of these facts are of such general interest that we gleam them from it, and present them in chronological order.

The man that dies youngest, as might be expected perhaps, is the railway breaksman. His average age is only twenty-seven. Yet this must be taken with some allowance from the fact that hardly any but young and active men are employed in that capacity.

At the same age dies the factory workman, through the combined influence of confined air, sedentary posture, scant wages, and unremitting toil.

Then comes the railway baggageman, who is smashed, on an average, at thirty.

Milliners and dressmakers live but little longer. The average of the one is thirty-two and the other thirty-three.

The engineer, the fireman, the conductor, the powder-maker, the well-digger, and the factory operative, all of whom are exposed to sudden and violent deaths, die on an average under thirty-five.

The cutler, the dyer, the leather-dresser, the apothecary, the confectioner, the cigar-maker, the printer, the silversmith, the painter, the shoe-cutter, the engraver, and the machinist, all of whom lead confined lives in an unwholesome atmosphere, none of them reaches the average of forty.

The musician blows all the breath out of his body at forty-nine. The editor knocks himself into pie at the same age.

Then comes trades that are active, or in a purer air. The baker lives to the average of forty-three, the butcher to forty-nine, the brickmaker to forty-seven, the carpenter to forty-nine, the furnace man to forty-two, the mason, to forty-eight, the stone-cutter to forty-three, the tanner to forty-nine, the weaver to forty-four, the drover to forty, the cook to forty-five, the inn-keeper to forty-six, the laborer to forty-four, the domestic servant (female) to forty-three. The tailor lives to forty three, the tailoress to forty-one.

Why should the barber live till fifty, if not to show the virtue there is in personal neatness and soap and water?

Those who average over half a century among mechanics, are those who keep their muscles and lungs in healthful and moderate exercise, and are not troubled with weighty cares. The blacksmith hammers till fifty-one, the cooper till fifty-nine, the builder till fifty-two, the shipwright till fifty-six, and the wheelwright till fifty. The miller lives to be whitened with age as well as with flower at sixty-one. The rope maker lengthens the threads of life to fifty-four. Merchants average fifty-two.

Professional men live longer than is generally supposed. Litigation kills clients sometimes, but seldom lawyers for they average fifty-two.

Physicians prove their usefulness by prolonging their own lives to the same period.

Clergymen, who, it is to be presumed, enjoy a greater mental serenety than others, last till fifty-six.

Seafaring life and its adjuncts seem, instead of dangerous to be conducive to longevity.

We have already seen that shipwrights live till fifty-six. The sailor averages forty-three, the calker sixty-four, the sail-maker fifty-two, the stevedore fifty-seven, and the ferryman sixty-five.

A dispensation of providence that Maine Law men may consider incomprehensible is, that brewers and distillers live to the ripe age of sixty-four.

Last and longest-lived come paupers, sixty-seven, and "gentlemen" sixty-eight. The only classes that do nothing to themselves and live on their neighbors, outlast all the rest. Why should they wear out themselves they are always idle?—[Albany Evening Journal.

The reason why it succeeds.—The Mustang Liniment has attained its enormous popularity, and almost universal use, simply because it gives better satisfaction, accomplishes more good, relieves more pain, and heals more wounds and sores than any other preparation ever before offered to the afflicted. Every bottle that is used, speaks for itself—tells its own tale in the relief it gives, and the cure it effects. And then one who has suffered, perhaps, long years with pain, without hope of relief, and finds in this Liniment an almost instantaneous remedy, cannot help but speak in its praise, and recommend it in the best terms to all he sees suffering. It needs no other recommendation than a trial.

TITHING.

Sung at a meeting of the thirty-seventh Quorum.

TUNE.—"The King of the Cannibal Islands."

Come, Mormons all, attention pay,
Whilst I attempt to sing my say—
I've chosen for my text to-day—
"Come forward and pay up your Tithing!"

These may not be the very words,
Which ancient holy writ records,
But Malachi, I think, affords
A verse with which the sense accords.
It seems that he had cause to scold
The Saints, or Israelites of old,
In fact they needed to be told—
"Come forward and pay up your Tithing!"

CHORUS.
Then if to prosper you desire,
And wish to keep out of the fire,
Nay, if you to be Saints aspire,
"Come forward and pay up your Tithing!"

Just as it was in olden times,
With ancient Saints in other climes,
The call is now, "Bring up your dimes,"
"Come forward and pay up your Tithing!"

Our Prophet says, "When Elders preach
The law of Tithing, they should teach—
Pay up themselves, and then beseech
All those who come within their reach."
This makes me now entreat of you
To follow counsel—right persue,
And whilst all evil you eschew,
"Come forward and pay up your Tithing!"

CHORUS.
Then if to prosper you desire, &c.

Now, male and female, rich and poor,
Who wish to keep your standing sure,
That you salvation may secure,
"Come forward and pay up your Tithing!"

A tenth that is, and nothing less,
Of all you do, or may possess
In flocks, and herds, and their increase,
With pigs, and poultry, ducks, and geese;
A tenth indeed, of all your toil,
Likewise the products of your soil,
And if you've any wine, or oil,
"Come forward and pay up your Tithing!"

CHORUS.
Then if to prosper you desire, &c.

G. S. L. City, 1855. HENRY MAIBEN.

CHEERFULNESS.

Henry Ward Beecher likes "freshness." The flower is sweetest after the shower, and the soul lights up most brightly when stirred by a new thought. Cheerfulness is its sunshine. He chose that as the theme of his Commencement Address at Dartmouth College, N. H., declaring it to be a necessity, and that they erred who supposed mirth to be either low or unmanly, or dangerous, or in itself wicked.

The oration, as published, is full of point and spirit. True, it battles against that stupidity which claims to be respectable, that dullness which passes for wisdom, and that ascetic sobriety which masks religion in a repulsive dress; but it does so in a fine temper, and with a just purpose.

Of the soul we know almost nothing. It yet goes muffled, and looks at and sees, but is itself unseen, undiscovered. Everything else is supposed to conform to exact laws; but the mind opens, and shuts, and changes, like the clouds that people the summer air.

Of its scales we know scarcely nothing. The dread of reducing the soul to materialism has made scientific research slow and reluctant. Men submit all other matters to a test; but will not analyze the faculties of the soul. Some of these faculties become vulgar or unfashionable. Some are regarded as rooms to be shut up and not ordinarily opened. The sober and reverend are haunted with spectral levities when sunny mirth is to be seen in them, and do not like to gaze into them, as if it were allied to folly, or opposed to sobriety and good sense.

Mr. Beecher thus describes his subject:

"Mirthfulness he understood to be an original faculty of the mind, having the power to give a peculiar quality to any other faculty with which it combined, a faculty which like the cuckoo, lives in other faculties' nests. It belongs to that class of faculties which have no utility except from the other faculties of the mind. There can be no definition of it. No original feeling can be defined. The definition of this would be nothing more than the individual's opinion of it. Mirth mingles with and influences the intellectual and moral attributes, but seldom consorts with the passions or appetites. Laughter arises from the perceptive faculties, those which when tinged with mirth give everything with which they meet an air of ludicrousness. That which is styled refined or intellectual mirth, is a combination of mirth with the reflective faculties. It is the result of dissimilarity of certain things upon which the mind is reflecting."

Mirth and wit are contrasted. The effect of wit combined with sarcasm, and of circumspect wit which peeps out from the thin covering of the lips, but dare not come forth, are described. Mirth is not suppressed wit; it is allied to benevolence, the companion of conscience, and lives next door to firmness.

Mirthfulness is one note of the mind entering into combination with every other note, giving them peculiar qualities, touching with a generous glow all our thoughts, enlarging the affections, and even smoothing the roughness of the passions. Hope, benevolence, love and cheerfulness, are the very elements of the atmosphere in which virtue must flourish. Indeed, virtue requires a pure atmosphere as much as the flowers do. Veneration, too, should always walk with the angels Hope and Love on either side, and these must be fostered by the influence of cheerfulness.

The faculties of man's mind, if properly tuned and trained, would surpass the finest organ in the world in all its notes and vibrations, from the highest note in its power to the lowest diapason. In considering the joys which those faculties are capable of imparting, it is a marvel that any man should ever be unhappy. There is excitement enough in the advent of one morning, to give an appreciating spectator more real exquisite pleasure than most men experience in a life-time.

Mirth cannot bring happiness, nor can excitement. Moral influences are needed for that; but mirth controls the malign passions. Some suppose, that mirth is a tempter to the devil, but, said Mr. B., I think it exorcises him an hundred times where it tempts him once.

Among the many devils which possess man, he said, the devil care is the most troublesome. He is a low-browed personage, and seeks no good. Sorrows are ennobling, but not so care. It has no faith, nor hope, nor trust, nor love. It pesters the whole of life. It broods troubles and trials until the sun can never clear them up. When it touches labor it becomes weary. It touches poverty and it stands forth mildewed like blasted corn. Sorrow hath slain its thousands, but care hath slain its tens of thousands. It is the rust that has tarnished and eat the blade. Sorrows are like the princes in the East, who dug wells in the wilderness for those who come after them, but care only digs the pits. Cursed be care, and let all the people say, Amen. (Loud applause.) Let those who wear its sackcloth take it off, and let those who have buckled it to their girdles put it far from them. What does care do? It does nothing but throw gravel among the machinery and dust in the eyes, and converts the honest sorrow of a bereaved heart into selfish murmurings and dissatisfaction. Cursed be care, in the field, in the street, in the hut and in the mansion, and blessed be the spirit of mirth that brings with it light to the eye, hope to the heart and strength to the hand. (Applause.)

If wise men were generally a little more mirthful perhaps there might not be so many fools. The scriptures inculcate no hard-featured and sullen sobriety. Cheerfulness is wholesome. Laughter itself might be a medicine. God did not make man naturally cheerful to be morose.

Since labor must be the lot of the greatest portion of men, it is desirable to rescue it from its curses, by the influence of mirth, assisted by a clear conscience and inspired by hope. This is the peculiar necessity of Northern labor, which, as it is industrious, patient, untiring and enterprising, is rewarded by success—is liberal to its fellows. No royal liege ever received more perfect obedience to its laws than Northern labor awards to its ruling government. The principal elements of labor here are solid, substantial and good, but they lack the congeniality of mirth. The minds of our people are ever anxious and restless for the future, hoping for, and seeking future social position and superiority. They are always in a state of feverish excitement, and instead of eating, "feed," as our engine man would "feed" his engine with wood, merely to "get up steam."—But the laughing face is not there. The merchant thinks a smiling countenance does him no credit, and even the petty clerk imagines that the least deviation from steady sobriety lessens his chance for promotion. Men are like instruments—they go very well now, but would go a little better if they were oiled a little. It would not do to make the shop a theatre of buffoonery, or to substitute quips and quirks for industry, but it would be well to employ cheerfulness to strengthen the bonds of acquaintance and friendship in their daily lives, and if it were tried, men would find that it was profitable, that it would pay.

Literary men need mirth; they receive a diploma and indigestion at the same time. They want muscular education, as laboring men want intellectual education. Our intellectual men resemble heavy ordnance mounted on weak gun carriages, which, after the first three or four discharges fall with the heavy artillery to the ground. Mirth would relieve, and might save them.

There are many notions about religion which mirthfulness will remedy better than anything else. The tying up the feelings is made one of the functions of life. This gives a man no liberty, and therefore no grace. It is no enfranchisement to any man to be less than he was. He should be more, and for the only difference, he should be better. Complaints are not unfounded that virtue is apt to be stupid, a sort of insipid goodness which needs carbonic acid gas. That is one of the misfortunes of virtue. We weed the garden of virtue assiduously and leave no weeds—and nothing else—we shut ourselves up from temptation so thoroughly that we are smothered, or so muffled as not to be known. Sobriety is such a perpendicular wall that few can climb up to look over and see how happy the heart is on the other side. Men are apt to look upon religion as upon a fortress bristling with guns, and think to be religious is to join the garrison. Our feelings are touched with awe rather than love. We see the ministers in black, and regard their profession as equally sombre. There is but one book that inculcates cheerfulness in religion, and that book is the best of all books—the Bible.

He would not invade the sanctity of the pulpit with grinning irreverence or sorry jokes, or ill-born conceits which would be bad anywhere, but he would simply ask that a man should have the liberty of soul to utter that which is in him. If he has the spirit of mirthfulness in him, let it burst forth in showers of light and fancy, and it should be regarded as no violation of sanctity of his office. It would be a strange fancy if the organist should skip the sixth or seventh note in the scale as an irreverent note, and it should be regarded as equally singular to require the clergyman to omit one of the faculties of the mind. The pulpit needs not solemnity, or intensity, or intellectual ability, but breadth—breadth as broad as all the mind God put into the man.—That ministration is best which includes the action of the greatest number of the faculties of the mind, for the word of God is like a score of music—like some divine oratorio—and the preacher is the one who takes the substance within himself, to perform the whole grand work with all its series of progressions. Even if he goes beyond this the theme will overmaster the instrument.

It should be an inspired reality, and the soul should fling itself wide open, leaving no stops unemployed, and speaking by every voice God has given him.—He who stands to look askance and rebuke this utterance of the whole soul forgets that the flowers praise God as much as the cedars of Lebanon—that the trees and the mighty wind and the rolling thunders, and silence, and darkness, are all audible to Him. If a man has to try to be witty he should not be, and will not be. He only asked that a man should have the liberty of saying what he has in him. It was here then in the place where a smile is counted a curse, and laughter a blasphemy, that he would assert the dignity of mirthfulness when it lays its blushing flowers on the altar of love and yields to God the fragrance of the whole soul.—[Chicago Tribune.

The Late Hyde Park Demonstration.

LATEST PARTICULARS.

Last night a meeting was held at the Literary and Scientific Institution, Doctor's Commons, to take into consideration the conduct of the Police in Hyde Park, on last Sunday, and to determine what steps should be taken to prevent the recurrence of similar violence. The chair was taken by Mr. Nash, who alluded to the unconstitutional act committed by the police in preventing the people from speaking, and afterwards punishing them for groaning and shouting. The bill which Lord Robt. Grosvenor and Lord Ebrington had introduced was a direct attack upon the liberties of the people, as it pronounced with the authority of law, that while the rich were to have club houses, powdered servants, and prancing horses for their recreation on a Sunday, the humbler classes of the community were to be excluded from enjoying the few recreations which were within their reach. He did not approve of any unlawful assemblages in Hyde Park or elsewhere; but he was convinced of this, that if the people would present the imposing front of moral resistance, they would assume an attitude which must convince the Government and the aristocratic classes that they were not prepared to see their liberties as Englishmen taken from them. He was glad to say that the metropolitan press, with one exception, espoused the cause of the people, and had condemned the exercise of that brute force which Sir Richard Mayne and his men seemed so willing to employ. In his opinion the most practical course for the public to adopt would be to meet peaceably in large masses to petition Parliament for an inquiry into the conduct of the police: to form a deputation to wait upon Lord Palmerston, and to represent in firm and respectful language their feelings upon the present occasion.

Mr. Earnest Jones moved the first resolution, condemning in strong terms the violence used by the police, and pledging the meeting to support Mr. Duncombe and other liberal members of the House of Commons, in their endeavor to obtain a strict and searching inquiry into the conduct of the police.—He recommended the people not to resort to the expedient of sacking houses or breaking windows of clubhouses, as some persons had suggested, but to hold great mass meetings in Hyde Park, or some other suitable place and to express their sentiments in language, which, while respectful to the authorities, and in strict conformity to the law, would express in intelligible terms their sense of the injustice of anything approaching to class legislation. He hoped that the meeting would not separate without appointing a committee to raise a fund for entertaining at a public dinner, at St. Martins Hall, those persons who had been the victims of the brutal violence of the police[cheers]. He would also suggest that the surplus subscriptions should be applied either to the payment of the fines imposed by Mr. Hardwick, the police magistrate, or as an indemnity to the sufferers for the pain and inconvenience they had suffered. A member of the House of Commons had made a suggestion to Sir George Grey which was worthy of the source from which it emanated [hisses and cries of Six-pounder]. Mr. George Dundas [groans] had hinted that nothing was more effective for the dispersion of a peaceful multitude than the clatter of a six-pounder on the pavement [hisses], but no such deadly instruments would be required to-morrow, as the people were determined not to do any act which could be construed (even by Sir Richard Mayne) into a breach of the law. He regarded all Sabbatarian legislation as unnecessary, and only calculated to defeat the object intended, but if public houses were to be closed by the Government, let the Government give some allurements more healthful and less exciting. Let them open the British Museum, the Crystal Palace, and other places of the kind, and then the toiling thousands of the metropolis would have less reason to deprecate the legislature which interfered with their freedom of action. Above all he recommended them to hold mass meetings and to pass resolutions condemnatory of that absolute form of Government which Sir Richard Mayne and his force appeared resolved to establish in the centre of the empire.

Mr. Finley and other speakers having addressed the meeting, a committee was formed to carry the resolutions into effect, and the proceedings terminated.

Dares me charities till death. He that doth so, is rather liberal of another man's, than his own.—[Bacon.

MCLEAN'S VOLCANIC OIL LINIMENT is truly a celebrated remedy, and has done more to alleviate human suffering than any other remedy ever discovered.
One or two applications will relieve the most severe pain, bruise or sprain.
Two bottles will cleanse, purify, and heal the foulest ulcer or sore, and it will heal the most severe burn or scald without a scar.
Every family should have a supply constantly on hand, for use in time of need.
Read the following extract of a letter, which is incontestable proof of its wonder ful efficacy:

A BLIND MAN RESTORED TO SIGHT.

J. H. MCLEAN—Dear Sir:—* * * I have been suffering for four years with rheumatic sore eyes, being at times altogether blind. I procured the advice of several physicians, but none of them could do me any good. By the advice of a friend I applied your "Volcanic Oil Liniment," according to the directions around the bottle, and it has cured me permanently. I have used it since for bruises, pains, &c., and it has always given immediate relief. I live on the main road near Farmington.
Yours, respectfully, JOHN H. ALLERD.
Jefferson county, Mo.

For horses it is far superior to any other remedy for curing lameness, bruises, cuts, old sores, swellings, &c.
We say, then, to all who may be suffering from external diseases, call at once and get a supply. Thousands of bottles are sold (and used) daily, and we have never heard of a case where it has failed in giving relief when properly applied.
☞ For sale by J. H. MCLEAN, the proprietor, corner Third and Pine streets, St. Louis, and by all respectable dealers in Medicines everywhere

MEDICINE FOR THE BILLION!
A Certain Remedy for all Diseases of
MAN OR ANIMALS,
Requiring an External Application.
Warranted in every Case for which it is Recommended!
THE MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT!
Unlike all other popular medicines, it is used by many prominent members of the faculty, and many of the public Hospitals, Their prejudices have yielded to indisputable and incontrovertible demonstrations of cures performed where their remedies had failed.
It has cured more cases of
RHEUMATISM
than any other medicine ever used. Its efficacy in this terrible disease is acknowledged by all who have used it. It not only cures the complaint, but appears to give a vigor and elasticity to the limbs, before unknown, thus performing a double office.

A FEW TESTIMONIALS.

PATH FINDER OFFICE, May 11, 1854.
G. W. WESTBROOK:—
Please send me by the bearer three large bottles of your Mexican Mustang Liniment, as I wish to take it up to my place in Vermont, not thinking it advisable to do without it. I have used it in my family and on my horses, and have found it invaluable. Yours,
J. T. WHITNEY.

ELIZABETHTOWN, TENN., May 25, 1855.
MR. G. W. WESTBROOK:—
Dear Sir—It affords me much pleasure in saying to you that the Mexican Mustang Liniment outsells any medicine that I have ever had for sale, and comes nearer doing what it promises to do. Send me another supply, as I am nearly out. Yours respectfully,
JOHN SINGLETRAY, P. M.

PHILADELPHIA, June 11, 1854.
MR. G. W. WESTBROOK:
Sir—My son was afflicted with a swelling upon the knee joint, which confined him to the house. I had a doctor attending him for some time, but he did not do him any good. One of my neighbors told me to use the Mustang Liniment. I asked the doctor if I could do so, and he told me he thought I could not do better.
I procured one bottle, and in about a week he was able to go out.
I can safely recommend it to the afflicted.
Respectfully yours, MRS. BENNETT.

W. S. Ladd & Co., of Portland, Oregon, writes that there is an immense demand for the Mexican Mustang Liniment in that country, and orders forty gross to be shipped by Golden Gate, that sails in a few days from New York.

Park & White of San Francisco, California, order 100 gross, to be forwarded by first clipper for that port.

PORT AU PRINCE, HAYTI, Jan. 16th, 1854.
I had the pleasure to receive invoice and boxes Mexican Mustang Liniment per Oroton, and have no doubt it will have a brisk sale on the island.
GEORGE RACKSTER.

To give health, strength and elacity to the limbs, there is nothing can equal in effect, the
MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT.
FARMERS AND LIVERY STABLE KEEPERS
have need it for the following diseases with extraordinary success, certifying invariably to the efficacy of the Liniment, and the truthfulness of our assertions in its behalf:
Spavin, Splint, Ring-bone, Fistula, Wind Galls, Big Head, Bruises, Strains, String-halt, Scratches, Cracked Heels, Sweney, Saddle, Collar, or Harness Galls, Hard Lumps or Tumor, Film, or other diseases of the Eye, Poll-Evil, &c.
The small sizes retail for 25 cents per bottle;
The medium size retail for 50 cents per bottle;
The large sizes retail for one dollar per bottle.
The medium holds three times as much as the small;
The Large holds nearly three times as much as the medium,
Therefore the large bottles are the cheapest.

EDUCATION AND REVELATION.

Many have imbibed erroneous ideas with regard to the utility of education for preaching the Gospel, and for qualifying men to build up the kingdom of God. They do not seem to comprehend what is meant when they are counselled to obtain all the knowledge they can from the experience of others, and from all good books, when this counsel is at the same time accompanied with advice to the Elders not to depend when preaching on their learning or eloquence, but on the Holy Spirit to direct what they shall say. When we speak of education here, we wish to be understood to mean a knowledge of the science and literature of the day. Education is useful in whatever position a man may be placed, in this church, provided that it is of the right kind, and a proper use is made of it. Much of the science and literature of the day is based on wrong principles, and therefore filled with inconsistencies, errors, and absurd conclusions.

"God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty." This fact has been wonderfully made manifest in all His dispensations with the children of men, that His power might be acknowledged. But is this the only reason? We answer, no. The Lord is a being who works on natural principles, and when he wants any thing done He makes use of the best material He can command with which to accomplish it. He chose the first Apostles not because they were poor and illiterate, but because they were the best men He could find for His purpose. By way of illustration, we will suppose two men born with the same natural abilities and honesty of heart, but under very different circumstances in life. One is born to wealth and ease, the other to the necessity of toiling for his bread. The mind of the first is well stocked with all the learning and wisdom of the day, and he is considered a competent judge of questions in the natural sciences, literature, divinity, &c. The latter toils on and learns but little, excepting a few plain principles, the truth of which he proves by experience. Let the Gospel be preached to these two men, and it will be found that the mind of the learned man is so bound up in preconceived notions, and so thoroughly filled with errors and false conclusions, that revealed truth can find little or no room to take root and grow, while the man who has learned but little, and acquired that mostly by experience, not only has a heart naturally prepared to receive the truth, but room for it to grow up, and bring forth fruit. This is one reason why the Lord chose His former-day Apostles from the honest poor who were uncontaminated with the learning of the day. It is true this was not the case with the learned and scientific Saul, who was brought up at the feet of Gamaliel, but it required a great manifestation of power to convince him. The affliction which he complained of in after life, wherein he said, "When I would do good, evil is present with me," was the effect of his early education. These are some of the reasons why the wisdom of the Lord has been so signally manifested in choosing the unlearned to commence and carry on His work in this dispensation. The reason that men, filled with the learning of the world, who have embraced the Gospel, have apostatized in so many instances, is that they have had so much to unlearn that the task has been too great for them.

When persons come into this church and can keep the spirit of truth with them, then, and not until then, are they capable of selecting the few gems of truth from the great mass of rubbish and error of which the learning of the world is mostly composed. Again, there are other persons who after embracing the Gospel have turned their attention to the acquirement of a knowledge of the literature and sciences of the day, and have become so puffed up with the supposed importance of the wisdom thus acquired, that by it they have attempted to solve the problems of eternal truth, instead of doing it by the light of the spirit of revelation. The consequence has been that they have often come to wrong conclusions, and wandered for a time in darkness and doubt, or have altogether gone astray.

Do we in this condemn education? No, but we contend for the necessity of making the Holy Spirit the judge between truth and error. Ideas are not acquired by men without mental effort, and it requires a corresponding labor to root them out.—Therefore we say it would be better for men's minds to be less educated, like the fishermen of Gallilee, or the Apostles of this dispensation, than to receive erroneous impressions. This conclusion is based on natural principles, which not only Latter-day Saints, but the world, generally endeavor to follow, according to their notions of right and wrong. But there is this difference between the two—the Lord has furnished His people with an unerring guide to truth, if they will follow it, which the world have not got.

We have endeavored to show to some extent what we mean by education being of the right kind, and we will now attempt to explain briefly what we consider a proper use of it in preaching the Gospel.—In order to illustrate this part of the subject we will suppose a case, of which in point of fact there have been many parallel ones, in this church. One man has thoroughly mastered the science of logic and elocution, explored the interesting phenomena of natural philosophy, scanned with an astronomer's eye the regions of space, and calculated with precision the movements of the heavenly bodies, and then, with all his scientific attainments, has, perhaps, the command of the most beautiful language in which to express his ideas. The other man is unlearned, in the common acceptation of the term, but his life has been a practical one, and what he knows, even of the Gospel, he knows from experience. Suppose the two men are ordained and sent out to preach, probably the educated one will say to himself, "I have a splendid education, I must preach an eloquent discourse. The people will expect to hear something more than usual from me, because they can see that I am an educated man." Whoever thinks and calculates thus, certainly has not learned the Lord's way of doing things. The Elder, perhaps, in his great efforts to do something wonderful, takes up the prophetic visions of Daniel, the predictions of Isaiah, or attempts to unravel the mysteries of the revelations of St. John, including the problem of the Beast with seven heads and ten horns, and paints the wonders of the last days with all the varied tints of eloquence, and enforces deductions with all the powers of artificial logic. The people say, "What a beautiful discourse! What a splendid preacher!" The Elder preaches away and wonders why none come forward to be baptised and why he sees no fruit of his labor. The reason is, he is like a beautiful instrument which people look at and admire on account of the superior mechanism displayed in its structure, and its exquisite finish, and which produces the most delightful sounds, but does not play the right tune.

The unlearned Elder goes forth to preach with far different feelings. He knows that he has neither eloquence nor education, and therefore, instead of striving to see what he can do with his own powers and abilities, he feels after the Lord, and seeks the aid and assistance of His spirit, which brings forth from him the truths and principles adapted to the capacities and wants of his hearers. The simple truths which he utters being dictated by the spirit, they are urged home by the same power upon the hearts of the honest, and he realizes the unspeakable blessing of seeing the fruits of his ministry.—This does not follow merely from his being unlearned, but because, although a rougher and less polished instrument, he is always ready to play the right tune for the time and occasion. Now if the educated Elder possessed the same spirit, and humble reliance on the Lord, and kept himself perfectly free for the Holy Spirit to operate upon, so that it could completely control his ideas, his fine flow of language, and all those superior powers with which he has been blessed, then they would be turned to practical account to bless his fellow-men, and build up this kingdom.

We trust that this may aid some to understand why the Saints are counselled to obtain all the knowledge they can from every source, and at the same time the Elders are counselled to preach the plain, simple truths of the Gospel, depending on the Holy spirit to dictate to them, and not on their learning and eloquence. Education, like every other blessing, may be perverted to a wrong use, turned into a curse, and be the means of preventing men from receiving the truth in the first place, or of causing them to apostatize from it afterwards. Better, far better would it have been for many men who have entered this church since its commencement, if they had had less education in the sciences of the day, to fill their hearts with pride and self-conceit, and choke the principles of truth which have struggled to take root and grow there. There are many who attempt to measure the things of God by some gentile rule of science, and who will reject a saving principle, because they cannot prove it by their system of logic. Such men will find that instead of sifting the principles which they have rejected, they have been completely circumscribed in their folly, and that there is but little left of them or their systems that is of any value. It is for these reasons that the simple, unadorned testimony of the humble man is worth more to the cause of truth, than all that can be advanced in its defence by those who depend on their learning and eloquence.

We say to the Elders and to all the Saints, seek to store your minds with useful knowledge, from observation, reading, and reflection, and keep them in full exercise, that they may expand and grow, but with an increase of knowledge seek with all diligence for wisdom of the Holy spirit, that you may use it in righteousness. The Saints are as directly responsible for the use they make of their intellectual acquirements, as they are for their use of wealth, influence, or any other gift or blessing which the Lord has bestowed; and it should be just as fully consecrated to the Lord, and subject to the counsels of the Priesthood, and to the dictates of the spirit of revelation. To let the intellectual faculties lie dormant, without putting them to a proper use, and thereby increasing them, would subject the Saints to loss, and in the end, to condemnation.—Like everything else, they are given to men to use for good, with the privilege of using them for evil.

The whole course of the Latter-day Saints from the beginning has shown their desire for intellectual improvement. Whenever their enemies have suffered them to remain long enough in one place to accumulate around them the means of subsistence, their attention has been turned to the education of their children, and to the establishment of institutions for the intellectual improvement of all classes of society. And notwithstanding the assertions of the enemies of the Saints to the contrary, there is no people on the earth who set so high a value on intellectual improvement and cultivation. The most strenuous efforts have been made during the past year in Utah for the erection of suitable buildings for educational purposes, for obtaining a supply of qualified teachers, for the organizing of scientific societies, and collecting public libraries, and in fact everything is encouraged that will exalt the mind, improve the morals, and refine the manners of the people. Among the Saints, literature and science will be based on the principles of eternal truth, made known through revelation. They will be stripped of their numerous errors and false deductions, and every principle before it is adopted will have to stand the test of the spirit of truth, or of practical experience. Among them the foundation of education in the minds of the young will be laid in truth, and the utmost care will be used to exclude useless materials from the superstructure, that it may not require two-thirds of a man's life to unlearn the errors of childhood and youth.

SMUGGLED RELATIONS.

When I was a child, I remember to have had my ears boxed for informing a lady visitor, who made a morning call at our house, that a certain ornamental object on the table, which was covered with marbled paper, "wasn't marble." Years of reflection upon this injury have fully satisfied me that the honest object in question never imposed upon anybody; further, that my honored parents, though both of a singular temperament, never can have conceived it possible that it might, could, should, would, or did, impose upon anybody. Yet, I have no doubt that I had my ears boxed for violating a tacit compact in the family and among the family visitors, to blink at the stubborn fact of the marbled paper, and agree upon a fiction of real marble.

Long after this, when my ears had been past boxing for a quarter of a century, I knew a man with a cork leg. That he had a cork leg—or, at all events, that he was at immense pains to take about with him a leg that was not his own leg, or a real leg—was so plain and obvious a circumstance, that the whole universe might have made affidavit of it.—Still, it was always understood that this cork leg was to be regarded as a leg of flesh and blood, and that even the very subject of cork in the abstract was to be avoided in the wearer's society.

I have had my share of going about the world; wherever I have been, I have found the marbled paper and the cork leg. I have found them in many forms; but, of all their Protean shapes, at once the commonest and strangest has been Smuggled Relations.

I was on intimate terms for many, many years, with my late lamented friend, Cogsford, of the great Greek house of Cogsford Brothers and, Cogsford. I was his executor. I believe he had no secrets from me but one—his mother. That the agreeable old lady who kept the house for him was his mother, must be his mother, couldn't possibly be anybody but his mother, was evident; not to me alone, but to everybody who knew him. She was not a refugee, she was not proscribed, she was not in hiding, there was no price put upon her venerable head; she was invariably liked and respected as a good-humored, sensible, cheerful old soul. Then why did Cogsford smuggle his mother all the days of his life? I have not the slightest idea why. I cannot so much as say whether she had ever contracted a second marriage, and her name was really Mrs. Dean, or whether that name was bestowed upon her as a part of the smuggling transaction. I only knew that there she used to sit at one of the hospitable table, the living image in a cap of Cogsford at the other end, and that Cogsford knew that I knew who she was.

Yet, if I had been a Custom House officer at Folkestone, and Mrs. Bean a French clock that Cogsford was furtively bringing from Paris in a hat-box, he could not have made her the subject of a more determined and deliberate pretence. It was prolonged for years upon years. It survived the good old lady herself. One day I received an agitated note from Cogsford, entreating me to go to him immediately; I went, and I found him weeping, and in the greatest affliction. "My dear friend," said he, pressing my hand, "I have lost Mrs. Bean. She is no more." I went to the funeral with him. He was in the deepest grief. He spoke of Mrs. Bean, on the way back, as the best of women. But even then, he never hinted that Mrs. Bean was his mother; and the first and last acknowledgment of the fact that I ever had from him was in his last will, wherein he entreated "his said dear friend and executor" to observe that he requested to be buried beside his mother—whom he did not even name, he was so perfectly confident that I had detected Mrs. Bean.

I was once acquainted with another man who smuggled a brother. This contraband relative made mysterious appearances and disappearances, and knew strange things. He was called John—simply John. I have got into a habit of believing that he must have been under a penalty to forfeit some weekly allowance if he ever claimed a surname. He came to light in this way: I wanted some information respecting the remotest of the Himalaya range of mountains, and I applied to my friend Benting (a member of the Geographical Society, and learned on such points,) to advise me. After some consideration, Benting said, in a half reluctant and constrained way, very unlike his usual frank manner, that he "thought he knew a man" who could tell me, of his own experience, what I wanted to learn. An appointment was made for a certain evening at Benting's house. I arrived first, and had not observed for more than five minutes that Benting was under a curious cloud, when his servant announced—in a hushed, and I may say unearthly manner—"Mr. John."

A rather stiff and shabby person appeared, who called Benting by no name whatever, (a singularity that I always observed whenever I saw them together afterwards,) and whose manner was curiously divided between familiarity and distance. I found this man to have been all over the Indies, and to possess an extraordinary fund of traveler's experience. It came from him drily at first; but he warmed, and it flowed freely until he happened to meet Benting's eye. Then, he subsided again, and (it appeared to me) felt himself, for some unknown reason, in danger of losing that weekly allowance. This happened a dozen times in a couple of hours, and not the least curious part of the matter was, that Benting himself was always as much disconcerted as the other man. It did not occur to me that night, that this was Benting's brother, for I had known him very well indeed for years, and had always understood him to have none. Neither can I now recall, nor, if I could, would it matter, by what degrees and stages I arrived at the knowledge.

However this may be, I knew it, and Benting knew that I knew it. But, we always preserved the fiction that I could have no suspicion that there was any sort of kindred or affinity between them. He went to Mexico, this John—and he went to Australia—and he went to China—and he died somewhere in Persia—and one day, when we went down to dinner at Benting's, I would find him in the dining-room, already seated (as if he had just been counting the allowance on the table cloth,) and another day I would hear of him as being among scarlet parrots in the tropics; but I never knew whether he had ever done anything right, or why he went about the world, or how. As I have already signified, I got into habits of believing; and I have got into a habit of believing that Mr. John had something to do with the dip of the magnetic needle—he is all vague and shadowy to me, however, and I only know him for certain to have been a smuggled relation.

Other people, again put these contraband commodities entirely away from the light, as smugglers of wine and brandy bury tubes. I have heard of a man who never imparted, to his most intimate friend, the terrific secret that he had a relation in the world, except when he lost one by death, and then he would be weighed down by the calamity, and would refer to his bereavement as if he had lost the very shadow of himself, from whom he had never been separated since the days of infancy. Within my own experience, I have observed smuggled relations to possess a wonderful quality of coming out when they die. My own dear Tom, who married my fourth sister, and who is a great smuggler, never fails to speak to me of one of his relations newly deceased, as though instead of never having in the remotest way alluded to that relatives existence before, he had been perpetually discoursing to it. "My poor, dear, darling Emmy," he said to me, within these six months, "she is gone—I have lost her."

Never until that moment had Tom breathed one syllable to me of the existence of any Emmy whomsoever on the face of this earth, in whom he had the smallest interest. He had scarcely allowed me to understand, very distantly and generally, that he had some relations—"my people," he called them—down in Yorkshire. "My own dear, darling Emmy," says Tom, notwithstanding, "she has left me for a better world." (Tom must have left her for his own world, at least fifteen years.) I repeated, feeling my way, "Emmy, Tom?" "My favorite niece," said Tom in a reproachful tone, "Emmy, you know. I was her godfather, you remember. Darling, fair haired Emmy! Precious blue-eyed child!" Tom burst into tears, and we both understood that henceforth the fiction was established between us that I had been quite familiar with Emmy by reputation, through a series of years.

Occasionally smuggled relations are discovered by accident, just as those tubs may be, to which I have referred. My other half—I mean, of course, my wife—once discovered a large cargo in this way, which had been long concealed. In the next street to us, lived an acquaintance of ours, who was a Commissioner of something or other, and kept a handsome establishment. We used to exchange dinners, and I have frequently heard him at his own table mention his father as a "poor dear good old boy," who had been dead for any indefinite period. He was rather fond of telling anecdotes of his very early days, and from them it appeared that he had been an only child. One summer afternoon, my other half, walking in our immediate neighborhood, happened to perceive Mrs. Commissioner's last year's bonnet, (to every inch of which, it is unnecessary to add, she could have sworn,) going along before her on somebody else's head. Having heard generally of the swell mob, my good lady's first impression was, that the wearer of this bonnet belonged to that fraternity, had just abstracted the bonnet from its place of repose, was in the very sense of the term walking off with it, and ought to be given into the custody of the nearest policeman.

Fortunately, however, my Susannah, who is not distinguished by closeness of reasoning or presence of mind, reflected, as it were by a flash of inspiration that the bonnet might have been given away. Curious to see to whom, she quickened her steps, and descried beneath it an ancient lady, of an iron-bound presence, in whom (for my Susannah has an eye) she instantly recognized the linaments of the Commissioner! Eagerly pursuing this discovery, she, that very afternoon, tracked down an ancient gentleman in one of the Commissioner's hats. Next day she came on the track of four stony maidens, decorated with artificial flowers out of the Commissioner's epergne; and thus we dug up the Commissioner's father and mother and four sisters, who had been for some years secreted in lodgings round the corner, and never entered the Commissioner's house save in the dawn of morning and the shades of evening. From that time forth, whenever my Susannah made a call at the Commissioner's, she always listened on the doorstep for any slight preliminary scuffling in the hall, and hearing it, was delighted to remark, "The family are here and they are secreting them!"

I have never been personally acquainted with any gentleman who kept his mother-in-law in the kitchen, in the useful capacity of cook; but I have heard of such a case on good authority. I once lodged in the house of a genteel lady claiming to be a widow who had four pretty children, and might be occasionally overheard coercing an obscure man in a sleeved waistcoat, who appeared to be confined in some pit below the foundations of the house, where he was condemned to be always cleaning knives.—One day, the smallest of the children crept into my room, said, pointing downward with a little chubby finger, "Don't tell! It's Pa!" and vanished on tiptoe.

One other branch of the smuggling trade demand a word of mention before I conclude. My friend of friends in my bachelor days, became the friend of the house when I got married. He is our Amelia's godfather; Amelia being the eldest of our cherubs. Through upwards of ten years he was backwards and forwards at our house three or four times a week and always found his knife and fork ready for him. What was my astonishment on coming home one day to find Susannah sunk upon the oil-cloth in the hall, holding her brow with both hands, and meeting my gaze, when I admitted myself with my latch-key in a distracted manner! "Susannah," I exclaimed, "what has happened?" She merely ejaculated, "Larver"—that being the name of the friend in question. "Susannah!" said I, "what of Larver? Speak! Has he met with any accident? Is he ill?" Susannah replied faintly, "Married—married before we were!" and would have gone into hysterics, but that I make a rule of never permitting that disorder under my roof.

For upwards of ten years, my bosom friend Larver, in close communication with me every day, had smuggled a wife! He had at last confided the truth to Susannah, and had presented Mrs. Larver. There was no kind of reason for this, that we could ever find out. Even Susannah had not a doubt of things being all correct. He had "run" Mrs. Larver into a nice little cottage in Hertfordshire, and nobody ever knew why, or ever will know. In fact, I believe there was no why in it.

The most astonishing part of the matter is, that I have known other men do exactly the same thing. I could give the names of a dozen in a foot note, if I thought it right.—[Household Words.

SCENE AT A DEBATING SOCIETY.

"If it hadn't been for Mr. Christopher Columbus," said Snubbs, "General Washington wouldn't have been born, but what if he was? what great things did he ever do? to be sure he performed several masterly retreats, but Sirs, that is to say, he was a coward!" "General Washington a coward!" screamed Foster the village doctor in a voice of thunder, "who so base as dare say it? Look at him at the battle of the Nile; at the Pyramids; at the Cowpens; on the Plains of Maranthon; at Waterloo; and Sirs, look at him at New Orleans." "General Washington at the battle of New Orleans!" exclaimed a huge backwoodsman, gesticulating violently. Mr. Speaker, is there such an ignoramus in the room? any school boy knows that the battle of New Orleans was fit before General Washington was born! let the gentleman read Plutarch's Lives! the Lives of the Signers of the Declaration of Independence! or the History of the Black Hawk War, and there he'll find that General Dodge fit the battle of New Orleans.

A tradesman having sunk his shop-floor a couple of feet, announces that "in consequence of recent improvements, goods will be sold considerably lower than formerly."

Happy he who lives in peace.

MORMONISM AT FORT REILLY.

We clip the following from the St. Louis Republican. Our brethren will be pleased to learn that Bishop Chard and his company are alive and well. Ten deaths are reported, but the deceased were sick before they left this city, and masmuch as they were upright and honorable before their Lord, they will not lose their reward.

The bold, fearless and determined conduct of brother Chard and his company, at Fort Reilly, is another evidence of the sterling character of our holy religion. It is not like the sickly sentimentalism, adopted by modern Christians, which they call religion, which causes them to fear the approach of death, lest they be cast into hell. Mormonism inspires no such feelings; it has delivered thousands, who through fear of death, have been subjected to bondage all their lives. It makes a man bold in the battle field—it makes him fearless when surrounded by the dead and dying. Some might suppose that Bishop Chard and his company of Saints, would have shut themselves up, and spent their time praying; but it appears that instead of praying, they commenced cleaning and whitewashing. If any want to know the reason, it is probably because they did their praying in advance, and when trouble came, they were prepared for it; and although hundreds precipitately fled, they were found on the ground, scrubbing, whitewashing, mounting guard, and manifesting to all around them, the superior spirit which governed their actions, establishing additional proof of the excellence of a living faith:

FROM FORT REILLY.

ST. LOUIS, August 14, 1855.

MR. EDITOR:—I have noticed several contradictory statements concerning the cholera at Fort Riley, the conduct of the laborers, &c. This morning, the death of Maj. Ogden was contradicted by the Morning Herald, on the authority of a letter received in this city, dated, Fort Riley, July the 30th.

The following letter has just been handed me by Mrs. Chard, of this city, whose husband has charge of fifty men, mostly Mormons, engaged by Maj. Ogden as masons and laborers. It was reported, you will recollect, that all the workmen left, but it will be seen from the following letter, that this company boldly stood their ground, The disturbance that has been reported arose amongst some Irish laborers, who demanded their pay contrary to agreement, and threatened violence unless they were paid. Mr. Sawyer paid their demand and the disturbance ceased.

FORT RILEY, August 5, 1855.

DEAR ——— :—I take this opportunity of again writing to you, as two of my company are going down in the morning. Since I last wrote to you, Maj. Ogden has died of cholera. He died yesterday, at twenty minutes past 12 o'clock, P. M. Such a day as yesterday I never wish to see again as long as I live; but, thank God, the worst is over, and all the brethren are alive and well, except John Sheppard and John Boon, who died of cholera last evening, the former about half past six, and the latter somewhat later in the evening.

We have been all day white-washing and cleaning our quarters. All other work is stopped. There is nothing doing on the Government works. We have had no new cases of cholera to-day. I think half the men have run away. The men who bring this have been all day building a raft. God knows if they will live to reach St. Louis. I am here, and I intend to stand at my post, live or die. I, with my brethren, feel to be in the hands of the Lord. If I die doing my duty, I say, amen—God's will be done. The brethren who are with me, have stood up to their duties, like men of God. A better set of men I could not have had. They have been ready and on hand, night and day; and this is not confined to the Saints alone, but those who are not of us, who came up in our company under my charge.

Out of all the companies that came here, our's is the only one that has stood the test of this trial. And I pray God to bless them for it; and I know He most assuredly will. But I must come to a close, as I am expecting to be called to go on guard.

I am yours, &c., CHARLES CHARD.

If men are required by the General Government, who will stand to their post and never flinch, like the spartan band of ancient fame, Mormonism can furnish men of the right stamp, whether it be a battalion for Mexico—fifty men for Fort Reily, or if fifty thousand were required for the nation's weal, Mormonism could furnish the contingent, and challenge the world to equal their patriotism and determined bravery.

San Barnidino, Texas and Illinois.

We have been favored with a letter from Richard B. Hopkins, under date of San Barnidino, July 5th, from which we extract the following:

"The crops in this State are more or less affected by rust and drought. The thermometer stands from 108 to 112, in the shade. Brother Rich arrived at this place on the 5th of June. Brother George Q. Cannon came with him en route for San Francisco. to take charge of the press at that point. Brother Parley P. Pratt, has started hence with a small company by the North route. A special Conference was held at this place on the 23d, and 24th of June; about 30 Elders were sent to the different counties in this State, to preach the Gospel."

Brother Hopkins will please accept our compliments for his favor. We shall feel happy in being placed under more frequent obligations by the correspondence of our brethren in California.

Elder Preston Thomas, writes us under date of Texas, July 24th, and says:

"I have been preaching at Clinton, Dewitt Co., where I found several Saints, whom I have re-baptised; they have all renewed their covenants by baptism, and are going to gather up in the spring. I still continue to receive letters from various quarters, inviting me to go and preach, and asking me information about gathering, &c. Persecution rages more than usual in Texas. Whilst I was preaching at Clinton, during my last two sermons I was interrupted and insulted by a mob gathering round the court-house, and cursing, swearing and yelling like savages, and I thought it prudent to preach there no more. Everywhere the Saints want to gather next spring, and I expect there will be a host of us going from Texas another season."

It will be seen from the above, as well as by the correspondence of Elders James and Geo. W. Case, that the spirit of opposition to the gospel of Jesus Christ and the holy Priesthood, is still the same, and, an opportunity is all that is required to lead the incarnate fiends, who still infest the land, to re-enact the dark and damning deeds of Hauns Mill, Carthage and Nauvoo; but let them rage, foam and threaten, the Saints are located where their hellish hate cannot affect them; and every insult and outrage offered to those Elders who still preach among them, will insure for them in the future reckoning, additional stripes. It was said by the old mobocrats, (many of whom are now in hell,) that the reason they robbed and murdered the Saints, was because they had stolen their horses and cattle; but whose horses and cattle have these brethren stolen? and what evil have they done, any? they have done as much as those who were mobbed and murdered for it years ago; they have boldly proclaimed the truth, and testified that Joseph, whom they have murdered, was a Prophet of God, for which they are considered worthy of death.

St. Louis under a new Regime.

Between two and three thousand of our brethren and sisters are now journeying to Zion, with their tents, wagons, oxen, &c., and all between Mormon Grove and the Rocky Mountains, presenting a scene of devotion, self-denial, and heroism, unequalled in any age amongst any other people. Future generations will read their history, and will laud the noble acts and magnanimous deeds of those men who are now leading up the ransomed of the Lord, from the land of tyrants and opressors, to dwell among the true born sons of Zion. On the 3d inst. the last company of this year's emigration moved off the camping ground in charge of our esteemed and worthy President Elder Milo Andrus, and about the same time our much loved and faithful brother, President Erastus Snow gave the parting hand, and the parting blessing, to the few who still remained, and drove off the field in triumph as a conqueror who has vanquished all of his foes, and overcome his greatest enemy. Most of our brethren in this Stake of Zion, were prepared to hear that he had left, but when it was announced that brother Andrus had taken up his line of march towards Zion, that he had actually started across the plains towards his mountain home, it came like a clap of thunder, and many could not refrain from tears, but indulged until they were satisfied.

We are not surprised at the strong feelings of attachment manifested by the Saints to these brethren; for they have by their goodness of heart, and righteousness of soul entwined themselves around the hearts of the people, and have gained the confidence and affection of the Saints, and have left with the prayers and blessings of all the faithful, and some are ready to say that if they return not, "we shall never see their like again." We can fully endorse the heart-felt sentiments of our brethren in favor of the most excellent men who have just left us, for they have accomplished a great work in our midst, a work that will be remembered when the workers of iniquity shall be cut off, and when those who make a man an offender for a word, shall be cast down to hell; even then, will the counsels, instructions, and prophecies, of our brethren be remembered.

'Tis not yet twelve months ago since Elder Erastus Snow arrived among us, his mission was given him by revalation of God through the Prophet Brigham, and his coming was announced by his worthy predecessor Elder Milo Andrus, who like John the Baptist prepared the way before him by preaching repentance unto all people, and by baptising for the remission of sins as many as believed. The honest hearted Saints from every ward of the city, and from all the regions round about were baptised of him, or, those whom he had ordained and blessed for that purpose, by the laying on of hands. There were some among us so wise in their own conceits, and so righteous in their own eyes that they considered and affirmed, that re-baptism was superfluous, and any other organization than that already existing in St. Louis, was altogether nnnecessary; they had no hesitation in saying these things were oppressive, and those who taught them were tyrants; but we leave them and their reflections, and return to the mission of our brethren.

When it was announced that St. Louis was to be organized into a Stake of Zion, some smiled and some laughed outright, and some as guileless as Phillip, said, can any good come out of Saint Louis? they were significantly answered, "wait and see." It was thought by some that Mormonism in this city was almost extinct, a few more gasps and it would breathe its last and be shortly buried with other dead branches of the true vine; for conscious that they themselves were nearly dead, they thought that all around them were as lifeless as they, and when they were called upon to arouse, bestir themselves and be baptised, they thought it too oppressive, and chose rather to sleep on and brave the consequences.

Such were the feelings and circumstances of many in this city when our brethren arrived among us from the mountains, who observing the wild unmanageable conduct of some, and the inefficient government of others, took the reins into their own hands, and tightened or slackened them at pleasure, as they deemed expedient. This course of training was unexpected and disagreeable to a few, and they commenced to kick and plunge, but the mountaineers were too expert, the restive were compelled to submit under their superior control, and were either placed in the new harness, or so far used up that they could neither kick nor plunge so as to harm any but themselves.

Being organized after the order of government established in Zion, the reins of government were placed in the hands of High Priests, Bishops, and Presidents of Quorums, who were instructed in the tactics of those who ordained them. Wards, districts, and sections, were organized, the best men that could be found were chosen and placed in charge, and St. Louis soon assumed a new character, instead of the Enfer so much dreaded a few years ago; it now assumes the importance of a training school, and one of the higher branches at that, and were it not for the proximity des 'ecoles du Diable it might be considered a desirable position; as it is, but few would remain, did not circumstances imperitively compel them to do so.

About twelve months ago it was next to impossible for the Saints in St. Louis and the surrounding country to obtain any correct knowledge of the movements of the Church except when an Elder from the mountains should perchance pass this way and give from memory such items as might occur to him as interesting; but during the last nine months we have been blessed with a weekly paper published in this city, containing the latest news from Zion, and indeed from all parts of the world. England, France, Italy, Germany, Russia, India, and many of the islands of the sea furnish correspondence for the instruction and benefit of our readers, so that the Saints cannot plead ignoranee as an apology for inattention, and backwardness in duty, for the present efficient organization established amongst us, supported by the verbal as well as written counsels of Elder Erastus Snow, an apostle of Jesus Christ, and those of his coadjutor Elder Milo Andrus, assisted by a Council of High Priests, and a staff of Bishops, have made the duties of the Saints so plain that none but those wilfully blind can err therein.—And instead of the Church at St. Louis being a place of refuge for hypocrites, and apostate devils as formerly, it is discovered that they can neither walk, sit, nor stand comfortably among us, for the spirit of Zion has so raised the temperature that many are already burned out, and it is confidently expected to so far increase in temperature that the fire of the Lord may consume the hypocrites, and cause all the workers of iniquity to tremble, that they may be utterly confounded and put to shame.

GLEANINGS.

Dispatches from Washington of the 14th inst., state that Colonel Steptoe, instead of being in Carson Valley awaiting the reply of President Pierce to the proposed conditional acceptance of the Governorship of Utah, was, on the 12th of July, at Benecia, (Cal.) with his command.

The Yellow Fever is raging in Virginia; more than two hundred persons have fled to Washington City for refuge.

At Porto Rico, the Vomito was raging among the troops, and 1500 had died.

The Louisville riots have subsided. Crimination and recrimination is now the order of the day.

It is worthy of note that while the citizens of Louisville were drenching their streets and covering themselves with blood, the following resolution was being passed and published concerning them.

Resolved, that the citizens of Louisville, in contributing over twenty thousand dollars toward the endowment of Christian University, have covered themselves with honor, and set an example worthy of imitation.

What shall be said for the blood with which they have covered themselves, and how many thousand dollars will wipe out the stain? Will our friends of the Christian University answer?

The correspondent of the New Orleans Delta furnishes an official account of the capture of Saltillo, by the troops under Gen. Vidarme. After two days fighting, the Government troops, 1,200 strong, with five pieces of artillery were defeated. The revolutionists lost fifty-six killed, while two-thirds of the Government forces were killed or wounded. At last accounts, the revolutionists were in pursuit of the retreating army. Gen. Woll had reinforced Matamoras by troops from Tampico.

Mass meetings are being held in numerous places concerning Kansas, the Missouri Compromise, and Slavery. Virginia thinks it time to prepare for war, and is begining to rub up her old rusty arms, so that in case of a dissolution of the Union she may be prepared to defend herself against neighboring States.

The Richmond Enquirer, gives the following view of the subject:

"In a few years Kansas will probably ask admission into the Union as a slave State, and may be refused. It needs but Free-Soil predominance in the House of Representatives, to achieve this end. If refused admission in this Union, she will undoubtedly be received in another, and the United States, South, will begin their career. This proposition is too clear for argument. Nothing but rank cowardice could induce the South to acquiesce in the exclusion of a slave State on the score of slavery. We assume, therefore, that the South will not acquiesce, and, consequently, we fear that in a few years, Mason and Dixon's line may be the boundary of foreign powers.

The possibility of this event creates grave responsibilities. Virginia will be a frontier State. Should war unhappily occur between the two Republics, she will receive the shock. The bare possibility of this thing demands instant preparation, so far as it may be made without hastening the event and with strict fidelity to the Constitution.

We have received letters from S. W. Woolly and Wm. Martindale, which will appear in our next issue.

NO MAILS FROM UTAH THIS MONTH.

We are not likely to get any Salt Lake Mails this month. The Mails that passed Mormon Grove on the 4th inst., that were supposed to be the Utah Mails, appear to have been Mails from Fort Laramie. Mr. Wood, a gentlemen who came through by that Mail, gives but little hope for mails from Utah this month. For although the General Government appropriated to Mr. McGraw, a considerable sum more than contracted for, and although the said gentlemen [illegible] some fair promises to Utah, that her mails should be carried regular, yet we find the mail management on this route worse than ever, and although Mr. McGraw has informed gentlemen of this city, that he has put extra mules on the road to facilitate the expedition of the mails, yet we learn from gentleman, who have recently arrived in this city from Laramie, that he has no more mules on the road than in the winter. And the July mail from Independence was about ten days behind its time, when passing Laramie, and would not be likely to reach Utah, in time to bring the mails last month, and would probably wait and bring the two together.

Correspondence.

Celebration on the 24th of July, 1855.

MORMON GROVE, K. T., August 1st, '55.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LUMINARY.

DEAR SIR:—Several days have transpired since our celebration of the memorable 24th, but I have not had time or opportunity before to-day to furnish you a report, having been sent to Weston on the morning of the 25th, to purchase supplies for the emigration. And I shall not be able now, to give you anything like a complete report, as our reporter has gone forward with his company, without leaving the minutes which he took down on the occasion.—But I will give you a hasty sketch from memory, which imperfect as it may be, I trust will be of some little interest to your readers.

Agreeable to a notice from the committee of arrangements, the Saints from the several companies, camped in the vicinity of Mormon Grove, came together about 3 o'clock P. M., and formed a procession in front of the Church Store, under the direction of Elder Thomas Colburn, marshall of the day, in the following order:

1st. Carriage containing Presidents Erastus Snow and Daniel Spencer, and Elder Milo Andrus and Charles H. Bassett, committee of arrangements.

2d. Elder John S. Fulmer superintending conductor of P. E. Fund Emigration, and Elder James McGaw Bishop of Mormon Grove, mounted.

3d. Elder William Willis, orator of the day, and Elder William G. Mills, Zion's sweet poet.

4th. Elders George Rust and Henry Humphries, bearing a beautiful banner with appropriate emblems and devices.

5th. Elder Charles Harper Captain 1st division of P. E. F. company and John Lynch his secretary.

6th. First ten, first division P. E. F. Co., under the charge of Captain Thomas Jeremy.

7th. Second ten, first division P. E. F. Co., under the charge of Captain William Rust.

8th. Third ten, first division P. E. F. Co., under the charge of Captain Francis St. George.

9th. Elder Israel Barlow, Captain second division P. E. F. Co., and Elder Patrick Lynch general P. E. Fund clerk.

10th. First ten, second division P. E. F. Co., under charge of Captain George Bramwell.

11th. Second ten, second division P. E. F. Co., under charge of Captain Joseph Booth.

12th. Third ten, second division P. E. F. Co., under charge of Captain Martin Slack.

13th. Fourth ten, second division P. E. F. Co., under charge of Captain Mathew Rowan.

14th. Elders J. C. Sly and John Barker, missionaries returning to Great Salt Lake City.

15th. Elders James M. Brown and W. H. Wilson, general clerks Mormon Emigration.

16th. Elder Isaac Alred, Captain Church train, and Elder James Pace, missionaries returning to G. S. L. City.

17th. Church train company, under charge of Elders Samuel Hardy and Isaiah M. Coombs, assistant Marshalls.

The procession moved at 6 o'clock, marching through the principal avenues of Mormon Grove.—From the tops of the numerous tents and wagons throughout the Grove were floating flags and banners, some of which were beautifully designed, ornamented with needle work, and bearing appropriate mottos.

About eight hundred souls joined in the procession; the sisters were out in their best dresses, and men, women, and children, seemed to take a lively interest in the celebration, and considering the circumstances, made a much grander display than was expected.

After marching about an half hour and visiting the different parts of the Grove, the procession came to a halt on the green, West of the Church farm.

Presidents Erastus Snow and Daniel Spencer, the officers of the day, and the Salt Lake Elders took the stand, and the companies gathered around to listen to the speeches, &c.

Elder William Willes then delivered an extemporaneous oration appropriate to the occasion, which was listened to with much interest by the attentive congregation. The oration was reported by Elder Bramwell, but he left on his journey to the valley without leaving a transcribed copy.

Elder William G. Mills, then read the following beautiful poem which he composed by request, for the occasion,

[The poem has emigrated by the last company. Please to send it back to fulfill its mission.—Ed.]

President Erastus Snow, next addressed the people in his usual spirited and entertaining style, followed by Presidents Daniel Spencer and Milo Andrus. I regret much that I am not able to furnish you a report of these brilliant speeches. They were replete with the spirit of Mormonism, and the listening Saints were much edified and warmed up in their feelings, and encouraged to pursue with renewed spirit and energy, the path of the noble pioneers, whose entrance into the vallies of Ephraim, we had met to commemorate.

A number of toasts were volunteered, of which I can only remember a few.

The Mormons, the true supporters of Liberty.—William G. Mills.

Here's to the stars and stripes,
That float over the land and sea;
May he still have the cholic and gripes,
That would stain the flag of the free;
But here's to the Saints of God,
That alone bear up liberty's pole,
May they soon by the Priesthood's rod,
Have the world 'neath their own control.

By W. G. MILLS.

President Erastus Snow; though cold be his name his heart is warm, and ever glows with the warmest friendship for his brethren and sisters.—I. M. Coombs.

Mormonism; like the mustard seed sown, may it continue to spread 'till it extends over the whole earth.—I. Barlow.

May the mustard seed which has been sown, produce abundance of mustard to cause the enemies of truth to sneeze well.—W. Willes.

The day we celebrate; it will be cherished in the memory of the Saints, when the 4th of July is forgotten.—I. M. Coombs.

The Mormons; "no pent up Utah contracts our powers, the whole boundless universe is ours."—Charlie.

The Smith family; the proper persons to forge the chains to bind old satan.—William Willis.

Elder Charlie H. Bassett; the ladies favorite. Brother Charlie only needs to be known to be loved.—I. M. Coombs.

The faithful sisters, Charlies favorites; God bless them forever.—Charlie.

May the snow through which we have to pass on the mountains be as good and useful to us, as the snow of Mormon Grove.—W. G. Mills.

Mormon Grove Battalion; they have learned to "right about face," and may they soon "quick march" to the vallies of the mountains.—Joseph Hall.

There were many other pertinent toasts offered, but I am not able to call them to mind.

The people were dismissed with the benediction of President Snow.

In the evening we came together again and enjoyed a grand social dance by moonlight, on the prairie grass. We were dismissed at a seasonable hour, and all retired to their several wagons and tents, well satisfied with the entertainments of the day.

I regret much that I am not able to furnish more than this meagre report of the celebration, but I have relied entirely on my memory.

In an hour we shall be under way for the valley, and my mind is pre-occupied with the idea of fitting up the carriages &c., preparatory to the trip.

Yours respectfully, CHAS. H. BASSETT.

ST. LOUIS MO., August 15th, 1855.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LUMINARY:

DEAR SIR:—Since I wrote you last, the scene has changed very considerably in Kingston. On the 24th of July, brother Matthew King, President of the Kingston branch, was taken very ill. I administered in the ordinances of the church, and he obtained relief for a short time. But on the 27th, he was taken with a fit which never left him, he died at half past 12 o'clock, P. M. He was a worthy man—a Saint of God; and his loss is felt by his worthy wife and child, and all the Saints in that place. His body was carried to the grave yard on the morning of the 30th, and interred in the silent tomb, to remain till the morning of the first resurrection. It was followed by all the Saints, and a numerous crowd of citizens. Aut soon the scene changed, I repaired immediately to brother Chisholm's, with the Saints. A mob collected at a store near by owned by S. Hutchinson, who also headed the mob. A committee of six was appointed to carry out their hellish design. S. Hutchinson, a pious member of a Methodist or Presbyterian church. I do not know which was the first of the committee. Some four were sent immediately to the house, where I was, followed by S. Hutchinson to see his orders carried out. One of the number, by the name of Abner Maryfield, came in, asked my name, I told him three times, and then brother Foster had to tell him again, before he could speak it, he trembled at my presence; he then notified me to leave within twenty-four hours, or suffer the consequence. I asked him if I had broken the laws of the land? He said I was a nuisance in the place—was preaching a false doctrine—was a thief and a robber, as were all the Mormons. This created feelings in the breast of brother Chisholm and family, which caused them to put these mobocrats out of his house. Sister Chisholm acting the part of a heroine, told them they had legions of devils in them, and that if they attempted to harm me, she would kill one of them; she told them, that Mormonism was true, and that calamity would fall upon them, and God laugh at it, and he would mock, when their fear cometh.

On account of the Saints, and to save shedding of the blood. I thought it best to leave, for the mob said if I did not, I should be tared and feathered, and rode on a rail; and if any attempted to rescue me, they should be served the same way. They sent into the country, five miles, to get help to carry out their plans; they also hired a man to watch me. But I was a little too fast for them. I with the Saints repaired through the woods, to a lake and baptised two into the church, broke bread, and had a blessed time, ordained one Elder, and one Priest. I left them in good spirits, although the mob had forbid the brethren having any more meetings in that vicinity; if they did they must leave the 'diggins.' I was carried to Pekin—took a boat for Naples. The Captain charged me double what he did other ministers, because I was a Mormon, so he told me; the passengers all found out I was a Mormon, and was very shy of me, excepting one from New York city, who was a friend to me. I passed through Jacksonville, and Springfield—found the Saints doing all they were able, to get away to the valley next spring; also found some that wanted to be baptised into the church; I left that for brother Jackson to do, and passed on to Alton—found quite a number of the Saints sick. A coldness prevailed there, which I was sorry to see. I arrived in St. Louis on the 11th instant—all well, and found the Saints doing well. On the 13th, I went to a party at Dry Hill, where I enjoyed myself first-rate. I expect to leave here in a few days, for Iowa, agreeable to counsel. I shall be here at the October Conference if the Lord will; you may expect to hear from me as often as I get a mobbing, if not oftener, for I consider mobbing is rolling on the work, and bringing about the purposes of the Lord, faster than the mobbers are aware of.

May the work of the Lord roll on, till mobbers shall cease, and righteousness fill the earth is my prayer all the time, JAMES CASE.

SULLIVAN, MOULTRY Co., Ill. Aug. 12, '55.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LUMINARY:

Dear Brother—Judging others by myself, I feel as though a few words from this part of the country would be somewhat gratifying to you. Since Elder James Case was here last winter, I have baptised three, and re-baptised one, there are several more believing, but they are slow to obey. I have preached twice in the Methodist school house, about ten miles from this place. Their presiding Elder and class leader, are believing; and say they want to be baptised as soon as they preach their farewell sermons. It is creating a great excitement in that church, and they say if I don't stop preaching Mormonism in this country that they will tar and feather me, and if that don't do, they will shoot my hide so full of holes, that it won't hold shucks; but I only tell them that I calculate to preach Mormonism as long as I live, God being my helper, and if I can't do it here, I shall go where I can. God speed the time that I can sell my farm, and gather among the Saints of God.

My mother is living here, and she is very sick with the chills and fever, and she desires an interest in the prayers of all honest hearted Saints, so that she may live to get to the vallies of the mountains, where she can enjoy herself better than she can here. As I am not well myself, I must close my letter. I desire an interest in the prayers of the Saints, that I may hold out faithful in the new and everlasting Covenant. GEORGE W. CASE.

DEAR PRESIDENT SNOW:—I again take my pen to resume my correspondence with you, to inform you of our continued prosperity, and of the grace of God, our Eternal Father, that has attended this journeying camp of His people.

It has been a subject of astonishment to most of us that so few accidents have occurred during our journey, when the inexperience of the men and wildness of the cattle are taken into consideration. We have not been hindered a day since we started, but have travelled on slowly and steadily, Sundays excepted. On Sabbaths we have had meetings, and administered the sacrament to the Saints.

Owing to the fatigues of the journey and the frustration and excitement produced by unruly cattle, some unwillingness was at first manifested on the part of a few to stand up like men in the discharge of camp duty; but this spirit and feeling is gradually disappearing, and when we assemble together to pray, and impart instruction, the good spirit of our God rests upon us to comfort and encourage the journeying Saints of God.

The Bell is rung around the coral and tents at 4 o'clock each morning for all the people to get out of bed. In a quarter of an hour after the roll is called, and each man is required to be on the ground with his gun to answer when his name is called. A short time is then generally spent in military duty. When the brethren are released to eat breakfast, grease the wagons, or to do anything that may be needed preparatory to starting. About 7 o'clock the cattle are usually yoked up and when all are ready the Bugle is blown and the whole camp of the Saints assemble before the Lord to call down His blessings upon us previous to starting.

The spirit of hurrying has not yet troubled us, yet we have felt to use all diligence as the season is somewhat advanced, our provisions are very limited, and the crops in the Valley seem to be rather scant. We intend being as judicious as possible with our provisions, yet we shall need some supplies before reaching the Valley as we only laid in flour to serve us to Green River.

But to return to the order of our camp. When the journey of the day is over, our cattle are turned out in care of a well armed guard till dark, when they are either corralled or strongly guarded during the night. We could not carry out your instructions relative to tying the cattle during the night, as we sould not obtain a sufficient quantity of rope before we left the Grove.

In the evening about 8 o'clock the Captains of tens assemble those under their care to worship the Lord, and impart instruction to each other, and when necessary we call the camp together in a collective capacity, and impart general counsel and instruction. In this way we move on harmoniously, and a cheerful happy spirit animates the bosoms of the brethren and sisters, and as they travel along, the songs of the daughters of Zion, as they pioneer the way, causes every evil and dissatisfied spirit to leave the track, or hide its head for shame.

Brother Thirsting's train travelled with us several days, but yesterday they took a new road that is called a "cut off," and they may reach the Platte before we do. The water on the "cut off" is bad, and scarce, and we thought best to continue up the Blue by the usual track. Yours in much love and regard for your welfare. R. BALLANTYNE

SUNDAY, July 22d.—We are on the Platte River three miles below Fort Kearney. We have killed and secured the beef of two Buffaloes. Great multitudes of them around us. R. B.

CEDAR CITY, June 9th, 1855.

PRESIDENT ERASTUS SNOW:

Dear Brother—I again resume my pen to inform you of matters and things in general, as they exist with us at present. General good health prevails with us, and peace in our midst, and with the Indians. Since the key of the Gospel has been turned in favor of the House Israel, a great difference is perceivable in the spirit of the Indian tribes. They seem to respect this people, and even to ask counsel in appointing their Chiefs. During the recent visit of Prest. Young and company, Dimic Huntington, the interpreter, and Kenosh, the Parvant chief, called the Indians together and had a talk and chiefs were elected at Parowan, Cedar City, and Harmony. Those were selected who would work, and all seem well satisfied.

Captain William Bringhurst, and Mipian passed through here last week, on their way to make a settlement on the Los Vagus, to teach the Indians the arts of civilization, husbandry, &c., &c. From the knowledge I have of most of the men that compose that Mission, I feel sanguine that much good will be done to better the condition of these poor degraded sons of the Desert; not only their temporal condition, by teaching them to plow, plant, sow, &c., and raise their own living, without depending upon the precarious means of subsisting on the little game that exists in the sterile regions, and of killing the cattle and horses of the traveller, but also in their spiritual condition, by delivering them from the gross superstition of their fathers, and bringing them to the knowledge of the covenants that the Lord made with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; with Lehi, Nephi and Moroni; also, with Joseph Smith, the Prophet, regarding the Lamanites, that not many generations shall pass away before they become a fair and delightsome people. They became dark, filthy, and degraded through transgressing the laws, and defiling the Holy Priesthood that God revealed to their fathers on this continent. They will be redeemed from their present degraded condition, by obeying the laws and ordinances of that same Priesthood which is now carried to them by this company.—Some of the brethren under the Presidency of Elder C. Allen, have been laboring among the Indians on the Rio Virgin and Santa Clara, and great good has been done in teaching them to labor, and in reforming their savage dispositions, in teaching them not to war with one another, nor with the white men that travel through their country, which they have been accustomed to do. I will here state, that some of our enimies have stated that those men have been stirring up those Indians to hostilities against the Americans, and to attack the mail, which is false. They have prevented them from committing hostilities, both upon the mail and upon the Americans, as those that have travelled through this country have been accustomed to shoot them as they would a wolf, they regarded every man that wore a white skin, as their enemy; but now they feel different; and if those that travel among them would treat them kindly, there would be but little difficulty with them.

We had a very interesting visit from Presidents Young, Kimball and Grant, with their company, which arrived here on the 19th of May. Sunday, the 20th, they remained with us and held a meeting, and gave us much good counsel and instructions. Some alterations were made, a new stake was organized, including Cedar City, Fort Harmony, and Fort Johnson. I. C. Haight was appointed President of the stake, who chose Jonathan Pugmire and John M. Higby, his Council. An high Council was organized, when the following persons were called and ordained to that office: Jonathan Pugmire, Charles Hopkins, John T. Willes, Samuel D. White, Ira Allen, Commodore P. Litan, Samuel Leigh, Richard Harrison, and Robert Wiley, of Cedar City; Rufus C. Allen and Thomas D. Brown, of Fort Harmony; and Laban Morrell, of Fort Johnson.

As for the Iron works, I have but little to say; only, we are making such castings as we need for hot blast, for oven furnaces, and for wrought-iron works; and procuring coal and other material as fast as we can to carry on the works. Laborers are hard to get, and things move on slow at present.

We had a flood from the mountains, on the 5th, which carried off the bridges at the works, and did some other damage, by carrying off some head-gates on the water-lets, and filling cellars, and tumbling down one house in the city. The grasshoppers are doing but little damage in our fields as yet. At Parowan, they have destroyed the most of their crops, and report says, that, the crops north of G. S. L. City have been destroyed by them.

As yet, we have received no copies of the Luminary subscribed for, but I expect they are coming by Horn Telegraph, over the plains, instead of California; and if they come at all we may get them next winter.

With feelings of deep regard, I remain your fellow servant in the covenant of peace.

J. C. HAIGHT.

MORMON GROVE, K. T., August 2nd, 1855.

Dear Brothers Edwards and Gardner—It is with feelings that are past describing, that I take the pen af 11 o'clock at night, after a Counsel of some hours, to reveal to you, and through you, to my dear and beloved brethren and sisters, the result of said Council. I will come to the matter in short, and when I have more leisure, in full detail. It has been determined, in consequence of the lateness of the season, and the lack of experienced men, that I should take the charge of the last company of P. E. Eund Emigrants. I therefore only have twelve hours to make up my outfit and prepare for said journey.—Five hours ago, I was pondering in my mind, the joys of meeting my brethren and sisters in St. Louis; but now I am obliged to bid good bye, without even a shake of the hand. How different the works of the Lord to onr own calculations. We must all submit, in order to have eternal life. In all probability I shall be with you again, early in the spring, or next winter. * * * * *

Say to brother Cantwell that I shall write to him while on the road. Tell him to be of good cheer. It seems as though I could not refrain from mentioning names, but when I begin, I say, Oh, Lord! where shall I end? as the Saints have all shared my good feelings and feeble labors, and are all entitled to my blessings. I feel to mention no names, but may the very God of peace show forth His power in you, that our labors be not in vain in the Lord. Had I time, I should be glad to fill this sheet, and unbosom my feelings to my brethren and sisters more fully, but I have not the time, and a heavy burthen is now placed upon me, and you must excuse these few lines, and believe me to be ever true and faithful to your interests, while your interests are controlled by the will of heaven.

I am, your servant, for the Gospel's sake,

MILO ANDRUS.

Mormon Picnic at Dry Hill Monday Aug. 13, '55.

Agreeable to arrangement made by Bishop Yates and the brethren of his ward, about two hundred of the Saints from this city quit their employment and sallied forth into the country to join the Saints of Dry Hill and Gravois, to enjoy with them a day of pleasure and amusement. The majority took the cars about 8 o'clock, and soon reached the Cheltenham station, and after a walk of about a mile we arrived at the spot designated for the purpose, and a delightful spot it is, and well adapted to every kind of amusement we could desire.

Soon after we arrived I called the Saints together and addressed them upon the object of our meeting, and the order of the day, and desired that the Saints would feel free, and enjoy themselves, but at the same time not to run to excess, but to retain the spirit of the Lord, which we had brought with us.—Prayer was then offered to our heavenly Father for his blessings to attend his Saints, to which they responded with a hearty, amen.

After we had sufficiently refreshed ourselves we began to divide off for the amusements of the day, which were conducted in peace, and cooled down with occasional showers.

Dinner was served up about 2 o'clock, when hams, chickens, ducks, and pastry, disappeared to a marvel. To aid in this general demolition, our numbers were greatly increased as a great many arrived from Gravois, and others from St. Louis in private carriages, and as far as we could learn there was not fewer than three hundred Saints present.

The Saints were called to order by Bishop Yates, who called upon Elder Jas. Case to ask a blessing.

After dinner permission was given by the President to engage in the dance, and as musicians were in attendance, our brethren and sisters were soon lightly stepping the lovely green, which was continued for about two hours.

Elder Hart then addressed the Saints upon the enjoyments of the day, and desired the Saints not to mingle with any that were not in the Church, or did not come well recommended by their brethren; and those who professed to be Saints but did not walk up to the line of duty, before the Lord, those who were only found among us on such occasions, but could not be found at our Church or fellowship meetings. Let them stand on the outside and enjoy themselves if they can.

Bishop Yates then called upon several to sing some favorite songs of Zion, which were executed with good grace to the satisfaction of the Saints.

Brother Wm. Williams sung "In Deseret we're free!" which was warmly cheered.

The party was dismissed by singing "Praise God from whom all blessings flow," and prayer by Elder Hart.

It was a most beautiful sight to see the Saints mingle together and enjoy themselves, and to look upon all as one common family, the children of the Highest bound together in the bonds of the new and everlasting covenant. Such was our party, and such our feelings, and when we look forward to the day when Zion shall be established, and peace will flow as a river over the whole earth, we count not our lives dear so that we win an inheritance among the Saints.

And now we would say for the benefit of the few sinners present, we would like them to keep clear, and not try and poke themselves in our way, or they will get poked out quick.

The Saints returned to St. Louis safely, and well satisfied with the day's pleasures.

THOS. HARRIS,
Clerk of the day.

Miscellaneous.

A LIVING FAITH.

There is nothing like Faith in a principle or a man; and, the better the principle or the man, the better the faith. It inspires the highest virtues.—Courage and fortitude are its natural and necessary out-growth. The Mormons, at this time, afford a striking proof of what can be accomplished by a living faith. Accepting as true what the world at large believes to be false, they have, armed with that truth, done and endured more than any other body of men, known to the history of the world, within the last thirty years. They have peopled solitudes, and made them vocal with the hum of a peaceful industry. But, no sooner has one of their chosen spots begun to smile under the hand of labor and art, than they have been driven from it with contempt and outrage. Finding that, among the haunts of civilization, there was no permanent resting-place for the soles of their feet, they finally fled to the desert, where they might have some hope that none would come to "molest or make them afraid." This desert, forbidding as it was, they are converting into a garden. There they have organized a community—such as, it is quite safe to say, the world has not witnessed since the days of the patriarchs. And, were it not for the "peculiar institution" which prevails among them, it would be impossible to deny them the merit of being, perhaps, the most virtuous and happy community existing at this day. The order, industry and thrift which distinguish the Mormons of Utah are beyond anything of which the world elsewhere, at this time, furnishes an example. There is among them scarcely a man who is not busily employed in some useful or conscientious labor, most of which is productive in a material point of view; or, if not productive in that sense, contributes to the support of a religion in which the laborer has full faith, and which he believes to be the preservative and guarantee of the fruits of his industry, when exerted for the subsistence of his family or himself. The results appear in those improvements which are so rapidly multiplying in Utah. Again, so peaceably inclined are the population—such practical friends of order are they—so regardful are they of the rights of property—that a crime or offence, such as the laws denounce, is of the rarest occurrence among them.—Breaches of the peace, assaults, riots, homicides, thefts, forgeries and swindling, are, it may be said with almost literal truth, unknown among them.—A political community, so little in want of courts, lawyers, jails, penitentiaries, hospitals and almshouses, does not exist on the face of the earth. The picture which they present, of order, peace and prosperity, is perfectly unparalleled.

Now, all this is undeniable. But we do not set it forth as any plea in behalf of polygamy. We think that the unsound spot of the Mormon system. It has about it a rottenness at the core, which will spread with years, until it grows so offensive as to be insupportable. But we do set it forth as showing the miracles which are worked by a "living faith." Such a faith, so genuine, pervading and persistent, does, in our opinion, animate no other community—either political or religious—in Christendom. If it has any parallel in Christendom, that parallel may, perhaps, be found among the Russians. There was in the Church of Rome a good deal of faith. But that faith is more the property of individuals than of communities in that Church indeed, speaking for Germany, for Southern and Western Europe, and especially for the United States, it is, we believe, perfectly true that one of its great miseries and dangers is the want of a living religious faith. At a time when engineers are constructing locomotives which can travel eighty miles an hour, and electricians can send a message round the earth in a minute; when cities are springing up, and wealth and population are increasing beyond precedent; it may seem absurd to deny the possibility of any achievement to the Wit of Man, including that highest of all, the establishment and perpetuation of a Well-Ordered State. But this last is, we believe, beyond the compass of mere Human Wit, unaided from above. A sound and lively religious faith is more necessary to the stability of a State than all the gifts of the rarest statesmanship. And such a faith is precisely that possession in which most of the nations of Christendom are just now the poorest. Notwithstanding the immense array of men, money and material means, which have been brought to bear against Russia, how stout and successful, upon the whole, is her resistance! It is so, because her defenders have entered on this resistance with the enthusiasm which is inspired by a strong religious faith. Had the other side any enthusiasm—had they, especially, an enthusiasm kindred to the Russian—the results of the operations in the Crimea would have worn a face very different from what they do now. Unfortunately, or, let us say, providentially, (for some purposes not revealed,) the government of Christendom has fallen into the hands of men who may be described, in the general way, as without any principles or convictions which refer to anything beyond selfish ease or aggrandizement. Their administration of government is a series of shuffles. Virtue does not exist in them, and they do not believe that it exists in others. To do a thing because it is right and just to do it, is no part of their creed. Not to do a thing, that seems expedient or desirable, simply because of its outraging right and justice, would be, in their view, an act of folly. Maladministration thus gets to be a scourge, which grows heavier year by year. Corruption stalks through every department of government; being, we honestly believe, as flagrant in the United States as in any country on earth. The profligacy growing out of a want of principle, bottomed on a living faith in Virtue, is at the root of it. Without some change, its bitter fruits will, in the next generation, be such as to make Republican Institutions impossible. An age of Corruption always ushers in an age of Force. A people which has no self-sustaining virtues must, if it is sustained at all, be kept up by the strong arm of military despotism. —[St. Louis Herald.

AN ACT OF COURAGE.

An officer of the 19th regiment writes the following:

"Private John Lyons, of the Grenadier company of my regiment, performed a daring and gallant act in the Quarry work which our fellows took from the enemy the other evening. A 32-pounder shell sent from a battery near the Round Tower struck the ground short of the work, and thence by ricochet, alighted on the parapet. From the parapet it rolled down to the inner side among a group of men who were lying under its cover—some belonged to the rifle brigade, some to the 19th regiment. There was seemingly no escape. The fuze was burning and hissing with that peculiar rushing noise which few can hear close to them without some degree of alarm. It was what is commonly called a "live shell;" that is, a shell ready to scatter death and destruction on all around. A few moments and the fuze would communicate with the bursting discharge, the shell would be rent to pieces, and no one could say how many would fall victims from its fragments. "My God! we're all murdered," cried one of the men; but on the instant, Lyons, who is a tall and powerful man, started up, rushed to the shell, and grasping in both hands the threatening missile, hurled it over the parapet. What a moment of suspense! but it was gone and all danger was over.—A second scarcely elapsed after it reached the ground on the opposite side when the explosion took place. The men who saw the thing done could hardly believe their eyesight, and only felt secure after the shell had burst. You may imagine there was no want of gratitude to their deliverer. An officer who also saw the occurrence reported it to the General, and as an account of the transaction with the names of the witnesses, has been sent to Lord Raglan, I have no doubt the man will be rewarded."

A BOSTONIAN'S IDEA OF COQUETRY.

Dainty phraseology—euphemism, according to the language of the schools—is rapidly coming into vogue. Mrs. E. Oakes Smith calls a deliberate murder by poison, an "indiscretion;" in Kentucky, homicide of the most ferocious description is merely an "eccentricity." But in point of delicacy of language, the Boston Atlas exceeds all its cotemporaries.—Take the following little paragraph as a specimen:

"COQUETRY A PUNISHABLE OFFENCE.—In Southern Russia, a Princess of twenty years has been sentenced to a nunnery for five years, because of her coquetry resulting in a duel between two of her lovers, in which one was killed. What a shocking country!"

Now, the cause of the duel between the unfortunate son-in-law of the reigning prince of Wallachia and the Austrian major, was, that the former returning home late one evening, encountered the latter on the staircase decending from his wife's room.—The Boyard was armed and in uniform, having just returned from his official duties, but the major was in plain dress, and then, upon a demand to return immediately to the room with the incensed husband, and render an explanation, he at first refused, but being unarmed, was compelled to acquiesce.

A heart-rending scene then took place in presence of the wife, who was turned out of doors, and the Boyard then, breaking his sword in the presence of the major demanded a meeting with pistols on the following morning. The challenge was accepted and two of the Boyard's brothers-in-law (one of the ministers of Justice) acted as his seconds. The reigning prince was only informed of the affair when too late; and upon proceeding in all haste to the appointed rendezvous, encountered the melancholy sight of his son-in-law's corpse being borne into the town. The two seconds were instantly dismissed from their high functions. A letter from Bucharest of the 20th ult., gives the following additional particulars: The death of young Bulche, son-in-law of the prince of Moldavia, killed in a duel by the Count de Stolberg, an Austrian officer, has produced in both Principalities a painful sensation. The young woman has been punished by Prince Gregory Chika, for her wicked conduct.—She has been exiled to a monastery for five years. The young Princess Nathalie is not more than 20 years old, and is a beautiful woman. This lamentable incident was not wanting to complete the hatred existing against the Austrians, who have the talent of causing even the Russians to be regretted, and whose excesses they have surpassed.—[Buffalo Advertiser.

THERE is a couple in Cincinnati, who have been engaged to be married for the past five years, but no time has occurred within that period when they were both out of prison at the same time.

The reason why it succeeds.—THE Mustang Liniment has attained its enormous popularity, and almost universal use, simply because it gives better satisfaction, accomplishes more good, relieves more pain, and heals more wounds and sores than any other preparation ever defore offered to the afflicted. Every bottle that is used, speaks for itself—tells its own tale in the relief it gives, and the cure it effects. And then one who has suffered, pehaps, long years with pain, without hope of relief, and finds in this Liniment an almost instantaneous remedy, cannot help but speak in its praise, and recommend it in the best terms to all he sees suffering. It needs no other recommendation than a trial.

Poetical Department.

SOULS NOT STAIONS.

Who shall judge a man from manners?
Who shall know him by his dress?
Paupers may be fit for princes,
Princes fit for something less.
Crumpled shirt and dirty jacket
May beclothe the golden ore
Of the deepest thoughts and feelings—
Satin vests could do no more.
There are springs of crystal nectar,
Ever swelling out of stone;
There are beds purple and golden
Hidden, crushed and overgrown.
God, who counts by souls, not dresses,
Loves and prospers you and me,
While He values thrones the highest,
But as pebbles in the sea.

Man, upraised above his fellows,
Oft forgets his fellows then;
Masters—rulers—lords—remember
That your meanest kinds are MEN;
Men by labor, men by feeling,
Men of thought and men of fame,
Claiming equal rights to sunshine
In a man's ennobling name.
There are foam embroidered oceans,
There are little wood clad rills,
There are little inch high saplings,
There are cedars on the hills;
But God, who counts by souls, not stations,
Loves and prospers you and me;
For to Him all vain distinctions
Are as pebbles in the sea.

Toiling hands ALONE are builders
Of a nation's wealth and fame;
Titled luxiness is pensioned,
Fed and fattened by the same.
By the sweat of other's forcheads,
Living only to rejoice,
While the poor man's outraged freedom
Vainly lifteth up his voice.
But truth and justice are eternal,
Born with lovliness and light;
And sunset's wrongs shall never prosper
Where there is a sunny right;
And God, whose world-heard voice is singing
Boundless love to you and me,
Will sink oppression with its titles,
As the pebbles of the sea.

INDIAN WAR IN NEBRASKA.

THE MILITIA ORDERED OUT.

The Nebraskian, of the 1st inst., published in Omaha City, the new seat of Government of Nebraska, is filled with articles of a decidedly warlike character. The Governor of the Territory has called out a portion of the volunteers of the First Brigade, and the whole Territory seems to be excited and alarmed.

The immediate cause of these military movements was the murder of George Demaree and Jackson Porter, and the inflicting of a severe wound upon the person of Mrs. Porter, near Fontenelle, by a band of Sioux Indians. This occurred on the 29th ult., and the Nebraskian gives the following account of it, on the authority of Mrs. Porter:

Demaree and Porter, during the week, had been out on Bell creek, about four miles below Fontenelle, engaged in breaking prairie. The wife of Mr. Porter accompanied her husband to do the cooking for the party. On Saturday evening they set out to go to Fontenelle to spend the Sabbath, but were overtaken by a thunderstorm which came up suddenly that evening, and in consequence of the darkness were obliged to camp when within about one mile of Fontenelle. The party remained in camp until about 10 o'clock on the following morning, when hearing the report of a gun in the vicinity of a small lake near by, and thinking some of their Fontenelle friends were there in quest of game, Demaree and Porter started in that direction. They had proceeded but a short distance when they were met by a party of some fifteen Sioux Indians who at first appeared friendly and shook hands with them; but suddenly one of the Indians approached Demaree and Porter, killing them both instantly.—Mrs. Porter who was close by, rushed to the prostrate body of her husband, when an Indian struck her with a spear, wounding her severely in the hip.—How she escaped with her life, she does not know, but certain it is that she made her way to Fontenelle and gave the alarm. The citizens immediately rallied, but before they could reach the scene of the outrage, the savages had made good their retreat, taking with them the scalp of Demaree, and the tent and camp fixtures of their victims."

Information of this affair was immediately communicated to Gov. Izard, by a committee of citizens appointed for the purpose; and the Govenor forthwith issued orders to Gen. Thayer, of the First Brigade Nebraska Militia, requiring him to raise a volunteer company, of forty effective men, in addition to the First Company of Nebraska Volunteers, to take a position at some eligible point near Fontenelle, in Dodge county, to protect the lives and property of the settlers from further aggression, until relieved by an adequate force of the United States troops.

The citizens of Omaha City, and other points to which the news soon spread, immediately volunteered their services, and a company of men, mounted and in wagons, and equipped as well as circumstances permitted, were soon under way to Fontenelle. It is said not to be the intention to pursue the Indians, but to act on the defensive. Governor Izard has communicated the facts to the Government, and it is expected that an adequate military force will be at once ordered to the Territory.

Gen. Thayer returned to Omaha City, from Fontenelle, on the 2d of August, and reported that the volunteers were stationed at Fontenelle for the present, and were constantly on the alert; that another military post would be immediately established at Tekamah, with the intention of keeping up a constant communication from that place to the mouth of Horn river, thus guarding the entire frontier. The Omaha Indians have also agreed to co-operate with the Nebraskians in defending the frontier—thinking this, doubtless, a very good opportunity to avenge themselves on their ancient enemy—the Sioux.

The same paper gives an account of the disastrous result of a late expedition of the Omaha Indians.—To the number of two hundred warriors, they left their new home at Black Bird Hills on a Buffalo hunt, intending to be gone until the first of September, but, on reaching the head of the Horn river, they met a band of Sioux Indians, by whom two of their men were killed. They then changed their course, striking across to Beaver creek, a tributary of the Loup Fork, about two hundred miles from Omaha City, in a direction litle North of West.—Here they found an abundance of Buffalo, and the hunt had commenced, when, on the second day, they were suddenly surprised by about five hundred Indians belonging to the Laramie Sioux, with some Cheyennes and Arapahoes. A fierce conflict ensued—the Omahas repulsed their assailants, losing in the encounter three killed and two wounded. Logan Fontenelle, the chief of the Omahas, was in advance of his men when the surprise took place—his retreat was cut off, and he was found next day twelve miles from camp, his scalp taken and his body pierced with three bullets and five arrows. The earth around him was stained with blood, and there were other evidences that he had been engaged in a desperate conflict, and sold his life as dearly as possible.

The body of this Indian chief was taken to Bellevue for interment, by his fellow warriors. There, the funeral was attended, not only by his tribe, but by a large number of the citizens of that town and Omaha city. A part of the Episcopal Burial service was used at the grave, while the friends and relatives of the deceased chanted in their wild manner the virtues and the daring deeds of their lamented chief.

"Logan Fontenelle was the head chief of the Omahas. His Indian name was Shun-ga-sca, meaning in English, White Horse. He was a half breed, his father, Lucien Fontenelle, now deceased, having been one of the oldest Indian traders in the upper Missouri country. Logan was born at Bellevue, in this territory, in September, 1823, and was therefore in his thirty-third year at the time of his death. He received a liberal education in the city of St. Louis. Notwithstanding the wild life he led, Logan was a perfect gentleman in his manners, kind and courteous to all, and brave and generous to a fault. It is a common remark with those who knew him best, that Logan knew no fear. Endowed with a more than ordinary intellect, the superiority of his mind was perceptible in all his transactions.—He was for years the successful mediator between his tribe, whose entire affection and respect he possessed, and the white man, whose faithful friend he always was."—[Republican.

Alarming Position of Austria—Danger of Germany joining Russia.

Correspondence of the London Times.

PARIS, Monday, July 23.—There is reason to believe that the attitude of Austria at this moment occasions some anxiety, if not positive disquietude. Ever since the rupture of the Vienna Conferences the Russian agents at Vienna, who are more numerous than is generally supposed, and who, perhaps, are to be found in regions where they are least suspected, labor with redoubled energy to detach Austria completely from her engagements with England and France, For the last fortnight much progress has been made, but particularly within the last six or eight days the result to a certain extent are more and more observable. At St Petersburg, where the Austrian subjects, had been treated with more than hauteur ever since the treaty of the 2d December, a marked change has taken place. At the Court, and in the general society of the Russian capital, the Austrians are treated with the utmost urbanity, and are the objects of the most delicate attention.—Wherever they show themselves they are recived with open arms, and the very name of Austria, that not long ago stank in the nostrils of the Russians of all classes, seems now revered as much as la Sainte Russie itself could be. The order appears to have gone forth, and in truth is obeyed to the letter, that nothing, however great or however trifling, shall be left undone to win that Government over to the interests of the Czar.

Lord John Russell and M. Drouyn de L'Huys are held up by Russia as Martyrs to the truth.—Russia protests solemnly to Austria, who, I fear, lends her too ready an ear, that she is still disposed to forget and forgive; that she still accepts the principle of the four guarantees, and will accept it under any circumstances of success or disaster, under any eventualities, she will repeat, even on the ruins of Sebastopol; and she calls on Austria in the most solemn manner to aid her by her moral influence, and not to abandon her in such a cause. Austria seems not insensible to this appeal, and I believe it has been intimated on her part that, after all, what Russia demands is not too unreasonable. It is again stated that if France and England will accept the principle of the guaranties, Austria pledges herself in the event of Russia refusing, to openly proclaim her adherence to those Powers, and to resist the presence of a single Russian soldier on any part of the Ottoman territory in Europe. What she will do in case of a contrary resolve, she does not I believe, say; but from her tone and manner it may be conjectured.

It is her facility of belief in the assurances of Russia, and her cause, that occasional disposition to look favorably on her cause, that occasion the anxiety I have alluded to. The young Emperor is at heart with us, but his entourage is malignant, and, what is worse is influential. His majesty shows symptoms of the incurable malady under which the King of Prussia has so long labored; he is vacillating and uncertain, and the more weakness is manifest, the more daring are his courtiers. M. de Bruck is with us—so is M. Bach, and perhaps M. de Buol; but the Russian party may become too strong for them, and if the present Austrian Ministry were upset, it requires no very acute intelligence to guess who would be their successors. Austria failing us, we should have all Germany Russianized. I believe the danger is known to the English Government, but I do not think that much importance is attached by them to it, and I am not quite sure that even the prospect of Germany detached from us appals the stout heart of Lord Clarendon. We all know the insidious policy of Russia, and it may be useful to call attention to the object to which it is at this moment addressed.

THE RUSSIAN DEFENCE.

It clearly appeared that on the 18th, as in all the preceding instances, the Rusians succeded after the bombardment in re-establishing the line of defence of Sebastopol in its primitive state, and, though it is not denied that the works were severely damaged by the fire of the besiegers, means have constantly been found to repair the lines, and to construct new batteries, even under a heavy fire. This is one of the principal circumstances which distinguish the siege of Sebastopol from all other sieges in history, and which show the uncommon skill with which the Russian engineers avail themselves of the new system of fortification they have created, while the Russian troops display equal energy in the execution of these plans. Sebastopol may be said to be defended as much by the spade as by the sword, and repeated experience has now shown that in works of this nature the utmost damage caused by a bombardment from siege trains even of unexampled magnitude and power may be repaired within a few hours by an active and resolute garrison!

That, of course is a peculiar advantage which works revetted with masonry never can possess, and the contrast which has lately been drawn by a writer in the Edinburg Review, between the speedy fall of the towers of Bomarsund and the protracted resistance of the earth-works of Silistria and Sebastopol, is a most instructive lesson in the art of defence. To render the bombardment of Sebastopol of any use at all as a preliminary to the assault of the place, it must be followed instantly by the attacking columns, for the interval of a single night has on more than one occasion sufficed to counterbalance the effect of one of these gigantic operations.

How to Preserve Fresh Fruits and Vegetables.

A great deal of mystery has been made of this simple matter, and it is generally supposed that the preservation of fruits and vegitables, in a fresh state, depends upon some process known only to the initiated. The simple agent in the work of preservation is heat. If after the application of heat for a certain time, the article be sealed up hermetically, it will remain unchanged for an almost indefinite period.

DIRECTIONS.—Fill the can or jar with ripe fruit, adding a little sugar—simply enough to render the fruit palatable—and set in a vessel of water, (warm or cold.) Let the water boil, and continue boiling until the fruit is well heated through—say for half an hour. Direction has been given to simply let the water boil, but such direction is defective, as at this time the fruit in the centre of the vessel will be scarcely warmed. Should the vessel be then sealed, fermentation will take place. The heat must thoroughly penetrate the contents of the vessel. As soon as the fruit is sufficiently heated, seal the can so as to exclude the air, and the work is done.

ANOTHER WAY.—Make a syrup of two pounds of sugar for every six pounds of fruit, using a half pint of water for every pound of sugar. Skim the syrup as soon as it boils, and then put in your fruit and let it boil ten minutes. Then fill the cans, or jars, and seal up hot.

Some make a syrup of half a pound of sugar to every pound of fruit—and some use only a quarter of a pound of sugar to a pound of fruit—while some use no sugar at all.

PEACHES.—Pare and cut them up. If thrown into cold water, they will retain their firmness and and coulor. Heat them in the cans or jars, as above—or boil them ten minutes in a syrup. In this way, strawberries, raspberries, cherries, plums, peaches, &c., &c., may be kept for any length of time, in the same condition that they were sealed up, and with their flavor unchanged. For small fruit, it is best to make a syrup without water, and boil the fruit in it for only a few minutes.

FRESH STEWED FRUITS.—Of all kinds—may thus be kept. It will only be necessary to stew the fruit as for the table, adding the amount of sugar required to make it palatable; fill up the vessel with the hot fruit and seal at once. All ripe fruits preserved in this way, will be found as fresh in the winter season, as if just taken from the tree and stewed.

TOMATOES.—Take off the skin; put them in a preserving kettle, or other convenient vessel, and boil them for a quarter of an hour. Fill the cans or jars, and seal up hot.

PEAS AND GREEN CORN.—These require to be boiled in a close vessel for about six hours.

HOW TO KNOW THAT THE CAN OR JAR IS HERMETICALLY SEALED, AND THAT THE CONTENTS WILL KEEP.—If the cans are used, the contents, as soon as they cool, will slightly shrink, leaving a vacuum, and the top and bottom of the can will become concave, from the pressure of the external air. Set the can in a warm place, and if, after the lapse of nine or ten days, the concave condition of the top and bottom remain, all is right. But, if they swell out, fermentation has commenced. Should this take place, open, and heat the contents as at first. In glass jars, the signs of fermentation will be the forming of air bubbles.

Cans, ready prepared are on sale in our cities; and in the country, those which will answer the purpose, can be procured at the tinners, who can also seal them.

Patience is bitter, but the fruit is sweet.

MCLEAN'S VOLCANIC OIL LINIMENT is truly a celebrated remedy, and has done more to alleviate human suffering than any other remedy ever discovered.
One or two applications will relieve the most severe pain, bruise or sprain.
Two bottles will cleanse, purify, and heal the foulest ulcer or sore, and it will heal the most severe burn or scald without a scar.
Every family should have a supply constantly on hand, for use in time of need.
Read the following extract of a letter, which is incontestable proof of its wonderful efficacy:
A BLIND MAN RESTORED TO SIGHT.
J. H. MCLEAN—Dear Sir: * * * I have been suffering for four years with rheumatic sore eyes, being at times altogether blind. I procured the advice of several physicians, but none of them could do me any good. By the advice of a friend I applied your "Volcanic Oil Liniment," according to the directions around the bottle, and it has cured me permanently. I have used it since for bruises, pains, &c., and it has always given immediate relief. I live on the main road near Farmington.
Yours, respectfully, JOHN H. ALLERD,
Jefferson county, Mo.
For horses it is far superior to any other remedy for curing lameness, bruises, cuts, old sores, swellings, &c.
We say, then, to all who may be suffering from external diseases, call at once and get a supply. Thousands of bottles are sold (and used) daily, and we have never heard of a case where it has failed in giving relief when properly applied.
☞ For sale by J. H. MCLEAN, the proprietor, corner Third and Pine streets, St. Louis, and by all respectable dealers in Medicines everywhere

A Certain Remedy for all Diseases of
MAN OR ANIMALS,
Requiring an External Application.
Warranted in every Case for which it is Recommended!
THE MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT!
Unlike all other popular medicines, it is used by many prominent members of the faculty, and many of the public Hospitals. Their prejudices have yielded to indisputable and incontrovertible demonstrations of cures performed where their remedies had failed.
It has cured more cases of
RHEUMATISM
than any other medicine ever used. Its efficacy in this terrible disease is acknowledged by all who have used it. It not only cures the complaint, but appears to give a vigor and elasticity to the limbs, before unknown, thus performing a double office.
A FEW TESTIMONIALS.
PATH FINDER OFFICE, May 11, 1854.
G. W. WESTBROOK:—
Please send me by the bearer three large bottles of your Mexican Mustang Liniment, as I wish to take it up to my place in Vermont, not thinking it advisable to do without it. I have used it in my family and on my horses, and have found it invaluable. Yours,
J. T. WHITNEY.
ELIZABETHTOWN, TENN., May 25, 1855.
MR. G. W. WESTBROOK:—
Dear Sir—It affords me much pleasure in saying to you that the Mexican Mustang Liniment outsells any medicine that I have ever had for sale, and comes nearer doing what it promises to do. Send me another supply, as I am nearly out. Yours respectfully,
JOHN SINGLETRAY, P. M.
PHILADELPHIA, June 11, 1854.
MR. G. W. WESTBROOK:
Sir—My son was afflicted with a swelling upon the knee joint, which confined him to the house. I had a doctor attending him for some time, but he did not do him any good. One of my neighbors told me to use the Mustang Liniment. I asked the doctor if I could do so, and he told me he thought I could not do better.
I procured one bottle, and in about a week he was able to go out.
I can safely recommend it to the afflicted.
Respectfully yours,
MRS. BENNETT.
W. S. Ladd & Co., of Portland, Oregon, writes that there is an immense demand for the Mexican Mustang Liniment in that country, and orders forty gross to be shipped by Golden Gate, that sails in a few days from New York.
Park & White of San Francisco, California, order 100 gross, to be forwarded by first clipper for that port.
PORT AU PRINCE, HAYTI, Jan. 16th, 1854.
I had the pleasure to receive invoice and boxes Mexican Mustang Liniment per Croton, and have no doubt it will have a brisk sale on the island.
GEORGE RACKSTER.
To give health, strength and elacity to the limbs, there is nothing can equal in effect, the
MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT.
FARMERS AND LIVERY STABLE KEEPERS
have need it for the following diseases with extraordinary success, certifying invariably to the efficacy of the Liniment, and the truthfulness of our assertions in its behalf:
Spavin, Splint, Ring-bone, Fistula, Wind Galls, Big Head, Bruises, Strains, String-halt, Scratches, Cracked Heels, Sweeny, Saddle, Collar, or Harness Galls, Hard Lumps or Tumor, Film, or other diseases of the Eye, Poll-Evil, &c.
The small sizes retail for 25 cents per bottle;
The medium size retail for 50 cents per bottle;
The large sizes retail for one dollar per bottle.
The medium holds three times as much as the small;
The Large holds nearly three times as much as the medium,
Therefore the large bottles are the cheapest.

DISCOURSE

Delivered by J. H. Hart, in the Fourth Street Chapel, St. Louis, Sunday Afternoon, August 12th, 1855.

[REPORTED BY S. J. LEES.]

Brethren and Sisters—It is with peculiar feelings that I arise to address you on this occasion. Our beloved brethren, Elders Snow and Andrus have now taken their departure, and it devolves upon us now to carry on the work they have commenced, to execute the measures they have devised. I have listened with considerable pleasure to the remarks of brother Cantwell this afternoon, they will commend themselves to your understanding. I feel happy in having such men around me as I now behold. Men, whose whole hearts are devoted to the interest of this work; and with the confidence and counsel of such men, under the inspiration and guidance of the holy spirit, I do not fear but we shall be enabled to do all things that God may require at our hands. I desire that we may live under the power and influence of the holy spirit, that we may be qualified for all our duties, that the Presidents of quorums, Bishops of wards, and heads of districts may act wisely in all their movements, and have power to bless and save the people committed to their charge; that by keeping the commandments of God, and working righteousness among this people, we may increase in wisdom, faith and power, that when our brethren shall return from Zion, we may be enabled to look them in the face, feeling conscious that we have done our duty. I feel that it is our privilege so to live, that when they return we may have full confidence in ourselves and our labors, and have their smiles and approbation, and be consequently blessed and favored of the Lord. I have always been satisfied since I have known anything of Mormonism, if I had the confidence and good feelings of those who were placed over me, when I so conduct myself as to gain their confidence and approbation. I do not want a stronger evidence of the favor and approbation of heaven. For the spirit that dwells in them, dwells in the bosom of the Almighty, and if we act so as to be approved by them, we are certainly approved of by our Father who is in heaven.

In taking hold of the affairs of this stake of Zion, I do not feel that extreme difficulty, I should have felt some twelve months ago. The position of the church is generally improved since that time. We have now become awakened as it were, from a long sleep, and aroused to a sense of our duty and privileges; being taught the more perfect order of heaven, and the principles of truth and salvation, by which we may obtain, if faithful to the end, the powers of eternal life. A foundation has been laid, an order and organization established by our brethren, the perfect pattern of which has been revealed from heaven. It was revealed to the ancients and established in the days of Enoch, Moses, Nephi and Moroni, and has been restored to the Prophets in these last days. We have an organization and Priesthood established amongst us that can reach any case, and settle any difficulty no matter how difficult. We have among us our Bishops, who have the whole city under their supervision, with their staff around them, who should be men full of faith and the Holy Ghost, who have the Presidents of sections and visitors of districts, who should know the feelings and spirit of every man and woman who acknowledge the name of Jesus Christ, and profess to be Saints; and if our sections, districts, wards and quorums are not pure and perfect as they ought to be, let us invoke the spirit of the Almighty to rest upon us, that the mantle of brother Andrus and the spirit of President Erastus, and Erastus' God may fall upon us, that we may be enabled so to govern and control under the spirit of revelation; that the atmosphere may become so hot, that those hypocrites who still linger among us may be burned out, and leave behind them neither root nor branch of the accursed tree. By faithfulness we shall have power in our midst to make the atmosphere so hot that the canting hypocrite and ungodly will not be able to endure our presence, or stand among us.

I want to see the face of every Saint brilliant with the spirit of righteousness, which maketh glad the heart of man, and causeth his face to shine. It is the privilege of those who hold the Priesthood of God, who associate with this people from day to day, to see and know whether those professing to be Saints have the spirit of God, or no; whether they have any interest in the kingdom of God, or no; whether they practise hypocricy or no; for those who keep the commandments of God, and attend to their duties faithfully as Saints of God, will have the spirit of joy in their hearts; and righteousness will shine forth from their countenances, and they will rejoice and be glad all the day long; and those who see them will know assuredly that God is with them. When we are gloomy, sad and melancholy, when we cannot meet with pleasure in the congregations of the Saints, when we are reluctant to engage in our family duties, or unwilling to visit our sections, or attend our quorums, or anything we are called upon to do for the interest of the kingdom of God, be assured that something is wrong in our hearts.—We are not magnifying our calling, and we are not approved of by the Almighty; but are in danger of falling like Lucifer, and losing our souls; whether we be Bishops, high Priests, Teachers or members. There is no guarantee that the high Priests or Bishops shall be the best men, and shall never fall, although such might be desirable; their very position renders their standing the more precarious. They are placed in the position they occupy, that they may be tried and proven, and if they walk not uprightly, and magnify their Priesthood, it will fall from them and be given unto others, and they will be left powerless, and more naked and miserable than before they received it. The same may be said of the Elders, Priests, Teachers and Deacons, and even the members of this church. If persons come into the church and pursue that which is evil and corrupt, and work unrighteousness among this people, they cannot stand. They cannot hold in their possession the holy spirit, for it will not dwell in unholy tabernacles, but they will be left a prey to unclean spirits, and those more wicked than have before possessed them, will take possession of them; and the last state of such persons will be worse than the first.

It is for this that we are baptised for the remission of sins, and have hands laid upon our heads. It is for this that we are commanded to live by every word that proceedeth from the mouth of God. It is, that our bodies may be pure and fit recepticles for the holy spirit of God. This should be the first consideration of my brethren and sisters, with the old, the young, and the middle aged, no matter what position we may occupy, let us see that our bodies are fit for the holy spirit to dwell in, without which we shall be left to ourselves to work out our wretchedness and misery, and in the end be damned for our hypocricy. Then let us examine our actions and our motives, and be sure that they are pure and honest before the Lord. If they are so, we shall be blessed of Him, and all things will work together for our good.

I am not extensively acquainted with the Saints in this city, but I expect soon to become more so, as I shall now necessarily take more interest in this matter, and shall desire to learn from the Bishops from time to time, of the standing and position of the Saints in their respective wards, and shall feel myself interested in the standing and spirit of every man and woman who have a name among us. I want to see the Bishops of the several wards full of the Holy Ghost, that they may be active and faithful in attending to all those cases reported to them by the visitors; and if the Saints do not attend to their duties and keep the commandments of God, but are sleeping away their time or doing that which is worse, I want the Bishops to examine such cases, and act upon them as they may require, for this is not the time for drowsy ones to be in our midst, it is not the time for us to endulge in iniquity and sin; all these things must be rooted out. Such are the feelings of our brethren in the vallies of the mountains, and such are the feelings of our brethren who have presided over us, such are my feelings, and the feelings of all good men who love righteousness and hate iniquity. It would be better for your wards and districts, and it would be better for the church at large, if you had but half the number who were faithful and true and devoted to the interest of the kingdom of God, than to have double the number if they live not up to the light of the gospel. You would feel better in your counsels and in your quorums, and when you meet to worship God; turn out the drones, and the active bees will soon take their place, and all will be life and animation. The Lord has no respect to numbers, but He has respect to the goodness of heart, and righteousness of soul, and it is that we should have respect to also, and in all things judge a righteous judgment.

I would advise the brethren to preach and teach the first principles of the gospel, and to make the duties of the Saints to be their constant theme, for there are some among us who once received and obeyed the first principles of the gospel, who are now worse than when they commenced, and need to repent and do their first works, that they may receive the gift of the Holy Ghost to purify their hearts, that their motives may be pure and holy, and that their tabernacles may be clensed from all unrighteousness. If the Saints are thus aroused and realize this spirit, we shall not see that sickly death like spirit, that marks a man or woman when they have not done the will of God, instead of seeing this spirit depicted on their countenances, distorting their features, we shall see their faces shine with gladness, joy and intelligence, and their tongues will speak forth the good things of the kingdom of God, which they would be ever ready to communicate to those around, they would be full of blessings for all who associate with them. We have not yet done with the first principles of the gospel of Christ; we cannot yet dispense with them. Faith, the very first principle we shall need throughout the whole journey of life; for without faith it is impossible to please God. We must put our trust in the Lord, and rely upon his promises, for the revelations of his will from day to day, and if we put our confidence in the Almighty, and are guided by his spirit we shall never be confounded, worlds without end.

We have an object to live for brethren, that is worthy of life, it is not merely to eat, drink, speculate and labor; which are but means to accomplish the object of our creation, but it is that we may work out our salvation, obtain eternal life and be endowed with a celestial glory.

When we first obeyed the gospel, we received the holy spirit, and we rejoiced in the truth and blessings we then received; our hearts were then filled with strong desires to go to Zion, that we might help to rear a temple unto the Lord, that we might behold His glory, and obtain intelligence from the lips of his servants, we longed for the day when we might be permitted to enter into holy places and receive blessings and privileges, and be sealed up by the holy Priesthood unto eternal life. Are these our feelings now, brethren? Does the same spirit actuate our desires now? If so, let us cherish those feelings and that spirit; and let us look forward wih joy to the day when Zion shall be redeemed, when the church of Jesus Christ shall be no more persecuted and oppressed, but when God will fight for his people, and save them with His mighty hand and out stretched arm. We have seen already from time to time, the wonder working hand of the Almighty displayed in over-ruling and controling passing scenes and events for the blessing and salvation of the Saints in these last days; and we are fully satisfied that when his arm is outstretched for our deliverance from the gentile yoke, it will be with a power that will cause the nations to tremble. The power that was wielded and exercised for the blessing of ancient Israel, caused the walls of a mighty city to tremble and crumble to the ground—that power devided the waters of the Red Sea, so that Israel walked through dry shod, to the promised land—that power that was thus manifested in former ages is still working in the midst of this people, and has been obviously manifested in the history of the Latter-day Saints, from the time the angels first spoke with Joseph, unto this day; and the time is coming when it will be as visibly manifested to the whole world, as it has been in former ages, when the mighty works of the Almighty, and His blessings and deliverance to this people will be universally known and proclaimed upon the house tops, to the praise and glory of God. Where, then, will those persons be, who have forsaken the Lord, and deserted his cause for fear of persecution, poverty and death? It will be found that those who sought to save their lives will lose them; and where will those be who have made a covenant with the Lord to keep His commandments, but have neglected their duties, withheld their means, violated the laws of God and broken their covenants? They will be despised of the Lord and His angels, and will become outcasts, and be classed with dogs, whoremongers and murderers; there are such even numbered with us, persons who will present themselves among us, and wish to be acknowledged Saints of God. I want the Bishops to pay particular attention to such characters, and administer to them in righteousness. Let us invoke the spirit of the Almighty to rest upon us that we may cause hypocrites to fear and tremble, that the fire of the Lord may be with us in our administrations, and burn them out. Catch the heavenly fire, ye ministers of righteousness, and carry it into your counsels, if it be not already there, and the wicked and ungodly will tremble before you, and hide their heads in shame.

The church of Jesus Christ is not the place for hypocrites, they cannot live comfortably with us; It would be much better for such characters to clear out at once. Among this class are those who say, I will not regard those Bishops, but pursue my own course; I can straighten up when I get to Zion.—The time is coming when those who procrastinate their duties, speak lightly of holy things and speak evil of dignities, shall be held in dirision, and be mocked when their fear cometh, and if I understand anything of the signs of the times, it is near at hand and will come upon them like a whirlwind.

I do not wish to speak more particularly upon this subject at the present time. Let the brethren in the various sections, districts, wards and councils attend to these things, those who are charged with the important office of visiting the Saints, should go among them in the spirit of prayer, and get a spirit of boldness; do not feel afraid of those whom you visit. I like a brother to come along and boldly look a man in the face, and ask him if he is serving God by keeping his commandments, as brother Cameron did me the other day. The Lord will give his spirit to those who walk righteously before Him, and strive to know the true position and standing of the Saints; the faithful teacher is entitled to the spirit of discernment, by which he may penetrate the inmost soul, and know the thoughts and intents of the heart. When you visit in your several districts, do not be afraid of questioning lest you should discover some iniquity and corruption; if you find such existing where you visit, lay hold upon and turn it out, that your Bishops may see, examine and deal with it according to the laws of God.

We occupy a very important and responsible position as members of this stake of Zion; strange reports have gone forth, formerly, respecting the Saints in St. Louis, but we have somewhat redeemed our character; Presidents Snow and Andrus, have told us that we are a little better than when they found us, which speaks but little some might think, for the discovery, but never mind brethren let us still go on improving; it is the best that we can do in redeeming the past. We have passed honorably through our responsibilities during the last emigration season, in which we have gained some experience, and learned some principles that will enable us peradventure to acquit ourselves more faithfully when next called upon to act in similar scenes, we are now initiated into more advanced principles of government, by which we may prepare ourselves for future usefulness in the kingdom of God.

I love to contemplate the principles of this work, its present position, and that position it is destined to occupy in the future. It is undoubtedly a privilege to live in so important an age, how often have we regretted that we did not live in the days of the old Prophets and Apostles, and in the days of Jesus to have received the words of life from their lips; but we have an equal privilege afforded us, if not greater, for we live in the dispensation of the fulness of times, in which God has established His kingdom, never more to be thrown down, but on the contrary will increase and grow until its branches extend over the whole earth.

We have had Apostles among us, we have had opportunities of watching their course, and judging of their actions and movements, and we know they are men full of faith and the Holy Ghost, wholly devoted to the cause and kingdom of God. No other men can be found on the earth who have sacrificed and endured so much as they have for this cause, and for what is it they have suffered and labored? Is it for their own aggrandizement? No, it is that the will of God may be done on the earth as it is done in heaven. It is, that the church and kingdom of God may be established never more to be thrown down. It is, that the powers of darkness may be driven from the earth, that satan may be bound for a thousand years, that the Saints may rest in peace and safety, and none dare to make them afraid. It is for this they labor, toil and suffer, and for this let us labor and suffer too, if need be, let us never shrink from duty, but cheerfully assume every obligation devolving upon us, and sustain those who are placed to counsel us, and we shall be ourselves sustained by the words of eternal life, that we may stand and not fall.

When we see the course of hundreds who have held a prominent position in the church and have fallen away, and now mingle with the sons of darkness. It should cause us to tremble lest we also should fall away. if we think we stand, we should be thankful to God for our position, and appreciate and magnify it, and be sure that our every step and movement tends to the working out of our salvation, and to the glory of God, we have no time to lose, time is fleeting, and rushes on with hurried wings, and the fullest exercise of all our faculties is required, to keep pace with the spirit of the times.

Our present position we have probably contemplated for thousands of ages before we took up our abode upon this planet, whilst we yet dwelt in the heavens in the presence of our Father; we anticipated the time when we should dwell upon the earth and engage in the very work with which we now stand connected. We contemplated the time when the angel should bring the everlasting gospel, when Jesus should organize His kingdom on the earth, when we should come forth to take upon us bodies of flesh and bones, and work out our salvation in our second estate. We have spent many years of our lives in ignorance, following the traditions of our fathers, living without a knowledge of God or His kingdom, and though we searched for truth, we could not find it until the time came for the message of life and truth to be revealed from the heavens, and when the beautious things of the kingdom of God first presented themselves to our minds we exclaimed is it possible that these things can be realized? Is it possible that we can have the light of revelation, and enjoy the blessings of the Holy Ghost as formerly? Is it possible that our sick can be healed by the prayer of faith? You can all bear testimony of these things now. Yes, brethren, there is power in the ordinances of the Lord's house when we walk humbly and faithfully before him, then the Holy Spirit fills our hearts, and we can call upon our brethren with cheerfulness and confidence to lay their hands upon our heads, and those of our family, and we are healed, we have then no need to run about and hunt up a Doctor in whom to put our hope and entire confidence. No, but we can by our faith in God, by the power of the holy Priesthood obtain blessing and salvation from sickness and disease, when Doctor's medicines could never reach our case. Do you not know that these things are true, and that you have no need to seek after wizards that "mutter and peep" or spirit rappers, for their incantations and revelation? There are those who have administered holy ordinances before the Lord, and have seen His power manifested through the laying on of hands, and the sick healed through their own administrations. By the time they have crossed the ocean they lose confidence in the Lord and His servants; they become prostrate by sickness, they forget the Lord and the ordinances of His house, and call upon lawless spirits, or their master the devil, rather than call upon the Lord. But not so with those who retain the Holy Spirit in their hearts, they have an assurance in the promises of God, that cannot be taken away from them, their hearts are comforted under trials and afflictions, their bodies are strengthened and they are full of health and vigor, and their souls magnify the Lord. Let the Saints keep the word of wisdom, and the commandments of God, and they shall be strengthened both in body and spirit, for the Lord says, "they shall have health to their navel and marrow to their bones, the wisdom of heaven shall be unfolded to them, and when the destroying angel goes through he shall pass by them as he did the children of Israel." If a man presume to partake of these things let him be assured that he has faith in his bosom and interest with the Almighty to partake of them and live. If he has not the confidence of his brethren and his God, let him not suppose that he will have sufficient influence with the angel of death to avert the threatening stroke.

I feel it good to talk of the principles of righteousness, and to be engaged in teaching the things revealed from heaven, those things which if obeyed and cherished in our hearts, will cause us to grow strong and mighty in word and deed, which will create such an influence around us that hypocrites and apostates will not like to come near us, an influence that will oppress the feelings of those who profess but live not up to their duties and covenants as Saints of God, such persons will avoid us and seek the company of those who know not God, and obey not the gospel, for our very presence will crimson their face with shame, and our words will sting them like an adder. When you, visiting officers, meet with individuals in your visits, who repulse you in your approaches to them, if you question them so closely that they feel uneasy and wish you gone, and complain that you question them too closely, and interfere too much in their intentions and movements, you may know something is not exactly right with them, and it is your duty in that case to ascertain what it is, and use your influence to have the cause removed, and endeavor to infuse the influence of the spirit of God into their bosoms, that they may rejoice with you in the blessings of heaven; and I will say to those who are visited, and may have endulged in those feelings, be assured that those who visit you and interrogate you so rigidly concerning your faith and feelings, are men who are seeking your good, they have an interest in your welfare, they wish to bless, comfort and strengthen you; and know assuredly that whilst you have in your bosoms, any spirit that is repulsive towards those who are appointed to instruct and teach you the course of duty, you cannot realize the blessings of the spirit of God, such as they wish to communicate unto you. Let these things have due weight and influence in your minds, ponder over them, and pray over them; treasure them up in your hearts, read the scriptures of ancient and modern Prophets, and observe the dealings of God with his people, and from them learn wisdom.

There are some persons in this city who have been trying their hardest, to frame some reasonable excuses for backing out of the kingdom of God, but they find it a difficult matter, and they cannot do it; some of them have commenced re-reading the scriptures, the Book of Mormon, &c., and they finally discover that they have been governed by the same apostate spirit that many were whose history is recorded in the scriptures; and they feel grieved at their own foolish course, and repenting of their sins, they strive by re-baptism and the laying on of hands, to regain the spirit of God; when they are ready to shout hosannah, to God and the Lamb, for their deliverance from the spirit of apostacy, and the fell grasp of the distroyer.

When those whom the Lord has any respect for, get too much exalted in their feelings, or fail in performing their duties, He will in some way afflict or chastise them, and thus lead them to a sense of their duties, and to their allegience unto Him.—"Whom the Lord loveth, He chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom He receiveth." I recollect going through the ordeal myself, and I felt that the kind and Fatherly hand of the Lord, was over me for good, and I could therefore glorify his name. "It is good for me that I was afflicted," said one of the old Prophets, "before I was afflicted, I went astray, but now I have kept thy law." If you are chastened of the Lord, do not murmur and complain, but bear it patiently, and try to learn obedience by the things you suffer. The Lord will permit the enemy to afflict His children; He will bring the rich and haughty low, and humble them before their brethren, in order to bless and save them in His kingdom and glory; and what shall it profit a man, if he gain the whole world, and lose his own soul. Our actions will in all things meet with a corresponding reward, whether they be good or evil. A man who is faithful and liberal in attending to the things of God, shall never be the poorer, the Lord will open up his way before him, and if he contribute of his means to clothe the naked, feed the hungry and to roll forward the kingdom of God, he shall not lack means in due time of the Lord, to go up to Zion, and to obtain all he needs in this world, and in the world to come, life everlasting. The liberal man, deviseth liberal things, and by his liberality shall he stand.

May the spirit of God light up our souls, that we may not walk in darkness, but dwell in light as God is in the light. Amen.

Emigrants, Missionaries, and all persons wishing to carry or send money to any part of Utah, are hereby notified that we have made the necessary arrangements, and are prepared to furnish SIGHT DRAFTS on Gov. B. Young, or on any of the principal Mercantile houses in Salt Lake City. Bring or send your money to the Luminary Office, and drafts for the same amount will be returned to you, or forwarded by succeeding mail to any person in Utah, as you may direct. Duplicates will be furnished, whenever required, so that in case of failure of mails, no loss will be sustained, and you will avoid the risk of transporting specie, besides the Church wish to use it here.

ST. LOUIS, 1855. ERASTUS SNOW.

The Happy Effects of Polygamy in Utah, Compared with the Pernicious Institutions of Pseudo Christians.

IT is pretty generally admitted, that the order, industry, perseverance and success which distinguish the Deseretians, are beyond anything of which the world can elsewhere furnish an example. They have so far demonstrated the excellent working of their peculiar theories, that it is acknowledged by outsiders that "a community, so little in want of courts lawyers, jails, penitentiaries, hospitals and alms houses, does not exist on the face of the earth." We are at a loss to know what stronger evidence is needed to establish the claims of Mormonism as the best system of social religious and political government on the earth. We may safely challenge the world to furnish evidence of another people so peaceful, orderly, industrious, intelligent, and so well prepared to establish a well ordered State—a model Government. If a tree is to be known by its fruits as moralists universally affirm; then we are bound to admit that Mormonism is the finest tree that was ever planted, its branches and foliage the most luxuriant and beautiful ever beheld; and its fruits the most luscious and exquisite, ever tasted by mortals. In proof of this conclusion, we have the following evidence, many ten thousands having taken refuge in its branches, and partaken of its luscious fruits, so admire and prize the noble tree, that bear them, that they would sooner sacrifice ten thousand lives in rooting up and destroying those "plants and trees, the Father hath not planted" than see this tree in any way crushed or injured; and numerous instances are on record wherein its admirers have forsaken home, country, friends and sacrificed their houses, lands and lives, in order to transplant it to some spot where it could grow and thrive unmolested; where the rotten roots, and foul branches of those plants and trees, peculiar to modern Babel could have no influence or power to stop its growth, or destroy its fruits. The Morning Herald of last week, in speaking on this subject says:

> The Mormons, at this time, afford a striking proof of what can be accomplished by a living faith. Accepting as true, what the world at large believes to be false, they have, armed with that truth, done and endured more than any other body of men, known to the history of the world, within the last thirty years. They have peopled solitudes, and made them vocal with the hum of peaceful industry. But no sooner has one of their chosen spots begun to smile under the hand of labor and art, than they have been driven from it with contempt and outrage. Finding that, among the haunts of civilization, there was no permanent resting-place for the soles of their feet, they finally fled to the desert, where they might have some hope that none would come to "molest or make them afraid." This desert, forbidding as it was, they are converting into a garden. There they have organized a community—such as it is quite safe to say, the world has not witnessed since the days of the Patriarchs.

If these things be true, and we are satisfied that it is impossible to prove them false, then it is evident that Mormonism is the most authentic, ancient and extraordinary system the world can furnish, and if it be admitted that the Patriarchal system was ordained and established of God, it must certainly be admitted that Mormonism was ordained and established by the same authority, in which case it will be useless to fight and contend against it. That which was consistant, truthful and pleasing unto God, in the Patriarchal age, must be consistant, truthful and pleasing unto Him now. If it was pleasing unto the Lord that Abraham, Jacob, Moses, David, Gidian, and a host of others should have more than one wife, it would be pleasing unto Him for Joseph, Brigham, Heber, Jedediah, Erastus, Franklin and other good men, to have more than one also if so directed. Why should not the Patriarchs of this age be as eligible for two or more wives, as the Patriarchs of former ages? If all things are to be restored in the last days, as the old Prophets abundantly declare, why should not the doctrine of polygamy be incorporated among the things restored? That polygamy is a scriptural doctrine none can deny—that it was believed in, and practiced by men after God's own heart, must be acknowledged, then what reason have men, professing to believe the scriptures, for repudiating so manifestly pure and scriptural a doctrine? What reason can be assigned for the inconsistant conduct of christian Governments in tenaciously holding the unsound, unscriptural and unconstitutional principles of monogamy, when they know that thousands and millions of females in their respective Governments are prostituted and debased beneath the meanest creatures that tread the earth, when it is self-evident that the principles of Government, pertaining to the marriage relation revealed to Abraham, Moses and Joseph, would effectually check this baneful curse, and entirely remove the accursed system of seduction and prostitution, that prevail so extensively among them. Where is the consistency in punishing a bigamist as a criminal, and permitting the vile seducer, and depraved whoremonger, to go at large, assume the balance of justice, and perchance legislate for the nation? Will some of our editorial friends, or devines, or moralists, inform us upon what principles of logic to explain these inconsistancies? We would like to see the principles and doctrines of the one wife system, demonstrated by scriptural evidence, or, by reason and common sense arguments, for in the absence of such evidence, we are forced to the conclusion from the practical working and effects of the system, that it is subversive of the order of heaven, and the first great commandment for man to be fruitful, and multiply and replenish the earth; it entails misery, disease, infamy and death upon millions of the fair creation of God, and permits their ravishers and murderers to control armies, and govern kingdoms, and to frame such laws as best subserve their vitiated practices and propensities.

A gentleman of this city, wrote us a lengthy epistle, a few weeks since, which resolved itself into the question of polygamy. He says, after a perusal of our Doctrines and Covenants, and other publications, "they furnish incontestible evidence, that the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, is the most perfect model of a christian church, that the world has ever beheld, since the days of the Apostles of our Lord Jesus Christ," and he is so far satisfied with the order, faith and doctrines of the church, that he would have no hesitation as regards his duty, were it not for one reason—the plurality of wives. He cannot reconcile that institution with the statement in the book of Doctrine and Covenants, that a man shall have one wife, and a woman but one husband, and that fornication and adultery are an abomination in the sight of God.

We of course, endorse the reverend gentleman's opinion, concerning the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and believe with him that it is the most perfect model of a christian church. And we believe, moreover, what the Doctrine and Covenants says, that "a man should have one wife," and as many more as the Lord shall please to give him; and that "a woman should have but one husband," for it would be subversive of the laws of nature, as well as the laws of God; and as for fornication and adultery, no people abominate it more than the Latter-day Saints, and no people have so little to complain of as they, for their laws would punish the offenders with death, and if the perpetrators escape, it is only to meet a death more damning. Our correspondent has evidently misunderstood the spirit of the doctrine. He would not surely tell us that polygamy and adultery were identical! no properly balanced mind, would come to so irrational a conclusion. No, we believe he has too much regard for the scriptures, and reverence for God, to think so lightly, and irreverently of so important and sacred an institution as that of polygamy. The best and wisest men that ever lived upon the earth, believed in, and practiced it. The most intimate friends of God, and the greatest benefactors of man, have descended from a polygamic ancestry. If we trace the genealogy of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, we shall discover in Him the polygamic seed, in which all the nations of the earth shall be blessed. With such a multitude of scriptural facts, demonstrative of the truth and purity of this doctrine; with such abundant evidence furnished by the practical working, and effects of monogamy, among the christian nations, and moreover, with the demonsurative evidence of the orderly, peaceful and happy effects of the "peculiar institution" in the mountain territory, one must be blind and ignorant indeed, who cannot discover the super-excellence and transcendent advantages, and blessings of the laws and institutions of heaven, manifested in the history of the old Patriarchs and Saints, compared with the sickly, corrupt, loathsome, putrid and suicidal effects of monogamy, as manifested in brothel houses, palaces and dens of shame, that may be found in all nations, States and territories, where christian soldiers, and christian ministers have gained a foothold, seduction adultery and villainy have ever followed their steps, the world over. But thank heaven, there is one spot on the earth, where virtue is respected and honored, where the damning villainy of the seducer, will not go unpunished.

In view of all these facts, it is a matter of astonishment to see the opposition manifested towards the "peculiar institution" of the Mormons. And shrewd and intelligent men too, who see and acknowledge the peaceful effects, and happy results of those laws, wisely adopted by the people of Utah; even they will sometimes join in the general clamor against Mormonism, because of this doctrine. The Herald of last week, says: "were it not for the 'peculiar institution' which prevails among them, it would be impossible to deny them the merit of being, perhaps, the most virtuous and happy community, existing at the present day." We give it as our unqualified opinion, that the Deseretians are the most honorable, virtuous and happy people under heaven. The Herald believes so too, we opine, although he does not like to say so ouvertement; the able writer of those articles upon the aristocracy of St. Louis, and those high life Poems of the Byronic order, that have caused so much excitement lately, is not ignorant of human nature, and natures laws, and is pretty well posted up in regard to the excellence and superiority of Mormonism over every other system, hence the following eulogium: "so peacefully inclined are the population, (of Utah,) such practical friends of order are they—so regardful are they of the rights of property, that a crime or offence, such as the laws denounce, is of the rarest occurrence among them. Breaches of the peace, assaults, riots, homicides, thefts, forgeries and swindling, are, it may be said with almost literal truth, unknown among them. The picture which they present, of order, peace and prosperity, is perfectly unparalleled." Now, we think that the above facts furnish pretty strong evidence in favor of polygamy; and if it be a proper criterion to judge a tree by its fruits, or, a fountain by its waters, it must be pronounced by every honest judge, a fine, healthy, good and fruitful tree; or, as a broad, deep, pure and living fountain. "But, wait a time, and then you'll see the real effects of the system," says one. "It is only thirteen years since the doctrines were first taught," says another. "Then they were a lot of rogues, swindlers, horse-thieves and assassins," says a third. Now if polygamy has wrought such marvelous changes, (as implied by these assertions,) as must be seen by pictures drawn of them, now and then, it exceeds all the miracles ever performed since the world was framed. When God made the earth out of nothing, as pseudo Philosophers would persuade us. If the Mormons were such notorious rogues, swindlers, thieves, adulterers and assassins, when in Nauvoo, as represented by the speeches of mobocrats, and the fire brands of editors, at that time; and have now become the most orderly, peaceful, industrious, thrifty and virtuous people on the earth as we unequivocally maintain, and as thousands of witnesses positively affirm; then it is evident that the working of the polygamic system is admirable, and its effects good, and were it not that the age of miracles had ceased, it would be called miraculous; but inasmuch as all things are now submitted to reason, and judged by the principles of logic and common sense, we are compelled to acknowledge that Mormonism has effected more wondrous changes, and accomplished more prodigious and beneficial results in the short space of twelve years, aided by polygamy, than has ever been achieved by christianity, aided by celebacy and monogamy, during the many hundred years of its dishonorable existence, and more than it would ever effect, should it continue as long as the world stands.

We do not wish to depreciate the good feelings and blessings of the Monogomist; we believe with him that it is a good thing to have a good wife, but we believe moreover that it is as good again to have two, and if God would not have refused the Prophet David more wives had he asked for them, as the Bible informs us, we can conceive no good reasons why he should not grant similar privileges to his servants in these last days. And if Gov. Young has as many wives as we hear accredited to him sometimes, and each addition is additional good, it must be admitted that he possesses more goodness than any man of the age, and we think no man can prove that Jacob was not as good as the Pope, although the former had four wives and the latter may have none; nor can we consider Abraham more criminal, and adulterous than our most immaculate Nobles, Presidents, and Princes. Neither could we ever discover any reason why Governor Young should not be as praiseworthy and honorable as Governor Moses, particularly as Moses once killed a man, and hid him in the sand, and thus disgraced himself among the Egyptians as a murderer, and it is well known that Brigham always conducted himself respectably, and was never known to kill an Egyptian nor a Gentile; although many have tried to kill him. As it regards Polygamy they stand upon pretty even ground, although we must admit, if Polygamy be a sin, that Moses is the oldest sinner of the two, and if he should justify the practice by the revelations of the Almighty to the old Patriarchs and himself, why should not Joseph Smith, and Brigham Young be justified upon similar grounds. If any of our kind friends will answer satisfactorily the above, many will doubtless be converted, and repudiate Polygamy. And then the doubtful existence of Monogomy may still be prolonged, and Fourierism, Free loveism, and woman's assumed rights, "to choose whoever she will to perform the part of a husband for the time, and to change that person as often as she pleases," may be realized, when we may soon look for the Millennium.

Correspondence.

ANY NEWS from the Emigration upon the Plains, will be interesting to our readers; we therefore present the following items from Elder Milo Andrus:

Thirty miles from MORMON GROVE, Aug. 6, '55.

DEAR BROTH. HART: After the toil of the day, I take a leisure moment to write you a few lines, to let you know our whereabouts, and progress. In the first place, I will say that we started from the Grove on the 3rd, and on the 4th we overtook brother Allred's company on Big Grasshopper. We are both now encamped on Walnut, with barely team enough to roll us on agreeably.

I have in my company, the tail end of the Emigration, and a scanty number of experienced men, which causes the burthen of the camp to rest upon me, with an almost insupportable weight. My health is worn down with fatigue, but still, my spirit is determined to take the camp intrusted to my care, safely to the home of the saints.—We have health in our midst—our progress has bettered itself every day, which causes me to feel grateful to our heavenly Father, and my soul to rejoice in that paternal aid, which is ever ready to render assistance, and support us in time of need.

The season is late to start to the mountains, but we trust in the arm of Jehovah to direct our movements, and we then have nothing to fear.

Remember me kindly to my brethren and sisters in St. Louis; ask them to remember me in their prayers, that I may accomplish the things the servants of the Lord hath placed upon me.

With love to yourself, I remain your friend and brother.

MILO ANDRUS.

LETTER FROM WM. MARTINDALE.

SUGAR HILL, PANOLA CO., TEX., July the 24th, 1855.

DEAR BROTHER ERASTUS: It is with feelings of pleasure, and a grateful heart to my heavenly Father, that I take my pen in hand to write a few lines for your perusal. Knowing your fine sensibility, and the exquisite pleasure it affords you to hear of the success of truth over error, and as I have had a time of rejoicing, I hasten to report to you, that you and all the faithful may rejoice with me, and praise God to whom all praise belongs—glory, honor, and ceaseless praises, be ascribed unto him forever! I have added six more by baptism, since my last to you, and they have a great desire to emigrate next spring, to the vallies of the mountains, where peace truth, and virtue prevail, and they will if possible, and there is still a prospect of more being baptised shortly. Would not my heart be hard indeed, if I did not rejoice? when my labors are so abundantly blessed in the gospel, and the hand of the Lord is visible in checking the raging storm, that for a time seemed to threaten my expulsion from the State, as it is in restoring peace on the plains, so that the Saints could quarter in safety, or as it was in the arrival of the pioneers eight years ago this day, without the loss of a man, in the valley of the Great Salt Lake. I acknowledge His hand in all things, with all my might, mind, and soul, and can but exclaim, Hosanna, Hosanna, to the Lord God and the Lamb; and with the help of the Almighty, and the prayers of the faithful Saints, and being humble myself, I believe I shall be preserved from the hands of wicked and unreasonable men, and shielded from sickness disease and death, which now abounds in this country.

A disease has broken out in this country, that baffles the skill of the most eminent physicians. It seemed at first to attack the young and innocent, (small children,) but now the attack is general; young, old, and middle aged, fall before the grim monster's lance—the sigh of the widow he heeds not—the wailings and groans of the husband and father seem but to sharpen his appetite for death—the cry of the orphan softens not his feelings—the pale horse keeps his steady pace, but how far he will be permitted to go, no one knows—how many will be wounded and slain time alone can tell. Some of the physicians exclaim, when called to visit the afflicted, "damn the disease; I can do nothing with it; it is not worth a while for me to go!" It, at first, seems to be flux; for a time, the Doctors medicine seems to be sweet meats upon which the disease feasts, then comes cramping and congestive chills which only ends in death. Some thirty have died in one town of one hundred and fifty, or two hundred inhabitants. There are some cases of black canker now, which have proved fatal. Chills, intermittent and other fevers are making their appearance; the tithes they require is yet unknown.

The drought, also, has been severe and general throughout the State, as far as I can hear; not more than half a crop of corn, if that. Some fields are dead and dry, from root to head, and others, in part, beyond the power of resuscitation. From two pretty good showers we han yesterday and the day before, the cotton crop will fare worse than the corn, so the Planters say. It had quit growing, and the season that has come, will cause it to shed its forms or squares, that makes the bools; hence it will sprout and bloom anew, and if frost keeps off late enough, they may get part of a crop. Red river is so low, that the smallest sized boats have quit running.

Know-nothingism, and the Maine liquor law, are the bones to pick on the political stage. Utah, the Mormons and Mormonism, receives a share of the attention of theologians, editors, and some few politicians, besides a great deal of fire-side conversation. The first, fear that they will have to go on foot to preach, without their quarterage. The second wishes to be popular with the former, for the loaves and fishes—some honorable exceptions in the country. The third fears it, because if the knowledge of God covers the earth as the waters do the great deep, they cannot gamble upon the coffins of the dead for the inheritance of the departed. A certain Judge in this county, and a candidate for Congress, at that, said, (in speaking of the principles of the Know-nothings, though he said he was not one himself,) that the Mormons, under a false pretense of religion, were teaching principles contrary to our Republican institutions. I suppose he would rather beg or buy accommodations, than be forced to do without, or to be connected in honorable wedlock, (for he is an old batch,) and raise up an honorable family, fill the measure of his creation, obey the gospel and be saved in the kingdom of God. Such men take care of the morals of the nation.

Now, brother Snow, I have given you a true outline of some of the events of the day. Do I feel discouraged? No, not in the least, but see the necessity of doubling my diligence to warn the people faithfully, and to gather the sheaves I have already reaped, that I may take them home with me, fit for my Master's use.

I am enjoying pretty good health, and I don't feel that I could leave the little flock God has given me, in the midst of wolves, and the Saints are begging me to stay till spring, when they will try to go with me. Some that have not yet been baptized, exclain, "we cannot let you go;" so I have concluded to stay until spring. This seems to be the whispering of the spirit to me. If I have erred, please correct me. I try to show the people by the scriptures, commonsense, and logical reasoning, why they are as they are, and then how to extricate themselves from the heterogeneous mass of confusion, nonsense, and corruption, I can but exclaim,

When I think of the vallies so blest—
Of that country so peaceful and fair,
The thought will aris in my breast,
Oh, how I wish to be there.

When I think of the pure ardent love,
And the robes which the righteous do wear,
Who are blessed with light from above,
'Tis then I wish to be there.

And while I'm surrounded with woe,
Help me, O Lord, to prepare,
That when to the mountains I go,
I may rest with the righteous who're there.

The spirit of truth I invoke,
To guide me in preaching and prayer,
That I may be found on the rock,
And safe from the storms raging here.

Lord, help me my covenants to keep,
My Priesthood unsullied and pure,
What can my heart do but weep,
For Satan is Governor here.

I am here in the valley of death,
Distruction, deep sorrow and care;
But as long as the Lord gives me breath,
I will pray for my friends who are there.

These are my thoughts and feelings. Give my love to brother Milo, brother Hart and family, and all acquaintances that enquire after me; accept my best wishes for yourself—may peace and prosperity attend you—may great wisdom and mighty power be given you sufficient for the arduous duties that devolve upon you, is the prayer of your fellow laborer in the gospel.

WILLIAM MARTINDALE.

Baptisms—Organization of the Cherokee Branch—Kind reception by the Chief—Laws—Language and disposition of the Nation, &c.

CHEROKEE NATION, Aug. 2, 1855.

BROTHER ERASTUS SNOW:

I set down to write you a few lines to let you know where I am, and how I get along. My health is good, for which I am thankful and I pray that this may find you in health. I arrived here on the fourth of July and am staying at Jacob Crofts, who emigrated from Texas; he started for the Valley. He had not joined the Church, but his family had. They got disaffected and had rather go any where else than to the Valley; also a brother Slade from the same place in Texas, and family, had stopped here; also, brother Duggins. Brother Slade and Duggins had gone over to Strang; but since we got here we have baptized Mr. Croft and family, Mr. Slade and wife, Mr. Duggins and wife. We have baptized twenty-two here, and organized a Branch which I named the Cherokee Branch. There are ten or fifteen more that I think will be baptized in a few days, that belong to the Nation. We have baptized one full blooded Cherokee. Brother K. L. Petty is here with me at brother Croft's. He is sick, he was taken ill a few days after we got here, and is very feeble, but I think rather on the mend. he has not been able to preach but once since he arrived here.

Brother Richey is forty or fifty miles south of this, at or near Tahlequah, which is the seat of Government for the Nation. He has formerly lived with the Nation. I was there last week—had an interview with Mr. Ross the Chief—gave him a letter which President Young wrote to him. I also had an interview with Mr. Butler, the Agent; they both received me kindly and told me that we were at liberty to travel through the Nation, and preach as much as we pleased. I left brothers Cook and Richards in the Deleware Nation as I came down. I have not heard from them. I told them if they could not preach to the Delewares to visit the Potawatomies, and if they could not open a door for preaching, to come here; this Nation has received us well and are very anxious to hear. I was invited by one of their Baptist preachers to attend one of their large meetings. I attended and preached on Sunday through an interpreter to about four hundred people. They invited me to attend their monthly meetings, and told me to use their house when I choose. There are more calls for preaching, than I can attend to at present, but I hope that brother Petty will soon be able to take the field and help bear off the gospel to this and the surrounding Nations.

This nation has a written language, and the Bible is printed in it; they nearly all read and write it. The prospects are that a good work will be done here in a short time. I think if we can get a few native Elders to work it will forward the cause with rapidity; but other Missionaries will fight for the field and the spoil. They have quite a hold here.

This Nation has adopted a Constitution and framed a code of Laws. Their Delegates meet on the first Monday in October, yearly. One clause of their Constitution says that all preachers of the gospel shall have free access to the Nation. This Nation numbers about twenty thousand souls. They have a very good country, well timbered and well watered, though the country is broken and rocky on the east side joining the States.

They elect their Chief every four years. Their election comes off next Monday for Chief and Representatives. Their laws are plain and simple, and they enforce them with rigor. I want to go or send some one or two Elders to the Crick Nation, to plant the gospel there. They are south of this Nation; the Arkansas river divides their land, the Cherokees on the north and the Cricks on the south, the Chickesaws and Chocktaws by south of the Cricks and south of Texas. There are a good many in all these Nations that speak the English language, and read and write it. My instruction from the President, was to feel after all these Nations, from Fort Leavenworth to Texas; and from all appearances, the time has come for them to receive it, and the records of their forefathers. There were but five of us sent on this mission.

I wish you would send me your paper—there is a mail every week to this Nation—and write to me as often as you can, and give me all the instruction you have for me, and may the Lord bless you and give you wisdom to discharge the arduous duties that devolve upon you. Pray for me that I may be able to do the work assigned me here and then return to the bosom of the church pure and undefiled.

This from your brother and fellow laborer in the new and everlasting gospel,

A. W. MILLER,

P. S.—I have baptized four of Lyman Wights company. His company is scattered; he has but a few families with him. There are several families that have left Lyman in this nation. Direct to me at Grand Salem, Cherokee Nation. A. W. M.

CENTERVILLE, DEL., Aug. 7, 1855.

Dear Brother Spencer:—I see from, or by the Luminary that you are to be the future editor of that brilliant Star of the West, and that all matters relative to the rolling forth of that great work of the last day, in the Western States, this side of the Black Hills, appear to come under your supervision and counsel, as you have stepped—in this respect—into brother Erastus Snow's shoes. For this reason I write a few lines to you to enquire relative to an item or two of a temporal nature; as you are well aware, all things that we do are either directly, or indirectly concerned with our religion, and tends, or ought too, to the rolling forth and building up, of the kingdom of God on the earth, and the gathering of the Saints together. It is true there are thrilling reports now it circulation relative to a famine in Deseret, and that the Saints will have to scatter, &c. But for all this none of the Saints should relax in their exertions to gather, for when judgment begins with the Saints, it is time for the Gentiles to fear and quake, for they will find that the Lord is God; and that He will fulfil His own purposes, and His own words, whether they come through David, Isaiah, Daniel, Peter, Paul, John, Nephi, Moroni, Joseph, Hyrum, or Brigham. David says "the righteous shall see it and rejoice, and all iniquity shall stop her mouth." And Daniel says "the wise shall understand." So of course the Saints rejoice in this as well as other things, which tends to their sanctification; for it testifies to them that the God of Israel yet lives, and that he is bringing about deliverance to His people. "The wise shall understand."

The Saints know that famine will not destroy this people; for says Daniel, "the kingdom shall not be given to another people, but shall stand forever." So if the Saints are as they should be, (wise) they will understand, and do all they can, all that lays in their power to serve these States a trick the devil has not done for some years at least; and that is, leave them, I would say to their own utter destruction.

This famine in Utah should instead of causing any one to relax in their exertions, give a two fold impetus to all their doing, labor, and desires to gather out. For as the Lord lives, it will soon overtake this nation, and it will be sore upon them, and not only on those of this land; but as Isaiah says in his xxviii chapter, it will be "upon the whole earth;" and it will be a vexation to even hear the report thereof.

I saw a short piece a few days since in the "Delaware Republican," in which after delineating upon what he thought would be the probable result of the famine in Utah, he says, "to say the least of it, they are in a bad fix." I would just say in reply, let Utah get in ever such a "bad fix," that Delaware with her Republican, and all the rest of the States, and all the world will get in a ten, yes a hundred fold worse "fix." For Utah has the God of Israel to help her out, to sustain, feed, and clothe her; because she serves Him and keeps His commandments, not even neglecting the first one ever given to man upon this earth. That was to be fruitful, multiply and replenish the earth; which is admitted by the Republican, for he speaks about their babies. While on the other hand they have the devil not to help them out, but to lead further in, all the day long. They might say, why you are talking at random; but not so, for our Savior said while upon the earth that every tree should be known by its fruit. St Paul says: "The spirit speaketh expressly that in the latter times," men would "give heed to doctrines of devils," and the first one he names is, "forbidding to marry." He dont say one wife, and of course could have no reference to the one wife system; for almost all christian denominations (falsely called) allow any of their members to have one wife, and it is a well known fact, that the law of God to the Israelites and Jews actually required them under certain circumstances to have more than one. For this reason, says St. Paul, and other of the ancient worthies, "they will teach for doctrine the commandments of men and devils," and will say a man shall not have but one wife, and as few children as possible, and some of the more pious would think it much better to suffer a woman—a near kin—to untie their shoes, and spit in their face, (a very great reproach in Isrnel) than to do what God has commanded; to take that woman, and fulfil the first great, as well as the other command. Yes, they would much rather go and seduce a girl, at the same time cry out, and say for a man to have ten or twelve wives, (more or less as the case may be,) and support them, and raise up an honorable posterity thereby, would be degrading, beastly, abominable, most awful, only the practices of the dark ages, and heathenish barbarous nations, &c. Well I say give me a people, and let me live with them, who respect female virtue, who have their own wives' and who would cut the throat of any devilish pious christian, from ear, to ear, who will defile his neighbor's bed, either with his wife, or daughter, in his absence, whether he be an officer, or private, Judge, Secretary, or Indian agent, gold-digger, or sojourner, and then let them call it what they please, and help themselves if they can. This is the kind of heathenism I would like to see in Utah; then she is an asylum for the oppressed, then females would know where to go to get husbands, who would respect and defend their virtues, and their fair daughters when they raised them; and then the smooth leg, oily tongued scoundrels would either keep a a proper distance or be sent to hell cross lots. I trust this is and will be the case in our Bee hive State. I have been among the benighted heathens of Asia more or less for the last three years, and know something of their practices; for instance in Burmah, there was not such a thing known, as a prostitute in the whole Empire, for the last one hundred and fifty or two hundred years, (so I am told,) until the European christians went there. Of course, their peculiar style of dress gave more opportunity for an adulterous man, but still the poor benighted heathen, so much talked about could spend his whole life there and be virtuous, and as soon as the enlightened christian arrives, they cry out against the poor heathen for having two or three wives, and tell them that they must forsake all but one, or they could not admit him into their "Holy Church," &c., causing him either to remain as they would say, "without God in the world," or put away some of the wives of his bosom, and the offspring of his own body; and at the same time allow themselves and others to remain in their "Holy Church," who actually have a white wife and at the same time lay with these "benighted heathen's" wives and daughters whenever an opportunity will allow. The same may be said of Bengal, Hindostan, and Siam Provinces, as I was in them, and saw some of the effects of christianity—falsely so called—and as to the United States they are not a bit better. Look at what they have done among the Indians. A Gentile writing to the Mormon says, all had passed off but the disease.

* * * The Saints all feel tolerable well in this State. I have only baptized two or three since I wrote brother Snow and the prospect is dull at that. There are a few more believing, but they have not courage to come out. I have only preached three times in five or six weeks, as my health will not admit of it without injuring myself. My lungs are very much affected, partly from exposure and toil, in India and partly in this country, since my return; and if they do not get better I shall have to give up public speaking. The Gentiles about here do not care but little about Mormonism; but there are calls from other parts, if my health would admit, but it is only for two or three times, at a place just for curiosity. Pray for me. May the blessing of God attend us all, is my prayer in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

Your brother affectionately in Christ,
S. A. WOOLLY.

FAIRFIELD, Franklin Co., Ia. Aug. 12, '55.

DEAR BROTHER SPENCER:—Having some time ago commenced a communication to brother Erastus Snow, to let him know of my welfare and whereabouts, in connection with the effect and working of Mormonism in this part of the country, but not having as much to communicate of importance as I desired, I laid it aside for a season, for a more favorable opportunity to present itself, of a prospect of some addition or increase to our little flock in the backwoods, or settlements of Indiana; but having learned from the perusal of the pages of the Luminary, that brother Snow has left the editorial chair, and bid adieu to friends and patrons for a season, to take another peep at his mountain home, and recieve the embraces of his family and friends, and yet, while he is gazing upon the home of the Saints, and beholding with joy and admiration, the progress of that people, and the advancement of the kingdom of God, I am happy to learn that his paper will continue to roll forth, and that the editorial department will be filled and occupied by the one to whom I take the liberty at this time to address, and shall continue to do so in future, if anything transpire worth noticing. With regard to the present, I will just say, that I and the brethren here are preaching away, and doing all the good we can for the up-building of the kingdom of God, and the advancement of truth and righteousness, and I think if I may be allowed to judge from outward appearances or external manifestations which I think sometimes are a very good index; I should say that our prospects stand good for an increase. And already a very intelligent German physician who understands four or five different languages, a good scholar, and well informed, has seen and heard a great deal about Mormonism, for and against—been in the midst of some of them, and heard their teachings in different places, and finally finds his way to this country, and rather strangely gets acquainted with us and comes out honestly and honorably and acknowledges Mormonism to be true, and said he would be baptized and would gather with the people of God next spring; for his heart and soul is wrapped up in the cause of truth, and he knew the Latter-day Saints had that truth, and if they hadn't, no other people had. This he told me with his own lips only two days ago. Although opposition here is great, and honest hearted few, and opposers and gospel-haters many, and antimormons; whose souls if they have any, are black with deeds of darkness; whose chief aim is the overthrow of the Saints of God—have made it their business to attack the man I have just been speaking about, telling him of Mormon delusions, base impositions, wicked practices, and awful abominations practiced by the people of Utah; but it had just as much effect as water upon a goose's back, it ran off as fast as it went on, and he told them he knew more about the Mormons and their doctrine than they all put together could tell him, and consequently have pronounced him a Mormon already; there are some few others again inhabitants of this county who seem deeply convinced that Mormonism is true, and would like to be baptised but on account of some opposers at home, are rather backward in coming forward; yet, I am looking for some of them to come out volunteers, for they attend to all of our meetings and pay most profound attention to all of our teachings with countenances agreeable and pleasant, as indicatory of sanctioning what we say. But hireling priests, and wicked editors, and Lucifer with his host from the regions of darkness are all united in one grand head, thirsting for the blood of Prophets, Patriarchs, and Saints; and are longing with cannibal appetite to glut their sanguinary souls with human gore; or rob, mob, drive and exterminate from the face of this boasted Republic a people that has hitherto proven, and still prove that they are the most loyal subjects to their country, and their country's laws of all the United States; because we love her, and reverence her laws and institutions, but despise with indignant feelings men who are set in authority whose duty it is to see that the law is equally divided, and justice awarded to all its subjects; instead of which corrupt hearts and depraved natures, and souls blackened with hellish feelings, come out in language equal to their fiendish dispositions, and say "damn the Mormons, they ought to be blown out of existence or annihilated from off the face of the earth." What in the name of heaven have we ever done to any person for man to cherish in his bosom such feelings as these. I say nothing but kept the commandments of God, and done the will of our father in heaven. Therefore I say for the encouragement of all such, blow away gentlemen, and annihilate as much as you please, the Mormons have got used to such treatment as this, and are almost ball-proof, fire-proof, water-proof, tar and feather proof, slander-proof, lying editors and priestcraft proof, and all other kind of proof. None of these things are going to hurt us until our time comes, for we put our trust in God, and are determined to do his will, and if he will not protect us in this, then we fall; or if our lives should be required at our hands, the same as many of the ancient worthies in ages past, then would we seal our testimony with our blood, and say to all the world, Mormonism is true.

A great many have asked, and do still ask the hireling Priests of the day, that never heard Mormonism, what it is the Mormons believe in and teach? and the answer they give them is, that we are the advocates of awful delusions, base impositions; but come to me, or any other good Mormon, or Latter-day Saint, and we will tell you it is truth eternal—truth that has emenated from the bosom of God, and is destined to lead the children of men into his presence by complying with its request. It is something in its very nature, calculated to enlarge the heart, expand the mind, increase the knowledge and exalt or redeem the affections of man from the low groveling things of this earth to things above, of a more glorious noble and eternal nature. Men who embrace Mormonism with a righteous and pure motive, and have received the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands by the servants of God, after being baptised for the remission of sins by those having authority to administer that ordinance, will not rest satisfied with what little knowledge they have already received, but the ambition of the soul will soar aloft, look into futurity, search out intelligence, and reveal it to his fellow man, dive again into futurity, explore regions unknown, ascend and descend in search of wisdom, truth, knowledge and heavenly intelligence, in short, he becomes in posession of that spirit, or mind that Christ was in possession of; which Paul recommended to the Phillippians, in the second chapter of his epistle, fifth and sixth verses. "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus, who being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God." So with the Saints of God in the last days; we are striving to get equal with the intelligences in heaven, in wisdom, truth, light, intelligence and knowledge, in short, all that is good and great, and noble and God-like; we crave all, whether principalities, powers, things past, present, or to come; we are Christ's, and Christ is God's; consequently, we believe in being made fit to commune with angels, mingling with Gods and the spirits of the just, receive dreams, visions and revelations, in spite of all the mobocrats, blacklegs, assassins, and devils. I feel to say, the time is fast approaching, when men will have to live up to the law of God, and lead a holy life or die; for the overflowing scourges of an avenging God are passing over the nations of the earth in full vengeance, and already kingdoms begin to totter with distress, perplexity and wars, and thousands upon thousands of human beings have fallen victims to stern and cruel death, and wallowed in their gore; and while the kingdoms of the earth are being visited with earthquakes, famine and pestilential diseases, spreading destruction devastation and death, the Saints of God in these, the last days, can look on and behold the same with serence countenance, and an air of satisfaction, knowing that the prophesies are being fulfilled, and that their redemption draweth nigh. But still, in these trying scenes, we feel for our fellow mortals, and ask God, the eternal Father, to extend his mercies to the meek of the earth and bring them into his kingdom; likewise, all who have a desire to be saved, and are honestly seeking after truth; but that number is comparatively small, taking into consideration the great bulk of mankind; but the will of God has to be done—truth and righteousness taught and established, his kingdom rolled forth, his Saints gathered home, and a people prepared to meet the Messiah in the clouds at his second coming, in defiance of all the efforts of man.

I am happy to say that some of the Saints in Indianna are beginning to arouse themselves from their slumbers. and are awakening to righteousness, and are determined to go to Zion, and have already commenced to pull up stakes, by selling their farms and possessions, and making every arrangement for an early start next spring. May the Lord prosper and bless them in the same, and gather them safe to Zion, and enable them to put their shoulders to the wheel and help along the cause, and assist our brethren there to build up Zion and roll forth the kingdom of our God.

There are others again, I cannot speak quite as well of, who have got farms and other property worth thousands of dollars, and yet they are not quite ready to go to the Valley; they want to wait a little to see how things go there, for they are afraid there will be more persecutions, mobbing and exterminations, etc., etc. before many years, and they think if they sell out their possessions and go there, they will be apt to be routed and come to want and starvation, or if they were sure the Saints would be left alone in future, they would like to go to Salt Lake better than stay away to be sure. There are some of them would have to sacrifice a little on their property, and that is hard of course, and very distressing. Pity their situation. They ought to be sympathised with. I know of some others who could have obtained the very outside value of their property, paid to them in gold, and acknowledged themselves it was the worth of their property, and a very fine offer, but still there was something in the way, for they said they did not know what to do for the best, or how quick they would do it. Poor creatures, never were scenes and circumstances more distressing than these, after having been counselled time and again to gather up to Zion, for that is the place for the Saints of God to gather to and learn righteousness and how to live; but still they do not know what to do for the best, for the fact is that their affections are set too much on this world, that the work or kingdom God seems to interest them but little. They are not all this way, however, for some are desirous of selling out their possessions, and go to the valleys of Ephriam, but cannot get the whole of their familes in the notion just now. Perhaps, after a while they will begin to see different when they have paid for negligence and folly, and find themselves the loosers instead of the gainers, I therefore, feel to say to all such in like circumstances, if you want a standing and a name among the Saints, and a desire to saved in the kingdom of God: Arise, and shake off your slumbers and work righteousness while it is yet day; work out your own salvation with fear and trembling before God, for night cometh when no man work.

For my own part, I am satisfied with the kingdom of God, and its workings, and feel assured all is well and I am as determined as ever to do my duty in warning the people, where I go in preaching the principles of eternal life and salvation in their ears, that my garments may be clean from their blood, and had I the tongue of an angel or the voice of many waters, I would send it in thundering tones to the inhabitants of the earth, and proclaim aloud from pole to pole, or from earth's centre to circumference, the will of God concerning them, to arouse themselves from prestcraft, superstition and heathen idolatry, to worship the true and living God and obey the counsels and teachings of his servants.

Having said so much your patience will be wearied, therefore, my pen shall quit for the present, while I remain your brother in the gospel of Chrst.

LETTER FROM ELD. JAMES CASE.

ST. LOUIS, Aug. 23, 1855.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LUMINARY:

Dear Sir:—Since I wrote to you last, by the council of the Presidency of this stake of Zion, I went to Gravois, and commenced my labors as usual. I found a good feeling prevailing among the Saints, especially with the authorities and Priesthood generally. I found numbers that wished to renew their covenants. and others that wished to join themselves to the Lord by covenant; on Friday the 17th inst., I repaired to the waters edge, where I prayed with a goodly congregation and took seven out of the same, one by one and rebaptized them after the pattern set us by our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, and one I baptized into the Church who came from Canada, the wife of brother Job Carter. I still continued my labors visiting from house to house, setting forth the principles of the gospel in such a way as was given me by the spirit, the Lord blessing me all the time. I administered to the sick in baptizing and anointing and laying on of hands, which was blest of God for their good. On the Sabbath I had to preach twice in the day time, and then in the evening again. After meeting I invited those that wished to be baptized to repair to the water, about a half mile, and they should be baptized. A large part of my congregation followed me, where prayer was offered by brother Yates. I then rebaptized eleven, and baptized five into the church. I continued on Monday and Tuesday still finding others wishing the ordinance of baptism to be administered to them, but feeling that my mission was out there, I like, Phillip was caught away in the spirit, and was set down in St. Louis without receiving any harm. I only had to pay a dime for it. In the evening I found myself in the Mormon Chapel in the midst of the special general Priesthood meeting, where I enjoyed myself first rate. I there found I must go up the Missouri and fill my mission before conference; my feelings were go it, the Lord being my helper, I will do all the good I can while I live, so let her rip. I have got good backing, my Father in heaven careth for me, therefore, all is right. I feel I have the prayers of all the Saints, and if I am faithful I shall be at the October conference in St. Louis, where you will hear from me again.

I subscribe myself your brother in the new and everlasting covanant, JAMES CASE.

GLEANINGS.

The yellow fever at Norfolk and Portsmouth, has caused great excitement and consternation in many of the eastern cities, soon after it became known that the disease was raging in the above cities. New York, Baltimore, Richmond, Petersburg, and many other cities cut off all communication between them and the condemned cities, lest they should also suffer by the fever, like their unfortunate neighbors. We have here a fair specimen of christain sympathy and love, that like the good Samaritan pours in oil and wine, and ministers comfort and consolation to the afflicted—they believe in that saying probably, "let the dead bury their dead."

The 14th inst was set apart in Norfolk as a "public day of penitance and prayer to the Almighty, that he would look down upon the offlicted city with compassion, and in his infinite mercy stay the scourge prevailing therein." We are assured by the revelations of Jesus Christ, that plague, pestilence and famine are but the beginning of sorrows, that shall come upon this nation because of the blood of apostles and Saints which has been poured out upon this land, and when these things shall become national and general, instead of local as at this time, then who shall be able to stand? And where will the ungodly flee for refuge? The righteous will be safe and secure in Zion, the Lord will bless and preserve his people, even all who put their trust in Him.

A very large and destructive fire broke out on the levee, below Walnut street, on Monday the 13th inst, consuming and destroying property to an alarming extent.

Several steamers have arrived from Europe during the last week, but bring no news of any particular importance. Affairs before Sebastopol remain unchanged. There may be considerable truth in the statements of Un Anglais, to his brother, which will be found on the fourth page of this paper, concerning the policy of the Allied Generals in confining their operations upon the coast, and in the Provinces, but it is generally expected that a decisive blow will soon be struck, that will materially change the scenes of the belligerant armies of the Crimea, but the blood and carnage that must preceed this change of circumstance cannot be contemplated without feelings of sympathy and anguish, because of the noble fellows who will then be immolated upon the shrine of Babylon the Great, who hath made all nations drunk with the wine of the wrath of her fornication.

The deaths at New Orleans during the last week amount to five hundred and seventy-seven, of which three hundred and ninety-four died of yellow fever.

A platform and constitution have been adopted by the "Republican Washington Association," illustrative of its feelings and spirit concerning the territories of Kansas and Nebraska.

The following is the political platform adopted by the Association:

1st, That Congress possesses no power over the institution of slavery in the several States; but that, outside of State jurisdiction, the constitutional powers of the Federal Government should be exerted to secure life, liberty and happiness to all men; and therefore,

2nd. There should be neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except for the punishment of crime, in any of the territories of United States.

3rd. The people are the rightful source of all political power; and all officers should, as far as practicable, be chosen by a direct vote of the people.

4th. Candidates for political offices should be men of undoubted integrity and sobriety, and pledged to support the principles of this platform by all lawful and constitutional means.

The Parent Society formed and established at Washington D. C., respectfully recommends branch associations after the order and pattern of the constitution, formed and established by the supreme wisdom of the association in the city of Governments. If any of our readers wish to be inducted into the merits and mysteries of the constitution, we will furnish a copy for their especial benefit.

The Southwest Democrat informs us that a disease called "Texian Fever," is playing great havoc with the cattle in some portions of that country. When they take the disease they droop their heads, appear stupid, apparently suffering in pains, but soon fall.

The Paris Mercury says that a number of cattle have been lost in that neighborhood within the last few days, from some strange and fatal disease that suddenly made its appearance among them.

Several persons have been knocked down in the streets of this city and robbed within the last week. What are our policemen doing? And where is the efficiency of the stringent measures of our Kingly mayor? Will any one answer.

"TRY IT ON!"

The Knickerbocker tells an excellent story of Burchard, the revivalist; not of him exactly, but of what happened at the close of one of his meetings. He was in the habit of addressing the congregation in this manner:

"I am now going to pray, and I want all that desire to be prayed for to send up their names on a piece of paper."

On the occasion to which we refer, there was at once sent up to the desk quite a pile of little slips of paper, with the name on whose behalf he was to "wrestle," as he said, "with the Almighty."

A pause soon ensued, when he said, "Send 'em up! I can pray for five thousand just as easy as I can for a dozen. Send 'em up! If you hav'nt any paper; get up and name the friend you want prayed for."

At this stage of the proceedings, a man whom we shall call Oziel Bigg, a stalwart man of six feet and a half in his stockings, a notorious unbeliever, and a confirmed wag to boot, rose in the midst of the congregation, a mark for all, and amidst the winks and becks and smiles of the auditory, said:

"Mr. Burchard I want you to pray for Jim Thompson."

The Rev. practitioner saw, from the excitement in the audience, that Oziel was a hard case.

"What is your name, sir, and who is Mr. Thompson?"

"It's Jim Thompson; he keeps a tavern down in Thompsonville, and I keep a public house a little below him. He's an infernal scoundrel, and I want you to give him a lift."

"But," said Mr. Burchard, "have you faith in the efficacy of prayer? Do you believe in the power of petition?"

"That is neither here nor there," responded Oziel "I want you to try it on him!

"WHAT a study for a sculpin!" said Mrs. Partington, on board the Chelsea ferry boat, as she saw a row of nude boys standing on a raft near the ferry awaiting the moment to take a plunge. Their clear cuticle gleamed in the sun, and muscular beauty and youthful grace were revealed in every line.—"What a study for a sculpin! and how I love to see the little dears so enjoying themselves." "Little deers?" said old Roger, touching the Brahmin, "I shoulu say they were little bares." The Brahmin, who was familiar with like scenes on the banks of the Ganges, said not a word. "How shockingly improper!" said Miss Prim, turning away her eyes, "don't you think it very improper, Mrs. Partington?" Mrs. P. looked again. "Well," said she, "I didn't see that it was till you spoke of it—perhaps it is—but may be the poor child is crippled." "I mean the impropriety of going in the water before folks," persisted Miss Prim. "Oh, that is quite another thing," said Mrs. P., smiling, "and depends upon how we look upon it. If the boys have no idea of impropriety, I don't see why we should have. If our minds are pure we would see no impurity. This is a queer world, where we swallow mountains of impropriety in private, and choke at a bare little boy." She took a pinch of snuff as Miss Prim went into the cabin, and Ike stood longingly looking at the boys as they plunged like frogs beneath the surface, and broke two buttons from his jacket, as, half forgetful, he tried to strip it off to follow them. 'Twas very natural.

DEPARTURE.—The ship Cynosure, Captain Pray, sailed on Sunday the 29th ult. for New York with 159 souls of the Saints on board under the Presidency of Elder George Seager, with Elder William Rogers and William J. Silver as Counsellors.

It is impossible for us to determine at present when our next vessel will sail, but it will be as soon as a ship's complement of passengers can be made up. In the mean time we would say to those who have determined to emigrate the first opportunity, do not delay sending in your deposits.—[Millennial Star.

NOTICE.

I have ordered from England, 50 copies of a choice and useful book, especially to the Priesthood.

The title of it is, "The Key to Theology." I wish to obtain subscribers for it. I cannot state the price, but I should say, under a dollar.

The name of the author, Parley P. Pratt, is sufficient to recommend it. JAMES S. CANTWELL.

Mustang Liniment and the Ladies.—In our opinion, nothing is above the comprehension of women; and with less prejudice, more liberality, and much keener perception than men, when a new idea is presented, a new doctrine taught, or a new fact asserted, she grasps it at once, and with the rapidity and clearness almost of instinct, decides upon its merits or truthfulness; and if her decision be favorable, she enthusiastically advocates and supports it. Thus the common saying has obtained—"Once get the women on your side and you are safe;" and we are happy to state that we have the ladies all in favor of the MUSTANG LINIMENT. They have tried it for caked breasts, sore nipples, sores, chafes, and burns on children, as well as for croup and mumps; also, for corns, tooth-ache, pains in the limbs and joints, sore eyes, eruptions, cuts and bruises, and they have always found it effectual—and they go about like angels, as they are, proclaiming it to their friends and to all they see or hear tell of, who are suffering. We have daily calls for it by persons who say such and such ladies recommended them to try it.

Go on ladies in your "good Samaritan" work, and thousands will bless you for your timely advice.

THE FARMER'S SONG.

Success to the jolly old farmer,
Who sighs at the tail of the plow;
The monarch of prairie and forest,
'Tis only to God he may bow:
He is surely a fortunate fellow—
He raises his bread and his cheese,
And though hard is his labor in summer,
In winter he lives at his ease.

When the reign of chill winter is broken,
And spring comes to gladden and bless—
When the flocks in the meadow are sporting,
And the robin is building her nest,
The farmer walks forth to his labor,
And manly and firm is his tread,
As he scatters the seed for the harvest,
That yields to the nations their bread.

His banks are all chartered by nature,
Their credits are ample and sure;
His clerks never slope with deposits,
Pursued by the curse of the poor;
His stocks are the best in the market,
His shares are the shares of his plow;
They bring the bright gold to his coffers,
And pleasure and health to his brow.

When his crops are all gather'd and shelter'd,
When his cattle are snug in the fold,
He sits himself down by his fire-side,
And laughs at the tempest and cold.
A stranger to pride and ambition,
His duty he strives to fulfil;
Determined, whatever betide him,
To let the world jog as it will.

His trust is in Him who has given
The seasons, the sunshine, and rain,
Who has promised "seed time and harvest,"
So long as the earth might remain;
And if from his duties he wander,
Led on by his 'venturous will,
Through life and its changing relations,
God's providence follows him still.

From the Crimea—Letter from a Private Soldier in the Allied Army.

The following letter from a private soldier in the allied army at Sebastopol to his brother in this city, contains information and suggestions which will cause it to be read with general interest.

CAMP KADDKOI, Tuesday, July 10, 1855.

* * * You ask how I like the Crimea? Now, that is the most puzzling question I ever was asked. Do you mean its scenery, or the condition of the soil, and such like matters? If so, I can assure you that for beautiful scenes, both landscape and marine views, romantic dells, for towering rocks, immense steppes, and for productive soil, the Crimea stands unrivalled; and at the time when we first landed it was everywhere covered with vines, the branches of which were bowed to the ground with grapes, as if stooping in humble attitude of praise and thanks to God for His kindness in sending them such rich, lovely, luscious offspring—and here there was at that time, too, fruit trees of every description, from peaches to cherries, from almonds to pine-apples; there also was the rich farm-house, with its tidy kitchen-garden and fairy grounds planted with the most beautiful of flowers, and having an abundance of bee-hives, and everywhere bearing a stamp of order, taste and cleanliness that would do credit to the mansion house of any of England's nobles. In fact, when I first saw it, I thought it a realization of my boyish dreams of Eden! But soon, alas! all its beauties were disfigured, and its houses razed to the ground; its vines were torn up, and the noble fruit trees felled for firewood.

Then came winter with its host of sad realities, that drove away all idea of its former beauties, and made thousands curse the day that they were landed on its shores. You ask how I felt when going into battle? and I will answer you truly, and confess that, when the first volley of the enemy's round shot came in among us, I gave a start, and for an instant I felt a curious, but not unpleasant sensation about the heart—a thought of home crossed my mind; and I think ere the sound of a third volley had died away, I was more angry than afraid, for the Russians were playing into us, and we were quite unable to return the compliment; and I honestly confess that I was glad when we were ordered to retire "out of range," which I thought was cowardly, but at the same time was wise. But when we came to close work, it was then I felt what I dare say is the chief attraction in battle, for, though the Russian cavalry was more than four times our number, each of us felt that in hand-to-hand work, we were equal to any five Muscovites, and when the word "Charge" was given, it thrilled my every nerve like an electric shock.—On we went, with a cheer and the word "England forever," which to hear was to live a life-time in an instant; and when once engaged, we soon taught the boasted cavalry of Russia that we were made of different materials from what they imagined. And most amusing was it to see how soon they became convinced of our superior courage, and how quickly they turned their backs in ignominious flight.

I never go into the trenches to work, nor do any of the cavalry, as the advanced piquets of all armies are formed by dragoons.

I am glad to say that, In my opinion, Sebastopol will fall ere long—and I am certain that no one here ever doubted of our ability to take it. And now that Lord Raglan is dead, things will be made known that will show how little the Generals of the allied armies wanted to take it—for they only used it as a cloak to cover their real intentions, which have been to draw as many Russian troops into the Crimea as possible, so that we might cripple them on this ground, without advancing into the interior of Russia, which would have to be done if we had Sebastopol now; and it would be sheer madness to follow a Russian army, after having such a precedent as Napoleon's campaign of 1812, where he lost the finest army the world ever saw, through the effects of climate.

I am certain it was not the fault of Lord Raglan that we were left in such a miserable plight during Winter, for a more humane man never existed, but it was the fault of "our system," which deprives every man in the army of real authority, and of course prevents officers, or rather frightens them from incurring personal responsibility. However, to make it clear to you, I will give you an idea of the forms to obtain anything from the Ordinance stores at home: First, your regimental Quarter-Master makes out a requisition for clothing, and from him it goes to the Colonel, from him to the Brigade Officer, from there to the Division Officer, from there to Head-quarters, from Head quarters to Englands' War Office, and then to the Horse Guards, from there to the Board of Ordinance,—there to be examined by a parcel of old officers who know as much about what is neccessary for a soldier's comfort as a horse does about an Act of Parliament.

CAMP KADDKOI, Saturday, July 14, '55.

I again resume my pen, to fulfill the promise I made in my last, of finishing the remainder of your questions when I had time—and to resume where I left off: Seeing that the system of our army has such a pernicious effect in detaining any stores that may be wanted from England, we cannot blame Lord Raglan, or, in fact, any other individual—for there can be no doubt but Lord Raglan applied for all necessaries that he thought requisite for the safety and comfort of the soldiers, in quite sufficient time to allow of their being sent out here by, at least, the beginning of January. But on account of various forms, "contracts," and other humbugs, everything was kept till the last moment in England. And finally, when the country had taken up our cause, sent off every thing without giving any orders as to where it was to be landed, or whom to be given to, and the result of all this was, we got no winter clothing till spring had set in. You again ask, "If I think we will conquer the Russians?" My answer is; Yes, we will! We could have done so long ago, if the Russians had ever tried a second experiment like that of the 5th of November at Inkerman. They would have been crippled at once; and though they never attempt a regular battle, they think they will beat us by a simple "occupation." But their generals never made a greater mistake—for the Russian resources are now entirely stopped in the Crimea, and the great losses they have sustained in the transport of troops and provisions from the interior to the Crimea, must have greatly reduced their internal supplies. And their ports being now blockaded must create a stagnation in their trade; and want of supplies from foreign ports must, in the end, force them to accept of any terms the Wesern Powers may deign to offer them.

You ask what kind of soldiers the Russians are, and as far as I can I will tell you; but I can only speak from what I have seen, and not knowing anything of the "analogy," I cannot give you the "cause;" but I can easily give you the "effect."—The Russian soldiery is like a lump of machinery that works without knowing what it is doing; consequently they stand fire, "charge," and while under the influence of the Russian "engine"—raki—or blue ruin; but like all other drunken bragadocios they quail before the courage of sterling sobriety, honesty and valor, and of course they are beaten.—The Russian soldier when in the open field, fires without taking aim, and imagines himself a hero when he envelopes himself in smoke from his own gun, "whereas," a British soldier coolly takes his aim, nor fires again till he has a fresh mark.

Remember me with kindest love to brother Andrew and his amiable wife and child, and also to cousin John Irving, if you go to Philadelphia. As for yourself, accept of my warmest wishes for your welfare, and believe me to remain your most affectionate brother, WILLIAM IRVING.

PADDY AND THE BEAR.

Once upon a time, my darling, and it's not long ago, an Irishman, and a friend of my own, took it into his head that he would leave his master dear and try a better country. I do not mean to say that a better country there is under the whole face of heaven; but times are bad, and many a dacent man thinks he might get a better bit and sup by emigration than he can get in his own dear country. His master sent for him and he says mighty sharp, "Well Thady, what's that I hear about you?"

"Och, my jewel, you can hear nothing about me but by meself, and I'm not spaking."

"But you are going away, Thady—you are going away, they say."

"You may say that, sir, for I'm two stone lighter than when I came to you."

"But what's taking you away, Thady?"

"Just my own feet and legs, dear."

"You are very short with me this morning, Thady."

"Why, then, I think I am as long as I was yesterday. But, master dear, I'm going to Amerikay, to get a bit o' land for meself and Judy, and where we'll get the praties for the children just for the digging, and have a sweet little cabin of our own, far away in the woods, and the niver a morsal o' rint to pay!"

"But Thady, are you not afraid of the Blackamoor wild Indians that live in the woods? They will come down some dark night and tomahawk you!"

"Afraid! is it an Irishman afraid? They tomahawk me! There's not a man among them all could play long bullets with my brother Phelemy, and show me one o' them could touch me at first fifteen! But sure, master dear, I would not know one o' them from Adam when I seen them."

"O, Thady, they are wild looking black rascals and you had better stay at home than venture among them."

"Stay at home is it? Arrah, my dear, poor Thady has no home to go to; for the landlord put poor Judy out for three and sixpence, and now I'll stay no longer here. Och! sweet Mulligan, sweet Mulligan, and the days o' my youth, when I was fed like a fighting cock, and Jndy was my darling, and the world was light and easy on us! It was then we had the great big noggins o' broth for dinner, instead of the crabbed, pock-marked praties that the pigs in Mulligan wouldn't ate, and buttermilk as thin as crame o' tarter! Farewell, master dear, and may God Almighty be wid yees all!"

So over the salt seas poor Thady went, and Judy, that had never been on the rowling ocean before, now saw nothing at all for weeks but the green sea and blue sky. Och, but it's meself that could discourse about the sea and the sky!—how the whales, and the sharks, rowle in the waters; and the pretty stars, and the moon, and the sun, look down on the coral beds at the bottom o' the sea; and when the wind begins to blow like mad, and the waters go up and then go down, and the sails are torn into shreds with a noise like thunder, and the masts go by the board, and ther's ten feet water in the hold, and the ship is sucked down into the bubling sea; and, just before it goes down, men, women and children send up one dreadful scream that rises above the blast, and pierces the very gates of heaven! There's a description for you!

But Thady arrived safe in Quebec, with Judy, and the children, and then off they trudged into the woods, to try and get a bit of land to settle on.—Some neighbors helped him to get up a cabin to shelter the family, and he says to one, "Where do thim Blackamoor negur Indians live, that I heerd about in our own country?"

"Och, beyant in the wood."

"And Corny, tell me, have you ever seen any o' them?"

"Seen them! To be sure I have, there's scores o' them in the woods, black, ugly devils they are!"

"And what makes them black, Corny? Sure couldn't the dirty creatures keep themselves Christian white!"

"It's the climate, they say; but what the climate is, myself doesn't know. Something they rub on them when they are young."

"The dirty heathen brutes! But sure they must have the stuff plenty amoug them—I wish I had some of it, and I would rub little Barney with it for an experiment."

From that day forward, Thady was ever eager to see a Blackamoor Indian. One day, roaming the woods with his hatchet in his hand, he saw a quare looking trout reclining at his ease, on the green sod. Thady was now sure he had clapped his eye on one of them, and coming up "Musha," says he, "but I never seen one of that kind afore—why, man, you'll get your cowled lying there!"

The wild man of the woods looked up. "Queen o' glory, what a nose! They may talk o' Louhey Fudaghen's nose, but by the powers, your nose beats the noses of all the Fudaghens put together! Get up, like a good fellow; I've an odd tester left, and if there was a sheebeen near, I'd give you a snifterer."

The quare chap did get up, but my jewel, he appeared disposed to try a fall with Thady. "And is it for wrestling you are? Cushendall for that—but stop, agrah, you grip too tight—take your fist out o' my shoulder, or I'll have an unfair boult o' you! Oh! bad luck to you, and the tailor that made your clothes, he left no waistband on your breeches—oh murdther, you're the jewel of a squeezer!"

But Thady contrived to get his tobacco knife out, and gave him a prod in the right place, and down he fell to rise no more

"Oh murdther, murdther! I've kilt one o' them Blackamoor blackguards! I'll be hanged as I'm a living man—och, och, why did I leave ould Ireland? Poor Judy and the childers will see me die an unnatural death for this Blackamoor thief! Och hone! och hone! what will I do?"

A neighbor in the woods came up.

"And what ails you, Thady? you roar like a bull in a bog."

"Och! och! but I'm a sorrowful man this blessed day! I have just gave one o' them thieves a prod, and there he is."

"Mercy on us, Thady! that's a bear that ten men couldn't kill!"

Musha, is that a bear! By the powers, I'll drop them to you for a tester the dozen."

ADVANTAGES OF SINGING.—If you would keep spring in your hearts, learn to sing. There is more merit in melody than most people are aware of. A cobbler who smooths his wax-ends with a song, will do as much work in a day as one given to ill-nature and fretting would effect in a week.—Songs are like sunshine, they run to cheerfulness—they fill the bosom with such buoyancy, that for the time being, you feel filled with June air, are like a meadow of clover in blossom.—[Reflector.

MCLEAN'S VOLCANIC OIL LINIMENT is truly a celebrated remedy, and has done more to alleviate human suffering than any other remedy ever discovered.
One or two applications will relieve the most severe pain, bruise or sprain.
Two bottles will cleanse, purify, and heal the foulest ulcer or sore, and it will heal the most severe burn or scald without a scar.
Every family should have a supply constantly on hand, for use in time of need.
Read the following extract of a letter, which is incontestable proof of its wonderful efficacy:
A BLIND MAN RESTORED TO SIGHT.
J. H. MCLEAN—Dear Sir: * * * I have been suffering for four years with rheumatic sore eyes, being at times altogether blind. I procured the advice of several physicians, but none of them could do me any good. By the advice of a friend I applied your "Volcanic Oil Liniment," according to the directions around the bottle, and it has cured me permanently. I have used it since for bruises, pains, &c., and it has always given immediate relief. I live on the main road near Farmington.
Yours, respectfully, JOHN H. ALLERD.
Jefferson county, Mo.
For horses it is far superior to any other remedy for curing lameness, bruises, cuts, old sores, swellings, &c.
We say, then, to all who may be suffering from external diseases, call at once and get a supply. Thousands of bottles are sold (and used) daily, and we have never heard of a case where it has failed in giving relief when properly applied.
☞For sale by J. H. MCLEAN, the proprietor, corner Third and Pine streets, St. Louis, and by all respectable dealers in Medicines everywhere

MEDICINE FOR THE BILLION!
A Certain Remedy for all Diseases of
MAN OR ANIMALS,
Requiring an External Application.
Warranted in every Case for which it is Recommended!
THE MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT!
Unlike all other popular medicines, it is used by many prominent members of the faculty, and many of the public Hospitals. Their prejudices have yielded to indisputable and incontrovertible demonstrations of cures performed where their remedies had failed.
It has cured more cases of
RHEUMATISM
than any other medicine ever used. Its efficacy in this terrible disease is acknowledged by all who have used it. It not only cures the complaint, but appears to give a vigor and elasticity to the limbs, before unknown, thus performing a double office.
A FEW TESTIMONIALS.
PATH FINDER OFFICE, May 11, 1854.
G. W. WESTBROOK:—
Please send me by the bearer three large bottles of your Mexican Mustang Liniment, as I wish to take it up to my place in Vermont, not thinking it advisable to do without it. I have used it in my family and on my horses, and have found it invaluable. Yours,
J. T. WHITNEY.
BLIZABETHTOWN, TENN., May 25, 1855.
MR. G. W. WESTBROOK:—
Dear Sir—It affords me much pleasure in saying to you that the Mexican Mustang Liniment outsells any medicine that I have ever had for sale, and comes nearer doing what it promises to do. Send me another supply, as I am nearly out. Yours respectfully,
JOHN SINGLETRAY, P. M.
PHILADELPHIA, June 11, 1854.
MR. G. W. WESTBROOK:
Sir—My son was afflicted with a swelling upon the knee joint, which confined him to the house. I had a doctor attending him for some time, but he did not do him any good. One of my neighbors told me to use the Mustang Liniment. I asked the doctor if I could do so, and he told me he thought I could not do better.
I procured one bottle, and in about a week he was able to go out.
I can safely recommend it to the afflicted,
Respectfully yours, MRS. BENNETT.
W. S. Ladd & Co., of Portland, Oregon, writes that there is an immense demand for the Mexican Mustang Liniment in that country, and orders forty gross to be shipped by Golden Gate, that sails in a few days from New York.
Park & White of San Francisco, California, order 100 gross, to be forwarded by first clipper for that port.
PORT AU PRINCE, HAYTI, Jan. 16th, 1854.
I had the pleasure to receive invoice and boxes Mexican Mustang Liniment per Croton, and have no doubt it will have a brisk sale on the island.
GEORGE RACKSTER.
To give health, strength and elacity to the limbs, there is nothing can equal in effect, the
MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT.
FARMERS AND LIVERY STABLE KEEPERS
have need it for the following diseases with extraordinary success, certifying invariably to the efficacy of the liniment, and the truthfulness of our assertions in its behalf:
Spavin, Splint, Ring-bone, Fistula, Wind Galls, Big Head, Bruises, Strains, String-halt, Scratches, Cracked Heels, Sweeney, Saddle, Collar, or Harness Galls, Hard Lumps or Tumor, Film, or other diseases of the Eye, Poll-Evil, &c.
The small sizes retail for 25 cents per bottle;
The medium size retail for 50 cents per bottle;
The large sizes retail for one dollar per bottle.
The medium holds three times as much as the small;
The Large holds nearly three times as much as the medium,
Therefore the large bottles are the cheapest.

Death o' the Honorable Leonidas Shaver.

In publishing the circumstances and ceremonies of the death and burial of Judge Shaver, who, beyond all kind of doubt or question, died of disease during the forenoon of June 29, 1855, we have been more minute than is customary, not only from a high personal regard to the deceased, but for the greater satisfaction of a large circle of friends both here and elsewhere, and more especially for the consolation of his far distant relatives, inasmuch as his last hours were providentially unattended by those soothing cares, attentions and amenities, which so many were able, skilled in, and ready to extend to smooth his pathway to the silent repose of the tomb.—[Editor of the Deseret News.

INQUEST on the body of the HON. LEONIDAS SHAVER, who was found dead in bed at his residence in G. S. L. City, at 1 o'clock P. M. on Friday the 29th day of June 1855.

[IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE LAWS OF U. T.]

Steps were immediately taken to hold an inquest on the body. The Mayor, Hon. J. M. Grant, acting, by virtue of his office, as Justice of the Peace, administered the usual oath to the following jurors: WM. BELL, WM. C. STAINES, AND. CUNNINGHAM, DANIEL CARN, C. C. BRANHAM, BRYANT STRINGHAM.

At 4 o'clock P. M., Dr. Garland Hurt, Indian Agent for U. T., and Dr. William France were called in to make an examination of the body.

The Mayor having requested Dr. Hurt, Judge Shaver's medical attendant, to state when he last saw the deceased, and to give his opinion respecting the cause of death:—Dr. Hurt said, "I saw the Judge some four or five days ago, and he then told me that he purposed getting bled, I remarked that I was fearful of the propriety of his getting bled copiously, as he was constantly under the necessity of taking stimulants to strengthen him and to alleviate his sufferings; and as he had brought himself under the influence and custom of taking stimulants, I believed in my own mind that the loss of blood would be calculated to prostrate his system, and I therefore discouraged the idea of his being bled, and he gave it up.

I saw him again two days ago, and he was in better spirits, and said that he felt better. Since then I have understood that he had taken cold.

He complained to me, some two weeks ago, of a violent pain in his ear; I looked at it but could not see any distinct marks of inflammation, that is to any great extent; and I arrived at the conclusion that if inflammation existed it was at the internal ear, or what is called the tympanum, and if the disease was seated there, the pain would be very violent indeed.

Persons acquainted with the anatomy of the ear know that the tympanum is the part upon which sensation is felt, and by which hearing is produced, and of course that involves the nerves, and hence such a complaint must have acted powerfully upon the brain; but when I last saw him I had hopes that he would soon be better, from the fact that he seemed more cheerful.

The disease of the brain would come under the name of Neuralgia. It is possible that some inflammation might have been there for some time, and have gradually increased, and it might be possible for it to have travelled until it reached the lining membrane of the brain. We are not certain that such was the case, but if it were so, the cause of death is easily explained. And it is more to be expected that this is the fact for the reason that I have before named, viz., that he has spoken of his suffering in the head, that he felt a deadly sensation in his head which extended to his ear.

Dr. France and myself had made up our minds that we would examine his ear the first opportunity, but unfortunately we did not do so.

The Mayor enquired of Dr. Hurt whether he knew that deceased took any strong medicine. Dr. Hurt replied, "not any that I was aware of, excepting he was in the habit of taking opium."

Mr Edward Barr was called and sworn as a witness. He stated, in answer to questions put by the Mayor, that "he saw deceased last night, and thought it was between 11 and 12 o'clock. I remember pulling out my watch to look at the time, and it was about 12 o'clock, but I afterwards learned that my watch was half an hour too fast, therefore it would be about half past 11 when I last saw JUDGE SHAVER alive. He was sitting in this room, in that chair, smoking, but I thought at the time that there was a dejection about him which was unusual; I looked at him once or twice particularly, and had that impression.

He was naturally very reserved, occasionally, however, he was very free, but his habits of late have been somewhat peevish."

The Mayor then asked witness what time he was called in to see the corps. Answer:—"I did not come as soon as I was sent for, being in the store alone at the time; but I came as soon as I could possibly leave. I came round with Mrs. Dotson, and got in at that window, and found that there were no signs of life. I presume that would be about one o'clock P. M.

Mr. W. C. Staines was asked, had he any feelings or pain more than usual, that you know of, when you saw him last night? Witness: "I asked him last evening, if he felt any worse, and he said that he believed he had taken cold; that he had left the window open the night previous; that his ear was worse, and he believed that he had taken cold.

He also remarked that he had a dulness in his right ear, and believed it was going to settle upon him, for, said he, 'when a fresh disease comes upon me, I can always tell if it is going to settle upon me.' I observed him raise himself, I think it was upon his right side, and draw his hand down his body from the head, remarking that he felt a peculiar deadness in the right ear."

Dr. France said, "I am aware, for a certainty, that there was no other disease that he was laboring under than the disease in the head; but he has taken opium, and if he were without it for any length of time it would produce those deadly sensations. I have used opium for years, and therefore know something about its effects. When persons take tobacco, or any other stimulant, and then are left entirely without it, or give it up altogether, a paralysis follows. I have experienced it under those circumstances; and this would produce inflammation in the ear, and it is possible that it might burst and discharge into the brain, and a very small portion of pressure upon the brain would produce death.

His complaining of heaviness might have arisen from the formation of an abscess, or rupture, and this bursting and running in upon the brain would produce death.

It might be that another person being without his usual stimulants, one for instance of a feverish constitution, might have got over it; the inflammation, or fever, would have passed out with a little paralysis."

One of the jurors asked if death might not have been produced by taking too much opium, to which Dr. France replied, "I do not suppose that he could easily have taken enough to have produced death, from the fact of his being so accustomed to take it."

Mrs. Dotson, the mistress of the house, was next sworn, and, on being interrogated as to when she last saw deceased, said (addressing the Mayor) "Well sir, I believe it was near one o'clock this morning, as he came out of his room; he wanted to ask me for something; it was then that I saw him last." Could he speak then? "Yes sir: he was more pleasant than usual, for he had not been so pleasant and agreeable for a few days past. He wanted to get some eye salve, and I had to come and get it."

Did he complain yesterday at all? "Yes sir; he sat in the room yesterday, and talked, while I was getting his supper. He said he felt dead in one ear. He eat his supper as usual, and then smoked."

What time did he usually eat supper? "He never eat supper till between nine and ten o'clock P. M.

What time did he usually retire? "He scarcely ever retired before 12 or 1 o'clock, and sometimes he would stay up until 4 or 5 in the morning, and would not get up till very late."

Mayor. How late would he sleep of a morning? "Till about 12 o'clock, sir, and when he got up he would rap at the door for clear water, and a shirt. This morning I thought he might feel like sleeping a little later, and I would not wake him. I came and looked through the window, and I saw that there was a change in his countenance, and I got Mr. Barr to get in at the window and open the door, and we found that he was dead."

The body was laying at the time of the inquest just as it was when first noticed, and A. W. Babbitt, Esq., W. C. Staines, R. T. Burton, and W. I. Appleby testified that that was the position he always lay and slept in, they having been much with him.

The Mayor observed, that when deceased was a student at college he was stabbed, and had always believed that the point of the knife was still in his hip.

A girl, whose name the reporter did not hear, was then sworn, and deposed:—"I saw him (deceased) quite late last night." Did you hear him complain of pain in the head, or of any special disease, when you attended upon him? "No sir."

The Mayor then requested Doctors Hurt and France to examine the body as much as they conveniently could. They did so; after which they announced that the bone of the internal ear was actually destroyed, and that the probability was that the abscess had burst and the matter penetrated into the brain, and they were fully of the opinion that that was quite sufficient to cause death.

The Mayor asked Dr. Hurt if he was perfectly satisfied that death might be caused in that way?

Dr. Hurt—I am perfectly satisfied, from the fact of the bone of the ear being rotten. An unaccustomed hand might discover that fact, if he were only to feel the present condition of the bone of the ear with the probe.

Dr. France remarked that the bones of the ear are the hardest of any in the human body, excepting the teeth. There is also matter on the probe, and the probability is that the matter from the abscess has discharged into the cavity of the brain, and that it has been discharging slowly for days, and that alone is sufficient to produce death.

The Mayor said, if any of the jurors had any more questions, or desired to examine the body, they had opportunity.

The Mayor further said, I am satisfied from the testimony of the Physicians and of the witnesses that JUDGE SHAVER has come to his death from disease in the ear and head. And concluded by saying that he would do his best to prepare for the funeral, and should be happy to carry out any suggestions which the members of the Bar might have to offer.

PROCEEDINGS AND RESOLUTIONS.

At a meeting of the Judiciary and members of the Bar residing in Great Salt Lake City, Territory of Utah, held at the Council House, at 10 1-2 A. M., of June 30, 1855, to express their sentiments in relation to the sudden death of the Hon. LEONIDAS SHAVER, Associate Justice of the Supreme and Judge of the First Judicial Courts of the United States, in and for said Territory, Hon. John F. Kinney, Chief Justice, was called to the Chair, and William I. Appleby Esq., clerk of said Supreme and First District Courts, appointed Secretary.

The Chairman appointed Hon. A. W. Babbitt, Judge Z. Snow, and Col. Geo. A. Smith, a Committee to draft resolutions on behalf of the meeting. The Committee retired for thirty minutes.

THE BODY.

During the absence of the Committe the remains of JUDGE SHAVER were borne by the Pall Bearers, Daniel Carn, Frederick Kesler, Dimick B. Huntington, Andrew Cunningham, Leonard W. Hardy, Bryant Stringham, James W. Cummings, and William G. Perkins, preceded by the City Marshal, into the large lower room of the Council House, and placed upon a table in the center of the room. Owing to the heat of the weather (Far Ther. 96) and consequent rapid decomposition, the lid of the coffin had been previously fastened, much to the disappointment of a great concourse of friends, large numbers of whom passed through the Hall.

At 11 o'clock the Committee reported the following, which were unanimously adopted:

RESOLUTIONS.

Resolved.—1st. That with feelings of sorrow, we deplore the sudden demise of our esteemed fellow citizen, and able statesman, the Hon. LEONIDAS SHAVER, who is now no more, but lies in the cold embrace of death; and, while we humbly bow to the mandate of heaven's King, we mourn the loss of him we cannot restore.

Resolved.—2nd. That in his acquirements as a lawyer, jurist, statesman, and scholar—as a high minded and honorable man, whether on the bench, in his official capacity, or in private, and in his sterling integrity and impartial administration of justice in all cases—he had but few equals, and less superiors.

Resolved.—3rd. That for nearly three years he has been in our midst acting in his official capacity as Associate Justice of the Supreme and First Judicial District Courts of the United States with honor to himself and to the office he held, and with perfect satisfaction to the public, being ever attentive to the discharge of his duties, courteous to strangers, and forbearing, a friend of right, and meriting the respect and confidence of all who knew him.

Resolved.—4th. That we condole with his surviving relatives in the East, or elsewhere, in his loss, and tender our unfeigned sympathies to them, and hereby inform them, that although he died far away from the land of his birth and the scenes of his childhood, which were bedewed with his earliest tear, yet he was gathered to his fathers in a land not of strangers but of true, devoted, and warm hearted friends who drop heart felt tears to his memory.

Resolved.—5th. That we will attend his funeral in procession, this afternoon.

Resolved.—6th. That in memory of the deceased, the Judiciary and members of the Bar will wear crape upon the left arm, the usual badge of mourning, for thirty days, and that the Executive and other Federal officers of the Territory be respectfully invited to do the same.

Resolved.—7th. That the Hon. Chief Justice Kinney be invited to deliver a Eulogy upon the life of the deceased.

Resolved.—8th. That the Court be requested to record the proceedings of this meeting, together with the Eulogy (when delivered) in the Journal of said Supreme and First District Courts.

Resolved.—9th. That the Editor of the "Deseret News" be requested to publish the proceedings of this meeting.

J. F. KINNEY, Chairman.

W. I. APPLEBY, Sec'y.

After the unanimous adoption of the above Resolutions, the large Hall was densely crowded by an audience who listened breathlessly to the following

EULOGY BY CHIEF JUSTICE KINNEY.

[Set up from Judge Kinney's Manuscript.]

BRETHREN OF THE BAR AND FRIENDS:—

Having been called upon to preside over your meeting on this mournful occasion, in compliance with your resolution I will pay a passing tribute to the memory of our departed brother. The Hon. LEONIDAS SHAVER, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States for this Territory, is no more. He suddenly departed this life at his lodgings on the morning of the 29th instant.—Without protracted illness to warn him or his friends of his approaching dissolution, his unexpected demise has appalled every heart and cast a shade of gloom over this entire city.

The evening before his death he complained of numbness about the head, and pain in his right ear. Having suffered much pain for years, and his health having been greatly impaired in consequence, this expression did not at all alarm the lady with whom he was boarding. At his customary hour he retired to rest, and as he did not rise as usual, the inmates of the house became alarmed, and his room being entered by Mr. Barr, a particular friend, JUDGE SHAVER was found in his natural sleeping position, the victim of that destroyer to whose power, sooner or later, we must all yield.

I am not sufficiently familiar with the early history of JUDGE SHAVER to give it that particular notice due his reputation. He was, I think, a native of Virginia; and in 1852, when Mr. Fillmore appointed him to the honorable office he held at the time of his death, a resident of Missouri. As a man and jurist I think I knew him. As a gentleman he possessed that true dignity of character which never fails to inspire respect, or secure esteem.—He was dignified without being haughty—affable, without being too familiar—fond of retirement and seclusion from the world, and yet social in his feelings and happy with his friends. His conversational powers were of a high order, and he never failed to be both amusing and instructive. With a mind well stored with historical and legal learning, it was easy for him at any time to afford the lover of literature—or the slave of the profession a rich repast.

He was seldom found out of his own room, except during the sessions of court, and his friends were obliged to seek him out in order to enjoy his society. He was a close student to the day of his death, and his historical and miscellaneous reading was not neglected. He was a fine naturalist, as the various specimens collected by him in his room bear ample proof. He was a scholar and critic. He possessed a most wonderful memory, and a clearness and sharpness of intellect which I have never seen equalled. Comprehensive in his views, accurate in his reasonings, and correct in his deductions, he was preeminently fitted to adorn the bench, and distinguish himself in his profession. It is in this sphere that JUDGE SHAVER was universally admired and loved. However much as a citizen he merits our esteem, yet his character and ability as a jurist are so prominent, and stand out in such bold relief, that they impart a halo to his memory, and clothe it with that veneration which alone belongs to true greatness.

With judicial ability, was blended the most scrupulous honesty and that which is equal to either, a firmness of purpose and a moral power, which enabled him to enunciate the law regardless of consequences or the opinions of men. Ability, integrity, firmness and moral courage are qualifications which ever have and ever must adorn the bench, all are necessary, none dispensable.

It is but due to the departed to remark that he possessed these to an eminent degree. I have seen all of these virtues severely tested. Of the many important cases tried by the lamented Judge, involving, as some of them did, the feelings of the entire community, no person, however much interested, has ever been able to detect the slightest bias or prejudice or shrinking from the announcement of a decision adverse perhaps to the wishes of the church and community. And no higher meed of praise can be awarded the memory of our departed brother than this, that, notwithstanding these decisions, the prominent members of the church are among the most ardent admirers of his judicial character.

The loss of JUDGE SHAVER in the prime of life will be severely felt by the profession and Bench. To me it comes with peculiar force. A brother is taken suddenly from my side. A bright and shining light in the law is extinguished. A Judge, cherished and loved by us all, is fallen, and we are left to deplore his loss.

Here in this court room, where his fidelity has been so often tested, and his eloquence and lucid expositions of the law so often heard, all that we see of him is his cold and lifeless body—still speaking to us—not in legal strains—but no less eloquent, "Be ye therefore ready also, for the Son of man cometh at an hour when ye think not."

RESOLUTIONS

For and in behalf of all the inhabitants of Utah, by the Hon. J. M. Grant, Mayor of G. S. L. City:

1st. Resolved, in behalf of and for all the citizens of the Territory of Utah, that LEONIDAS SHAVER, Judge of the first judicial district of said Territory, did in life merit and have our full and entire confidence and esteem, as a wise and impartial Judge, who did mete out justice to all without courting favor, or dreading frowns.

2d. Resolved, that we will hold his name in honorable remembrance in all time to come, and when the Archangel's trump shall give the signal to bring the sleepers forth, those who hold the keys of life and death will not forget JUDGE SHAVER.

The above resolutions were unanimously adopted by the large audience present, and will as unanimously be adopted by all the people, so soon as they become acquainted with them.

RESOLUTIONS BY HON. A. W. BABBITT.

Be it further resolved, that the thanks of the citizens of this city and the people of the Territory be given to the Hon. Mayor, J. M. Grant, for his kindness in taking charge of the remains of the Hon. JUDGE SHAVER, and in his energetic arrangements for his funeral obsequies.

The Hon. Chairman then said, brethren of the Bar and fellow citizens, I will now respectfully invite Prof. Orson Pratt to make some remarks on this occasion.

REMARKS BY PROF. PRATT.

Friends and Brethren, we have assembled ourselves together on this solemn occasion to commemorate one of our departed friends who has suddenly been taken from our midst.

It is customary among most of the nations of the earth, on an occasion of this kind, to deliver what is termed a funeral sermon. I have been called upon quite unexpectedly this forenoon to perform this office. I do not expect to be lengthy in my remarks, but shall endeavor to say something in relation to the present condition of man and his future state.

We have been placed upon this earth for a wise purpose, in a state and condition of being to prepare ourselves for a higher state and order of things. These are the objects for which man exists here. Generations have come and gone. Millions and hundreds of millions of human beings have peopled this globe, and have depared hence, and we must all follow in the footsteps of the generations that are past.

It is a decree of Jehovah who governs and controls the destinies of worlds, who controls all intelligent beings, that man should die. No one can escape this decree! No one can prevail with the grim monster death, and overcome him, but we must all sooner or later meet that enemy of mankind, and be laid prostrate in the tomb!

Why is it that so great and good a Being, a Being who is full of benevolence and love, a Being who is filled with mercy and compassion, should suffer such a dire calamity to befal the human race? Why is it? Is it because he delights to see them writhe in pain and distress? No: it is because man has sinned; it is because he has offended his Maker—because he has transgressed sacred and holy laws, because he has subjected himself to the monster death, to the miseries, wretchedness and vanities of this life. It is not, however, because we ourselves have sinned that death comes upon us; but it is because of the original sin; for all will admit that infants that are incapable of sinning against God, who are unacquainted with his revealed will, who discern not between good and evil, fall victims to the destroyer, as well as others. If, then, this curse seizes upon the innocent and upon those who have not transgressed the laws of heaven, it must be in consequence of the original sin that so great a calamity is in the world.

"By man came death," says the Apostle Paul. Again the same Apostle says, "As by the offence of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation; even so by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men unto the justification of life," (Acts v.; 18). What free gift? The free gift of salvation from the grave, the salvation of our bodies, or in other words, of our corporeal systems. The redemption of our bodies from the grave is brought about through the atonement of Jesus Christ; hence we have had no agency in bringing death into our world, and we have no agency in the redemption of our world. One man brought death into the world, and one man brought redemption from death.

This redemption is just as extensive as the curse, so far as the body is concerned. The curse affected all, and the bodies of all will be redeemed. When I speak of this redemption, I wish to be distinctly understood, that I mean the redemption of the body from the grave. If the fall lays all mankind low in the dust, the redemption will bring them forth from the dust. If the fall shut them out from His face and presence, the redemption will bring them back into His presence to behold His face.

Jesus was lifted up by sinful men upon the cross; what for? That all mankind might be lifted up from the grave to be judged before God; not for Adam's sins, but for their own personal sins; hence there is no person dwelling upon the face of the earth that is free from the original curse that came in consequence of the transgression of Adam.

If we had no sins of our own, we should ever remain after this universal redemption of our bodies, in the presence of God, but if we individually have committed sins, we shall be again cast out from the presence of God, unless we have complied with the great plan of salvation revealed by our Saviour.

The great question raised by many with regard to the extent of the atonement, is: Will all mankind be saved eternally in the presence of God, in the celestial kingdom, who have personally sinned? No; they will not. There is a certain class of mankind that will be saved in the fulness of celestial glory, and partake of all the blessings held forth by the plan of redemption. But this applies only to those who are faithful and obedient.

There are others who will partake of a portion of this redemption; but they will differ from the first, as much as the moon differs from that bright luminary of heaven—the sun. Hence Paul, in speaking of the redemption of man, says, "there are bodies celestial, and bodies terrestrial, and the glory of the celestial is one and that of the terrestrial another," and by the glory of the stars he represents a third class of beings. And again in order to show the difference existing in this third class, he says "as one star differeth from another star in glory, so also is the resurrection of the dead."

Here, then, are three distinct classes of beings in the eternal world, all of whom partake of happiness, each to be rewarded according to their works: one is represented by the sun, another by the moon, and a third by the glory of the stars, that is, by the apparent glory of the stars, or as they appear to us, and not as they would appear to individuals who are in their immediate vicinity.

This third class, it appears, differ in glory while the others are alike. In this third class there is a difference according to their works. Some will shine forth like the brightest stars of the firmament; while others whose works have not been so honorable, will be like some of those stars that appear to the naked eye in the heavens much inferior.

Who are those individuals who will enter into the higher state of glory? I answer; they are the individuals who keep the law of God, who believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, who repent and forsake their sins, who receive the ordinances of the gospel, who are baptised in the likeness of Christ's death, who arise from the liquid element in the likeness of his resurrection, who receive the laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost, who walk steadfastly in all the principles revealed for the salvation of man, and who continue faithful to the end.

These are the righteous who will be admitted into the highest glory. Their glory will be full; it will be like the glory of the Son of God; as the Apostle John has said, "Beloved, now are we the sons of God; it does not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when He shall appear we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as he is." Their bodies will come forth from the grave fashioned like unto His glorious body, and in every respect they will inherit the same glory that the Son inherits, and hence they are one as the Father and Son are one.

Now many religious societies are so uncharitable in their feelings, that they suppose that all who die, not having received the plan of salvation, will sink down into a night of endless darkness. I speak of a certain class of Christians; they suppose there will be only two places—heaven and hell; and that all those who do not enter into heaven will sink to hell, where they must remain eternally.

But these are not the views of the Latter-day or Former-day Saints. They believe that all will be judged according to their works. If they do not receive the fulness of the plan of salvation, yet, if they are among the honorable men of the earth, having dealt uprightly and honorably one with another, and have lived up to the light which they are in possession of, they will in due time be redeemed, and partake of a degree of glory; such will be exalted to all the happiness and greatness, wisdom and knowledge, light and intelligence which they are prepared for or capable of receiving. It is true, they may have to associate in the intermediate state with beings, and powers, and principles that will not be pleasant; for the spirit world is, in some respects, like the world we live in.

Beings that enter the spirit world find there classes and distinctions, and every variety of sentiment and feeling; there is just as much variety in the spirit world as in this; consequently, they have to grapple with those powers and influences that surround them. Spirits have their agency between death and the resurrection just as much as we have here. They are just as liable to be deceived in the spirit world as we are here. Those who are deceived may assist in deceiving others, for they have their classes, their theories, and their opinions. Almost everything that we see here is the same in the spirit world.—They are mixed up with every variety and are as liable to be deluded there as here.

Although the righteous enter into a state of rest and peace, and enjoy happiness in a great degree; yet their happiness is not complete; they are not perfected in glory. It is only their spirits that are there, and they will have to mingle more or less with the inferior minds, and different dispositions; but still they will enjoy a great degree of happiness, for their own conciousness of having done right imparts pleasure, consequently it is a state of rest, of peace, free from the imperfections of mortality; but to say that they will be free from all associations with beings that are sinful and inferior to themselves, we do not believe. It is true, they will go back to where Jesus is; they will have communion with him, and behold his face, but they will not always remain in one particular place or position, they will have their works to perform, as we have in this life. EXCHANGE ON SALT LAKE.

Emigrants, Missionaries, and all persons wishing to carry or send money to any part of Utah, are hereby notified that we have made the necessary arrangements, and are prepared to furnish SIGHT DRAFTS on Gov. B. Young, or on any of the principal Mercantile houses in Salt Lake City. Bring or send your money to the Luminary Office, and drafts for the same amount will be returned to you, or forwarded by succeeding mail to any person in Utah, as you may direct. Duplicates will be furnished, whenever required, so that in case of failure of mails, no loss will be sustained, and you will avoid the risk of transporting specie, besides the Church wish to use it here.

ST. LOUIS, 1855. ERASTUS SNOW.

A SPIRITUAL PROCLAMATION.

We have received per favor of a correspondent qui se nom, Martin Harris, a copy of "A Proclamation and warning voice unto all Kings, Governors, and Rulers in authority, and to all people," under date of 13th May 1855, purporting to come from Moses, Elias, Elijah, and John. We are requested to give it a favorable notice in the Luminary, because it points out the Vallies of the mountains as the place of gathering, and because it has come from such illustrious characters as those above mentioned, and moreover because it has come through a medium professedly Mormon. The late editor has marked out for us a free and independent course, and has left certain prominent landmarks by which to steer our course, through the oceans of confusion and error. We have, moreover, keys given us by which to judge between truth and falsehood, by which to test the authority of those spirits, and spiritual communications now prevailing in the earth, by which to know and understand the just value and importance of all spiritual communications, and to determine the real standard of all pretenders and pretentions.

We have no more regard for revelations purporting to emenate from Moses, Elias, Elijah, and John, than for those coming from Calvin, Wesley, Tom Paine, or Zachery Taylor, and the assumption that the medium, through whom this proclamation has been given is a Mormon, does not in the least enhance its importance according to our judgment. We have a sort of instinctive antipathy to Feminine revelations, and whether the spirits reveal themselves through professed Mormons, or professed Methodists, it is just the same to us; we have no more sympathy or regard for the spirits and revelations, when revealed through the former than through the latter.

The doctrine and principles contained in the proclamation appear to be generally true. And in conformity with the doctrines and principles of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints; but there is no more truth presented than has been known and preached by the members of the bers of the Church of Jesus Christ for several years; there was, therefore, no need for spirits to reveal it. It would be superfluous for the Lord to send his angels, to tell us that the vallies of the mountains, are the place of gathering for the Saints in these last days; we have learned that fact years ago, and the Elders of Israel are abroad in all the earth proclaiming truths revealed by the voice of God, and of His Son Jesus Christ. When Elias was commissioned by the Father to restore the Aaronic Priesthood to man. He appeared unto the Prophets' Joseph Smith, and Oliver Cowdery and ordained them Priests in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, they then Baptized and ordained each other, by order of Elias, (John the Baptist,) that a perfect pattern might be given unto all who might follow after. When Peter, James and John came they laid their hands upon the head of Joseph and ordained him an apostle of the Church of Jesus Christ. And when Elijah came, as was predicted by the prophet Malachi, to turn the hearts of the fathers, to the children, and the children to the fathers, lest the whole earth should be smitten with a curse, he came to Joseph and committed unto him all the keys of power and blessing and salvation pertaining unto this generation. The Melchisidec priesthood holds the keys of the ministering of angels; and Peter, James, John, Moroni, Michael, Gabrael, Elias, Elijah, and all angels of the higher spheres, or celestial orders, are bound by the common laws of the priesthood, which are the fixed and unalterable laws of God, to respect and honor the presidency of the Priesthood upon the earth, by revealing unto them first, every revelation of importance, concerning the gathering of Israel, the building up of Zion, and the establishment of the kingdom of God upon the earth. Therefore any spirits who may be found operating contrary to this order, unless it be for the individual benefit and acting under the presidency of the celestial sphere, may be considered lawless and disorderly spirits, and may reveal one truth, but one hundred errors on the back of it; and notwithstanding this disparity, some discovering the isolated truth are ready to fall down and worship it, and praise the name du Diable, for his condescention and goodness, in revealing some portions of truth, that has indisputably established itself in its fullness, in the sight of all nations.

We are decidedly sceptical concening the authenticity of the Proclamation, there is nothing original in it from begining to end, and any honest and intelligent critic, who might compare it with the published doctrines of the Church, contained in the Doctrines & Covenants would pronounce it plagiarism. It affords a striking example of "stealing Heaven's livery to serve the devil in;" the cloth is so well known that it may be recognized at first sight, and those who are not well posted up in regard to the laws and principles, that govern angels and spirits, may be easily deceived, for it is by this means that satan transformeth himself into an angel of light, calling himself Moses, Elias, Elijah, and John, would deceive if it were possible the very elect.

ARRIVAL OF THE UTAH MAILS.

The Mission of the Grass-hoppers in Utah—Two Hundred and one Indians Baptised at Los Vogues.

We received on Saturday the 25th inst., Deseret news to the 27th of June, accompanied by letters from Governor Young, Colonel George A. Smith, Hon. I. C. Haight, and others, from which we learn that general good health is prevailing in the vallies of the mountains. The grass-hoppers continue their ravages in some portions of the territory, although President Young, says: "The grass-hoppers have principally, left now, and it is expected that crops will be raised from late planting and sowing, but if crops should be good from this time out, there will be a scarcity in the valley, the coming winter, and if troops are intending to winter there they will be expected to take provisions with them, or do without." A correspondent of the Morning Herald writing upon this subject says; "If they (the grass-hoppers,) should only have the effect of keeping off the corrupt and licentious soldiery, such as were quartered upon us last winter, we shall feel abundantly satisfied with the success of their mission. We would rather feed all the locusts of Egypt and grass-hoppers of Utah, than feed such craven hearted wretches, who fed and fattened upon our hospitality last winter, and then abused our kindness by the grossest outrages upon decency and order." The foregoing is tolerably good but we will go a little further. We not only desire that they may veto the presence of the loathsome reptiles, above named, but drive out of Utah every ungodly hypocrite that may have crept into that country, and scare away every member of the fraternity that may have calculated crawling thither.

President Young says moreover: "It will sift the Saints, all of which will in the end prove for the salvation of Israel. Faithful saints will stand the test, while the half hearted and fearful will flutter off like chaff before the wind." The Lord knows how to provide for his people; and the righteous have no need to fear, but the wicked have cause to fear and tremble, for there are no promises of good concerning them, and their only hope, if they remain with the people of God is trouble and vexation of spirit, but the righteous may be glad and rejoice, for the Lord hath spoken good concerning them, and hath said unto his servant, the prophet of this age, "it is my business to provide for my Saints." And those who trust him will be sustained, and will grow up "as calves in the stall;" for if it were necessary the Lord could open the windows of heaven and feed his people with angels food as in days of old.

Elder Isaac C. Haight writes under date of Cedar City, Utah, June 18th, from which we extract the following: "As for the times and seasons, all things are going on about as usual. Brother W. W. Willes has just returned from the Los Vogues; and reports that while on the 'Muddy,' the Indians came to him and requested baptism; and after they covenanted with them they went into the water and baptized two hundred and one, and confirmed them on the waters edge. They all felt well, and promised to do better; and not kill and steal the traveller's horses and cattle."

It will be seen by the above, and by the success of other Elders who have visited other tribes; that the keys of salvation are now turned in their favor, and the Lord is beginning to pour out His Spirit upon them, that the covenants made with their fathers may be fulfilled.

LITERARY NOTICE.

Harpers new monthly Magazine for September has come to hand, and is welcome as an old and valued friend. Harper is too well known to need praise from his Cotemporaries, but they all agree in pronouncing his excellent Magazine the most interesting and instructive literary production of the age. It may be had of all Booksellers price 25 cents.

Elder James Case left this city on Tuesday 27th inst for Keokuk and its vicinity. The Saints in Gravois and this City have been warmed up and strengthened as far as his labors and influence have extended, and we counsel our brethern wherever he may go, to give heed to his counsels and instructions, uphold him before the Lord and before your brethern and he will bless you, for the spirit of Zion is in his heart, and those who will, may receive from him the blessing of peace and of salvation.

We have received letters from Elders Sheppard and Hudson of Alton, who feel grieved that it should be thought, and particularly that it should be published that the Saints in Alton are in any way suffering from froideur as stated by Elder Case, the correspondnce is too lenghty, for publishcation in our paper, suffice it to say, that Elder Case intended to to have qualified the statement, it having but a limited application, and those to whom it applies if they are not too cold, will appreciate the suggestion, and gradually warm up again.

THE OCTOBER CONFERENCE.

Many of our readers have commenced enquiring when our next general Conference will be held in St. Louis; for whose information, and all whom it may concern we nominate the 6th day of October, 1855, when we shall expect to see as many travelling Elders, Presidents of Branches, and other brethren, as can possibly attend on that occasion. It would be well to be on hand on the 5th, when the Conference will most likely commence.

Correspondence.

On the West side of the Big Blue,
Wednesday evening Aug. 15, '55.

I take another opportunity to inform you of our progress. Health, peace, and happiness is made manifest in our encampment, and above all, the Lord is prospering our progress; to-day we ferried the Blue which is exceedingly high. on account of so much rain. We are a few rods west from brother Harper's encampment, and are in good travelling condition. We have nailed our colors to the top of the mast and are determined before long, to breathe the fresh breezes of the beautiful Platte river valley. We shall from time to time, as opportunity affords, drop you a line, to let you know our progress, but both you and the Saints must excuse lengthy letters from us, as we are all the time in a hurry. May peace and blessings crown your labors, in your Presidency of the Saint Louis Stake, is the constant prayer of your friend and brother. We know not the distance that Alred's camp is behind us.

Yours in haste, MILO ANDRUS.

HISTORIAN'S OFFICE, G. S. L. CITY,
June the 30th, 1855.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LUMINARY.

Sir—I take up my pen to resume my monthly correspondence with you, hoping that your valuable paper is prospering and gladdening the hearts of mulutudes by its bright rays of truth. My object is to post you up with the position of affairs here, as regards public improvements, industry, &c., and not to write sermons.

Great preperations are being made in this city and other parts of the Territory, to celebrate the 4th of July on a grand scale.

Governor Young has been on an excursion northward, accompanied by the Honbls. Kimball and Grant, Professors Pratt, Carrington, Fox, &c. They have succedd in establishing the line of 42° between this Territory and that of Oregon, on the California road.

Messrs. Thomes & Pugh have commenced a mercantile business in the store formerly occupied by Holladay, Warner & Co., having bought the remainder of Judge Kinney's stock.

A new store is being built on 1st South Street by Loren Babbitt, and a new brush manufactory hss been built by Gilbert Clements on East Temple Street.

The Temple has quite a swarm of workmen round it, and they have now got to the height of 8 feet with the foundation, ready for the basement. The Historian's Office has so far progresed as to be ready for the adobe work, as also the Music Hall, which is being built by Capt Ballo's Band.

Davis County has now got a Court House enclosed and being finished; while Great Salt Lake county, through Judge Smith and the Select Mem have a Court House under contract, which is to be built in the 14th Ward in this City, at a cost of about $20,000.

We have good news from all quarters respecting the Indians; they are quiet, and in a great many instances disposed to cultivate the earth. Wa-shekick, the Shoshone Cheif, wants Governor Young to select him a piece of farming land on Green River, as he cant trust to his own judgement in the selection of farming land.

Mr. Alpheus Hawes from the neighborhood of St. Mary's River, is now in this city, and reports there are 2,000 Indians living near his fathers ranch, who speak the Cheynne dialect, and who wish to learn to farm, because of the emigration to California, having scared away the large game. They are at present living on small game, fish and reptiles.

Now for the drawback: The grasshoppers, our most formidable enemies, are continuing their depredations on the wheat, &c., throughout the Territory, and are gaining reinforcements from young ones which are still hatching out on every bench. There will, in consequence, be no beets, and but very few onions raised this year, but the fruit is comparatively uninjured. The weather as hot or hottier, than it generally is in the later part of July and during August, and the drouth in connection with the lowness of the streams is completing what the grasshoppers leave unfinished. The common house flies swarm as though it was September.

There is comparatively no snow on the mountains.

At Parowan and Paragonah the grain is all destroyed; and they have turned the public square at Parowan into a potatoe field, and the brethern have distrubuted themselves, some to Rio Virgin to plant corn, some to the Pan-gwitch Lake on the head of Sevier to fish for trout, and others have gone to lumbering for the Iron works. The are still casting machinery at Cedar City for the Iron Works.

The fields in Milland and Juab Counties present the appearance of a desert, and about two thirds of the grain in Utah County is destroyed. A large black bug is also devouring the potatoes.

The grasshoppers have not as yet done so much damage in the Northern Counties and Toole, as in the South, but the drought, and scarcity of water for irrigation is causing vegetation to dry up.

The air is thick with these destructive incects as far as the eye can reach; they are like flakes of snow in a storm.

The brethern are still planting corn wherever there is a chance of water.

The Hon. LEONIDAS SHAVER died in his bed, to which he retired about 10 o'clock on the night of the 28th, locking his room as usual. His health had been very poor, and he did not usualy get up till a late hour; no alarm was consequently felt by the family, till about 12 o'clock of the 29th, when the woman at whose house he boarded looked into the room of the window, and saw that he lay in bed and appeared pale—called for Mr. Barr, a neighbor friend of Shavers, who opened the window and found that he was dead. The laws of Utah required an inquest to be held on his body; which was done by the Mayor, who summond a jury of the principal marchants. It appeared he had been under the care of Dr. Hurt—that his death had been caused by the bursting of an ulcer in his head. He sustained a high reputation in this Territory for his legal knowledge. He was much respected by all parties. He was a mun of independent mind. The members of the bar held a meeting and passed appropriate resolutions upon the subject. Chief Justice Kinney delivered a Eulogy in the State House to a large number of citizens. A resolution was passed expressive of the feelings of the people towards JUDGE SHAVER. Elder Orson Pratt delivered a funeral address. His remains were escorted to the grave by Major Burton's Battalion of Life-Gaurds. The Nauvoo Brass band, playing funeral music, accompanied by the Governor, Chief Justice, Members of the Utah Bar, many of the principal citizens in carriages, and a large concourse of foot.

The Hon. Z. Snow is appointed executor, by his will.

I have written to the Luminary by every mail.

Yours respectfully, GEORGE A. SMITH.

LITTLE BLUE, July 5, 1855.

PRESIDENT ERASTUS SNOW:

Dear Brother—I write to inform you of the death of Capt. Secrist, who died of Cholera, twenty miles east of the Litttle Blue. He was away from the camp hunting horses when he was taken sick, near the Nemehaw.

Brother Pugh, who was with him, left him in charge at Vermillion Creek, and hastened on to overtake brother Blair's company, and procured a carriage through the exertion of brother Stevenson, and sent back to bring him up to our camp, which was about fifty miles ahead of him. They arrived at the camp, on Turkey creek, at 2 o'clock on Sunday morning. He was very low at the time. In the morning we washed and anointed him, and laid our hands upon him. All day, on Sunday, he appeared quite easy with the exception of fever in his bowels. He died on Monday the second day of July, at 1 o'clock. We concluded to take his remains with us to the Valley, if possible. We procured tin from brother Jackman, in charge of Hooper & William's train, and brother Stevenson made a tin coffin but afterwards it was thought not sufficiently strong for the purpose, so we intered his remains on the banks of the Little Blue, where the road first strikes near the river bank.

We put up two posts, one at the head, and the other at the foot. His name is cut on the first one; it is plain to be seen, being but forty feet from the road, and about the same distance from the river. We are getting along very well—have had four deaths in the first division.

PLATT RIVER, above Kearny, the 15th.

We have had no opportunity of sending, so we are waiting for the mail to pass.

The number of deaths are as follows: Thomas Morgan, aged 12 years, from Alton, Illinois; measles and fever.

Stephen Welsh, aged 18 years, from Nova Scotia; cholera.

Mary Ann Falkner, aged 37 years, from Nova Scotia; cholera.

Stephen Falkner, aged 14 years, from Nova Scotia; cholera.

Burke Falkner, aged 4 years, from Nova Scotia; diarrhœa.

John Falkner, aged 2 years, from Nova Scotia; measles.

Nancy Welsh, aged 50 years, from Nova Scotia; Cholera.

We have seen nothing of the first company. All the trains are ahead of us, so we deemed it best to go on.

Yours, in the gospel covenant,
CHARLES SMITH.

In camp, near FORT KEARNEY, Aug. 9, 1855.

Dear Brother Hart—Thinking perhaps that a few items of news from the plains, might be interesting to the readers of the Luminary, I improve the present opportunity in writing a few lines. President Snow and myself left Mormon Grove on Friday the 3d inst., at 2 1-2 o'clock, P. M., with a light carriage and four mules. The same afternoon we passed a portion of the last company of P. E. Fund Saints, twelve miles out, on Stranger Creek, getting along well. Six miles further on, we came up with the church train, in charge of Captain Alred. We stayed over night with this company; they are travelling slowly, not having a sufficiency of teams, but I believe brother Snow made arrangements to procure more. We took supper with Capt. Alred; it was prepared by sister Hardy, who knows how to get up the good things on the plains, as well as at home. She selected a clean spot of prairie grass, on which to spread her cloth, and we seated ourselves on the ground, cross-legged, like a company of tailors.

Next morning we were up as soon as it was light, and drove off in company with the mail party, who left Independence for Salt Lake on the 1st inst.

Sunday morning, about 8 o'clock, we came up to Captain Harpers company, and took breakfast with brother Harper and sister Harriet. They were seventy-five miles from Mormon Grove, and getting along finely.

Monday morning, we reached Big Blue, and found camped near the river a train of merchandise belonging to Messrs Hooper & Williams, in charge of Captain Knowlton, brother Godby's little company was here also. They had lost many cattle, and were getting along slowly. Captain Hooper, who was a passenger in the mail coach, stopped here to regulate the affairs in the train, and to procure more oxen.

Tuesday morning we breakfasted on Sandy Creek, while there, six Pawnee Indians came into camp, we gave them some breakfast and then they tried to beg everything we had, provisions, blankets, clothing, and everything they saw. One even urged me to give him my shirt, which I respectfully declined doing.

Just as we were starting, one very honest looking young warrior, came to me and cordially shook my hand, and also President Snow's, and bade us an affectionate good bye. I cracked my whip and off we started; just at that moment the Indian stepped behind the carriage, and with his hunting knife cut loose our camp brass kettle; brother Snow saw the motion, and sprang out and caught him, and took the kettle away from him, he gave it up very good naturedly. We started again, and while brother Snow was getting into the carriage, the adroit thief stole our bucket of wagon grease, which hung behind the carriage; we did not miss it till we stopped for night. These Pawnee's are sly thieves, and require close watching; they have now left the road and gone up on Big Blue for a hunt, so our late emigrating companies will not be annoyed by them.

We met the July mail, that left Great Salt Lake City on the 3d ult., yesterday on Little Blue. They were detained several days at the Devil's Gate, waiting for an escort. From Mr. Branham, merchant, returning from Salt Lake, we got a copy of the Deseret News Extra, containing an account of the death and burial of Hon. Leonidas Shaver, associate Justice of the Supreme Court, for the Territory of Utah. From the mail party we learn that the companies of Saints that are forward of this place were in good health and getting along finely.

Elder Blair left his company near Ash Hollow, about the 12th ult., and went on to the Valley with the July mail.

We arrived here to-day, about 12 o'clock, having averaged fifty miles a day, and our mules are still in tolerable good condition. The soldiers here are prepairing for an extensive expedition against the Sioux. Gen. Harney is expected here on the 12th inst. The Indians on the road are reported quiet and friendly. The expedition of the Government troops is against the Sioux Indians, over on the Missouri river.

The conductor of the mail party has just applied to the commanding officer here, for an escort, but did not succeed in getting one. He says that he has orders to hold everything in readiness to march on the Indian expedition, at a moments warning; so we shall be obliged to go on without an escort.—There are eight men in our company, and we have little fears of being disturbed by the Indians. President Snow is in good health, and wishes a kind remembrance to all the Saints. Give my love to brother Swales and family, and all who enquire after your brother in the Lord.

CHARLES. H. BASSETT.

PLUM CREEK, July 11th 1855.

DEAR BRO. ERASTUS,

Last evening the third company commanded by brother Stevenson passed us and camped about a mile further on. The mail passed this morning by which we have been anxiously expecting dispatches from you and brother Ballantyne, and were consequently much disappointed in not receiving a line from either. We learn from the mail, that they passed brother Ballantyne's company, about three miles out from the Grove, on the fourth, so that we calculate it would take him fourteen or fifteen days to overtake us. We have already waited full that time, and to wait yet for his arrival would render it impossible for our provisions to hold out till we reach Salt Lake.

In our interview with Capt. Stevenson, he informed us that he had the privilege to proceed, and intended doing so. We felt that the same privilege would have been extended us if you could have sent us a communication to that effect.

The food for our cattle is very poor at this point, and the reports of Indian depredations, on which our instructions to stay are expressly founded, have proved not true. We consider it best, under these circumstances, to convene a council, and carefully weigh these matters over, trying to act as though you or brother Ballantyne were with us. The result of our deliberations is, that we had better move on and write you and brother Ballantyne to this effect, so that if in any case you may yet wish us to stay, either you or he may forward us instructions by the first opportunity presenting itself. We are happy to say we are all well, and unanimity of spirit and action chafacterize all our proceedings, praying God to bless you in all your undertakings for the advancement of his kingdom.

We remain affectionately yours,
JOHN HINDLY.

Persecution—Fines—Imprisonment—Organization of a Branch at Stockholm—Prospects.

29 Gothersgade, Copenhagen,
July the 13th, 1855.

PRESIDENT F. D. RICHARDS:

Dear Brother—Enclosed I send you the Scandinavian Statistical Report for the half-year ending June 30. It does not agree with the last exactly, but I believe it is nearer right, though I cannot assure you that it is entirely perfect. You will discover that there have been only four hundred and fifty baptised, and six new branches organized during the half-year. How far the hard winter and the general consequences thereof have contributed to hinder the spread of the work, you can judge as well as I can; but if there was not anything more than that, it would be but little. In many places the brethren are hunted as though they were wild beasts, and those who would be glad and willing to take our brethren in, that are out upon missions, and contribute to their necessities, dare not do it in many instances, owing to the stringent laws which exist, and a determination on the part of some to enforce them. The laws of the land shield the priests, and as they have no other source of refuge, unless it is to lies, they resort to them, and are the principal movers in their enforcement. Laws that have lain dormant for ages are brought into use, as the present would not apply, to carry out the hellish designs of those hireling shepherds, who are afraid of losing their flock, or rather their annual stipend.

Many of the brethren have been arrested, and banished from one place to another, some fined and imprisoned. In Skaane Conference, Sweden, there have been several arrested. During the month of March, a brother, by the name of A. Isgren, was arrested, cast into prison, then afterwards brought before the court, and doomed to pay a heavy fine, all for no other crime than having a meeting in his house, and preaching the gospel. There were also three other brethren arrested—Lars Larsen, P. Jonson, and O. Matsen. They were brought to an inn, and while in custody were very much abused a whole night. Some of the company tried to force them to drink brandy-wine, and were in favor of pounding them. Others took their part, and would not let them do it. Two of the brethren were finally discharged. Brother Larsen was brought to Malmo, confined several days in prison, then let loose. A few days after, they caught the President of the Conference, Niels Nielsen, in the same place. He was greatly threatened, and while he was being led by two men to the same inn where they had previously had the others, he being of the right grit, and withal a little springy, slipt out of their hands, and was rather too light on the foot for them. But to give vent to their spite they took another brother, who dwelt in that region, and pounded him dreadfully. Brother C. A. Stenstrom was arrested near Hamsted in June, imprisoned a short time, and then transported to his home. There have been many of late brought before the court, because they have had meetings in their houses, and others because they have attended those meetings. The court handles them as though they were great transgressors, has imposed fines upon some of them, varying from thirty to one hundred and twenty-six Swedish dollars. On the 26th of June, brother A. Isgren was again arrested, and condemned to prison twenty-five days, on bread and water. Many more of the brethren have the same fare in expectation, and I have just learned that Elder A. Nyborg was arrested on the 2d inst., and sentenced to twenty-five days, on bread and water.

In Malmo where they have hitherto had large meetings every Sunday, and were greatly increasing, with a manifest interest on the part of those who attended, the police, through the instigation of the priests, have broken them up, and forbid them meeting together in any larger number than the law will allow, viz., ten. The police have warned the brethren not to open their houses for meetings; if they do, they will subject themselves to a fine of three hundred Swedish dollars, the result is more meetings in order to keep within the limits of the law, but less public.

In Malmo, and other places, not many days pass without some of the brethren being knocked down in the street, others stoned, and their clothes torn to pieces by the ungodly, who exclaim, "The Mormons have no right;" and it is verily true where a hireling Priesthood reigns. But notwithstanding all of these occurrences, there are many upright people who desire to serve the Lord, and they will be gathered into the fold.

In the Stockholm Conference, there is less persecution. During the winter and spring, I appointed four brethren to go and labor there. In Stockholm there is a branch of the church organized, consisting of eight members. Quite a number are investigating the work. There are many baptised there who are very zealous for their religion, and have offered up much to sustain it. Our brethren have had interviews with several of them. Two of our brethren were invited by one of their priests to come and converse on the subject of our religion. When they arrived they found two other Baptist priests present. They occupied six hours in debating upon the subject of our religion. The priests were unable to withstand so much Bible truth, and were finally led to the conclusion that there was rather too much materiality about the doctrine of the "Mormons." The brethren in Sweden labor with a determined zeal, and I have good faith that the work of the Lord will extend in that land.

The report from Norway is that the work there never was in a more prosperous condition. In Christiana they hold public meetings, (although it is unlawful,) which are well attended. The police are forbearing, and say, "Let the Mormons alone, they are peaceable and well disposed, they do not make us any trouble." I presume the police there will be thus favorable until the priests make a move.

Although the law is not enforced in Christiana, it is in other places. At Frederickstadt Elder J. Johnson was arrested in January, and fined forty specie dollars, which he paid in prison on bread and water. Teacher Fleisher likewise was fined ten species, paid in the same way. Also Priest B. Petersen was arrested, and imprisoned from January 20th, to March 15th, five days of which he had to live on bread and water. In March, Elder C. C. A. Christensen was arrested at another place, and was imprisoned five days on bread and water. In February, Elder J. F. F. Dorris was arrested and imprisoned two and a half days, then brought before the court, and fined twenty-five species, which he has to pay in cash, or in prison on bread and water. All of these fines, &c., were for preaching the gospel and baptizing.

In Denmark there is more liberty, yet in many places there is considerable persecution. Meetings have been broken up in several places, and many of the brethren that have been out on missions know what it is to be arrested and imprisoned, with the privilege of living on bread and water. There have been over twenty arrested here in the Copenhagen Conference, during the time that I have been here. Some have been imprisoned for weeks, others transported to their native town, or permanent dwelling place. Some of the same have been sent back to their appointed fields of labor, and measures have been taken so that they cannot be moved lawfully without they are changed by proper authority.

These arrests have taken place under the plea of vagrancy, as they could not find any other law that would reach their case. Notwithstanding the powers of darkness are great, and the adversary is continually at work through his emissaries, the hireling priests, in order to stop the work of the Lord, still it prospers. New places are being opened with a good prospect, additions to the church are continually being made, many are investigating the work. The brethren of the Priesthood, as a general thing, are very faithful and true to their posts. I have full confidence in them, and can bear testimony that they labor to build up the kingdom of God. They take hold unitedly, when called upon, and the co-operation of the Saints, with the good feeling which exists, and the love of God in their hearts, feeling an interest for the prosperity of His work, causes them to do all that their ability will allow. Our publications are read with interest by the Saints, as well as by many of the strangers, and they are doing good. We have done all possible, in order to circulate the printed word; and it is not a little that has been spread around during the last six months. There has been much labor performed, and testimony borne. What the fruit may be, the Lord only knows; there have not been as many added to the church as I could have expected, but were I to judge, I would say that the mission was in a healthy and prosperous condition, with a good prospect ahead. In Copenhagen we have full meetings every Sunday, and have good order too.—Many strangers attend with an apparent interest.

I will now close, fearing that I have already tried your patience, but I have endeavored to be as brief as possible, and have left many things untouched that might be of interest.

As many of the Saints have wished to be remembered to you, I will take the liberty to give you the love and best respects of all the Scandinavian Saints. You have their prayers and united confidence.

Please accept of my love and respects, with a desire that the Lord may bless you forever.

I remain your fellow laborer in the cause of truth,

JOHN VAN COTT.

THE SAINTS OF GOD.

Air.—"Before all lands—"

Before all people, East or West,
I love the Saints of God the best;
I love their zealous spirit.
Mankind's release from false traditions,
They declare on fair conditions;
Success their efforts merit.

Before all laws, of East or West,
I count the laws of Christ the best,
If we but obey them all,
We're saved from errors deadly sway,
The spirit guides us on our way,
When we on heaven do call.

The Saints of God, in East or West,
To reign in mansions of the blest,
Must endure until the end
Though styl'd Mormons in derision,
Sneers affect not our position,
We, on God, not man depend.

May soon the time declared of old,
When by priests no more cajoled,
Eye to eye shall all men see.
When Christ, the Lord shall come again,
And o'er his Saints in glory reign,
Lord and King—so may it be.

THE GREAT CITIES OF THE EARTH.

Perhaps the earth never contained larger and more populous cities than at the present day; but there have been many which have held more important positions in the government of nations, as well as being the marts of the trade and wealth of the world; of this class we may first notice Babylon, it was founded by Nimrod and was one of the first cities after the deluge, its walls and fortifications as well as its hanging gardens, were among the wonders of the world; it was an empire in itself, it was also the "head of gold," which Nebuchadnezzar saw in his dream. [Dan. ii, 38.] In the reign of Nebuchadnezzar it was at the height of its splendor and power, and from that time began to fade until now it is a heap of desolate ruins, and all that is left of Babylon is its past history. Next comes Thebes, the centre and mother city of the once glorious kingdom of Egypt, with the "palaced mansions" of Lexon and Karnac; it is supposed that the "hundred gated" city existed in the fullness of its might from about 1600 till about 800 before Christ. It is now a heap of magnificent ruins. With Thebes is associated the once powerful and wealthy city of Memphis, the Noph of the scriptures, and the residence of the Pharoahs; it was for a long time the rival of Thebes, both as a regal city, and a seat of commerce; at the present day its ancient site is a matter of dispute. Palmyra the "city of palms" was founded by Solomon, in whose time it was a great commercial city, and its gorgeous ruins tell the tale of its former splendor. It is meptioned in the Bible as "Ladmor in the desert.

Athens which was beautiful and enriched by the spoils of the Grecian wars, until it was the wonder and admiration of the whole world has now but 15,000 inhabitants.

Rome, "the eternal city" once ruled the world, and was the seat of the arts and sciences; even in the present age the mention of its name inspires the mind with awe and reverence, it has three hundred and sixty-four churches, of these the Cathedral of St. Peter, is the largest and most stupendous in all christendom. It is a city of gods and heroes, and even in its dirty streets, and amidst its dirtier inhabitants, some feeble conceptions arise in our imagination of the ancient nobility and magnificence of this once mighty but fallen city. Present population, 175,838. Constantinople was enriched with the spoils of half the world — it has been beseiged two hundred and eleven times, but taken only six; the interior of the city is very mean compared with its external appearance, — narrow, dirty steep streets and low and wooden houses being the order of the day. Carthage, a cotemporary, and for a long time the rival of Rome, is only known by past history, it stood near where Tunis now does, on the north coast of Africa. Venice which is built on seventy islands and connected together by about two hundred bridges was once "the mistress of the sea," and the richest city in Europe; it is now subject to Austria and has scarcely any trade. The present population is 126,-768.

Cordovia, in Spain while under the dominion of the Moors, occupied nearly eight leagues of the banks of the Guadalquiver river, and contained six hundred grand, and three thousand eight hundred and thirty-seven smaller mosques, four thousand three hundred minarets or towers, nine hundred public baths, twenty thousand four hundred and fifty-five shops, sixty thousand three hundred hotels or palaces, and two hundred and thirteen thousand seventy dwelling houses. It contains under 46,000 inhabitants. Valencia also in Spain formerly had 600,-000 inhabitants, now only 130,000.

Of the cities of the present day it would be useless to attempt any historical sketch, as their history and present position is always before the eyes of newspaper readers. The following is an authentic statement of the population of the largest cities that now exist,

CITIES,	LAST CENSUS	PRESENT ESTIMATE.
London,	2,362,236,	2,500,000
Paris,	1,021,530,	1,200,000
New York,	515,547,	750,000
St. Petersburgh,	478,437,	450,000
Vienna,	477,846,	500,000
Berlin,	441,931,	450,000
Constantinople,	———	450,000
Naples,	416,475,	420,000
Philadelphia,	411,000,	450,000
Manchester,	401,721,	400,000
Liverpool,	375,955,	400,000

Besides these there are some large cities in Asia, whose size and population has always been a matter of conjecture. Foremost of these is Jeddo, in Japan, by some supposed to be the largest city in the world, and to contain 5,000,000 of inhabitants, though others say only 700,000, probably 2,000,000. Canton and Nanking both exceed a 1,000,000, and Pekin 2,000,000. Miako, in Japan, and Calcutta and Madras in Hindoostan, have about 500,000 each. Cairo, in Egypt is the largest city in Africa, an contains about 250,000 souls. Rio de Janeiro had about 200,000, and is the largest in South America.

FROM SALT LAKE CITY.

Great Salt Lake City, June 30, 1855.

Mr. Editor: — Nothing of general interest has transpired in these vallies since the date of my last letter. On the 12 inst., an exodus of grasshoppers commenced. They passed through the air for three days, in armies of myriads, and were drowned in the Lake, the shores of which were so thickly lined with them as to produce an offensive effluvia. People were congratulating each other on their disappearance, but it was of short duration, for in a few days their places were filled by others from the mountains, and the new comers devoured the little vegetation left, including the third crop which had been sown and was just making its appearance. The drought has also been excessive, and except in the vicinity of some never failing streams where the land can be irrogated, the entire country is parched and cattle are compelled to seek food in the mountains. Emigration this summer will find forage for stock extremly scarce.

The greatest humbug of the day is the new military road through this territory, for which an appropriation of $25,000 was made by the last Congress. I recently passed over three hundred miles of it, and could not see where $500 had been expended upon it, yet the entire appropriation has been expended through various channels, but will never enter the coffers of Utah, though she will stand charged with the whole amount. It is be regretted that Col. Steptoe had to leave before the work was offered ed for inspection, as it is not believed he would have aecepted it.

If the Government intends to quarter troops in these vallies next winter, they will have to transport provisions and forage from the States, as all hope for crops of grain or grass is blighted, and famine prices may be expected to prevail, Two instances have already come under my notice, in which parties paid three dollars, cash, per bushel for wheat, in order to obtain flour for their families. I have been a "looker on in Utah" since last September, and may be detained here some months longer; and I cannot conceive why Government troops are required in this Territory. The settlers are fully able to suppress any Indian hostilities that are likely to arise, and if a new Governor should be sent out, he would be sustained by the people in all his constitutional duties, without the necessity of a regiment of troops to "back him." No one is better aware of this fact, than Col. Steptoe, who has frequently remarked to me that if he should finally accept the Governorship he would require no troops to assist in the performance of his duties.

Extensive arrangements are in preparation to celebrate the coming Fourth of July.

Governor Young has just returned from a tour to the north. One of the objects of this visit was to establish the line dividing Utah and Oregon Territories which lies in 42° north lat., and was designated by erecting a stone slab with the letter U, on one side and O, on the other.

The Hon. I. Shaver, one of the Judges of this Territory, was found dead in his bed yesterday, at one o'clock, P. M. He had long been in miserable health, could not sleep at night, and his custom was to set up till near morning and sleep till noon. When discovered, he presented the appearance of a person in a natural sleep, with his eyes and mouth closed, and no distortion of features or limbs; from which it is inferred that he unconsciously expired while calmly sleeping.

By confining himself to his official duties and pursuing an independent course, Judge Shaver, commanded the respect and confidence of these people, and his death is sincercly regretted by all who knew the many good qualities that show conspicuously in him.

As a jurist, his equal has never been in this Territory. Requiescat in pace.

His remains were this morning removed to the Council House, where an eulogy was delivered by Chief Justice Kinney, a funeral sermon by Mr. Orson Pratt, and an appropriate and most beautiful prayer offered up to the Throne of Grace by Governor Young.

His funeral took place at 3, P. M., and every respect was shown to his memory and to the office he filled, according to the following programme:

1. Battalion of mounted Life Guards.
2. Nauvoo Brass Band.
3. Hearse drawn by four horses, with pall bearers.
4. Personal friends.
5. His Excellency Gov. Young and suite.
6. Judges of the Supreme and Probate Courts, Secretary of Territory, and Indian Agent.
7. Members of the Bar and officers of the Courts.
8. Physicians.
9. Citizens.

IMPORTANT WAR NEWS.

Great activity of the Allies in the Crimea—The Advance on Sebastopol—Affairs in Asia—Siege of Kars by the Russians—No hope of Peace—The Allies about to enter the Principalities—French Reinforcements.

Paris, August 10, 6 P. M.—The following private letter has been received from Vienna, dated August 7:

The telegraphic news from the Crimea received here is of the 4th from the Allies, and of the 2d from the Russians. No important event had occurred up to that date before Sebastopol. The bombardment of the bastions 3 and 5 continues, with slight interruption, day and night. The Russians, who return it continually, are, nevertheless, unable to destroy the works of the sixth parallel, and it is even said that it has become completely impossible for them to ascertain its position. This new bombardment is effected by the old redoubts, as the new batteries will not be unmasked until the day of the general bombardment.

On all the other points of the Crimea considerable activity is observable. The Russians fortify Arabat and Genitchi on the land and sea side. These two places are the keys for the ulterior operations of the allies in the Crimea and Upper Taurida. The light squadron from Marseilles will be perfectly suited to the task of taking it.

There is no very recent news from Kars. General Mouravieff is at Kony-Keui, a village to the South West of Kars, and his encampments are in a healthy country, furnished abundantly with water, wood and forage. Waffik Pacha, being determined to defend himself in Kars, and not meaning to capitulate, the Russians are preparing to open on the 12th of July, their first parallel near Kony-Keui.

It is believed here that Count Buol received yesterday a declaration on the part of England and France that they did not wish, by any new negotiations for peace, to interfere with or forestall the more decisive events of the war.

The arrival of General Letang at Vienna is considered as being connected with arrangements relative to the opening of lines of march for the allied armies in the Principalities. It is rumored here that one of the exiled French Generals is expected at Frohsdorf.

Six hundred and twenty men of the 98th regiment of the line, and three hundred of the wagon train, arrived at Marseilles on the 8th inst., and left on the following day for Toulon. A battery of artillery, and two detachments of artillerymen, of two hundred each, also entered Marseilles on the 8th.

The Toulonnais, of the 7th inst., announces that 4,275 men were embarked at Toulon in the month of July, for the East. The steam frigate Canada sailed on the 6th for the Crimea, with detachments of artillerymen and troops of the line, and forty horses. Eight hundred and seventy men arrived at Toulon on the 7th, for immediate embarkation.

The Toulonnais also states that the troops who are to lead the assaulting column at Sebastopol are to be provided with a sort of cuirass, which will no wise impede the movements of the soldier, and will cover the fore part of the body, from the neck down to the knee.

The four French gunboats—Rafale, Bourrasque, Meurtriere and Strieente—arrived at Kamiesh, from Toulon, on the 26th ult.

The prohibition issued at the headquarters of the French army in the Crimea, relative to the despatch of letters, refers, I am assured, to the communications intended for the newspapers, and not to the private letters sent by the officers and men to their families in France.

The steam frigate Darien and the floating battery Tonnante, going to the Black Sea, were obliged to put into Corrunna, on the 3d, on account of bad weather.

A letter from Toulon, dated August 9, announces the sailing of the ship of the line Jupiter, towed by the steam frigate Canada. They carry 1,500 men to the Crimea. The liner Donawerth likewise sailed with the frigate Uranie, carrying 1,400 men. The Prince Jerome is embarking troops. The Inflexible and Psyche had arrived from the Black Sea. Four thousand five hundred men had been embarked at Toulon, for the East during the last month.

In the English House of Commons, on August 10, in answer to Sir H. Willoughby, Mr. Monsell said: The last accounts received from the Crimea contained most satisfactory assurances that the army was well supplied with guns of all kinds. He was also able to state, that the numbers of every description of guns and batteries sent out had been greatly increased during the last three weeks, and there was every reason to believe that in a short time the state of things in the Crimea would be more satisfactory than ever it had been. (Hear, hear.)

ADDITIONAL BY THE CANADA.

Halifax, August 29.—The Canada sailed at 7 this morning for Boston.

In regard to the bombardment of Sweaborg, the French Admiral telegraphs, on the 11th. that it was attended with success. An immese conflagration, lasting forty-five hours, destroyed storehouses, magazines, and the arsenel, inflicting a terrible blow and an enormous loss to the Russians, while the Allied loss was wholly insignificant, not a man being killed.

Admiral Dundas telegraphs a more moderate account, and subsequent advices are somewhat modified. The Allied squadron returned to Navega after the bombardment.

The news from the Crimea is important.

The Russians, some fifty or sixty thousand strong under Gen. Liprandi, attacted the Tchernaya lines of the Allies at daybreak, on the 16th, and after a desperate engagement of three hours' duration, were driven back with a loss of from 3,000 to 4,000 men, and a large number of prisoners. The loss on the side of Allies was comparatively small.

Omar Pasha had received hasty orders to return to the Crimea, instead of going to Asia.

The sloop-of-war Jamestown sailed from Teneriffe for Port au Praya, July 25th.

The British Parliment was prorogued on July 14th. The Queen's speech was delivered by proxy. It congratulated the country on the increasing strength of the union btween France and England, and the accession of Sardinia to the alliance. Regrets that the Vienna conference proved ineffectual, but those endeavors having failed, no other course is left but to prosecute the war with all possible vigor, and relies on the patriotism of the people and the gallantry of the army and navy to carry it out.

Parliament stands prorogued until October 23d.

General Simpson telegraphed on the 18th that at daybreak of the 17th the bombardment of Sebastopol had commenced. St. Petersburgh letters say that Gortschakoff had recieved orders from the Emperor to sink the Russian fleet at the Malokoff Falls. Nothing of importance in the sea of Azoff. Kars was still surrounded by the Russians. Gen. Canrobert had arrived in France. Gen. Espiraras had the command of his division. It was reported that the negogations had arrived at a point for the conclusion of a triple treaty binding France, England and Austria not to conclude any arrangements seperately with Russia.

The British Parliament was prorogued.

Queen Victoria crossed over to France on the 17th, to remain six days.

The Duke of Somerset is dead.

Another ministerial crisis is threatened in Turkey.

The defeat of Napolean was partially celebrated in France on the 15th.

There are vague rumors of a fusion among the Burbonists, and a contemplated meeting of their heads at Vienna.

Ex-President Fillmore was introduced to the Emperor Napoleon on the 15th, by Mr. Mason. Much anxiety is said to exist in Denmark on the subject of the Sound dues, and a Commissioner has been sent to Paris to ask advice and assistance in the controversary with the United States. The other parts of Europe present no important news.

Elder GEORGE SEAGERT, President.

William Rogers, William J. Silver, } Counsellors.

Sailed July 29th, 1855.

Since a question has been started in relation to the intoxicating properties of Lager beer, Germans all over the country have been guaging their stomachs, to see how many pints, quarts, or gallons they would respectively hold. Among the others, a Mr. Emig tried the experiment at Rochester on Thursday. He drank three gallons in twelve hours; but died the same night. Two quarts were pumped from his stomach in the endeavor to relieve him.

DIED:

On the 29th inst., at her residence in St. Louis, of consumption, COMFORT BEERS CROSS, in the 50th year of her age.

She departed this life, as if falling into a quiet sleep, with the full assurance of another, and a happier home with Him who giveth and who taketh away.

Mustang Liniment and the Ladies.—In our opinion, nothing is above the comprehension of women; and with less prejudice, more liberality, and much keener perception than men, when a new idea is presented, a new doctrine taught, or a new fact asserted, she grasps it at once, and with the rapidity and clearness almost of instinct, decides upon its merits or truthfulness; and if her decision be favorable, she enthusiastically advocates and supports it. Thus the common saying has obtained—"Once get the women on your side and you are safe;" and we are happy to state that we have the ladies all in favor of the Mustang Liniment. They have tried it for caked breasts, sore nipples, sores, chafes, and burns on children, as well as for croup and mumps; also, for corns, tooth-ache, pains in the limbs and joints, sore eyes, eruptions, cuts and bruises, and they have always found it effectual—and they go about like angels, as they are, proclaiming it to their friends and to all they see or hear tell of, who are suffering. We have daily calls for it by persons who say such and such ladies recommended them to try it.

Go on ladies in your "good Samaritan" work, and thousands will bless you for your timely advice.

Apr, 14 21.] JAS. S. CANTWELL.

Death of the Honorable Leonidas Shaver

(Concluded.)

If they are clothed with power and authority in this life they do not leave their priesthood when they leave this body; hence John heard them sing; "Thou art worthy to take the book and open the seals thereof, for thou hast redeemed us by thy blood, out or every nation, kindred, tongue and people, and hast made us kings and priests unto God and we shall reign on the earth." We perceive that the priesthood does not die with their bodies; the kingly anthority does not cease with the mortal bodies; it is an office that continues forever, that continues in the spirit world, as well as after the resurrection. Those that receive their authority from heaven, will have to magnify it, and set a good example; and every person receiving an office in this priesthood and afterward dying will have to perform all the duties, and exercise the functions thereof in order that they may be useful to those spirits in an inferior state. If they hold the priesthood before the resurrection, do we suppose that they will set down and have nothing to do? No; there will be other individuals that will not hold the priesthood, and that have not had the gospel, and they will be sent to them, to enlighten their minds and enable them, who will, to rise in the great scale of moral and intellectual excellence.

They will naturally have to mingle with all, as we do in this life; and this will be calculated to make it rather unpleasant; but they are willing to do this for the salvation of those who have died without the gospel. Jesus himself set the example and pattern for others. While his body lay in the silent tomb, his noble spirit was not idle, hence Peter says, that Jesus being "put to death in the flesh, was quickened by the spirit, by which also he went and preached to the spirits in prison that were some time disobedient in the days of Noah," &c. Jesus entered the prison house of those persons who were destroyed in the mighty flood, and preached to them. Those antediluvian spirits had suffered in the prison some two thousand years, and upwards; they needed some information and Jesus went to enlighten them.

Why were they shut up in prison? It was because they rejected some light in days of Noah. It is true that Noah and his three sons could not preach to all the world, but they had rejected some light, and they had to go to prison to atone for that sin.

It is not as some have supposed, that such characters have to go to a lake of fire and to welter there for ever and ever. These persons were destroyed by the flood; they were shut up in prison and confined there; and after a long period light broke in upon them, and the prison doors were thrown open. Jesus came for that purpose, not only to benefit the living but also the dead—to open the prison doors, and break the chains of darkness. Jesus went and preached to the antediluvian spirits. What did he preach? Did he preach, you must remain here to endless ages without hope of redemption? If this were the proclamation, what was the use of going to proclaim it? What would be the use of telling those beings that they were to remain in misery, and that there was no chance of escape? No use of proclaiming such news in the ears of any one. Peter tells us why he preached to them; he said, "For, for this cause was the gospel preached to them also that are dead, that they might be judged according to men in the flesh, and live according to God in the spirit."

This was the object that they might have the same gospel that men have in the flesh. If we acknowledge they had not the opportunity of receiving it in the flesh, they must have it in the spirit world; for in the great judgment day all men will be judged by the same Gospel, and consequently, in order to judge them, it was necessary that they should hear the same Gospel that was preached upon the earth, that they might have the privilege of entering into the presence of the Lord their God, or if they rejected it, be justly condemned.

Jesus has set us the pattern, he held the priesthood which was conferred by the Father, to redeem those spirits that they might come forth in the morning of the first resurfection and receive eternal life, and partake a portion of that glory of which I have spoken. If Jesus did this may not his servants do it also, being blessed in this life with the same authority from heaven, and holding that authority after death? May not they be engaged in the same benevolent purposes? Yes, they may.

These are our views, the views of the Latter-day Saints. And we believe that spirits of the just will be sent on missions of mercy to those in prison who had not in this life the opportunity of obeying those principles that I have referred to.

Much might be said with regard to the future state of man between death and the resurrection. We might go and contrast the difference between man in the flesh and man in the spirit world.

There are many points of contrast, as well as agreement, in these two states of existence.

But we have not time to take up and contrast the difference between disembodied spirits, and those that are in an embodied state.

By way of conclusion, we will say, that all men will come forth and take bodies, some celestial, some terrestial, and telestial, to occupy degrees of glory and be rewarded according to their works, unless they have sinned against the Holy Ghost. There are certain sins that cannot be forgiven in this world nor in that which is to come; to say that such shall be forgiven, we are not authorized, but all others, after suffering for their evil deeds, will come forth from the grave to receive for their good works, those that have done evil, having suffered according to their evil deeds; and thus the justice and mercy of God will be displayed. All will partake of them according to the degree of light that has shown forth in their day.

We are called upon on this solemn occasion as a Territory to mourn the loss of one who has occupied a distinguished position among us,—one whose course has been an exemplary one to all mankind, that is, so far as we are acquainted with him. He has now left us, but we expect to meet with him again and see his face; and it is not long before all, now present, will meet again with this distinguished individual.

May God bless us and enable us to be prepared to meet with each other in the eternal worlds, and to receive according to the justice and mercy of God. Amen.

The Mayor then gave notice that the Battalion of Life Gaurds and the Nauvoo Brass Band were in readiness to attend to the procession.

Col. J. C. Little, City Marshal, read the order of the procession.

Prayer was offered by president Brigham Young.

The congregation were dismissed at 1 P. M. Reassembled at 2.

Procession was formed by the Marshal at 2 1-2 P. M., and proceeded to the burying ground in the following order:

THE FUNERAL PROCESSION

Was formed at the Council House at half-past 2 P. M., under the supervision of Marshal J. C. Little, and was arranged in the following order:

1. Battalion of Life Gaurds on horseback, commanded by Major R. T. Burton.
2. Nauvoo Brass Band, who played solemn music.
3. Hearses bearing the Corpse, accompanied by pall bearers.
4. Intimate Friends.
5. Governor and suite, including the Hon. John M. Bernhisel, Delegate.
6. The Judge of the Supreme and Probate Courts, Secretary of the Territory, and Indian Agent.
7. Members of the Bar, and officers of the Courts.
8. Citizens.

After the coffin was lowered, and the lid of the outer box fastened by the Sexton, Mr. J. Gibson, Col. George A. Smith offered the following,

PRAYER AT THE GRAVE.

Our Father who art in Heaven, we ask thee in mercy to look upon us on this solemn and mouruful occasion. Thou knowest our hearts, our thoughts, and our feelings and that we have come to this place to inter the remains of our worthy friend and fellow citizen. We know that our turn will soon come when our friends will gather around us, and we shall be laid in the silent tomb.

We ask thee to inspire us with that wisdom which will enable us to prepare for that great change, which we are sensible will, sooner or later come upon us. We ask thee, that inasmuch, as our friend has been suddenly and unexpectedly taken away, that thou wilt support and comfort his relatives, in distant lands, with thy spirit. When they shall hear the sorrowful news of his death, let thy spirit rest upon them to comfort their hearts, and may it so operate upon their minds, that they may diligently prepare to meet their brother with thanksgiving in the world to come.

Look down upon us we pray thee, and enable us to realize our situation before thee, and to prepare for every thing which we have to encounter in this mortal life. Assist us to follow that example of dilligence and integrity which our departed friend has pursued, in every sphere of life in which we may be called by the Holy Spirit to act, and grant that all those called to act in high and like distinguished positions may take pattern by his example.

We dedicate and devote ourselves unto thee, and we ask that this may be a warning unto us, to prepare for the great day when Jesus shall make his appearance, and be prepared to receive at thy hand, the blessings of celestial glory. These blessings we ask in the name of Jesus. Amen.

Dr. Hurt made some very appropriate and felicitous remarks, and tendered his warmest thanks, as a fellow Virginian, for the kind and courteous ceremonies which had been extended in suitably depositing the remains of our highly respected fellow citizen.

The mayor dismissed the spectators, and announced that the procession would return in the order in which it came. It was accordingly re-organized by the Marshal.

Arriving at the Council House the Battalion of Life Guards opened to the right and left, and while the Band played, the procession passed between the ranks, and sadly seperated to their places of abode.

Going to, at, and returning from the grave, the Band played appropriate music.

CHANT,

Delivered by Eliza R. Snow, Feb. 6, 1855, before an Assembly of the Polysophical Institution, in L. Snow's Hall

I will praise thee, O my God.

In the midst of the daughters of Zion—in the presence of the Honorable Judges in Israel, I will exalt thy name.

The first fruits of all the nations of the earth are here—thou hast associated me with choice spirits, even those who have conducted nobly from the beginning.

Thou hast cast my lot with those whose faith is more precious than all the glitt'ring treasures which our mother earth is now folding in her bosom; and whose integrity is a brighter ornament than the most brilliant diadem that ever decorated the head of an earthly monarch.

Thou hast imparted to me a portion of the pure oil of gladness, even thy Spirit; which creates in my bosom a perpetual fountain of joy; and which constitutes both the law of affiinity and the pow'r of attraction, to lift my heart upward, and give me faith and confidence to trust in thee.

Thou hast committed to thy servants the key of knowled e with which they have unlock'd the treasures of wisdom and understanding, and have open'd the fountains of light to this generation.

Thou hast delivered thy people: Thou hast led them forth from under the hand of oppression; and although they sacrific'd their rightful possessions in the lands of their nativity; they know that the cattle upon the thousand western hills—the earth and the fulness thereof, are thine; and they rejoice in the deliverance which thou hast wrought for them.

Thou hast sustain'd thy Saints in the midst of the ordeal of affliction—thou hast brought them forth from the fiery furnace,

As thy Son Ahman stood by the three Hebrews, who anciently were cast into the flames according to the edict of Nebuchadennezzar, king of Babylon; so thou Ahman went in the midst of thy people, the Latter-day Saints—they have come forth unhurt and the smell of fire is not on their garments.

Those who have turn'd their backs on their brethren, have perish'd; and those that have halted by the way, thro' fear; have been entic'd to revel at the waters of Lethe until the dark shadows of oblivion have swallow'd them up forever!

But those that adher'd to thy statutes and have maintained their steadfastness in the sacred covenants of the Holy Priesthood; have been led forth from the foaming vortex of mobocracy, and from the contaminating corruptions of the nations—they have landed safely on the terra-firma of peace—their feet are established on the mountains of Israel, the chambers of the West; in the strongholds which thou Ahman had prepar'd for them, with the strength of the everlasting hills—the munition of rocks for their defence.

Thou hast plac'd the scepter of Government in the hand of thine anointed, even thy servant Brigham, on whom has fallen the mantle of Joseph—thou hast endow'd him with knowledge and understanding—his Councilors are men of wisdom—his administrations is that of justice and equity; and thy people dwell safely and rejoice in the multitude of blessings of the reign of peace.

Well may thy praises resound throughout all the rich vallies of Ephraim; and let the lofty snow-crown'd mountains reverberate with shouts of hosanna to thy name.

I rejoice in thy Statutes and in the holy ordinances of thy House—my lips shall praise thee in the social assemblies of thy Saints.

In the silent meditations of the night, when my thoughts reach after thee, and when the vision of my mind seems to penetrate the dark curtain of mortality; I am swallowed up in the contemplations of thy greatness and majesty, and the condescensions of thy love for thy degenerate children.

Then I feel to say in my heart; altho' it might be thro' the furnace of affliction—tho' it should be by draining the cup of bitterness to the dregs, if, that, in thy wisdom, is deem'd necessary to purify and prepare me; let me be prepar'd; that I may behold thy face—that I may come up and dwell in thy presence.

Then, and not till then, will my soul be fully satisfied, O, my God, Adam, Ahman, the King, the Lord of Hosts.

Attack by Cattle on a Red Waggon.

The following is an extract from one Col. Claibornes's letters fron the pine woods of Mississippi, published in the New Orleans Delta:

I set out for Augusta, blowing merrily along in a blood red buggy. The road is beautiful, roofed over with trees and vines, and the air fragrant with the breath of flowers. There was only one drawback—the myraids of flies of every species that swarmed around and ravenously cupped the blood from the ears, neck and flanks of my horse. It is what is appropriately termed here "fly-time;" that is to say, the period when this numerous family of scourges have it all their own way, and neither man nor beast can venture into the woods with impunity. Now the "cattle from a thousand hills," and even the wild deer, seek the abodes of men, and huddle around some smoking pine or stand in some open field to escape their periodical tormentors. On a sudden curve of the road, I found myself in one of these "stamping gronnds," and a simultaneous roar from five hundred infurated animals gave notice of my danger. It is well known that the Spanish matadores provoke the wounded bulls of the arena by flaunting the moleta or blood red flag before them. It was the color of my equipage that excited this bellowing herd. They snuffed the air, planted their heads near the ground, tore up the earth with their hoofs and horns, and glared at me with savage eyes. The fierce phalanx blocked the road, and the part of discretion was to retreat. The moment I wheeled, the pursuit commenced. A cloud of dust enveloped them, and the trampling of feet was like the roll of thunder. My horse dashed forward, frantic with terror, and on they plunged, on every side crushing down everything in their course, goring and tumbling over each other, filling the woods with their dreadful cries, and gathering nearer and nearer in the fearful chase.

The contest now became desperate. In five minutes we should have been overturned and tread to death; but at this juncture I threw out my overcoat, and with an awful clamor they paused to fight over it, and tear it into shreads. Driving at full speed, I tossed out a cushion; the infurated devils trampled it into atoms, and came rushing on, their horns clashing against the buggy, and riping up the ribs of my horse. At this fearful moment we were providentially saved. A monstrous oak, with a forked top, had fallen near the road, into this I plunged my horse breast high, and he was safe the back of the buggy being then the only assailable point. At this the whole column made a dash, but I met the foremost with six discharges of a revolver; two bottles of Sewell Taylor's were shivered in their faces; next, a cold turkey, and finally a bottle of Scotch snuff—the last shot in the locker. This did the business. Such a sneezing and bellowing was never heard before; and the one that got it put out with the whole troop at his heels, circling around, scenting the blood that had been spilled, and shaking the earth with their thundering tramp. I was now fairly in for it, and made up my mind to remain untill sunset, when they would disperse, as in "fly time" cattle graze at night. I was relieved, however, by the approach of some cattle drivers, who, galloping up on shaggy but muscular horses, and with whips twenty feet long, which they use with surprising dexterity soon drove the herd to their "cow pens," for the purpose of marking and branding them. This is done every year in "fly time." The cattle ranging, scattered, thirty miles round, are now easily found, collected at their stamping grounds, and are driven to a common pen or pound, where the respective owners assemble and put their marks and brands on the increase of the season. Thus this Egyptain plague is turned to a useful purpose.

WALL & WIDEN,

MC'LEAN'S VOLCANIC OIL LINIMENT is truly a celebrated remedy, and has done more to alleviate human suffering than any other remedy ever discovered.

One or two applications will relieve the most severe pain, bruise or sprain.

Two bottles will cleanse, purify, and heal the foulest ulcer or sore, and it will heal the most severe burn or scald without a scar.

Every family should have a supply constantly on hand, for use in time of need.

Read the following extract of a letter, which is incontestable proof of its wonderful efficacy:

A BLIND MAN RESTORED TO SIGHT.

J. H. MCLEAN—Dear Sir: * * * I have been suffering for four years with rheumatic sore eyes, being at times altogether blind. I procured the advice of several physicians, but none of them could do me any good. By the advice of a friend I applied your "Volcanic Oi. Liniment," according to the directions around the bottle, and it has cured me permanently. I have used it since for bruises, pains, &c., and it has always given immediate relief. I live on the main road near Farmington.

Yours, respectfully, JOHN H. ADLERD.

Jefferson county, Mo.

For horses it is far superior to any other remedy for curing lameness, bruises, cuts, old sores, swellings, &c.

We say, then, to all who may be suffering from external diseases, call at once and get a supply. Thousands of bottles are sold (and used) daily, and we have never heard of a case where it has failed in giving relief when properly applied.

MEDICINE FOR THE BILLION!

A Certain Remedy for all Diseases of

MAN OR ANIMALS,

Requiring an External Application.

Warranted in every Case for which it is Recommended!

THE MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT!

Unlike all other popular medicines, it is used by many prominent members of the faculty, and many of the public Hospitals. Their prejudices have yielded to indisputable and incontrovertible demonstrations of cures performed where their remedies had failed.

It has cured more cases of

RHEUMATISM

than any other medicine ever used. Its efficacy in this terrible disease is acknowledged by all who have used it. It not only cures the compiaint, but appears to give a vigor and elasticity to the limbs, before unknown, thus performing a double office.

A FEW TESTIMONIALS.

PATH FINDER OFFICE, May 11, 1854.

G. W. WESTBROOK:—

Please send me by the bearer three large bottles of your Mexican Mustang Liniment, as I wish to take it up to my place in Vermont, not thinking it advisable to do without it. I have used it in my family and on my horses, and have found it invaluable. Yours,

J. T. WHITNEY.

ELIZABETHTOWN, TENN., May 25, 1855.

MR. G. W. WESTBROOK:—

Dear Sir—It affords me much pleasure in saying to you that the Mexican Mustang Liniment outsells any medicine that I have ever had for sale, and comes nearer doing what it promises to do. Send me another supply, as I am nearly out. Yours respectfully,

JOHN SINGLETRAY, P. M.

PHILADELPHIA, June 11, 1854.

MR. G. W. WESTBROOK:

Sir—My son was afflicted with a swelling upon the knee joint, which confined him to the house. I had a doctor attending him for some time, but he did not do him any good. One of my neighbors told me to use the Mustang Liniment. I asked the doctor if I could do so, and he told me he thought I could not do better.

I procured one bottle, and in about a week he was able to go out.

I can safely recommend it to the afflicted.

Respectfully yours, MRS. BENNETT.

W. S. Ladd & Co., of Portland, Oregon, writes that there is an immense demand for the Mexican Mustang Liniment in that country, and orders forty gross to be shipped by Golden Gate, that sails in a few days from New Yook.

Park & White of San Francisco, California, order 100 gross, to be forwarded by first clipper for that port.

PORT AU PRINCE, HAYTI, Jan. 16th, 1854.

I had the pleasure to receive invoice and boxes Mexican Mustang Liniment per Croton, and have no doubt it will have a brisk sale on the island.

have need it for the following diseases with extraordinary success, certifying invariably to the efficacy of the Liniment, and the truthfulness of our assertions in its behalf:

Spavin, Splint, Ring-bone, Fistula, Wind Galls, Big Head, Bruises, Strains, String-halt, Scratches, Cracked Heels, Sweney, Saddle, Collar, or Harness Galls, Hard Lumps or Tumor, Film, or other diseases of the Eye, Poll-Evil, &c.

The small sizes retail for 25 cents per bottle;

The medium size retail for 50 cents per bottle;

The large sizes retail for one dollar per bottle.

The medium holds three times as much as the small;

The Large holds nearly three times as much as the medium,

Therefore the large bottles are the cheapest.

DISCOURSE

By Elder George A. Smith, in the Bowery on the North side of the Tabernacle, April 8th, 1855.

As I arise I am cautioned by President Kimball to be careful that my hair does not blow off, I shall exercise as much care and caution as possible on the subject; but if it should actually come off, I have very few friends here to-day in this numerous audience but what know very well how my head looks perfectly bare, and consequently I should not feel as though I was subject to any particular disgrace, while I can enjoy the comfort of sitting in the congregation without having my head tied up in a handkerchief, or suffering with a cold.

I feel a little sorry this morning that our meeting house is so small; really it seems too bad that we have not a little more room, but it fulfills very clearly the early predictions of the first President of the Church, (Joseph Smith,) that we may build as many houses as we would, and we should never get one big enough to hold the Saints, and I presume before this immense Bowery is absolutely enclosed, and comfortably seated that we shall find it too small to accommodate those who wish to attend here on the Sabbath day, or on any important occasion.

In rising to speak to so vast an assembly, I am reminded of the old rupture of my lungs, which was made while preaching in the streets of London to scattered assemblies, to persons in the courts, in the squares, in the windows of buildings four and five stories high, and on different sides of the streets, in the midst of a foggy, smoky, damp atmosphere. It is a rupture which caused my lungs to bleed, and which has been a constant caution and effectual check to my course in life, requiring me to keep within a certain limit, with, however, this condition, that live or die, or, whatsoever might be in the road, the gospel of Jesus Christ I would preach, and the testimony of the fulness of the gospel of the Lord to the Saints in the last days, I would bear wherever, and whenever I had the opportunity, backed with a faith in me that I would have power and health to do this; at the same time any kind of exercise, that would heat my blood for one half hour would produce considerable bleeding from the lungs, and yet by the aid of your faith I undertake to address this immense audience, with full confidence that I shall succeed so that a great portion will hear me, and by the stillness of the balance I may be enabled to make them all hear me, though it requires a great effort for even a man with sound lungs to make ten thousand persons hear him speak distinctly.

I have been a member of this church from my childhood; I commenced to advocate the Book of Mormon when only thirteen years of age. The second day after I got hold of it I read it nearly through. News flew round the neighborhood that the golden bible had come, and a large company of neighbors came in to see the book, they commenced to examine and find fault with it, and I to answer their objections, as I thought they looked so unreasonable, although I had not made my mind up on the subject, yet I tried to remove their objections, the result was, the whole company went away confounded, leaving me surprised that they could not raise any stronger objections against it; and from that day to this, I have not let any proper occasion slip that presented to me an opportunity of defending the mission of Joseph Smith, and the Book of Mormon to the very best of my ability. It may be said of me that I never knew anything else but Mormonism, yet I have found that some of the traditions of my early education, as I was piously educated at the Sunday school in the doctrine and principles of Presbyterianism; some of these principles which I received in my youth have clung to me so closely that I have had to stop at times and reflect whether I had learned that from the proper source, or whether it was part of my old catechism, which I must confess I have forgotten.

I introduce these remarks as a preface to my discourse, because I have been pleased by the remarks of the first Presidency, especially by those of President Brigham Young on the subject of the appointment of Bishops, he wishes to appoint those who have grown up in the church, who have not lived a great portion of their days under the influence of sectarian traditions of their fathers, and been subject to the slavish notions of cast iron creeds, that when they entered into this church, they were so bound in them, they never could be unbound, and that even now in performing the duties of their callings they do not learn enough of the things of God, to in every instance discriminate between the two. I had discovered in a number of instances that appointments of this kind to different offices did not work well; and that when men who are not very old when they come into the church, all they have learned is the truth, and are not under the necessity of unlearning what they might have learned in twenty, forty, or fifty years, of old tenets, creeds, doctrines and nonsense, but have taken a start from the right foundation, and what they did learn have learned it right.

I thought I would take the liberty of addressing the younger brethren, as a great portion of this congregation are what might be termed in the States, Young America, if you please, or among us, Young Mormons, those who have been raised in the midst of persecutions, and the instructions the Saints have enjoyed. President Young in the course of his remarks, introduces the subject of the divisions that exist in New York politics; for instance it is customary in the political circles of New York, and has extended from that capitol throughout the Union, to denominate men that have become somewhat superannuated in their veins, or have got the old fashioned slow motion about them, "old fogies;" for instance there are but few of us but what can remember when railroads were first introduced into the United States; it is not difficult for old men to remember when the first steamboat was built; or when the first telegraph wire was put in operation; and it is properly denominated the "fast age." Men who have got the old principles of locomotion—that cannot accommodate their feelings to the great improvements of the fast age, that have got their education on the slow track, and are determined to follow it, it would be better for them to stand aside and clear the track for the telegraph speed of the present generation just rising up on their heels.

I was pleased with the resolution as far as it was necessary to apply it; but there are a great many men of the most mature age, who were at a mature age when they received this gospel, that never had imbibed scarcely any sectarian prejudices, and those that they had got, when they discovered they were of little use, they have cast them behind the lighthouse, and let them go with the waves. There are others who have stood in the stream of light until every single particle of the old imperfections, and old prejudices that could possibly have adhered to them have been carried away; the light of the spirit has showered upon them so brilliantly that all of us who were younger when we entered the work were instructed, taught, and made acquainted with the things of God, through the wisdom and light which God has given them.

Mankind is capable of a great many extravagances; we very well remember the time when a very zealous man named Hawley arraigned Joseph Smith before a Bishop's council in Kirtland, and charged him with having forfeited his office as a Prophet of God, because he had not prohibited the aged sisters from wearing caps. I attended the council which was held very late, and the man there advocated that he was cut off from the church, for God had cut him off from the church, as well as from his Apostleship, because he had suffered the men to wear little cushions on the shoulders of their coat sleeves. It being then fashionable to wear a little cotton on the shoulders, and in consequence of some of the brethren wearing such coats, the Prophet of God was cut off from the church by this man, and persecuted as an imposter, and another was placed in his stead.

That man was possessed of such wisdom, as man could reasonably manifest, yet he was so perfectly full of folly and of his own traditions and notions, he had fancied over in his own head, that seemingly, it was impossible for him to understand anything better; he was blinded and lifted his hand against the Prophet of God. Instances of this kind have been continually accumulating, and it is one of the most perfect illustrations of the sayings of the prophet, that he would sift his people as with a seive.—It has been a constant sifting from the time we entered the church up to the present, some would compel it, while in others none of the old prejudices have predominated; and so it has continued until twenty-five years have passed away, and until a great number of persons have risen up who have not the prejudices of their fathers to contend with, and if they will humble themselves with all their might, knowledge and intelligence, power will grow in them, and they will approximate nearer to the things of God, to get more light, more knowledge, more intelligence, more faith, and more power to spread forth the work of God, and to roll forth the kingdom their fathers have been able to obtain.

It is an old proverb, that as the old birds crow the young ones learn. There are a great many habits, a great many customs which our fathers have imbibed, and which their children have been induced more or less to practice, which are decidedly in opposition to the true principles of life and prosperity; now for us who are young, we are full of life and vigor, to think, because our fathers or mothers indulged in a good cup of tea, or cup of coffee, and a hundred other different luxuries which are at variance with the word of wisdom that we must follow the same track, pursue the same course; and not only ourselves become slaves to the same habits, but transmit them to our posterity, and continue them that we may preserve the old Gentile customs which have been established under a system of tactics that have been introduced by medical men to injure the health of the community and to make for themselves a growing business. I do not believe in the constant use of tobacco and hot drinks, although they have been for a long time steadily recommended by men in the medical profession as beneficial to health, I believe that learned doctors do know, when they are doing so, they are introducing a system of things to make men sick throughout their lives, weaken the human race, and make business for medical practitioners. If men wish to grow up in these mountains, free from disease, and from the power of the destroyer, and become strong and powerful like tigers—like giants in Israel, let them observe the principles laid down in the words of wisdom, let them observe them when they are children, let them grow up breathing a pure atmosphere, drinking pure water, and partaking of the wholesome vegetation, observing the words of wisdom, and they will grow up mighty men; one of them will be worth five dozen of those who are steeped and boiled by hot drinks, and tanned in tobacco juice.

While I address you brethren upon this subject I speak more from observation of the conduct of others than from my own experience, I have observed considerable upon this matter; I know that indulging in habits of this kind, however simple they may seem, they lead in the end to great evil, and I know from experience that our tasts are in a great measure artificial. Now when a Mormon Elder comes up to me, and wants to get a little counsel and his breath smells as though he had swallowed a still house, it is all I can possibly do to remain near enough to him to hear his story; he necessarily wishes to come up close to me, as such men are sure to have a secret they wish to whisper, and their breath is so offensive, I am forced to retire. When I am called upon to give counsel to a man who is indulging in these intemperate practices; I feel at a loss to know whether my counsel is going to do him good or harm, or whether he will pay any attention to it after he gets it.

I know that many men have persisted in the use of these stimulating articles until they cannot do without them; or they think they cannot. Perhaps sometimes when they have been reduced by sickness or fatigue, they have then been under the necessity of taking some of these things as a medicine to revive sinking nature, and this was probably when they first began to practice the use of them and laid the foundation for a short life. They now wish me to prolong their days, like the old toper who had undermined his constitution and who was about to die in consequence of drinking a quart of brandy a day, he sent for the doctor, he being anxious to preserve the life of his patient, dared not stop the use of brandy entirely, nor yet suffer the inebriate to persist in his usual course, ordered his patient three glasses of French brandy with loaf sugar per day, upon which the old toper shrugged his shoulders and said "doctor ain't it bad to take." In introducing the use of things injurious to our health when we commence it, it is not so pleasant; perhaps in a fit of sickness, prostrated by the ague, cut down by disease we will indulge in these kinds of habits, until by and by a taste is formed for them, and we feel that we really must have our tea, or our coffee; a glass of liquor does us good occasionally; how often does occasionally come? "O once in a while," How often is that? "Why, every now and then," and it gets so by and by if a man has addicted himself to it and don't have it, he feels quite lonely, he feels lost, as though there was something wrong about him, and he becomes such a perfect slave to it, he cannot exercise his talents or his ingenuity.—I have seen distinguished members of the bar with whom it was absolutely necessary they should take a drink of spirits in the middle of a plea, to brighten their ideas, the result is, it will bring a man to a premature grave.

I say to Young America, brethren and sisters, if we have imbibed such habits, let us lay them off; let us suffer our fathers and mothers to drink the tea, and the coffee, and chew all the tobacco they want, and as long as we can get it for them, because they have imbibed this practice years ago, and now to deprive them of these things altogether might endanger their lives, but when it comes to us, who have not been believers in the doctrine, let us take these things as we would calomel, opium, arsenic, lobelia, corrosive, sublimate, or any other drugs which are so much valued among physicians, now if a man really felt as if he were dying and was anxious to hurry himself away, a dose of strychnine might assist him; now anything that a man takes that stimulates his nerves above their proper mode of action when he is in health, his system will fall in the same proportion below a healthy action, and it will require a little more the next time to stimulate it to the same height and so on, until the system refuses to be stimulated and the person will suddenly fall into the grave. So much then will answer for my remarks upon this subject; I believe brethren many of us have accustomed ourselves to using articles prohibited in the word of wisdom, which prohibition is designed for the benefit of the Saints in Zion, and in all the world; we frequently use them merely out of compliment.

For instance I call in a brother's house, the lady of the house knows I am an Apostle, and she wishes to treat me with marked respect, and she supposes I am entirely unmindful of the precepts contained in the word of wisdom, makes me a cup of tea or coffee; well, I think it is a pity to throw it away, after it has spoiled half a gallon of the best American creek water, and I drink it to save it. This is not only the case with me, but with other young men also; (for I can call myself a young man with a perfect grace now, for I have as fine a head of hair as any of you;) a great many of us take these stimulating drinks for the sake of fashion. If I should happen to come across those who know how to use "the good crater," they will invite me to partake with them, if I refuse they will then begin to urge; but the best policy to be observed in cases of this kind is to do as we have a mind to; if we do not want "the intoxicating drink" let them take it all; and if we do, we will take it without urging, and bear the responsibility ourselves. This is the best policy I would wish to be governed by, though I have had to say once or twice in my life, gentlemen I do not wish to be urged, if a man refuses to drink with those who indulge in the use of strong drinks, it is customary to consider it a want of friendship, let us be our own masters, and not believe we must be chained down to these foolish and hurtful traditions. It has happened to be my lot to visit a good many of the branches, a great portion of the time that I have been in this church I have spent in travelling. Last year when in performing the duties of historian, when I found that constant application to these duties became severe on my health, I would go out in the neighboring settlements and preach to the people, and stir them up to diligence and obedience; in this way I have had a good opportunity to observe the feelings, and sentiments of the people—which operate upon the hearts of the Saints in the different settlements of these vallies.

The view that I wish to take on this subject, is, that there is in many of the settlements a want of union; for instance, they will get together in a meeting, and conclude that they will have a certain man for a President, or for a Bishop, they will all agree to it, then some few individuals will go back into a corner and say, "well brother, don't you think that such a man would have made a great deal the best President," and whenever the President steps forward to introduce a measure, the next thing he would come across would be, two or three of the brethren will kindly say to one another, "I for one don't like that measure." You understand the simple lever power, the most simple of all mechanical principles; you know that I can take a lever and by getting a first rate good purchase I can hold as much as twenty men can roll, the result is, if I cannot have it my way, I might by that means prevent the President from having it his way. I am more intimate with the City of Provo, its population I do not now exactly recollect, but it is probably about three thousand five hundred; its locality is one of the best in the mountains, from the fact that the position is in the midst of a heavy amount of water power, which can be easily applied to machinery to the best possible advantage; it is also surrounded with the best of farming land, with an abundant means for irrigation by the application of a very little labor, and the facilities for timber are a great deal more convenient than in other places, referring especially to this Territory. Provo is also the County Seat of Utah County, gathering to its centre a great amount of county business, at any rate such a portion of it as pertains to keeping of records which makes it a kind of general place of resort for men from every part of the county, who wish to do business of this kind.

I give you this description to show you that they have every facility to make it one of the handsomest and most wealthy cities, according to the number of its inhabitants; they have a rich soil as well as an abundance of water and mill privileges, and yet for want of union in the feelings of that community, the place has been a great portion of the time at a kind of drag, the progress of the place has been slow; for when any measure would be presented, a few individuals would use their influence to check the wheel, the fact is, if they were not disposed to roll the load over, they could clog the wheels and hinder in a great measure its progress.

That has been the difficulty which has existed in that place, and in other places, and it has had the effect of retarding the progress of the place in wealth, in prosperity, in public buildings, schools, roads, bridges and other improvements, in private interests, and in farming facilities. To any man who has an idea of what men can accomplish, this arrangement is positively obnoxious; it seems as a clear illustration of the necessity of Saints being united. There is a city in Utah County by the name of Springville, in consequence of a little division which has arisen there occasionally they have been prevented for several years from building anything like a reasonable amount of school houses compared with the number of its inhabitants; there are individuals there who have been all the time blocking the wheels, and by that means they hinder the onward progress of the whole community in their labor of public improvements.

Now Brethern, almost all the difficulties that have been brought on the Saints from the beginning, was in the first place in consequence of this kind of division. There is nothing we ought to guard against so much on the face of the earth, as against division of this kind, or any other kind. It is an old adage that "union is strength," and a very true one. An old Scythian king who had many sons, on his death bed called them around him, and some of them suggested to him the propriety of his dividing his domains among all his sons. He took a bundle of arrows, and gave them to his sons saying, 'break that bundle of arrows'; they passed the arrows round and all tried to break them as the old man laid upon his death bed, and they could not; he then said, now untie them, and then break them; which was easily done. He then said to his sons, 'if you are all united as one man you can never be overpowered or destroyed, but if you divide you will be easily conquered.' We can now behold the result in the Russian Empire. This principle applies to the Saints, and to every principle of division that sticks out in any branch of the Church; hang together, and love, and faithfully carry out the measures of those that preside, for they know the best what measures to adopt.

The principle of division aims directly at the foundation of the Church. "But" say some, "I am nobody, and if I stick out I cannot do much hurt anyhow;" you can do a little, you can do all the hurt you are able to do; and the little influence you have, if it counts in any way it should count in favor of the common cause, and not against it; if it counts in its favor it counts twice; my exertions would count for what they are worth; not only this, but if I was operating against the cause it would take one of equal capacity of myself to balance me. The time is coming when one shall chase a thousand, and two shall put ten thousand to flight.

When will that be? When Israel is united. If all this people were absolutely united with all their hearts to pull open one grand thrend, upon one grand cord they would have power and dominion over the whole earth; all the men, and devils in hell, on the earth, or any where else could not make a successful opposition against us; the chief point we have got to maintain is the point of union; that is all that is necessary to be done to secure all we anticipate. That is what we have been schooled for, in the school house of trouble and affliction.

It is hard to make the Saints united, and we have to be sifted until we are perfectly united, that every man in the kingdom will be united as one man, and then no power can break our ranks. Talk about the power of men, only let the Saints be united, and their power vanishes away; it becomes weakness. But how is it? How is it in families? How many men are there that can take their families and gather round the family alter, and all of them bow before the Lord without a jar of feeling, with one perfect unity, every one willing to submit with the most perfect submission to the will of the Lord as clay in the hands of the potter; how many families, I say, are there in Israel where is the union exists in this style, in all its purity, and power? How many men would be permited to rear a family alter of this kind even in his own house? How many wards can we find in Israel that could unite so, that they would not find a single word of fault with each other, or grumble at the Bishop? The only way we can ever obtain this point is to look at our own faults and not at our neighbors, and listen to the counsel of those men whom God sets to counsel us; correct the errors in ourselves, and dwell on our own faults.

I recollect once in Iron County one of the brethren got irritated at me, and threatened to report my conduct to the First Presidency; I wanted to know what I had done, and he went on and gave a whole list of of my sins, for six months past he seemed to be as well acquainted with them as though he had counted them over every day after his prayers, as the Catholic counts his beads. One sin was, I had threatened to beat a teamster if he did not stop abusing his oxen, and a great many other such like. After he had read all my sins over at once, the list rather shocked me, but I suspected instead of counting his own faults, and keeping a record of them, he had been at work to keep a record of mine; instead of living to correct his own faults, he was trying to correct my errors.

When he got through, I said if he reported me to the Presidency, they would correct my faults and that would do me good, I was ready to make all due acknowledgement, and was prepared to receive reproof with a thankful heart, whenever it was necessary, for all my faults; at the same time I really did feel as though he had dwelt more upon my faults than his own; he subsequently acknowledged that was the fact, and I consequently escaped being brought before the Presidency. I always did feel when I saw a man abusing his oxen who could not defend themselves to lay the whip about his back, and I have once or twice come very near trying the operation. I believe every man in Israel is responsible as to how he uses his cattle; I can speak with perfect safety on this subject, for I am not possessed of cattle so as to have any one criticise me; a great proportion of animals that are used among men on the California and Oregon roads are abused in a shameful manner, and thousands have been killed with the Missouri whip; I never believed it was right, and when I had control of moving a camp I used a little extra exertion to prevent it.

Now brethern I want every one of you to let these principles sink deep in your hearts, that we may cultivate a principle of union, and look first at ourselves, reckon first with ourselves, and dwell upon our own faults instead of dwelling upon the faults of others. We have to know for ourselves and every wrong another person may do, is no excuse for me; and I tell you that every man who raises his hand in the branches among the wards or wherever he may be, to injure, and destroy the counsel and instructions given to them, and operate in opposition to those instructions, will fall into a snare, and I do absolutely know that if the Saints in the settlements, especially in the South, had listened to to the counsel of the Presidency in the foundation of those settlements, instead of the Church property ranging at a value of seven or eight hundred thousand dollars, it might have increased to as many millions just as well, if the brethren had listened with one spirit to the counsels and instructions given them from the head which God has appointed to lead and direct us.

But no, some of us thought they had a better plan, and there were as many plans as men, and never found out their mistake till the Indian war set in. We have got along by the mercy of God, and by his blessings, as well as we have, learning by the things which we suffer, and we all ought to continually thank him for it, and not our own wisdom. With these remarks I will close by bearing my testimony that this is the work of God, and these men are his servants, and God has placed in his Church a Prophet, Priest, and President, who is just as good and as wise a man as we are capable of keeping in our society; if he was any better than he is, God would have to take him, or we would have to improve with the rapidity of lightning, to keep up with him. Joseph Smith was a true prophet, and that which he has conferred upon this people is a true priesthood, and if you listen to the instructions and be led by the keys of this kingdom, you are in the path to an eternal exaltation, and we shall overcome every power that would seek to prevail against us. Let us be as one and we can never be broken. May God preserve us in the light and law of Christ, that we may be redeemed. Amen.

EXCHANGE ON SALT LAKE.

Emigrants, Missionaries, and all persons wishing to carry or send money to any part of Utah, are hereby notified that we have made the necessary arrangements, and are prepared to furnish SIGHT DRAFTS on Gov. B. Young, or on any of the principal Mercantile houses in Salt Lake City. Bring or send your money to the Luminary Office, and drafts for the same amount will be returned to you, or forwarded by succeeding mail to any person in Utah, as you may direct. Duplicates will be furnished, whenever required, so that in case of failure of mails, no loss will be sustained, and you will avoid the risk of transporting specie, besides the Church wish to use it here.

ST. LOUIS, 1855. ERASTUS SNOW.

The Last Hopes of the Wicked Exploded by the Inefficient Ravages of the Grasshoppers.

The Famine in Utah is not likely to be so particularly distressing as some of our friends have anticipated, and as some Gentlemen of the quill have predicted. The people of Utah may not be compelled to scatter among the adjacent States and Territories as prophecied by some; nor be forced to fraternize with the wild beasts and burrow for their support as suggested by others. The present prospect is, from the best information we can gather, that there will be as few die of hunger in Salt Lake City the coming winter, as in Saint Louis; and as few in Utah Territory, as in the State of Missouri, or any other State or Territory in the Union. The late prospect of distress and famine in Utah quite overjoyed many of our very sympathetic Christian philanthropists. This is the very thing that was needed (said they exultingly) to correct the odious practice prevailing among the Mormons in Utah. Only let the crops be destroyed and they will be compelled to feel the pain of hunger, and they will be glad to put away their wives, abandon their children, and live decently with one wife and patronize brothel houses like other Christians.

What a pity 'tis the grasshoppers would not stay and cteffet his radical reform so much to bedesired; and bring to pass the consumation so devoutly wished by black hearted villians of the Boggs and Benton order. Why did you not stay lovely grasshoppers? some are ready to say, are not the Mormons our sworn enemies? then why did you leave them to live? and why, Oh! why did you die without first starving them out? for now, they will not only live themselves, but their wives and children too, and instead of being all eaten up as we expected, they will come down from the Mountains when they get stronger, and eat us up, and the very least they will do, will be to take possession of the houses and lands we have robbed them of. It is true we have their signature to prove that they gave up claims to their property which was sufficient title for us under Governors Boggs Ford and Co., which titles their honorable successors have not presumed to question, and we hold the undisputed right and title to the Mormon's lands and property in Ohio, Missouri, and Illinois, so far as our fellow citizens are concerned; but those troublesome and dangerous Mormons in Utah have dared to question our right to their houses and lands, and have declared it in public assemblies, and have published it in their numerous journals too, that our claims and title deeds to their lands are legally nul and void, and when they are prepared to bring a legal action into our courts, they can claim every acre of land they have given up to us, because they did it at the point of our bayonets. Now if we tolerate this we shall be beggared and they will take us and our children to be their herdsmen and vine dressers, and perchance be forced to build the walls of their cities, haul stone and lumber for their Temples and public edifices which will be greater punishment than we can bear. Did we not mob their Prophes tar and feather and afterwards murder them and did we not violate their women and drive them en masse beyond the precincts of civlization? then why should we permit them to flourish and prosper, and hold up their heads so proudly as they do in Utah? If the Grasshoppers wont starve them out as we fondly hoped, let us send more Officers and Soldiers with instructions to seduce their wives and daughters, and thus provoke a quarrel with them, if they kill Uncle Sam's boys for seduction, as as they have some Civilians, we will then bring a mighty army upon them and wipe them all out of existance.

Now, we think the people of Utah are too well posted up in anti-Mormon tactics, and know too well the puerility of their plans and measures, to be scared by any schemes they may devise to overthrow and destroy them. If those gentleman who are so bitter in their denunciations of the Mormons, and so anxious to wipe them all out of existence, would just go to Utah, and commence operations they would most likely find they had the wrong "bull by the horns." We think if the courage and bravery of these stout hearted gentlemen were tested, they would be something like the tailor among the cabbages, who slashing furiously in all directions and defying the distant troops of French, was nearly scared out of his wits, by the sudden appearance of a cat, amongst the cabbages, or like a certain gentleman named James Campbell in Missouri, the leader of a mob in Jackson county, who ran before an old man he had tried to kill, crying, "get up or the Mormons will kill us," and whipping behind him as he ran, for he didn't know whether he was on foot or horseback. His horse lay dead a mile behind him.

It is well known that the Mormons are the most orderly, peaceable, and law abiding people in the United States; their history during the last twenty-five years, sufficiently proves to all reasonable men, that no other people would have quietly endured what they have, from individual States, from which they have been expatriated, with the silent acquiescence of the whole nation.

They have passed through such strange vicissitudes, and survived so many outbursts of jealousy and blind infatuation from their blood thirsty enemies; that it is difficult to conceive any trial or difculty they have not already encountered and trampled under their feet, and so it will be with every man and every people who rise up against them. They will wither as the grass, and will be as chaff of the summer threshing floor.

The God of Israel is the God of Saints, and He will plead their cause before all nations, and will enable them to cope with their ablest adversaries, and give them a happy issue out of every emergency, so that all people will know that it is the Lord, who hath brought to pass this strange and marvelous work we now behold in the Vallies of the Mountains, and which is spreading out its branches over all the earth. No people have suffered and endured one hundredth part of what this people have endured during the last few years; and no people are so well prepared as they to grapple with those that lay before them. They have purchased the blessings and privileges they now enjoy in yonder mountains with the blood of Prophets and Saints, and the blessings thus purchased will not easily be wrested from their hands. Their own righteous conduct and repeated sacrifices, supported by the blood of the righteous dead, constitute a plea for their safety and protection that will not be unheeded in that court where the merits of all such cases are decided.

Our Emigation on the Plains — Organization of a Branch at Atchison — Arrival of Missionaries in Texas.

We have received interesting communications from our brethren on the Plains, from which we learn that general good health prevails in all the companies, now journeying upon the prairies. Elder Edward Stevenson writes from Platte Bridge, 135 miles from Fort Laramie, and says: "As the mail is about leaving for the States, I hasten to inform you that the company from Texas is in good health and fine spirits, and our cattle is in good condition. We have had no trouble with the Indians, only to feed a few of them that came into camp, who seemed friendly. The feed from Laramie is rather poor for the season has been very dry. Most of the traders have left for the States, and those who remain are taken with a fearfulness of the Indians, who may come upon them. Reports are not favorable concerning the Indians, but we do not fear anything only to offend our God." Brief communications from the first and last companies will be found in another column, which though short will not fail to interest those whose friends are journeying in those companies. It will be interesting for our brethren in St. Louis, to remember that we have sent the first company from our own immediate ranks, comprising our very Bishop and Parson; the last company is conducted by our worthy President and brave General, Milo Andrus. With such pioneers and such a rear guard we think the Emigration is highly favored.

When the companies first entered upon the Plains it was rumored up and down the country that they were killed and scalped by the Indians. It is now rumored that Governor Young has dispatched messengers from the valley to send back the emigrants to the stakes, so that they be not starved to death — and every rumor no matter how stupid and ridiculous, never fails to secure its dupes, who would stretch their stomachs ad infinitum to swallow something crude and extravagant concerning the Mormons.

We have been favored with a brief communication from Elder A. L. Siler, from which we learn that the brethren of Atchison have organized themselves into a branch of the church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, consisting of thirty members. Andrew L. Siler, was chosen President who called upon John A. Jost and Albert Shaw, to be his counsellors. It is desirable that the brethren who are scattered around the upper country, should feel after the spirit of God, gather themselves together, as much as possible, report themselves to the Presidency in this city, and organize themselves if it be wisdom, and in all cases communicate their proceedings to us, that a correct record may be kept in this city of all the Saints who come within the limits of this stake of Zion. Elder Jas. McGaw, will probably attend to the general regulation of the affairs of the church in Weston, Leavenworth, St. Joseph, Atchison, &c., as soon as possible after his return from the Cherokee Nation; in the meantime let the brethren seek to be guided by the Holy Spirit, keeping the commandments of God, and they will not walk in darkness.

Elder James Cooper writes us from Texas where he has recently arrived in company of W. C. Moody from Salt Lake City, by way of the Cherokee Nation. After describing their visit, among their old Texian friends in the "Nation," and the organization of the Cherokee branch, he says: "The door seemed to be open in that country for a great and glorious work to be done." We shall be happy to hear from brothers Cooper and Moody as often as they have anything interesting to communicate, in the meantime we suggest that they correspond with Elder B. L. Clapp, Troy, Freestone Co., Texas, who will direct them in their future labors in that country.

A few hints to the Elders and all whom it may Concern.

Brethren: You are appointed the chief shepherds of the Saints who are placed under our jurisdiction, and as such we address you; hoping that God our Eternal Father, will inspire us with wisdom to dictate some things that will be useful and profitable for you. We may give verbal instructions from time to time, but they are soon forgotten; we therefore adopt a more abiding medium of instruction, by which our words may be seen and felt, and when forgotten, that they may be seen and felt again. In the first place we would say, let every man attend faithfully to his own business, and learn not to exceed the limits of his sphere; for if you handle things that don't belong to you, you are in danger of burning your fingers, or involve yourselves in difficulties that you might otherwise avoid. The straight and narrow path of your own duties is the only path you can safely tread. If you deviate from that line, you are in danger of falling into a snare ever ready to entrap the erring and unwary.

You are appointed as special watchmen in this Stake of Zion, and if you neglect to guard the interests of Zion, and sleep away your time, and suffer the black sheep, ring streaked, and goats to enter the fold, play with the lambs, and attack the chief shepherd because he declares that no goats or black sheep, shall dwell among them, or associate with them, you may expect soon to be removed unless you wake up and guard faithfully the interests of those who guard yours. Do not think because you are Elders, High Priests or Bishops, that you are lords over God's heritage; for you are merely servants of the Lord, and if you will not obey punctually and faithfully the instructions given you, but presume to act upon your own wisdom, independent of the will and counsel of the Lord through the chief shepherd; you will be quickly removed, and one more worthy, and more obedient will be appointed to fill your place.

If you would enjoy the spirit of God and the confidence of your brethren, stand up like men and defend the character of your brethren; particularly those who are placed over you. Never suffer a man in your presence to traduce the character of the authorities of the church; and if a man professing to be a brother, enter your councils, and wags his tongue against those men you know to be high-minded, honorable, virtuous and true; treat him as a blasphemer, and an infidel, nor suffer him to remain among you. If you will take this course, the wicked and profane will hate and despise you, and say all manner of evil against you falsely; but the spirit of God will dwell more abundantly with you, your brethren will have greater confidence in you, and God will more exceedingly bless you.

Do not think you can hold religion in one hand and the world in the other, and serve God to-day, and the devil to-morrow, and still be honored by your brethren as Elders in Israel. If you wish to be honored by the Lord, make yourselves honorable, and if you would make yourselves honorable, renounce the devil and all his works, and all those who will not follow your example. Never let the spirit of friendship or any slavish spirit intervene between you and the spirit of justice. If your calling and duty, require you to strike a blow that will sever your own brother and father from the church, let the blow be struck in faith and righteousness, and leave the result in the hands of the Lord, for judgment must be laid to the line, and righteousness to the plummet; and all the workers of iniquity must be cut off. Therefore thrust in your sickles and reap, Oh, ye Elders and High Priests; and keep yourselves pure before the Lord and your brethren, lest you have to say with the ungodly, "The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and my soul is not saved."

GLEANINGS.

General Simpson is expected to resign command of the British troops in the Crimea, in consequence of ill-health. It is thought that Gen. Markham, a young and promising officer, who had been raised by merit to the command of the second division of the army in the Crimea, will succeed Gen. Simpson in the Command of the Crimean army should the General resign as expected.

The Atlantic arrived at New York on the sixth inst., bringing dates to the 25th ult.

No further events of any importance have occurred in the progress of the war, but there are copious details of the Sweaborg bombardment and the battle on the Tchernaya.

The Russian loss at Sweaborg is reported at only 40 killed and 240 wounded. The fortifications were destroyed.

The Russian loss in the battle on the Tchernaya is nearly four thousand killed and wounded; the Allies only one thousand. The Russians were not pursued across the river, but hold their former position.

Pelissier says: The whole number of Russians buried was 3,329. 600 of them were taken prisoners. A dispatch of the 19th says the artillery have been opened upon Sebastopol, but the bombardment had not commenced. The four Russian steamers sunk in the Berbioush bay, have been sunk by the English, and the suburbs of the town burnt. A British gun boat went ashore during the attack, and was taken by the Russians together with a complete code of the Allies' signals.

A letter from Dr. Morris says there were not less than sixty-four deaths in Norfolk on Monday. The Herald gives the names of thirty-five persons who died on Sunday, and says that fifty bodies were burnt on that day. Fifty coffins were sent down from here on Saturday, and orders have been received for one hundred more. The boats brought up a large number of people who were flying from the scourge, some of whom took refuge in the rotunda of the exchange until they could procure lodgings.

A committee of the citizens of Norfolk, headed by Dr. John McCabe, passed through here to Washington, to ask the President's permission to remove the remainder of the inhabitants to Fort Monroe.

At Portsmouth the fever is abating — the deaths average about ten daily.

Capt. Ayrer of the ship Ariel from New York was murdered at Sea, as was supposed by two apprentices named H. Gerard and Geo. Anderson. The Captain was found dead in his berth, on the 17th of Aug., by the first mate, who by the request of the officers, passengers and crew, took the vessel back.

A negro conspiracy has been discovered in Jasper county Miss., the leader being an old Negro who sustains the reputation of being a conjurer. — It was intended to rendezvous at Garlandsville and march en masse to some free State. The plot was disclosed by one of the initiated. It is supposed that some white abolitionists are among them.

BROTHER HART: Another opportunity presents itself for me to write you. The Salt Lake Mail is just passing and waiting to take this note. Our progress is still onward; although, since I wrote you last, we have had a few drawbacks; two wagon axles, one wheel, and several tongues broke which has caused us some little delay; but notwithstanding we are up with brother Harper's company, who is now starting from this place. We have also had two deaths of aged persons, and some shght cases of sickness, but as a general thing, I am thankful to say, health reigns predominant. From over-exertion and fatigue, my health has been, for the last few days, much impaired, but this morning I feel quite well again, and am doing all in my power to push on this camp which is in my charge, as I am deeply anxious for their welfare. My brethren well know if there is not exertion used on our part, the season being so late, we shall feel some inclement weather when we are some hundreds of miles further West. The Saints feel well and cheerful. We are in excellent traveling condition, as our yesterday's work will tell—we came not less than twenty-five miles.

My love to all. I remain your brother in the gospel of Christ. MILO ANDRUS.

KEOKUK, Sept 3rd, 1845.

DEAR BRO. HART:—Knowing that you love to hear of the prosperity of Zion, as I understand matters and things concerning it, although surrounded by a poluted atmosphere and some are contaminated with it, yet I have commenced my work as usual, so that some four or five have asked for Baptism at my hands. Among the number are two that have never been baptized. When I look around I see so much to do here, that I fear I shall not be able to go any farther up the river till after conference, so that the friends that I have written to in Clinton county Iowa will have to excuse me for the present. I will just say that a part of the business I was sent here for, has been hard on me; I was obliged to go to Montrose in the night deprived of my usual rest, my spirit was oppressed; I went to Nauvoo the next, day to find relief, but it was such a God-forsaken place, Alas! there was no peace there for me, although my mind was not particularly relieved, yet I was glad to go and see the once beloved city of Joseph, and a part of the Temple which was once the delight of the Lord, and Joseph the prophet, seer and revelator, and Brigham his successor, which has now become a desolation and the place for devils to dwell in, and from its appearance I should think it would soon become a wilderness where the Dragon and Owl may rest and there will be none to molest them. The scene is too gloomy I must return. I left for Keokuk in the stage at 3 P. M. on Friday, preached on the Sabbath at brother McKnights, found a good spirit prevailing among the Saints, that have renewed their covenants, and a desire increasing among those that have not, to do right and obey the commandments of the Lord. I find them ignorant of many principles taught in St. Louis, but by the help of the Lord I mean to be faithful and humble in discharging all that is required of me, feeling my dependance on my Heavenly Father, I hope to fill my misssion to His acceptance.

My only desire is the salvation of my fellow creatures, the rolling forth of the work of the Lord, and the redemption of Zion, which I shall see if I am faithful, for the Lord hath spoken it. My feelings for the Saints are, their peace and happiness in time and eternity, their escape from the judgments of God, that hang over this guilty land which no one knows except those who are sent out to gather up the lost sheep of the house of Israel, and those that send them.

My prayer is daily that the Lord would bless your labors, and all that are associating with you, and all the efforts of the first presidency, to bring about, the reign of righteousness and peace upon the earth, as predicted by the ancient as well as the modern Prophets. JAMES CASE.

BARRY, PIKE Co., Ill. Sept. 3d 1855.

Brother Orson Spencer—The following ideas having presented themselves to my mind, I embody them in this communication, for the benefit of any person who values information above the dimes.

Subscribe for the papers. Would you know why? It is because that through that medium, is presented in a shape to meet the eye and understanding; those principles, which if you will receive and practically apply them, will increase your intelligence and usefulness, and thereby raise you, not only in your own estimation, but in that of every one who rightly appreciates intrinsic goodness.

Furthermore; you get knowledge thereby, as fast as it is elicited; fresh and pure.

Every Latter-day Saint should be posted up in events as they transpire, or he will fall behind the times; which in this age of progress, is inexcusable.

I look for the arrival of the "Mormon" and "Luminary," with an anxiety akin to that with which a hungry man anticipates a feast of the luxuries of the season. The perusal of such publications is indeed an intellectual feast. We thereby get the good things in their season, fresh and unadulterated; which to an epicure, is no small item of consideration.

I do not of course expect my remarks will be heeded by those in whose eyes a picayune assumes the size of a cart wheel, for if a principle of intelligence was to find its way into their narrow contracted souls, the poverty of the premises would drive it forth again.

"Knowledge is power" and should be secured at any price; for without it, we should be mere ciphers in existence; and had better be resolved into the elements from whence we sprang; that a better use might be made of them in some other organization.

What then is the trifling consideration of newspaper subscription, compared with the opportunity of enriching our minds with the stores of information, received through the revelations of the Great Eternal? I wish every Saint would not only subscribe for the "Mormon" and "Luminary," but if possible procure extra copies for the perusal of those who might not otherwise obtain them. These silent messengers accomplish much good; like "bread cast upon the water."

It is furthermore the duty of every well wisher of his kind to contribute his quota, towards the general aggregate of usefulness, whenever circumstances will permit.

To those also, who though not connected with us, are nevertheless interested in learning the progress of important events, I would suggest the advantage of becoming subscribers.

The Latter-day Saints have attained a position that entitles them to consideration and respect, however unwittingly accorded. They cannot be ignored or hidden under a veil of prejudice and sectarian bigotry any longer. They are rapidly increasing in numbers and that importance, which intelligence and indomitable energy is sure to command. You can't wipe them out of existence; so be wise in season and acquaint yourselves through the medium of their authorized publications, with their principles and policy; leaving lying editors and hireling priests to seek a market elsewhere for their wares, if they wish to continue their nefarious traffic in slander.

With my kind regards to brothers Hart and Edwards, I remain yours in the New Covenant,

EDWARD L. PAGE.

NORTH CROSSING, PLATTE RIVER, August 7, 1855.

DEAR BROTHER ANDRUS: Expecting the mail to pass us in a day or two, we again take up our pen to communicate with you; we are happy to inform you that we are thus far on our journey and all well, and have met with no accidents or losses worth mentioning. The cattle hold out well considering that in this region of country the feed is very thin and poor. The second company is now one day's drive behind us, and the third with the first of Williams' goods trains, is one day behind them.

We have not seen any Indians in this region, but we are informed that the Missouri Sioux's are very hostile, and have stolen a large number of horses from the traders here. Last month the traders at the Bridge killed three Indians and drove the remainder off into the mountains; they have fortified their trading post, and daily expect a company of Indians to burn the bridge. Under these circumstances we keep up an efficient advance and rear guard mounted and well armed. We carrell our horses, and well watch our cattle.

The soldiers that so much noise was made about in the States, came as far as Laramie, and returned the next day. We met one company on their return as far back as Fort Kearney. The traders curse them as cowards, and the originators, directly or indirectly of all their troubles with the Indians.—Peace and union still prevail in our camp, and all things go with us as well as we could possibly expect.

Hoping you and President Snow, with all our friends in St. Louis, are well and prospering in all your endeavors to build up the universal kingdom, we subscribe ourselves your brethren in the Lord.

JOHN HINDLY.
JOHN PARSON.

SULLIVAN, MOULTRIE County, Illinois, Aug. 26, 1855.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LUMINARY:

Dear Brother—I take this opportunity to write to you the second time, as I think you will be glad to hear from this part of the country as often as you can. Myself and family are all enjoying good health at present, and we hope these few lines will find you the same. The crops here are very good. The wheat crops are injured some little by the chinch bug—oats are very good, but the wind has blown the most of them down, so that they could not be cradled, and the people have not harvested but few of them, and there are a good many of them going to waste. I tell them they want some of those good old "Mormons," that they drove away from Nauvoo to save it for them, for they study the principles of mobocracy so much that they do not have time to save that which God has given them. I never have seen a better prospect for corn in this country in ten years.

The cholera has been very bad in Sullivan; there has been several deaths here by it, and it is a general time of sickness here, with chills and fever; and sore eyes; so we can see daily that the judgments of God are abroad in the land. But little do the people act as though they cared about the works of God, for their study is to get the dimes and dollars, and no matter how they get them, for the office seekers and mobocrats are plenty here. It reminds me a little of the times I saw once at Bear creek, and Green Plains as they were called at that time, several years ago, in Hancock county, when Nauvoo was in flourishing circumstances by the Mormons. When J. B. Backenstosh was sheriff of Hancock county, elected by the people of that county, and a mob arose and said they would drive the Mormons out of the county, or they would kill them; and they commenced on the scattering inhabitants first, so they went to Bear creek, and there they mobbed the Mormons, and burned their houses, grain, and their goods and left their sick folks in the woods; from thence they went to Green Plains, and there they served the Mormons in a similar manner, the lights were to be seen at Laharpe, three nights in succession; then Mr. Backenstosh issued hand-bills and sent them to different parts of the county, requesting the old settlers to turn out and stop the destruction of property; but they utterly refused, and continued to do so for three days, and then the honorable gentleman J. B. Backenstosh, the sheriff of that county, called on the Mormons at Nauvoo, and they turned out forthwith and by the help of God they soon put a stop to that mob proceeding. As I was one of the men called "Mormons" that Mr. Backenstosh called upon to go with him, I accordingly went and was one of the company that stopped the destruction of property at that time.

I was baptised by Elder Surine, in the State of Michigan and was confirmed in the church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, by Elder Surine and others having the authority as I believed; and I went to Nauvoo and there I became acquainted with Joseph Smith, Hyrum Smith, Brigham Young, John Taylor and others; and I found them all to be good honest hearted, fair dealing men, as far as my acquaintance extended, which was a little over three years, and I think that is sufficient time to find out whether a man or set of men are good honest wholesome citizens or not; for my part, I believe that if the world could be filled up with just such men as Joseph Smith, Hyrum Smith, Brigham Young, John Taylor and James Case, and a good many other honest hearted Mormons that I know, I think we should need no lawyers; and we could get along better than we now do. But if I could sell my little farm that I own here, I would go where the Saints of God are. I own forty-one acres of land here in Moultrie county, four miles East of the county seat; all inclosed with a good fence round it, all well broke, a good well of water, good log house on it, plenty of good timber in a half mile for sale; now please send somebody here to buy my land, hogs, sheep, cattle and farming utensils, so that I can be prepared to receive counsel in building up the kingdom of God, in which I expect to spend the balance of my days, as soon as God will open up the way. I expect to be in St. Louis at the October Conference if circumstances will permit.

I beg an interest in the prayers of all honest hearted Saints, that we may meet with the camps of Saints at Atchison next spring.

GEORGE W. CASE.

CARSON COUNTY.

[From Elder O. Hyde to Governor Young.]

June 19, 1855.—We arrived at J. & E. Reese's Ranch in this county, on the 17th inst. We had an excellent trip, but a very fatiguing one for both man and beast. One horse died on the way with swelled neck, and one was shot on the desert by the accidental discharge of a gun.

Governor Bigler is one of the road commissioners, and has been looked for over here for the last ten days; but he has not come, and rumor now says that he is not coming at present.

Messrs. J. & E. Reese have a most splendid mill and ranch. The labor that has been done by them is immense. Their crops generally look well.—Grasshoppers are very destructive, however, on wheat and vegetables, especially on late wheat.—The harvest will be only middling on account of the insects.

Great numbers of cattle are dying on the road.—So great mortality among stock on the road was never before known. It is heart-sickening to see and smell the dead carcasses on the road. The fuel is generally good on the South side of the Humbolt; but the road, the hills and mountains on this side of Haw's ranch on the South are too monstrous for a Christian train of wagons to traverse. Loose cattle and stock may do well for water and grass. The big mountain is not a patching to several that we came down. All four wheels locked, and men behind with lariets to hold back and keep the wagons from ending over upon the teams.

Still we got along well, and without accident. It is a miracle how we ever got over with the millstones. But thanks be to our heavenly Father, we are all here safe and sound, and in fine spirits. The Lord has been with us, and is with us still, and I trust ever will be.

Brother Heywood is much better than when he left, but is far from being a well man. He wishes to be kindly remembered to you all, as do all our company

IRELAND.

[From a letter from Elder James Ferguson.]

Belfast, April 25, 1855.—Our Conference convened on Sunday the 22nd inst., and such a time all present said never before had been in Ireland. The spirit of God burned like a fire in our bones, and I felt all day like shouting "Hosannah!" Five baptisms at night closed the business of the day.

On the 23rd, McAllister and I, with about a dozen more of the Saints, went on to the Cave Hill.—On reaching the summit, I led off in three times three cheers for Mormonism in Ireland, and we made the old hills ring again with our shouts.

I began to feel as though I had got a start in the country, and trust when I am called to leave it, to be able, with the help of the Lord, to leave the work in a little better condition than I found it. Among the other business of the day, we organized a branch of the church in Clontibut.

I should have liked to drop in on the battalion boys when they met, if I could have done so without leaving my post; I am sure they had a glorious time. But we will have still more glorious ones when we have more time. The same influence that directed me to enroll myself in that battalion has brought me here, and the same good Spirit that sustained me in it, will sustain me on my present mission. I was happy to hear that I lived in their memories, and I would gladly have made a speech for them at their party; but I am making speeches for them all the time, and they had better spokesmen than Jim with them.

I never was happier in my life than on my present mission; but I must allow that my happiness is displayed in a different way to what it was at many times at home. My happiness is more displayed in my gratitude to my Heavenly Father for His unremitted kindness to me, than in frivolity and nonsense; which are good enough in their time, but not suitable for every day employment.

I have been a little disappointed in not getting the 'Deseret News;' the brethren promised to send it to me, but not a number has yet arrived.

For the Luminary.

Mr. Editor:—I never expect to gain notoriety by any brilliant flashes of wit, for if I ever possesed such a rarity, it certainly was thrashed out of me, by my Sunday school teacher for undertaking to give the definition of the word few. I will relate the circumstance. The class of which I composed a part was promised a reward if we got the lesson for the day committed to memory. Oh! happy recollections.

How sweet when the morning of Sabbath did come,
With joy to arise and depart from my home,
And haste to the school where instructions were given,
To teach me the way to the kingdom of Heaven.

With all that childish curiosity, inspired with hope of being the sucessful scholar, the classes were formed, the lessons heard, and I pronounced entitled to the prize. With a conciousness of merit, and guileless pride, I received three fine apples, (a prizable gift in that part of the world) the teacher remarking as he handed them to me, "here are a few apples for your reward." I demured and said no sir, there is not a few. He immediately took back my prize, the beauteous red, and rich fragrance of which, had already enkindled the fire of boyish mirth, he cuffed my ears, subjected me to the degrading position of the dullest boy in the class, pronounced me an impudent dolt, and dissatisfied with my reward; he then shared the fruit among the classmates, forbidding them to allow me to taste. All this I had to endure, without the privilege of explanation. At length the superintendent of the school came along and observing my downcast looks and streaming eyes, interrogated my teacher for the cause.

The superintendent, after informing himself of what had transpired, and carefully investigating the punishment inflicted, he bid me approach him, and told my classmates to form a circle around me.

He then asked me if three apples were not a few, how many did I think were? I answered eight. Eight replied the superintendant. Where is the proof of your statement? I told him Peter, an Apostle of Jesus Christ, in his first epistle, third chap. and 20 verse, when speaking about the family of Noah and the ark, said, "wherein few, that is, eight souls were saved."

The withering glance the superintendant cast upon the teacher I never shall forget and never expect to see surpassed till the Judge of all the earth shall frown upon the enemies of His Saints.

He took my hand in his and wiped the glistening tears from my burning cheeks, and spoke words of encouragement and fatherly tenderness, and placing me at the head of my class he left me for a season to receive the congratulations of my schoolmates. He shortly returned bringing me what I supposed my reward, "a few, that is, eight" apples, together with a reward of merit, a handsome medal which I wore so long as I remained in that school. Here I might soliloquize and draw a pleasing contrast between the hireling and the master, but the moral of the above incident is plain enough for my present purpose.

I do not expect you will receive any additions to your subscription list, (I wish you may) because I have numbered my self among your occasional contributors. However I intend from time to time, as occasion may offer, to pen my observations of men and things in general, Editors, Parsons, and Know-things in particular; you by this time begin to guess that I claim freedom of speech, untrammeled thought and liberty of conscience, as being among my "unalienable rights" guaranteed to me by that divine instrument, the constitution of these United States, which was given by inspiration of God according to the testimony of Joseph Smith, the Prophet of this dispensation.

Listen ye whining, canting hypocritical priests, and blush for shame! while I repeat, the declaration that the constitution of these United States were given by inspiration of Almighty God, and ask yourselves, which of you dare testify of this? yet you belch forth from your pulpits, the damning charge of "disloyalty of the Mormons" the accumulated evidence to the contrary notwithstanding. Where, I ask in the history of the Mormons, amidst all their mobbings, and the wholesale murder of their wives and children, can you find a parallel to the disgraceful outrages, and defiance of law as are daily perpetrated in Kansas; echo answers where? with all the "revolting disclosures," "seditious speeches," "treasonable plots," "defiant attitude," "reckless legislation," laid to the charge (though unsubstantiated) of Gov. Young, although the Kansas outrages are established facts, (as some of the Simon pures can testify,) we do not hear the mild corrective Uncle Sam's squad recommended, as in the case of Utah's immaginary revolt, the emanation of addled brains, whose morals like their hearts, are tainted, and whose character for integrity, and reputation for truthfulness have been more than questioned. Yet it is but national to expect that the vision of such attainted miscreants, as have been found reviling Mormonism, would be obscured and their perceptions darkened, when such a baneful miasma is constantly arising from, and floating around their infected carcasses, and that their own hated deformities will appear stamped upon the object they gaze at. I am getting a little too fast. But excuse me, Bro. Hart, and I will try to tell you what I intended to do, so that you may enter me upon the list as "commited" against pandering journalism, and a few other little fixens I have my peep stones "upon."

The fashions and vices, the follies and cruelties of this Pseudo Christian age, afford a prolific theme for the moralist, as I make no pretensions to such qualifications, consequently you need not expect a homily from me, no sir: rather let me, "shoot at folly as it flies." To dwell upon the vices and follies of this generation is not the mission of Mormonism, but to establish a pure code of morals, to bring about a restoration of virtuous principles, which lies at the foundation of a Theocratic Government, in contradiction to all other governments upon the earth.

Here let me pause for the present and wipe my SPECTACLES.

Miscellaneous.

From the New Orleans Delta, 25.

HIGHLY IMPORTANT FROM MEXICO.

Flight of Santa Anna — Excitement in the Capital — Destruction of Property — The Plan of Ayulta adopted — Parting Address of Santa Anna to his Troops.

By the arrival of the steamship Orizba from Vera Cruz, which place she left on the 23rd, we are in possession of dates from the city of Mexico to the 19th, and from Vera Cruz to the date of sailing.

The news is highly important. Santa Anna abdicated, and left the city of Mexico on the 9th. On the 8th, previous to his departure, he published a decree, naming the Judge of the Supreme Court and Gen. Salas, and Gen. Carrera his successors.

The people, however, would not have a government of his choice, and so the garrison, the population of the city, and the authorities, at once pronounced. General La Vega, the hero of Resaca de la Palma, was chosen their leader. The plan of Ayulta was adopted, which was the Alvarez plan. General La Vega at once declared his proclamation to the Governors of the several Departments, directing them to appoint two delegates from each State, for the purpose of choosing a Provisional President for the Republic.

This all occurred on the 13th. On the 16th, the delegates assembled and elected Don Martin Carrera Provisional President, who at once entered upon the discharge of the duties of the office. Carrera was one of the Cabinet Ministers of Santa Anna, being Governor of the District, and was of course opposed to the revolution. His election as President seems to have caused great dissatisfaction. The Moniteur, which paper is again resuscitated, declares that in the election of Carrera, Gen. La Vega has virtually annulled the plan of Ayulta, because the second article of that, provided that as soon as the revolution should be successful, the commanding officer of the revolutionary forces should appoint one delegate from each State, which delegates should choose a President for the Republic.

On the evening of the 15th inst., Santa Anna arrived in Vera Cruz, escorted by Guias, a battalion of lancers, and another of light artillery. He was received with a national salute and great demonstrations of joy. The palace was illuminated; there was a display of fire-works and enthusiasm, and a great quantity of gunpowder was burnt. Vera Cruz still remained loyal to the abdicating dictator. The Eco of the 16th gave an account of his arrival, but did not seem to be aware that he was on his way out of the country.

On the following day, however, the address of Santa Anna, in which, after reviewing his course as President of the Republic since 1853 and giving a brief history of the present distracted condition of the country, and stating the causes which impel him to do so, he takes his final leave of his native country, and states he goes into voluntary exile for the country's good. That he had left the Goverment in the hands of his ministry, as provided by the Constitution in case of the death or absence of the President. The proclamation slightly astonished the people of Vera Cruz; but they soon recovered from their surprise and joined in with the plans of the revolutionists.

Santa Anna seemed to be in a hurry to get out of the country, and intended to embark on the war steamer Iturbide, but there was a severe norther blowing, and his embarkation was prevented. The soldiers of the garrison were drawn up in a line, however, to receive his farewell address, which was read to them by their commander, General Yarmariz. We translate it for the benefit of our readers:

"Companions in Arms:—With the deepest and most painful feelings of regret, I take my leave of you forever. In bidding you farewell forever, I conjure you that you do not depart from the strict path of honor and duty; that you continue to be the defenders of the nationality, as you were the founders of the independence.

"My friends: I go well satisfied with your conduct, loyalty, obedience and discipline, which have ever been its distinguishing features. Be you ever the most firm supporters of the laws and the legal authorities. Anarchy will devour your beautiful country, and the nationality will disappear if you meddle with what does not concern you — if you support those factions which are disputing the power. Be the faithful servants of your country, and aspire to nothing more.

"In the retirement, where I hope to spend my last days in the quiet of private life, the recollections of your firm adhesion to me, of the valor with which you sustained my government, and the hopes which I conceived, that you would some day become the avengers of the outrages suffered by our loved country, will be among the most pleasant remembrances of my life.

"Farewell; and be assured of the eternal love of your companion and friend, ANTONIO LOPEZ DE SANTA ANNA."

The soldiers filed off in silence after listening to this harrangue, and passed to the palace, on the balcony of which Santa Anna was standing. There does not appear to have been any demonstration whatever, no enthusiasm expended.

The norther having ceased to blow at 5 o'clock, on the 17th, the ExPresident quietly embarked on the war steamer Iturbide, which soon after sailed out of port, and the Napoleon of the West, for the last time, perhaps, looked on the golden shores of his native land.

The Vera Cruz Eco, in speaking of his departure says:

"His numerous and faithful friends will ever gratefully remember the illustrious man, who has given the country so many proofs of his noble and disinterested patriotism; the last and most notable of which was his abdication of power, and voluntary exile from the scenes of political strife and turmoil in Mexico, that he might give his country peace from her civil dissentions, and history will one day view this act with that impartiality which his cotemporaries cannot at present. That day will also arrive when history will do Santa Anna the justice he merits."

On the 15th, after the departure of Santa Anna for Havana in the steamer Iturbide, the authorities of Vera Cruz, pronounced in favor of the plan of Ayulta.

Summary from Deseret News.

Associate Justice W. W. Drummond and his lady arrived with the Eastern mail.

From the News of the 15th:

The weather, since the latter part of May, has been very warm, and, with but few exceptions, very sunny, making the air and ground dry and hot, and the streams very low, thus causing the loss of much of the small portion of grain and vegetables left by the grasshoppers. 17th inst., cloudy, with a pleasant breeze.

From the News of the 24th:

Mr. Howard Egan arrived from Sacramento on the 21st inst. He left that place on the 4th, and brought a large file of papers of later Cal. and Eastern dates then any received by mail, for which we are much obliged. Mr. Egan saw Elder O. Hyde, Marshal J. L. Heywood, and Judge Stiles at Sacramento, all well. Elder P. P. Pratt had started for home by the north route. Mr. Egan deviated very much from all the previously travelled routes, with the view of reconoitering for a way that would avoid the Goose Creek M'ts of one route, and the miry places, in the wet seasons, of Beckwith's trail; we are not yet informed of his success.

Arrived from their missions in Hindostan, the Sandwich Islands, and in California, on the 15th instant, Elders Chancy W. West and Redick N. Allred, and on the 21st, Elders William McBride, Henry W. Bigler, Nathan Tanner and William Farrar.

The brethren feel well in again enjoying the society of their families and the Saints, after the self-denial, privations and hardships of their arduous missions.

Los Vegas.—By letter from Elder Wm. Bringhurst to Elder Joseph Cain, dated July 10, the health of the camp was generally good, and the weather very warm. We extract: "Our crops look remarkably well; we think that we can see the corn grow, at any rate it does grow one and one-half inches in 24 hours.

Fort Supply.—Br. Lewis Robinson report that the crops at the Fort looked finely when he left there on the 18th inst., and as yet the grasshoppers had done no damage in the fields. The brethren were all well and in good spirits.

Accidentally Drowned.—On the 14th of July, while bathing in the pond near Elder Jas. Bennett's house, in Bishop Wm. Kay's Ward, brother Frederick Robbins, aged 25 years, 3 months and 9 days. He was the son of Edmund and Elizabeth Robbins, and late from Cheltenham, England.

From the News of 1st August:

Animals.—From Elder George A. Smith's account of his trip to Utah, we should judge that some individuals in that region are singularly negligent in taking proper care of their stock. This is more to be wondered at, since the grasshoppers and drouth have already so severely curtailed our prospects for plenty of food, for it would be presumed that selfishness, if no higher principle, would induce every one unitedly to keep their animals where they would do well, and at the same time be careful to see that they did no damage to the crops, as what little surplus can possibly be saved in one settlement will be needed to make up a deficiency in another. Who will be so reckless and improvident as not to keep his animals out of mischief?

Elk Mountains.—By letter from Elder O. B. Huntington, clerk of the company, to the Church Historian, dated July 17, we learn that the persons appointed to make a settlement in that region left Manti, May 21, and arrived at the point they have chosen for a location, on the left bank of Grand river, June 15. There are 41 men in this company, under the Presidency of Elder Alfred N. Billings. They have located in a valley some ten miles long by two and a half wide, with the Elk mountains thirty miles distant in an East South-east direction. Elk mountain and Pack-saddle creeks unite near the centre of the valley and empty into Grand river where it enters a kanyon in the mountains South of the settlement; the river runs through the North-west end of the valley, and is ruggedly kanyoned at its entrance and exit. They have built a strong corral 130 feet by 64, and a stone fort 64 feet square.

The corn raised by the Indians was in tessle, and their vines were in blossom.

Arrapene and Ammon with their bands arrived there on the 13th of July, on their way to trade with the Navajos.

Some of the corn planted by the brethren was knee high, and their vines were growing finely.—All were in the enjoyment of good health and excellent feelings. We have been told that Br. Stephen Moore and seven others, are now in on a short visit, and intend to start back on or about the 9th of August, affording an opportunity for sending letters.

Arrival.—The Surveyor General for Utah, David H. Burr, arrived in this city on the 27 ult. He left Fort Leavenworth on the 2d of June, and camped with Captains. Haight's and Miller's companies on the Blue, forty-five miles beyond Fort Kearney, all well. Mr. Burr reports having seen but few Indians on the route, and had no trouble with them.

The Temple.—The massive foundation of this building was finished July 23d, and the workmen are progressing rapidly with the stone wall of the basement story.

TURKISH AND AMERICAN SOCIETY.

This party was no other than the ladies of a harem. . . . They were thirteen in number, just a bakers' dozen, and belonged to a Pacha who was making his annual tour of the different posts under his government, and had sent them on before to have the household matters all arranged upon his arrival. And no doubt, also, they were to be in readiness to receive him with their smiles; and if they continued in the same humor in which I saw them, he must have been a happy man who could call them all his own. I had not fairly recovered from the cries of the poor camel, when I heard their merry voices. Verily, thought I, stopping to catch the last musical notes, there are exceedingly good points about the Turks; chibouks, coffee, and as many wives as they please. It made me whistle to think of it. Oh, thought I, that some of our ladies could see these things; that some haughty beauty, at whose feet dozens of worthy and amiable young gentlemen are sighing themselves into premature wrinkles and ugliness, might see these things! I am no rash innovator. I would not sweep away the established customs of our state of society. I would not lay my meddling fingers upon the admitted prerogatives of our ladies; but I cannot help asking myself if, in the rapid changes of this turning world, changes which completely alter rocks and the hardest substances of nature, it may not by possibility happen, that the tenor of a lady's humor will change. What a goodly spectacle to see those who are never content without a dozen admirers in their train, following by dozens in the train of one man! But I fear much, that this will never be, at least in our days. Our system of education is radically wrong The human mind, says some philosopher, and the gentleman is right, is like the sand upon the shore of the sea. You may write upon it what character you please. We begin by writing upon their innocent unformed minds, that, "born for their use, we live but to oblige them." The consequence is, I will not say what; for I hope to return among them, and kiss the rod in some fair hand; but this I do know, that here the "twig is so bent" that they become as gentle, as docile, and as tractable as any domestic animal. I say again, there are many exceeding good points about the Turks.—[Stephen's Incidents of Travel.

CITY ITEMS.

The caping stone is laid upon three-eights of the wall around the Temple Block, and the workmen have commenced plastering the northern face of the adobe portion of the northern line.

The stone foundation of the new Historian Office is receiving its stone water table, and soon will be ready for the adobie layers.

Prest. B. Young's large dwelling house is progressing rapidly; the walls, chimneys and roof timbers are all up, and the very tasteful granited and polished sandstone portico at the south end is ready for the handsomely carved stone lion which is to surmount it. This building is just west of the Governor's new mansion, both of which, together with the President's and Tithing Office, are built upon the S. E. corner of the block east of the Temple Block.

City Creek affords far to little water for irrigating the numerous gardens and fruit and shade trees, but the canal from Big Cottonwood will in due time entirely supply all deficiency.—[Deseret News.

Bad Looking Girls Wanted.—A gentleman at Elmira wishes to secure the service of a girl to do housework, who isn't run after by more than ten men—who can be contented at home one evening in a month—who when she is out will come in before midnight, through some other way than the window—who hasn't more than three families of friends and relatives to provide for—and who can get a meal of victuals without seasoning with dirt, hair and feathers. Good looking girls needn't apply, and one over forty preferred.

"Mike," said a bricklayer to his laborer "if you meet Patrick, tell him to make haste, as we are waiting for him."

"Shure and I will," replied Mike; "but what will I tell him if I don't meet him?"

PLURALITY OF WIVES.

Ye theologians, pray tell me why,
(If such sage counsel in your craniums lie,)
Those ancient men of God took many wives,
In sacred union, for eternal lives?
If what you say be true; that 'tis a shame
To duplicate the bearer of your name,
Shall lapse of time make righteous Abra'm base,
And take a Jacob's Rachael from her place?
Consign a Gideon to a guilty grave,
And damn a Moses that did Israel save?
Or, has the great I AM to you revealed
A secret, from His Prophets kept concealed?
Or, have you found it in the sacred writ?
(From lid to lid you've scanned it every whit;)
If so, please quote it; I like you confide
In that sage volume left us for our guide:
I read within that book you so extol,
That God to David gave the wives of Saul;
Do you condemn Him—say it is a crime
To give one man two women at a time?
A thousand pities you had not been there
To manifest your wisdom and your care.
The time the Prophet saw is on the wing,*
"When seven women to one man shall cling,
(Not for the lack of clothing, or of bread,
But for a husband—for a man—a head,)
To obviate reproach and share his name,"
As to be single then will be a shame.
For war will strew its victims o'er the plain,
And maddened men rush heedless to be slain;
"A man shall be more precious in the land,
Than golden wedges from the Ophir strand."
If you perchance among the worthies stand,
And "seven women" claim your saving hand,
Do not reject the six an save the one,
And boast of magnanimity when done.
If "Saviours on Mount Zion" you would be,
Seek not to bind what God hath ordained free;
Yet in your freedom, don't yourselves debase,
Like heartless wretches of the Gentile race:
Be Saviors, not destroyers of the fair,
Let truth and virtue be your Polar Star;
Appreciate the blessings to you given;
Fulfil your destiny in earth and heaven.

American Sympathy in the European Contest.

While the mightiest powers of Europe are closed in deadly strife, and the battle hangs "long time in even scales," the portion of the civilized world who look on as spectators of the struggle in breathless anxiety, exhibit the contending emotions of hope and fear alternately, as the party with which they sympathize gains or losses ground. Both parties have friends among the spectators. In despotic governments, where the King or Emperor and his court control the press, and speak for themselves in the name of the nation, sympathy with the more despotic power will manifest itself; for in the struggle is involved the permanence or overthrow of the "divine right of kings." The despot of Prussia, who is allied to the Czar of all the Russians by the ties of royal blood as well as imperial safety, has from the first manifested an earnest sympathy for the Russian cause, though he has chosen, wisely for himself, to stand as an unarmed sentry, ready, on short notice, to gaurd the approaches to the territory of his royal relative.

The position of Austra, though to a superficial view pacific or equivocal, is in reality one of sympathey with Russia. Such, other things being equal, is the position we have reason to believe she would naturally assume. But, fortunately for the Western Powers and the cause of freedom, the leven of republican discontent is working among the oppressed subjects of the Austrian despot, and, shonld the rigid espionage which is kept up be relaxed, as the result of more active sympathy with Russia, the republican element would again strike for its rights, as did the Hungarians, and the most formidable enemy of despotic power in Austria would be found in her own subjects. Unfortunately for freedom and for Great Britain, her encouragement of Austria in putting down the Hungarian rebellion distracted the hopes of the republicans of Europe, and by that act she forfeited much of that sympathy which would otherwise have sustained her in prosecuting this war. That Great Britain will eventually regain this sympathy we have little doubt, especially if she becomes so much straitned as to appeal from necessity to the republican element of Europe. That she has the hearty co-operation of her own subjects in this war is well attested. Under her constitutional government the war could not proceed without popular favor. Under the British Constitution, too, Kossuth finds shelter from Austrian persecution, prepared, when the favored time shall come, to strike again for freedom. He is at present the recognized leader of republicanism in Europe. Experience and misfortune have made him cauticus, and when he strikes again, the despots of Europe will tremble. He waits for England to give the word, and the masses of Brittain are fast urging the Government to that measure. Great Britain is now the European head-quarters for constitutional liberty, and she is rapidly approaching the time when her government must recognize the soverignty of the people. When that day shall come, the fall of despotism in Europe will no longer involve a question. That such a day is approaching is manifest in the concessions which the British Government is constantly making to the demands of the people. Austrian despotism scents the popular breath of the British nation, and manifests an unmistakable disposition to fly to her only hope of safety—an alliance with Russia. England is almost ready to say, let her go, and we'll trust the tender mercies of her own people that she gains nothing by that movement for herself, and while Austrian and Russian royalty will be allied the masses of Austria and Britain perchance will, be allied in fighting for freedom.

Having noticed the indications in Europe we come now to our main object—that of classifying the expression of sympathy with the contending nations which are made in our country. We have a free government. The people are sovereign. Except so far as they have conceded their rights to the law making power, they know no restraint but moral obligations. But when the government was organized toleration for the sake of union was extended to an element hostile to the principles on which the government was founded. The element was African slavery. It has grown with her growth until it has acquired a power that already shakes the the very pillars of our government. Its supporters are many and influential, and between universal slavery and universal freedom, they prefer the former, and with bold impudence proclaim their taunting motto—"Cotton is King." This principle is aggressive. It must necessarily increase while freedom decrease, or vice versa. The slave power sees in Russia a system of slavery in which there are elements of permanence. The reason that if Russia triumphs in this war, she controls for ages to come the European continent, and constitutional freedom is overthrown. If Russian serfdom is spread over Europe, the influence of Europe will favor the aggressions of slavery on this continent. When the navy of the Russian Bear sweeps through the Mediterranean, and sails in proud defience of the world, up the Bay of Biscay and the English channel, the slave holder of America will be obliged no longer to cower under the scorn of public opinion in Western Europe. Nay, more: he can look to that country for aid and comfort; and more: With the power of the Bear extended over our country, he and his children may be nobles in perpetuity. To secure this, there needs but a civil war in this country, and that the slave power can raise with a breath. The fire is already kindled. On the Western border, free government has been usurped, and despotism reigns supreme.

Is it then a matter of wonder that with these conflicting elements, freedom and slavery, at work in our country, there should be a deversity of sympathy among the people in reference to the fearful struggle now going on in the Crimea? In this part of the country the press is yet free, but while the friends of freedom look for it to give a certain sound on this question of the European struggle, even in the free States, we find its notes discordant. A party who vauntingly claim that they are the only true friends of freedom, though they are unequivocally responsible as a party for the despotism on our own border, announce through their organs as GOOD NEWS FROM EUROPE, the fact that the allies—who fight under the banner of constitutional liberty, against a powerful and spreading despotism—have been defeated. One organ utters this libel upon a free government, and a hundred venal counterparts in the free North echo the blasphemy. Are the citizens of the free States of America willing to be guided by such leaders? Will our adopted citizens, who have themselves escaped from oppression, repeat the ominous echo which speaks to them of chains and slavery? This is no fancy sketch.—Specious argument cannot avail to disprove it. Intelligent men of all lands weigh the issue of the European contest in the same balance. The progress of slavery on the one hand. or of freedom on the other, is the alternative. Those who desire the spread of slavery, may give their fellows hypocritical reasons for their unnatural hopes, but in their conscience their motives, if they have any, stand confessed. If they have no motives but those of time serving self interest, they are like vacuums in nature—objects of abhorence.

"FREE LOVE."

The licentious doctrines which have been so indefatigably preached up among us for the last twenty or thirty years are bearing their appropriate fruit.—Every now and then, men are startled by the revelation of some monstrous development or other, of the existence or even possibility of which they could not have conceived beforehand. One of these revelations has come to us recently, through a Wisconsin journal. That paper—the "Oshkosh Courier"—refers to an association of men and women, in a little village called "Ceresco," in Fond du Lac county. This association calls itself the "Ceresco Free Love Union." A synopsis of the doctrines embraced by this Union gives, also, a squint at the practices to which such doctrines lead. This synopsis says that the Union holds:—

1. The right of every woman to choose whoever she will, to perform the part of a husband for the time, and to change that person as often as she pleases.
2. The duty of the woman to yield herself to the embraces of the man she loves.
3. That these principles when put into practice, will bring about the millennium; will do away with the pains of child-bearing, and alleviate human suffering in various ways.
4. That fornication may be "holy."
5. That bigamy is no crime
6. That the crime of adultery is "fictitious," and that what the law calls adultery, may be the highest and truest relation of which two persons are capable.
7. That bastards are the most beautiful children in the world.
8. That society ought to be destroyed.
9. That wives, though idolized by their husbands, and supported in affluence, are to yield to the love of other men if they like them better.

It is evident enough that the concubinage which is the fruit of such doctrines is merely prostitution organized and regulated in a manner differing only as to forms, from what may be seen at any house of ill-fame in any of our principal cities. It is hardly conceivable that there can be found in this country, educated men and women, with pretentions to refinement and decency of mind or manners, who can be persuded, by no matter what kind of sophistry, to enter into such "leagues of death." Yet, so it is. This Ceresco Union avows and defends its principles. For the details of these resort must be had to their text books, such as "Esoteric Anthropology," and a work on "Marriage;" the former by a strolling lecturer upon "Woman's Rights," "Socialism," &c., T. L. Nichols, and the latter by the same individual, conjointly with a Mrs. Mary S. Gove Nichols, one of the strong minded women of the age.

An investigating committee raised, at a meeting of the citizens of "Ripon," an adjoining settlement who had felt it their duty to inquire into the principles of this organization, state that the Ceresco Union was formed there last summer. At that time a Dr. Newberry was in Ceresco, and lectured in defence of "Free Love." Newberry during his stay, received from certain of the Ceresco ladies many marks of attachment. Another man, who is mixed up in this business is a fellow named Warren Chase. This Chase seems to have joined it, as Paddy says, "for the reason he had;" that reason being the gratification of his sensual appetites, At a meeting of the men of Ripon, Chase was denounced as having been guilty of criminal connexion with a lady of Auburn, N. Y., whom he had left, "in an extremely unhappy condition." "A very voluminous correspondence" revealed the fact that "at least six different women had become the victims of Chase." Many women who have followed him have evidently gone after something worse than a "wild-goose chase." The sensible conclusion of the Ripon meeting was that, if the principles of the "Ceresco Union" could be universally carried out, there would be "nothing left for us but a prospective generation of bastards and strumpets."

For half a century, there have been 'corps of sappers and miners'—to say nothing of more open assailants—who have been indefatigably at work to destroy the sanctity of Marriage, and of the Family. Fanny Wright did, in her day, all she could to forward the wicked work. Robert Dale Owen, now, to the disgrace of the United States, and of Mr. Pierce's administration, the representative of our Government at one of the Courts of Europe, followed in her footsteps. Besides that, he was in the worse sense of that word, an "Infidel;" he wrote a work called "Moral Physiology," the aim of which was to make prostitution safe. The new York Tribune, though Greeley disavows sympathy with the "Easy Marriage" and "Free Divorce" party, has nevertheless, through its long and mischievous career, by its generally licentious character, lent a powerful support to all the contemners of Marriage and the Family relation. The Tribune is in the habit branding its neighbor of the Herald, as "Satanic"—an epithet which, looking at the subtle and deadly poisons which the Tribune has been instilling, for years, into the minds of its readers, more justly belongs to the last named paper, than to any other paper in the United States. There is not a little truth in the following statement of the Herald:

The Ceresco free love platform is but the complete development and confession of the doctrines and tendencies of the social system of Fourier and his disciples, and other seditious and disorganizing schemes of social reform, of which the New York Tribune, and other journals affecting to be models of pure morality, have labored so industriously for years to fasten upon this country. We understand, in fact, that this Wisconsin society is but an offshoot of the parent organization existing in this city, and which has existed for a year or more, and which continues to hold its regular meetings of men and women, married and single, under system of regulations of the most liberal familiarity. Here the "Hot Corn" literature, so brazonly flaunted to the world from the Tribune office, and so unblushingly palmed off upon the community by negro-worshipping clergymen and professing editorial teachers of morality and religion—here, we say, in this New York Free Love Society, this "Hot Corn" literature of the Tribune philosophers, and the untold mysteries of Fourierism, are thoroughly understood and appreciated.—[Morning Herald.

SIX PERSONS POISONED.—We learn that six persons, who took supper at the house of Mr. McConell, at Stafford's Point, on last Tuesday evening, were badly poisonsd. It is not known whether the poison was put into the food accidentally, or intentionally. It is supposed, however, that it was put in by the cook. They have all recovered except a German girl, whose condition is yet critical.—[Houston Telegraph.

Mustang Liniment and the Ladies.—In our opinion, nothing is above the comprehension of women; and with less prejudice, more liberality, and much keener perception than men, when a new idea is presented, a new doctrine taught, or a new fact asserted, she grasps it at once, and with the rapidity and clearness almost of instinct, decides upon its merits or truthfulness; and if her decision be favorable, she enthusiastically advocates and supports it. Thus the common saying has obtained—"Once get the women on your side and you are safe;" and we are happy to state that we have the ladies all in favor of the MUSTANG LINIMENT. They have tried it for caked breasts, sore nipples, sores, chafes, and burns on children, as well as for croup and mumps; also, for corns, tooth-ache, pains in the limbs and joints, sore eyes, eruptions, cuts and bruises, and they have always found it effectual—and they go about like angels, as they are, proclaiming it to their friends and to all they see or hear tell of, who are suffering. We have daily calls for it by persons who say such and such ladies recommended them to try it.

Go on ladies in your "good Samaritan" work, and thousands will bless you for your timely advice.

MCLEAN'S VOLCANIC OIL LINIMENT is truly a celebrated remedy, and has done more to alleviate human suffering than any other remedy ever discovered.
One or two applications will relieve the most severe pain, bruise or sprain.
Two bottles will cleanse, purify, and heal the foulest ulcer or sore, and it will heal the most severe burn or scald without a scar.
Every family should have a supply constantly on hand, for use in time of need.
Read the following extract of a letter, which is incontestable proof of its wonderful efficacy:

A BLIND MAN RESTORED TO SIGHT.

J. H. MCLEAN—Dear Sir: * * * I have been suffering for four years with rheumatic sore eyes, being at times altogether blind. I procured the advice of several physicians, but none of them could do me any good. By the advice of a friend I applied your "Volcanic Oil Liniment," according to the directions around the bottle, and it has cured me permanently. I have used it since for bruises, pains, &c., and it has always given immediate relief. I live on the main road near Farmington.
Yours, respectfully, JOHN H. ALLERD.

For horses it is far superior to any other remedy for curing lameness, bruises, cuts, old sores, swellings, &c.
We say, then, to all who may be suffering from external diseases, call at once and get a supply. Thousands of bottles are sold (and used) daily, and we have never heard of a case where it has failed in giving relief when properly applied.

MEDICINE FOR THE BILLION!

A Certain Remedy for all Diseases of
MAN OR ANIMALS,
Requiring an External Application.
Warranted in every Case for which it is Recommended!

THE MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT!

Unlike all other popular medicines, it is used by many prominent members of the faculty, and many of the public Hospitals. Their prejudices have yielded to indisputable and incontrovertible demonstrations of cures performed where their remedies had failed.
It has cured more cases of
RHEUMATISM
than any other medicine ever used. Its efficacy in this terrible disease is acknowledged by all who have used it. It not only cures the complaint, but appears to give a vigor and elasticity to the limbs, before unknown, thus performing a double office.

A FEW TESTIMONIALS.

PATH FINDER OFFICE, May 11, 1854.
G. W. WESTBROOK:—
Please send me by the bearer three large bottles of your Mexican Mustang Liniment, as I wish to take it up to my place in Vermont, not thinking it advisable to do without it. I have used it in my family and on my horses, and have found it invaluable. Yours,
J. T. WHITNEY.

ELIZABETHTOWN, TENN., May 25, 1855.
MR. G. W. WESTBROOK:—
Dear Sir—It affords me much pleasure in saying to you that the Mexican Mustang Liniment outsells any medicine that I have ever had for sale, and comes nearer doing what it promises to do. Send me another supply, as I am nearly out. Yours respectfully,
JOHN SINGLETRAY, P. M.

PHILADELPHIA, June 11, 1854.
MR. G. W. WESTBROOK:
Sir—My son was afflicted with a swelling upon the knee joint, which confined him to the house. I had a doctor attending him for some time, but he did not do him any good. One of my neighbors told me to use the Mustang Liniment. I asked the doctor if I could do so, and he told me he thought I could not do better.
I procured one bottle, and in about a week he was able to go out.
I can safely recommend it to the afflicted.
Respectfully yours, MRS. BENNETT.

W. S. Ladd & Co., of Portland, Oregon, writes that there is an immense demand for the Mexican Mustang Liniment in that country, and orders forty gross to be shipped by Golden Gate, that sails in a few days from New York.

Park & White of San Francisco, California, order 100 gross, to be forwarded by first clipper for that port.

PORT AU PRINCE, HAYTI, Jan. 16th, 1854.
I had the pleasure to receive invoice and boxes Mexican Mustang Liniment per Croton, and have no doubt it will have a brisk sale on the island.
GEORGE RACKSTER.

To give health, strength and elacity to the limbs, there is nothing can equal in effect, the
MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT.
FARMERS AND LIVERY STABLE KEEPERS
have need it for the following diseases with extraordinary success, certifying invariably to the efficacy of the Liniment, and the truthfulness of our assertions in its behalf:
Spavin, Splint, Ring-bone, Fistula, Wind Galls, Big Head, Bruises, Strains, String-halt, Scratches, Cracked Heels, Sweeny, Saddle, Collar, or Harness Galls, Hard Lumps or Tumor, Film, or other diseases of the Eye, Poll-evil, &c.
The small sizes retail for 25 cents per bottle;
The medium size retail for 50 cents per bottle;
The large sizes retail for one dollar per bottle.
The medium holds three times as much as the small;
The Large holds nearly three times as much as the medium;
Therefore the large bottles are the cheapest.

FOURTH OF JULY, 1855.

Celebration of the Anniversary of American Independence, at Great Salt Lake City, Utah Territory.

COMMITTEE OF ARRANGEMENTS.

H. S. Eldredge, H. B. Clawson, S. W. Richards, L. W. Hardy, J. C. Little.

HALF PAST FOUR A. M.—Ere the morning star had been able to announce the presence of the king of day to the inhabitants of this peaceful vale, the serenity and quietude of the morning at this early hour, gave way to the simultaneous music of the bands, ringing of bells, firing of cannon, and hoisting of colors. Captain D. Ballo's band was stationed on the observatory of the Governor's mansion, where was unfurled the Territorial flag of Utah; the Nauvoo Brass Band on the balcony of Major General Grant's house, with their unique banner; and the Martial Band on the observatory of the Council House. Cannon stationed on the Temple Block, where a mammoth U. S. flag was hoisted.

From T. S. Williams & Co's. new flagstaff was unfurled the stars and stripes, and from each window of the two upper stories hung out beautiful and appropriate mottoes. First, UNITY, represented by a bundle of sticks—'We are one,' edged with blue. Second, UTAH COURAGE; 'A Lion on the alert—the spirit of '76'—bordered with red. Third, 'Peace reigns here'—Lion and Lamb—edged with pink. Fourth, 'The Mormons defend the rock'—a rock in the ocean and the Constitution lying on it; 'Who can prevail against it?'—edged with green. Fifth, a hand reaching from the clouds, giving a scroll bearing the words, 'Constitution of the U. S.—Woe to its violators'—edged in purple. Sixth, 'The Clerks' Own—four quarters to the friends of the Union; no quarter to its enemies'—edged in blue velvet. On the windows were displayed three transparencies—'Utah policy to white and red,' 'the policy of love,' 'A nut to crack,' 'Ladies or no homestead'—'The ladies'—the truce, with 'Liberty of conscience, of the press, and our present Governor.' This firm had also a cannon stationed in front of their house, near their flag, which belched forth volumes of fire and smoke in honor of this national day.

Livingston, Kinkead & Co., at their flagstaff, displayed the stars and stripes, and hung around, and unfurled on the top of their store, beautiful mottoes. Large red flag in front, with white letters, 'July 4, 1776.' 'Hail!—the birthday of American freedom.' Blue flag, on the top of the house, one large white star in the centre, 'STATE OF DESERET.' White flag on each front window, with motto, 'The Constitution, 1789, esto perpetua,' 'The Declaration of Independence, 1776.' Small red flags with mottoes, 'Liberty or death;' 'Industry the means, and plenty the result.'

The stores of Messrs. Howard, Goddard, Townsend, Nixon, Stewart, Jarvis and Hockaday, hoisted our national colors; which also floated from the observatory of Col. J. C. Little's residence. At the front of Mr. Goddard's were hung several elegant banners; also at Thomas and Pughs'; and at Mr. Hockaday's, '1776' was executed in massive silver, encircled with stars.

The morning was beautiful, and when the king of day emerged from behind our snow-capped mountains, undimmed by a single cloud; the scene was lovely to behold. The eye and the ear were charmed, and the heart was made sensibly to feel that our Heavenly Father had poured out upon the inhabitants of Utah, a large portion of His Spirit, with which He endowed our fathers, by the influence of which they had declared their independence, and scorned to submit to injustice and oppression.—Thirteen rounds of cannon fired, bells rang one hour, and bands continued playing until six A. M.

EIGHT A. M.—The Nauvoo Legion began to form, concentrating near the Council House. The escort of the Governor and suite formed East of the Council House.

HALF PAST NINE.—The Legion, under the respective commandants of regiments, marched to the parade ground, and were stationed, under the command of Brigadier General Horace S. Eldredge, in order for review.

ORDER OF ESCORT.

1.—Battalion of Life Guards, under command of Major R. T. Burton.

2.—Captain D. Ballo's band, in a carriage drawn by six bay horses, mounted by six boys in uniform of white pants, fancy tunics, and turbans, in charge of Mr. Chas. Decker.

3.—Committee of arrangements.

4.—The escorted party, viz:—Governor Brigham Young, Hon. Secretary Almon W. Babbitt, Hon. Chief Justice John F. Kinney, Hon. John M. Bernhisel, Major Garland Hurt, Indian agent, Hon. Heber C. Kimball, Major General Jedediah M. Grant, Hon. Orson Pratt, Hon. Wilford Woodruff, Hon. Edward Hunter, Colonel Albert Carrington.

A car was fitted up expressly for the occasion, 16 feet by 7 1-2 inside; 6 feet high to ceiling. Above the ceiling was a beautiful blue silky canopy, glittering with stars, studded all round. From the centre of the canopy on the top, a flag staff was put up about ten feet high, from which the stars and stripes floated in the breeze. The sides of the car were open from a few inches above the back of the seats to the ceiling; below, the sides were ornamentally fitted up with green, blue, and red damask; the floor richly carpeted. Inside, a bar was erected, and Mr. William C. Staines waited on the party to ice cream and ice water.

In the escort, Lieutenant General Daniel H. Wells and staff were in uniform, mounted on horse.

The car was drawn by eight matched grey horses, in splendid trappings, led by eight grooms in beautiful Eastern livery, in charge of Mr. Andrew Moffatt.

5.—Captain L. W. Hardy's Rifle Company.

6.—Captain Hess' Company of Mounted Rangers.

The whole under command of Colonel J. C. Little, Marshal of the day.

After the reception of the escorted party, the procession proceeded to the parade ground. The Life Guards, Hess and Hardy's companies taking their appropriate positions in the line; the bands also being stationed at the head of the regiments. Here the Governor and suite passed the Legion in standing review, and inspected the Legion's passing review, which, after having passed, formed on the rear of the escort, and marched through the city by South Temple—second West—third South and East Temple Street, to the Governor's residence.

This division of the Nauvoo Legion made an excellent turn out on the occasion; and in consequence of the ambition displayed by several of the Regiments, in forming in such handsome style, the review presented a grand and imposing display.

7.—A national salute.

HALF PAST TWELVE P. M.—Escort, Legion and procession dismissed.

AFTERNOON EXERCISES.

HALF PAST TWO P. M.—The inhabitants of the city gathered in the new Bowery, erected immediately North of the Tabernacle, which is estimated to seat 12,000. The board roof not being finished, willows were substituted to shade the congregation.

Meeting called to order by the Marshal of the day.

Music by Captain Ballo's Band: 'The star spangled banner.'

The following prayer was then offered by the Chaplain of the Legion:—

Prayer by Col. Ezra T. Benson.

O thou Great and Eternal God, in the name of Jesus Christ we present ourselves before thee this afternoon—may this meeting prove edifying and strengthning to us all. We feel grateful before thee for the many privileges and blessings we enjoy in the vallies of the mountains, and for the privilege we have enjoyed this day in celebrating the Anniversary of American Independence.

We realize this blessing to flow from thy great and bountiful hand, that we can make our demonstrations of joy for the blessings of liberty thou has bequeathed to us through our fathers, and for the favor of worshiping thee the God of our salvation where none dare molest or make us afraid.

Let thy Holy Spirit dwell in our hearts, and enlighten our understandings that we may appreciate our blessings and rejoice this day in the liberty thou hast guaranteed unto us in these peaceful vales.—We thank thee for food, for raiment, and for the enjoyment of the society of each other from day to day, and we pray that the blessings of thy Holy Spirit may be extensively poured upon each one of us, that thy people may be blessed and rejoice continually, and continue in the things of thy spirit, and the blessings of thy Holy Gospel delivered to us in these last days.

We ask thee to bless thy servant Brigham whom thou hast appointed to be the President of thy Church, and the Governor of this Territory; may thy peace rest upon him, and his heart be filled with thy Good Spirit, to enlighten his mind, and heal all the infirmities of his body, that his days may be lengthened out, and that he may continue to be a blessing to his brethern, and to thy Church and Kingdom on the earth. Endow his Counselors with the pure spirit of counsel, to counsel with him upon the things which pertain to thy Holy Kingdom that it may prosper exceedingly under their administration, that all things may be consummated which have been spoken by the mouths of thy servants, the prophets, since the world began.

We pray thee to bless their families, their wives, and their children, and all that has been committed to their charge.

Bless thy servants—the Twelve Apostles, with every other Quorum of thy Kingdom, may they be knit together, and move as one man to fulfil thy will, and bring to pass thy purposes.

Remember the institutions of Zion upon all the earth—upon the islands of the sea, and upon the continents; bless all who shall put forth their hands to favor Zion, and bestow upon them favor according to their works, and the amount of good they may do in rolling forth thy Kingdom in every land.

We pray thee to bless the military department in this Territory. We feel grateful for what our eyes have beheld this day, and for the joy, and gladness which our hearts have felt; that we can meet in peace under the banner of liberty which thou hast permitted to be unfurled in our day.

We ask thee to bless all the authorities of this Territory, both military, eclesiastical, and judicial; bless the judges, the General Government has sent to us, that they may act like men of God awarding even-handed justice to all men that they may do us good, and have no power to do us harm.

We ask thee to hear our prayers, O Lord, and do us all the good we need.

Confound the enemies of thy people among all nations that they may have no power to bring anything against them to injure them and retard the progress of thy work, and the gathering of thy poor Saints from the nations afar off.

Remember the sick, the poor, and the destitute among thy people, and incline our hearts to administer to their wants, that we may be prospered in the land thou hast given unto us. Bless us, O Lord as a people, bless our habitations, our wives and our children, our flocks and our herds, and everything over which thou hast made us stewards.

We dedicate and devote ourselves unto thee, and all we possess, praying that thy spirit may be with us to keep us as thy servants and hand-maidens from this time henceforth and forever, that we may live unspotted before thee and before each other that we may reap, as our reward, glory, honor, and exaltation in thy Kingdom, which blessings we ask in the name of Jesus Christ our Redeemer. Amen.

'Hail Columbia,' by Nauvoo Brass Band.

General Daniel H. Wells read the following resolutions adopting the spirit of the Declaration of Independence and Constitution of the United States:—

Resolutions.

Resolved: That in the declaration of American Independence, and the Constitution of the United States, we recognize those great principles of freedom and liberty, which, being firmly maintained and efficiently carried out with the light of revelation, will disenthrall the inhabitants of the earth from oppression and tyranny, priestcraft and bigotry, superstition and ignorance. They form the bulwarks of our liberty, and the protection of the poor, the down-trodden and the meek of the earth. We commend the spirit thereof to the patriotism of the great and the good of the nation, and spurn with contempt all who withhold its benefits, or seek by disunion or otherwise to destroy that sacred legacy of our fathers.

Resolved: That we celebrate this day in commemoration of the fourth day of July 1776; as the anniversary of that day upon which our honored and patriotic fathers threw off the shackles of tyranny and oppression, and sought the welfare of themselves and posterity by an Independent Appeal to the world, and with a firm reliance upon the Lord of Hosts to sustain them in the cause of right and justice, and the rectitude of their intentions.

Resolved: That while we extol their fame and commend their patriotism, we will seek to emulate their virtues, profit by, and follow their example, and faithfully maintain and transmit to our latest posterity those principles of Liberty and Independence which cost them so great a struggle, fraught with so much consequence to us; and we deplore the prevalence of that spirit of insubordination and disunion which threatens to destroy our free institutions, and plunge the nation into the most inextricable scenes of anarchy and confusion.

Resolved: That the same spirit which actuated our forefathers in the day which "tried men's souls," actuates us, and that we are as sensative to oppression and tyranny as they were, and that while we live, we will claim the extension unto us of free institutions, liberal policy, and freemen's rights; regardless alike of the cool indifference of pretended friends, the malignant hatred and bitterness of enemies, or corruption and influence of time-serving politicians. Those Institutions were ours, are ours; we received them as a sacred legacy and rich inheritance from our fathers, and we intend to secure the blessings thereof to ourselves and our children, regardless of the consequences or aspersions of any sect or party:

Which, on motion of General Grant, were adopted unanimously by the congregation, and greeted by the roaring of artillery.

Overture, 'Il Tancredi,' by the Orchestral Band.

Colonel Geo. A. Smith delivered the following:—

[REPORTED BY G. D. WATT.]

My friends: I arise on the present occasion to address you with my heart filled with emotions that are not easily described, apart from feelings which prevade my mind resulting from the present celebration of the anniversary of our country's Independence. It is with a high degree of pleasure that I witness such an immense assembly, and compare it with celebrations of this ever memorable day which I have attended in my native State, in my early life. The anniversary of the day on which our fathers declared the Independence of the American States, I have ever felt a disposition to celebrate, whenever circumstances and situation would possibly admit of it, as the day on which our fathers declared the Independence and freedom of millions of people, yet unborn. It was a great step for a few colonies to take, to attempt to wring from the hands of the king of the most powerful nation upon the face of the earth their liberties, the right of self government, of choosing their own rulers, those inalienable rights which belong to man, and are the boon of his creator, and which kings had held in their grasp for ages. Our revolutionary fathers were unwilling longer to be ground down by iron rules and cast iron notions of one stupid and corrupt ruler, that oppressed them, and struggled for their freedom. Under the guidance and fostering care of the God of heaven, these colonies were made free; free to act in obedience to all those principles he has given the sons of men their agency to act upon.

This is a great illustration of the importance and power of the principle union. When the signers of the Declaration of Independence put their names to that heaven-born instrument, they were perfectly aware that the success of their cause depended upon their being united, it was absolutely necessary that they should all hang together, for if they did not, they were perfectly sensible they would all hang separately. The united colonies at that time were ready to sustain the leader of the revolution almost en masse; there were a few districts where division took place, and those divisions caused more cruelty, bloodshed, and sorrow, than any other circumstance pertaining to the whole revolutionary struggle.

By this grand step, our fathers secured to us the right of self government; however much, wicked men may have opposed and abused the institutions the revolutionary fathers have established and put in motion, whatever corrupt office holders may have done in violation of them, the great point is gained which enables the American people to choose their own rulers and produce such a form of government, and such protection as is necessary for their growth, their freedom, and their continual well being.

It was through the most flagrant violation of these sacred rights and principles of the constitution of our country by perjured officers, who were sworn to do their duty and suppress mobs and violence, that the rights of free men, which were bequeathed to us as a priceless legacy, sealed with the blood of our fathers, that the Latter-day Saints were driven, en masse, from their peaceful homes, in the United States, and were obliged to flee, destitute, into a desolate wilderness, where we are laying a foundation for a State in the great Federal Union, where we can enjoy our own religious institutions, and form a government, and when we have organized our own community, agreeable to the general constitution of our country, that we may be made partakers of the blessings which are actually guaranteed unto us by that sacred instrument; under these circumstances we rest, until the day shall come that shall so revolutionize our American Government, as to put every treacherous scoundrel where he ought to be, to reap the reward of perjury and corruption, that he may have the privilege of being banished by his Maker, that he may enjoy the society of the father of lies until he is satisfied with that kind of fare. (At this point of the speaker's remarks, a small round table that had been brought for the Honorable Judge Kinney to lay his papers upon, fell from the stand, upon which the speakers were sitting, and was broken by the fall). So, the end cometh suddenly, the day of corruption is short, and its downfall is sure, (great laughter); the old fabric of corruption is getting so rotten, it will fall of itself and crumble to dust without any effort to overthrow it, and the pure principles of good government, justice, righteousness, and purity will become so clearly unfolded, that we shall wonder that it was ever possible such a mass of corruption ever shrouded our country, or that so great a number of the rulers of the American States, should ever give countenance to the rule of mobs, or the destruction of the people's rights by any common convention of scoundrels.

The circumstances and pleasures of the day which have so far passed, would have been without alloy or a pang of grief; but I behold on this platform the vacant seat of one, who was associated with us on the last celebration, one who addressed us on that occasion, with such a flow of natural eloquence and pathos of feeling, and to whose talents and instruction we were indebted for a great portion of the interest of that occasion; the Honorable Leonidas Shaver, Associate Justice of the Supreme Court, and Judge of this judicial district, has been suddenly called from the busy scenes of this life into eternity; a worthy man, and profound jurist, who by his straightforward and upright course, has honored his profession. His studious attention to his duty, his fine intellect, polished education, and gentlemanly bearing, have won for him the universal admiration and respect of this community. It was only necessary to be acquainted with him to love him. Our worthy instructor and expositor of the law has been called from our midst suddenly. He not only administered the law, but honored it himself. Hear it O ye judicators of the law and pattern after him. And we this day, look round upon those that surround us with the solemn reflection, that but a short season can pass, until it will be our turn to follow him.

This circumstance should caution us against sin of every description, and prompt us to live uprightly, walking in accordance with all the laws and principles of human rights, and divine revelation that we may be prepared for so great and solemn an event when it shall come—when it shall be our turn to participate in the realities of death.

It is well understood that the principles of truth are bound to prevail, it makes no difference what the opposition may be, nor what length of time that opposition may continue; or how much sin is perpetrated to prevent it, or rivers of blood and millions of treasure wasted to oppose it. Yet, truth will ultimately prevail; and the day will come when a Mormon can be respected in other portions of the world as much as any other man. Yes, exactly as much as though he professed any other religion.—Why? Because Mormonism is truth, and truth will prevail; those principles which are laid down in the very formation, and genius of the general government of the United States, knew no religious sect, all were alike, and when those principles can prevail as our fathers handed them down to us, freedom will not be a name; and the day is approaching, and it is not far distant when all the corruption, and wickedness which serve to bring distress and misery upon a considerable portion of the community will be done away; that order of things will vanish, and this people will have the opportunity of enjoying all their privileges and rights in every portion of their loved country, that they can in these mountains.

If ever William Tell was happy when he found himself free from the grasp of his enemies, so this people felt to rejoice when they were encircled within these vast deserts, and almost impenetrable mountain walls. It was not the beauty of the country, the barren deserts, the rocky mountains, this isolated position, that invited us here; we came here simply because it was the only place of refuge which offered to us security from the hands of our persecutors, where we could actually enjoy our constitutional rights. We are here, thank God, enjoying all the privileges of American freemen, and all the blessings, and ordinances, and powers, which lead to an eternal exaltation in the celestial kingdom of our God.

And I will tell you my friends what I hope; I hope that the first mob that rises in these vallies will experience the same sensation (and worse if possible) that a certain gentleman, a leader of a mob in Jackson county, Missouri, did, whose name was James Campbell, who had been long famed among his comrades as one of the bravest men in that county. It was on the occasion of the battle of the Blue, he gathered up his men, and fired fifty-three rifles into a small party of the Mormons that were hastily gathered together for mutual protection.—There were only fifteen or sixteen guns among the Mormons, they returned the fire, at which many of Campbell's comrades left in a hurry, but he concluded to stay and tussel it out with the Mormons.—There was an old revolutionary soldier, named Brace, in the Mormon company, who had fought in many battles under Washington, in the war of Independence, he fired his musket at Campbell without effect, and he fired at the old soldier, also without effect, but Campbell being able to load quicker than he could, there was no alternative for Brace, but to run at him with the but end of his gun before he could reload, so he commenced yelling like ten thousand Indians, and charged upon Campbell with the butt end of his musket. Campbell to save himself suddenly wheeled his horse, and plied the whip, this gave the old veteran a chance to reload, he then fired his piece and killed Campbell's horse as he was jumping over a fence, which left him hanging there, but Campbell in his terror did not know whether he was running on his feet or riding on his horse, so he ran across the country with all the power he possessed, whipping behind him, as he supposed his horse, crying, "get up or the Mormons will kill us, get up or the Mormons will kill us." So I want the first mob that rises in this country to feel, and all those who hold power and influence in the nation who by that means seek to distress and afflict the innocent, I want all such men to feel like the illustrious Campbell. I want the same terror to fall upon them that fell upon him, and the same powers of locomotion to clear out, crying, "get up or the Mormons will kill us," as he did, although his horse lay on the fence dead, near a mile behind him.

With these sentiments, these few ideas which are offered without having had time for studied reflection and preparation, I say may we long live on the face of the earth, and enjoy the blessings and privileges of American Independence. Amen.

SPIRITUAL.

The spirits seem capable of anything. There is nothing in the list of "extremes" that can happen that the believers in the faith will not subscribe to, and the more preposterous, of course, it is more wonderful and more convincing.

A woman in this city, whose husband has been dead and laid in his grave these three years, announced to her supprised female acquaintances, a few days since, that her dreams and hopes would be realized—that she would be a mother ere long, without the slightest doubt. Her acquaintances were thunder-struck, and mentally consigned her to infamy and degradation. But no! she was an honest woman. Her child would be legitimate—'but how?' as with one voice, inquired her already scandalized friends; "your husband has been dead these three years," turning up an assortment of scornful lips and noses. "How! why, I see my husband every night," replied the believer—"he comes through the key-hole to see me, in the shape of a spirit, every night—isn't that honest?" The above is a fact.—[Buffalo Republic.

EXCHANGE ON SALT LAKE.

Emigrants, Missionaries, and all persons wishing to carry or send money to any part of Utah, are hereby notified that we have made the necessary arrangements, and are prepared to furnish SIGHT DRAFTS on Gov. B. Young, or on any of the principal Mercantile houses in Salt Lake City. Bring or send your money to the Luminary Office, and drafts for the same amount will be returned to you, or forwarded by succeeding mail to any person in Utah, as you may direct. Duplicates will be furnished, whenever required, so that in case of failure of mails, no loss will be sustained, and you will avoid the risk of transporting specie, besides the Church wish to use it here.

ST. LOUIS, 1855. ERASTUS SNOW.

THE REIGN OF MIS-GOVERNMENT.

The metaphorical description of the world as a stage and all mankind as players, by England's great poet, has suggested many other good ideas concerning men in general, and the interesting games they have played in particular. The most prominent and important of the numerous acts performed and games played is that of mis-government, who being a popular character, and prepared withal, to lavish her ill-gotten favors upon all her advocates and admirers, has become a perfect lioness amongst her associates, and is worshipped as a veritable heroine by her devoted followers. Her mal-administration has been perpetuated from age to age. The north and south, east and west, have all seen her visage and beheld her shame. When God came down from Heaven, and visited the cities of the plains He found her there. And when the beloved of the Father descended from Les Cieux and entered his Temple at Jerusalem. He found her enthroned and worshipped even there also.

It is impossible to reflect upon the ever changing phases of society, that swiftly passes in panoramic order before our minds, without coming to the conclusion that there is something defective in the present organization of society—something manimanifestly wrong and opposed to the real interests of the sons and daughters of men, whether we consider the religious or political administration of laws and governments, we are irresistably forced to to the same conclusion. The governments themselves and their laws, are deformed and in many cases corrupt. And the administrators are even more deformed and corrupt generally than the laws they execute. If we trace the history and character of the Governments of the Old World, we shall find they have invariably proceeded from bad to worse, until manifesting unmistakably their real merits, and being fully ripened in iniquity, they have reaped the reward of their folly. Whether we contemplate the mighty nations of antiquity such as Egypt, Persia, and Greece; or such as Russia, England, and America, of modern times; we are equally convinced of the fact, that a nation or kingdom that will not serve God will utterly perish.

The world has tried to govern itself independent of revelation and God, for some thousands of years; but how far it has succeeded may be seen and determined by the present condition of the world. Confusion, anarchy and division are rife in every government and bid fair to overwhelm the nations ere long in utter ruin and desolation. Wealth, intellect, armaments and other resources desired have not been wanting by Despotic princes and other aspirants in their efforts to establish their respective forms of government. They have had the history of wise and powerful nations as their guide, as master spirits of their age, they have seized the reins of power and grasped and controlled the vast resources of the nations at their will, but they have all signally failed in their governmental policy. Shrewd and intelligent, on all other points, they have all committed the same egregious blunder in attemping to establish a permanent system of government without revelation from the Almighty. A nation or kingdom that is founded on no stronger foundation than the strength of armaments, and legislative enactments is as sure to fall and be destroyed as those that have already fallen.

Whenever God has sent his prophets upon the earth and established his Government among men, it has caused instanter a move among the rebellious governments of the nations, They have succeded in former ages by intrigue, cunning artifice and violence to hedge up, overcome, and destroy the kingdom of God from the earth. But one of the old Prophets said that God would in the last days set up a kingdom that should never come to an end, or, be given to another people, but should stand forever, and be given to the Saints. Consequently when Joseph Smith presented himself before the world as the Prophet, Seer, and Revelator, to this generation, and commenced to establish the government of the Lord among men, then the rebel forces commenced the grand shuffle. To shuffle Joseph and the Saints out of the final game appeared to be the all important move, and the only desideratum; the smartest men were consequently employed from the ranks of priests, editors, and statesmen, to play the last game. A trite maxim says "old birds are not to be taken with chaff." It is so with the modern Prophets. "As soon as I heard Benton's scheme to destroy us," said Governor Young to the Mormon Battalion at their late festival, "I said we will beat him at his own game, and we have done it." So it has been on every occasion, and so it will be in any future game. No matter whether 'tis played by Judges, Governors, or Presidents, or whether it be played by the military forces of the entire nation. The race is not to the swift nor the battle to the strong, but by the Lord of Hosts.

The revolutionary forces of other dispensations so effectually silenced the prophets who appeared among them, and so thoroughly obliterated from the earth every living vestige of the kingdom of God, that it was believed and confidently expected that one grand shuffle of the Priests, Editors, and Co., would decide the game in their favor, and secure to them and their rebellious posterity, all the imaginary blessings and privileges of a final victory.

The failure of the first grand shuffle with Joseph and his brethren was but a prelude to those that have consecutively followed. The history of the United States has been one continued series of shuffles from that day to this, and each more disastrous than the former, and unless some unseen hand shall interpose, the angry and discordant elements of the north and south will soon coalesce with a crash and fracas that will cause all people to tremble, but those who dwell in the mountain State; and they will regard it with that stoicism and indifference that may be expected of men who have passed through trials and difficulties, a hundred times more difficult themselves. The world is so far affected by the false moves of its representatives, that society appears to be completely unhinged and deranged, and altogether incompetant to regulate its own affairs. The bands that heretofore controlled societies and nations, appear so brittle that the least pressure snaps them assunder; and the scattered members of exploded systems may be seen on every hand, and may be regarded as so many witnesses of the puerility and inefficiency of man to govern man, unaided by wisdom and authority from God.

THE NEXT CONGRESS.

The time is hastening on, when the monotonous quiet of the Legislative Halls and Council Chambers of our Country, will be again broken by the elite of the Nation; who chosen from among their constituents as representatives of their several counties, Territories, or States, will assemble at the Senatorial or Legislative depots and frame such laws as the circumstances of the people demand at their hands. The scenes that will transpire during the Session of 1856, still lay concealed in the womb of time. We have seen, heard, and read of the corruption, purjury and bloodshed that have attended the ballot box in various States. The rifle, bowie-knife and revolver, have performed their mission at the polls in some cities, and many a wife is left a widow; and many children, orphans through the inhumanity of man. Gold and silver have not been spared by the wealthy aspirant, in order to secure his end and gratify his ambition. Liquors have been dispensed freely to the drunken and profane, for the purpose of gaining their support at the ballot box, where the scenes of riot, confusion and disorder, defy the possibility of description. We leave eternity to disclose the dark deeds of purjury and corruption enacted at the polls of the several States. In the meantime, we will anticipate and record some of the more salutary scenes of the elect in that sphere to which they are called.

In consequence of the confusion generally prevailing at Washington, and the pugilistic propensities of the Hon. Representatives, Congress has been denominated by some wag, "a bear garden," and whether it will merit the appellation during the next Session, remains to be seen; but we opine, from the nature of the measures that will necessarily be discussed next Session, that the bare garden may turn out a hot bed, in which, plants may be fostered, that will defy the strongest and most able politicians to uproot and destroy.

The Nebraska, and anti-Nebraska questions, will be the chief bones of contention, during the next Congress. Slavery and Abolitionism will constitute the motive power of the Representatives of the North and South, and in the discussion of the Missouri Compromise, and the merits of squatter sovereignty; Who knows what ills may come to those unlucky wights, who chance to constitute the minority? Old political hacks will be summoned to the Capital, to teach the young idea how to shoot—broken-down lawyers, judges and politicians will be on hand to pick up the crumbs that fall from their masters' tables.

In the midst of this melange, we shall expect to hear a still small voice from Utah demanding a new name. A demand thus made by authority of sixty thousand citizens, will resound through the nation like ten thousand thunders. It will make but little difference to the Hon. Delegate from Utah, or those who send him, whether the demand be honored or protested; for the rocky mountains will remain, and their crystal streams will flow, cities and temples will be reared, and the people will multiply and increase, and a wise and powerful government will be established, whether Congress shall ordain it so or not. The people of Utah are becoming a great and important people, and their united voice must be respected and honored; and it will be well for Congress, during the next Session, to indemnify that people liberally, for the outrages that were perpetrated against them whilst peaceful citizens of Missouri and Illinois. If Congress will do this, and henceforth deal honorably with the Mormons as with other citizens, she may measurably obliterate some dark stains from her proud escutcheon.

The people of Utah have been many times driven from their homes and thrown wholly upon their own resources; and they know what it is to be outcasts from society, and from the very nation that gave them birth; they are therefore careless and indifferent as to what indignity may be offered them, or what supposed calamity may come upon them.—When they first established themselves in Utah, having organized a provisional government, and chosen Delegates to Congress, the Governor said to them, "go and demand our admittance into the Union. Do not beg as a favor, but demand as a right. I will never ask any odds of a nation that has killed our Prophets, destroyed our temples, and driven us from their midst;" and all the people said, Amen. The same spirit that demanded and obtained a recognition of our Territorial rights, is now ready to demand our rights as a sovereign State; and the sacred instrument that gave us the former guarantees the latter, and that right cannot be withheld from us without an open violation of the spirit of our fathers, and the glorious Constitution they have bequeathed us; and we have too much confidence in ourselves, our country, and our God, to doubt the realization of any rights, privileges, and blessings, for "the State of Deseret," that may be demanded by her Representatives. If those rights and privileges should be demanded during the next Session of Congress, we shall then have an opportunity to test the loyality of our law-givers to the Constitution of our country, and how far they are disposed to confer equal rights, and dispense even-handed justice. No people were ever more elegible for a State government, than those of Utah. They are in every way qualified to govern themselves, which has been most abundantly proven by their Territorial policy. The judicious and excellent laws enacted by the Legislators of Utah, are without parallel in any State or Territory in the nation, and warrant us in pronouncing them the best jurists, and the wisest Legislators in all the earth, and the most competent to govern themselves of any other people under heaven.

We have been favored with letters from Cedar city and Harmony, Utah, from which we are happy to learn that the health and prospects are good in that country. Bro. Haight is still blowing his blast and heating his furnace as occasion requires. He hopes to be able to build an engine in a few months, and to manifacture some goods for the Utah markets. We wish him abundant success in his arduous labors, and those hardy sons of toil who labor with him; and trust the blessings of God may attend them in their Iron efforts, and enable them fully to realize their desires, and the desires of those who sent them on this important mission.

Elder Rufus C. Allen writes from Harmony under date of July 5th, and says:

"I am on a mission to Israel, among the Lamanites in the Southern part of Utah Territory. I have been here one year last April. The mission is prospering well, and we are gaining the confidence of the Indians, and have influence among them which if continued, and the prospects bid fair for it, there will be much good done among them in this part of the vineyard. I have just returned from a tour South, on the Big Muddy and the Los Vegas, where I have been to explore the country of the Colerado, according to instructions from President Young while he was at Cedar City. I found the Indians there, very friendly; and they seemed to be pleased with our visit among them. The weather was so warm we were prevented from exploring so far as we intended. Brother Bringhurst with the Vegas company had arrived, and commenced to put in grain. The prospects look fair for a settlement at this place.

GLEANINGS.

Governor Shannon has made his debut in Kansas, and is likely to prove himself a favorite among the Squatters. His first speech almost electrified his audience. His remarks were hailed with enthusiastic cheers, and shouts of applause. He most distinctly recognizes the Legislature (just adjourned) as the legitimate law making power of the Territory; said the Legislature had the inherent right to adjourn to any point or place within the limits of the Territory; declares her acts legal and binding upon the inhabitants of Kansas Territory in every particular, be they good laws, or bad laws, so far as they do not conflict with the constitution of the United States, until repealed by the legitimate course, and pledges himself to see them fully executed, called upon the citizens of the Territory to aid and sustain him in the faithful discharge of his official duties. He says the geographical and commercial relations of Kansas Territory and Missouri, are such that it is necessary to the prosperity of both to preserve the most friendly feelings and amicable relations between the two.

The yellow fever at Norfolk and Portsmouth is now spoken of familiarly, as "the pestilence" and "the plague," but whatever be its name, its destructive ravages are still unabated. The dismal accounts being written from the scene, are truly heartrending. In Norfolk alone, there is said to be from twelve to fifteen hundred on the sick list, and it is estimated that one half of those who are attacked die. To add to the misery now existing, the small pox has made its appearance among them.—At the last dates the malignity of the pestilence was increasing, without any immediate prospect of abatement. A meeting was held in this city on the 13th inst., for the relief of the Norfolk and Portsmouth sufferers. A committee was appointed to receive donations from the several wards of the city; and it is hoped that this appeal to the sympathies of our citizens will be warmly responded to.

A gentleman employed in the Salt Lake Mail company, relates the following story of seduction and murder, or retributive justice. The former committed in California, the latter on the plains between Utah and the States:

"Some few years ago, a family, consisting of a mother, two sons and a daughter, left Tennessee for California. On the way, the mother (a widow) died. On her death-bed she gave her daughter in charge of a man who accompanied them, and in whom she had the greatest confidence. Several thousand dollars were possessed by the children, and on the arrival of the party in the gold region, a rancho was purchased, a partnership formed, and a trade carried on with the miners. The girl furnished a portion of the means, and a handsome profit resulted.

After a long while, it was proposed to revisit their old home, and for this purpose the brothers, to wind up their business, were compelled to visit a distant portion of California. During their absence the guardian of their sister—appointed such by their parent—arranged the affairs of the firm in such a way as to secure to himself the whole of the girl's property, and a large portion of that of the brothers. When they reached Salt Lake, on their return, the elder brother found his sister enciente by the man who, under such solemn circumstances, had promised to be her protector. He was enraged, and called upon the swindler and seducer to defend himself. Villainy and cowardice are generally united, and the wretch attempted to escape by flight. A well aimed pistol brought him down, however.

It appears the seducer was a man of family.—The brother refused to touch the ill gotten gains, and they were placed in the possession of a gentleman present, for the benefit of the widow and orphans of him who had thus outraged the laws of heaven and earth. When are we to have an ending of such atrocities?"

We are glad to see the spirit of the people of Utah extending itself. It was but a fewdays since a similar execution was witnessed in one of the Eastern States. We applaud the spirit that will execute speedy judgment upon such base villains; and we hope to see it recognized before many years, as a just and righteous law, throughout the whole earth; such attrocities may then soon come to an end. The baser passions of human nature, may then be subdued. Until then, let the world be silent concerning refinement and civilization; and those gentlemen who would learn a lesson upon the subject, let them go to Utah, for there it is decreed by the Gods, that the wicked shall not go unpunished.

Correspondence.

HARTLAND, MICHIGAN, Aug. 8, 1855.

DEAR BROTHER SPENCER: After my day's labor, while all nature seems hushed in silence, I set down to write a few lines, and while my heart is filled with joy and praise to my heavenly Father for His mercy in opening our hearts to receive the truth revealed in these last days, by our beloved Prophet, Joseph Smith I can also testify to the world, that my faith is unshaken in these most glorious truths. Nothing gives me more pleasure than to have the opportunity of giving my testimony in favor of Mormonism, for it is the truth of heaven, and all that will receive it with honest hearts and obey the same, (which is to obey the gospel,) it will make them happy both soul and body. I expect, if I am faithful, to find a plenty to do in the Lord's vineyard.

There are many old Mormons scattered about this part of the country, that are nearly dead; but if the Lord will, I'll do what I can to bring them to life again, for I know many of them only want to be informed that 'old fashioned' Mormonism is still on the move for 'glory and for God,' to inspire in them the same feeling, repentance and obedience, that they had when they first obeyed the truth.

The pious enemies to truth, are very thankful to their God, that the Mormons in Utah, are likely to die of famine, but I tell them not to fear—that Mormonism will live after their religion is dead and forgotten; and if brother Joseph and all good Mormons go to hell, we shall be sure to find all the Priests and their subjects of the nineteenth century, there with us. To say the least of it, Mormonism is the best in the world. It makes us happy at home, it makes us happy among hypocrites, and it will make us happy when we get to Zion, among the mountains of Ephraim, and it will make us happy forever. Let every Saint be faithful and they will see the salvation of God.

Your brother in Christ. WM. M. WHITE.

LETTER FROM DR. J. CLINTON.

PHILADELPHIA, AUG. 30, 1855.

DEAR BROTHER SPENCER—Feeling that a few lines from your old friend would not be uninteresting to you, I thought I would set down and pen you some little account of my doings, since we last met. My field of labors as you know, is Philadelphia and the surrounding country. I have no reason to complain, for my health is as good as could be expected, both Saints and sinners treats me well wherever I go. I have but little trouble to get places to preach, and people to hear; and many believe and fear and tremble, and a few of the humble and meek of the earth obey. We have baptized in this region of the country about seventy-five. I have never felt more determined to do right, and do my duty in all things, than I do at this time. We hold our meetings in the Washington Hall. It is one of the best in the city; the Philadelphia branch numbers about two hundred and fifty. The Saints feel well and are willing to do all they can to forward the work. Times are hard and but little, if any prospect of getting better. The Elders of the eastern mission are all well as far as I know. Elder Taylor has been here twice lately, his health is good and you can judge of his spirits when you read the Mormon.

The month of August brought us no news from Salt Lake. I learn from the Luminary that brother Erastus Snow and Milo Andrus, Basset, and others have left for Zion, I pray that they may get home safe. It does me good to read letters in the papers from the Elders and to hear of their prosperity and determination to go ahead, and warn this generation of the things that are coming upon the earth. It would be useless for me to tell anything about the wickedness that is in this country, when you are surrounded with plenty of the same all the time.

Give my respects to all enquiring friends, and take as much yourself as you can shoulder, and go ahead and God bless you. I remain your brother and fellow laborer in the gospel of Christ.

DR. J. CLINTON.

HINDOSTAN.

Erection of a Meeting Room at Kurrachee—Corruption of the People.

KURRACHEE, Sinde, Asia, May 8, 1855.

PRESIDENT F. D. RICHARDS:

Beloved and Esteemed Brother—It affords me great pleasure in acknowledging the receipt of your esteemed favor of the 15th March, to the address of Elder Hugh Findlay, (covering invoice of books, &c., forwarded to this mission, the contents of all, which I have noted with pleasure,) who, before leaving Bombay for Zion, instructed the postal authorities to re-mail to me at this place, whatever matter might arrive to his address.

Brother Findlay and company, consisting of three brethren, (including brother F.), two sisters, and three children, left Bombay for Zion, via China, on 15th March last, in the Mary Spencer. The editors of Bombay, as a matter of course, had to unload a foul stomach, and cater for their readers a batch of scurrility concerning the brethren, after their departure, when they could not defend themselves.

The condition of the favored few in India, as far as I know, is pretty fair, but our prospects for the future are of a discouraging nature. The people, who pretend to revere the name of God, and respect His Gospel, are perfectly indifferent, and, from their actions and words, one would conclude they would rather have the transitory blessings this life affords, than sacrifice them in lieu of eternal patrimonies in the kingdom of God. If, by complying with the requisition of heaven, it cost no effort and involved no personal sacrifice on their part, many would join our ranks. This dormant, inactive feeling is not confined to any particular province of India, but extends throughout her borders. The authorities, both civil and military, are heaping up riches, and expect to retire in a few years, while the poor civil and military spend their little all, as fast as they get it, at the canteen, grog shop, house of ill-fame, and in gambling, to which places their ambition is just sufficient to carry them, and at last, after spending a few months in the hospital, death overtakes them, they are consigned to the silent tomb, at which place they are met by a priest clothed in a sacerdotal garb, who for a few pieces of silver, recommends them to the mercy of heaven. The soldiers are obliged to attend chapel every Sabbath, but it is with great reluctance—cursing their ministers and all concerned.

After General Wilson took command of this division of the army, I paid him a visit, and asked of him to extend to me the same latitude in the cantonment here that he granted Elder Findlay in Belgaum. He declined, however, fearing it might offend the senior chaplain, and requested me to see him, saying, if I obtained his consent, he would give me his also. Not having time to visit his grace, I wrote him a polite note on the subject, but in return he sent me a very insignificant one. I extract as follows—"As a general rule I approve of no public teaching, except by men, in the first place, who have been consecrated to the task by some Anglican Bishop, and who, in the second place, possess the licence of the Bishop of the diocese where they teach. This rule I would certainly not allow to be infringed in your case." * * * *

Were the most abandoned wretch permitted to have a panoramic glimpse of the gross abominations diurnally practised in Kurrachee, to say nothing of the multiplied depots of wickedness throughout Christendom, no doubt the spectacle would be revolting enough to enlist a feeling of horror.

After this failure I wrote a note to a Parsee fire-worshipper, (who evinced a good degree of friendship previous to our ejection from camp), for a large tent and benches to hold meetings in, but he declined obtaining them for me, for fear, I suppose, he would never receive an equivalent. The pocket nerve is the most acute and sensitive of any in the human organization. Touch that nerve and it at once deranges the entire system.

As it is extremely difficult to do anything in this country, to make any headway, without money or friends, I was obliged, as a next resort, to obtain some writing to do, after which I resolved to build a small chapel as near "civilization," or the camp, as I could get, and accordingly obtained a piece of ground, and contracted with a man to build me a house thirty feet long, twenty-one feet wide, and eleven feet high, to be entirely completed in a stipulated length of time, for the sum of one hundred and thirty-eight rupees. The contractor (a native) has not yet entirely finished it, but, as the magistrate has now taken him in hand, I expect to be in it in a few days, and then, with the assistance of Elder Leonard, whom I expect here in a short time, I shall do what I can.

I never in my life, saw a people so addicted to lying as the natives of India are. This branch of modern education so generally practised throughout the world, these natives have reduced to a science. You tell a native who commands a smattering of English, that all liars, &c., will be cast into jehunum, (hell), and that lying is a great evil, and spoken much against in the Scriptures, and he will reply, in childlike simplicity, "Master speaks true words, very worse thing, my Koran and Shasta tell same like;" and in the next moment, if there is a pice at stake, he will tell as many falsehoods as may be requisite to accomplish his ends. Their whole ambition is engrossed in speculation. Every face one sees is calculating gain or loss. There is no turning them from their mythology to the truth.

There have been several ministers laboring in Kurrachee for many years, endeavoring to convert or Gospelize them, but so far the result of all their efforts has been in the conversion of two young Hindoos, and in almost every instance the native thus converted is seven-fold worse than he was before his caste was broken. In Bombay, a Parsee was metamorphosed into a Christian, and while on a visit to England, after his conversion, he took a second wife, and is now in India with both. The first is a native woman, and the latter a European girl of a "respectable family." She says he must support her, or else he shall be transported for bigamy. A local Christian Editor speaks of the native Christians in the following strain:

"The conversion of Brahmins into Christianity in the Poona Mufussil has not been attended with the success so meritorious a transformation deserved.—The Rev. H. C. Cassidy severely comments on the conduct of these neotiric conformers to the Gospel. Drunkenness and rioting on Sabbath evenings have been the strange phases of their unprofitable regeneration, and the ex-Brahmin, in verbally abandoning the gods of his fathers', has still retained the worship of the Pagan deity Bacchus. His second baptism, though washing away the errors of Hindoo idolatry, has introduced him to vices unknown to his forsaken caste, baffled the labor of the honest meaning missionary, and made him the hypocritical convertite, an unworthy believer of the Book that has superceded the ridiculous impiety of his rejected Shasta."

From the above, which is verily true, it will be seen that the ministers of Christendom follow in the footsteps of their ancient illustrious predecessors, the Pharisees, who the Lord said would compass land and sea to make one proselyte, and after his conversion he would be two-fold more the child of hell than his blind advisers.. Indeed it is a retrogade movement in any native to break his sacred caste and embrace modern Christianity. The introduction of Christianity in India has had a sad effect. There is not a town in which Europeans have situated themselves, but what can muster a swarm of prostitutes. Before, it was not so, and even now these creatures are all found on the streets where Europeans pass to and fro, and not in the dense portions of the native towns. There is scarcely an evening a person passes through the streets of Kurrachee camp, but what he will see a nocturnal mistress following the servant of some gentleman (Christian) who is showing her the way to his master's quarters. This is practical Christianity in India. Oh, how unlike the religion which man, fearfully fallen, but still capable of rising to full fellowship with God, needs to redeem and purify and bless him!

We may, I fear, expect but few to join the standard of truth in India. I verily believe this people would not serve God, though Satan should bid them. Because we have come to do them good, they piously conclude we are disseminators of incorrect principles, and condemn us without a hearing.

A learned native in Calcutta, by the name of Baboo Posono Coomar Fagore, has submitted to the Legislative Council the draft of an Act for abolishing the practice of polygamy amongst the natives. Were an Act passed and enforced abolishing the practice of polygamy, or of keeping mistresses, not only in India, but throughout "enlightened Christendom," millions would be curtailed in their enjoyments, and in fact middle aged unspotted persons to execute such a law would be hard to find. I fancy this native has taken this step to gain the hypocritical encomiums of the Europeans. The motto of myriads is—"'Tis sweet to gain, no matter how, one's laurels." * * * * *

Of the American Elders, brother Skelton at Calcutta, brother Savage at Rangoon, and brother Leonard and myself in Sinde, constitute the remaining few. Elder Skelton, I understand, will leave as soon as the way opens, and no doubt brother Leonard and myself, with as many as can join us, will strike for Zion in the course of next spring. Our health is becoming much impaired. * *

Although I have made considerable proficiency in the study of the Hindostanee language, I despair of doing anything with the natives at present. There is but little royal blood to be found here. All the Elders agree in this particular. President Jones wrote me previous to his departure as follows:

"The natives are a God-forsaken race. I have not seen one in India worthy of the blessings of the Gospel. Without any exception they are a nation of thieves and liars. It is a waste of time to have anything to do with them, for I do not believe that one full blooded native will ever see the Valley.—Such is my faith, and I think I am guided by the Spirit of the Lord."

We have not received any Stars for some months. Neither has the parcel advised in your favor under acknowledgement made its appearance, but I trust it will turn up next mail. Those welcome harbingers of good tidings and principles—the Stars and Journals of Discourses act as a powerful stimulus on the minds of the Saints in this, and no doubt every other land. We feel as though a Volume is lost when one or two Numbers are missing, as they are the only source of information from the Saints—a favored and blessed people in the "land of the free."

As my letter has become very lengthy, I must conclude by praying the Lord, our great Sovereign, to bless, sanctify, and prosper every department and member of His kingdom, and finally save all the Israel of God, in the name of His dear Son.—Amen.

Your brother and fellow-laborer amongst a callous and benighted people,

Mormon Emigration—Arrival of the Cynosure.

We feel great pleasure in announcing the arrival of the Cynosure in New York, on Wednesday morning, the 5th inst, after a tolerable good passage of 38 days. This vessel left Liverpool on the 28th of July, with a company of Saints to the number of 162, under the presidency of Elder George Seager. During the passage there were 3 deaths under 3 years, 1 birth, and 2 marriages.

On her arrival opposite the Battery the lighter was towed alongside the vessel, and the whole of the passengers, all in good health, with their luggage were landed in about an hour and a half.

The following letter to the president of the company, by the surgeon, may serve as another evidence of the superior order maintained by our emigrants. The company express the best of feelings toward that gentleman:

SHIP CYNOSURE, N. Y. Sept. 5, 1855.

MY DEAR SIR: In parting with you I cannot but express my thanks for the very able co-operation you have afforded me on the late passage from Liverpool, in maintaining order and cleanliness among the passengers under your presidency, and only regret that some few others didn't follow the example set by the Mormons.

I shall be glad to hear of their well-doing, and beg you to tender my best thanks to the Presidents and Elders of the several wards for the assistance they have given me, under your direction and to each and all of your party my most cordial wishes for their health, happiness and prosperity, and with them my kindest farewell.

Believe me, very truly yours,

JOHN G. GOULSTONE, SURGEON.

To Pres't GEO. SEAGER.

LATER FROM CHINA.

The English, French and Russians in the Japanese Seas—Judical Slaughters at Canton—The Rebels in China.

By the ship Lizze Jarvis, which arrived here August 9th, 53 days out from Hong Kong, we have papers from there up to June 16th. We condense the following chiefly from the Overland China Herald of July 10:

THE REBELS.—The Pekin Gazette records further successes against the insurgents in the North, and notices the fact that the capital of Hupeh, and the district around it continue to be infested by rebel bands. The important and nearly adjoining commercial cities of Wu-chang and Hankhow on the Yangtsz Kiang, since the former was first invaded by the marauders two years ago, seem never to have been secure against a repetition of their visits.

Of Nankin, we still hear nothing, and according to the Shanghai paper, the trade of that port suffers no impediment from internal disturbances; Canton is returning to its wonted quiet, and not yet to its former commercial activity.

JUDICIAL SLAUGHTER AT CANTON AND NEIGHBORHOOD—CONDITION OF THE CITY.—If the month of April was called the "starving month" in Canton, that of may should be called the "bloody month;" for such a succession of excecutions has not been known within the present generation; and at Shau-king-fu (or Sho king as it is called here,) the judicial slaugters have exceeded those of the capital. That large perfect city lies on the Si-Kiang, or West river, about a hundred miles from Canton. It was formerly the capital of that province, but since the growth of foreign trade during the present Manchu sway, the Governor-General has lived at Canton, through his official body gaurd of five thousand troops is still garrisoned at Shau-king.

The city probably contains over half a million of inhabitants, some say fully seven hundred thousand, and is the entrepot of the trade from Kwang-si and the northwest parts of Kanwng-tung west of the North river. It was taken by the insurgents in August of last year, and their chiefs have possession of it and the places beyond, so as to prevent communication with Canton. There was no mercy shown by them then, and now that they have been vanquished, their retribution has been doubled.

* * * * * * * *

Most of the guilty, and hundreds politically innocent have been put to death. Authority was delegated to Shau-king to examine and punish the prisoners, but the people didn't always await the ceremony; and such was the slaughter, that a native informant states the drowned and headless bodies to have come floating like a raft past his village, on the banks of the river running through Sai-tsiu.—Many were tied together by fives and tens, and thus drowned.

There have been on an average more than two hundred executed in Canton daily for the last fortnight, and the prisons are not yet cleared. The two leaders who took the city of Shun-teh last August were cut in pieces on the 1st of June.

Many boats have reached the city from Kwang-si, but whether they are now directly from that province is doubtful, for prisoners were brought in them. The carcasses left on the execution ground are thrown into large pits, dug here and there, on the east of the city.

In Canton, many signs of returning prosperity and trade are seen. A large number of the stores, along the walls, taken down last August, have been reconstructed of boards and mats, but none of them have yet been rebuilt of brick.—[California Chronicle, August 18.

MESSRS. EDITORS: Being now on my journey, in charge of the last company of the Mormon Emigration, and that too, quite unexpectedly to me, I feel to drop you a few lines, and if you please, through your valuable paper to the proprietors of your town, and the public in general, permit me to say from the first moment I set foot in your city, I have felt an interest in your young yet growing city, and although the editor at Leavenworth City, published that any man possessing brains, could not select any other place but Leavenworth City, for an outfiting point, but notwithstanding his sayings, I am confident on trial, that a better point is not on the Missouri river for emigration to Oregon, New Mexico and Utah, and in reply to the editor, I would say, that he has lived in that bottom prairie joining the river, and taken cold so often from the damp fogs and air, and blowed his nose so m[illegible] that he judges that every man's brains are blowed out of his head, because he finds himself in the same fix. I would therefore say to the public, that the town of Atchison is decidedly the best point on the river that we have tried, for the safety of stock, general outlet and range, and the general and noble spirit of the town committee. I hope therefore under the keen and watchful eye of your Sovereign, connected with the diligence and noble bearing of your town committee, that you will try a[illegible] keep your maiden city from polution. A few [illegible]rds to the public, in and around Atchison, in re[illegible]rd to the losses that we have sustained in horses [illegible]d cattle. We leave in charge as agents in this [illegible]atter, to hunt up and preserve our lost cattle, James McGaw, Geo. W. Rust whom we recommend to the public, as gentlemen of honor, and we hope your citizens will aid them in every possible way that is consistent with their circumstances. We wish to deal on honorable principles, and if in the handling of such a vast amount of stock, we have gathered in, and have in possession one that belongs to our neighbors, we know it not. So far as my knowledge goes, our dealings with the people of upper Missouri and Kansas Territory has been satisfactory. At least it has been on my part. I have dealt with high-minded and honorable gentlemen, and if I should return, which I expect to do, I should still be happy to purchase their property on the same principles of friendship and honor, that has heretofore, and now exists. With these feelings and views, I bid my friends and fellow citizens a hearty and a warm good bye, for the present. I am yours truly, MILO ANDRUS.

RIGHTS AND WRONGS OF WOMEN.

In these wonderful days, when so many are insisting upon dies' nights, and complaining of ladies' wrongs, especially bemoaning the submissions which are unreasonably exacted, it may be well to take into consideration the following paragraph, showing the submissions they exact from from the men:

When the simple question of superiority is at issue, the men always have given up. If ladies and gentlemen meet on the sidewalk, who have to turn out? If there are not seats enough for all the company, who has to stand up? When there is danger to face, who must go forward? If there is curiosity to gratify, who goes behind? If there is too much company for the first table, who eats at the second? Who has always the right hand, and the most enviable position? We could mention a hundred other cases in which, on the simple question of right, everything is yielded to the woman.

THE YELLOW FEVER IN NORFOLK.

Progress of the Fever—Spread of the Contagion—Frightful Mortality—Demand for Coffins.

NORFOLK, Monday, Sept. 3rd, 1855.

I regret to inform you that things are becoming worse and worse, and that the record of deaths is not only increasing, but that new cases are multiplying with frightful rapidity.

Sunday was a dark and cheerless day in this city. The report of death's doings, were pouring in from all sections of the city, and the demand for coffins could not be supplied. Over fifty deaths were reported, only forty of which could be furnished with coffins, the burials on Saturday having reached nearly forty, consuming all the coffins then on hand. A fresh supply of twenty-five were received from Baltimore on Sunday morning, and a small lot from Richmond. Another order for one hundred was sent to Baltimore this afternoon, and I doubt not that they will all be required before to-morrow morning. The difficulty in procuring graves is also very great, so great is the terror among the laborers, that they are afraid to approach the grave-yard, and many of them can only be made to work under watch and compulsion.

On Sunday night there were sixteen deaths reported in the hospital established at the National Hotel, and this morning we have reports of more victims in various sections of the city. An effort is made to keep up the list of deaths, at the Howard Association office, but many die and are burried without being reported.

The general belief here this morning is that there were sixty deaths yesterday, and it is asserted that there have been fifty-seven up to noon to-day, the excitement being so great that a full record cannot be obtained.

There has not been a bale of hay here for several days, and the doctors' horses have nearly given out. Send us some oats and hay for the horses, and a blacksmith or two to shoe them, as there is nothing of the sort to be had here. When a vehicle loses a linchpin, it becomes useless, as there is no one here to replace it.

There is now believed to be 1,000 cases in the city, but the disease has somewhat abated in Portsmouth, probably for want of material to act on.—There are said to be not more than five hundred cases in Portsmouth, and the deaths there are not so numerous.

The Richmond Dispatch of Tuesday morning contains several letters from its Norfolk correspondents, from which we make the following extracts. A letter dated on Saturday, says:

"Scenes of affliction continue to multiply as the fatal fever progresses. Families are broken up—children are made orphans—wives husbandless and childless—widows lose their only stay and support—buried with their negroes! O, poverty! O, desolation! O, pestilence! Well do ye go hand in hand together, and faithfully have ye performed your work! Mr. Z. Sykes, Assistant Inspector of Streets, gives us a gloomy picture of the melancholy scenes he is doomed to witness in his daily rounds. The other day he had occasion to inspect a lot on Charlotte street. He found in the yard, three curly headed little children, romping about, rolling on the ground, with unkempt hair, and dirty tattered garments. He inquired for their father. "Pa—pa is dead." "Then where is your mother?" "Ma—ma is dead too!" "Yes," added the youngest, "and a big ugly black man came and carried them away, directly they were dead." "Good God!" continued Mr. Sykes, shocked at the scene, "and who have you to take care of you?" "Nobody sir." "Who gives you anything to eat?" "Mary, the colored woman next door, gives us some bread every day." "Never," said Mr. Sykes, "have my feelings been so pained. The forlorn condition of the little orphans—their tender years, and childless insensibility of their great loss, made me sick at heart, and I could not restrain my tears. I need not add, that the bereaved innocents were taken in charge by the Howard Association, and will be duly provided for."

A letter from Portsmouth, dated on Saturday, from Dr. Briggs, of Philadelphia, says:

"There is no material abatement in the epidemic in this city, although the new cases are of a much milder type, and more readily yield to treatment, for forty-eight hours past, than before.

"The number of new cases reported yesterday, August 31st, were 79, number of deaths, 16. Last night was a very bad one for the sick, being very hot and sultry. Nine deaths more are reported for the twelve hours ending to-day at noon; 450 cases are under treatment to-day. Major Fiske is still improving, and is thought to be out of danger, by his physician, Dr. Rizer, of Philadelphia. We have the city well districted, and an abundance of physicians for each district, to attend to every case that is reported ill. Several doctors have left, there being no need of their services, excepting as nurses, to give constant attention at the bedside.

"To-day being the sixtieth day since the disease broke out in this city, it is earnestly hoped (judging from the records of other cities which have suffered, and from Dr. Stone's prediction of New Orleans) that the disease may begin to abate, and cast no more of the inhabitants of this death-stricken city into a premature grave."

A letter from Portsmouth, dated on Sunday, to the Richmond American, says:

"To-day has been the most gloomy one since the visitation of our town by the dreadful disease. Since sunset yesterday, to 10 o'clock to-day, there has been 23 deaths—among them, Miss Sophia Bingly, Miss Rosalia Tatem, and John C. Wooddy. Selden Allen is as ill as he can be. There were a great many new cases last night and this morning."

The Richmond Dispatch, of yesterday, says that 125 coffins were to be sent from that city last evening.

Intermarriage of Blood Relations.

On the 5th day of the session of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, held recently in Providence, a remarkable paper was read in the department of Natural History, by the Rev. Charles Brooks, of Boston. Its title was, "Remarks on the Intermarriage of Blood Relations, and the transmission of peculiar traits." Mr. Brooks, in presenting this paper, remarked:

It is believed that the laws of nature forbid the marriage of near blood relations with each other, because the children from such alliances are frequently found to be in a partly abnormal state of body or mind. There seems to be an arrest of normal development. They often lack that entire and symmetrical equilibrium of the physical, intellectual and moral powers which constitute the whole man. Yet it is true that the children of parents who were not related do not present a normal development.—How decide? By observation, simply. If you have experience and observation, count up the children known to have been born from first cousins, and compare with the offsprings of others who have not married near blood relations, and I think, adds Rev. Mr. Brooks, that any man will be convinced there is a deep and durable difference between them.

The learned speaker then presented a frightful list of examples of the precious fruits of intermarriages in families. It cannot be, said he, that these results are mere chance. Is it not more probable that they are proofs of the violation of natural laws? The Professor arrived at the following conclusions:

1st. That the laws (used and misused) which improve or deteriorate the breeds in lower animals, are the same laws of nature which improve or deteriorate the human race.

2d. That an unusual number of imbecile children, born from parents who are first cousins, are often found in the same family.

3d. That few if any children born of parents who are first cousins, exceed their parents in bodily strength or mental power, while children who are born of parents not related, are frequently found to do so.

A SAILOR was called upon the stand as a witness.

"Well, sir," said the lawyer, do you know the Plaintiff and defendant?

'I don't know the drift of them words,' answered the sailor.

'What! not know the meaning of plaintiff and defendant!' continued the lawyer; 'a pretty fellow you, to come here as a witness. Can you tell me where on board the ship it was that this man struck the other one?"

"Abaft the binnacle," said the sailor.

"Abaft the binnacle!" said the lawyer, 'what do you mean by that!'

'A pretty fellow you responded the sailor, to come here as a lawyer, and don't know what abaft the binnacle means.'

Mustang Liniment and the Ladies.—In our opinion, nothing is above the comprehension of women; and with less prejudice, more liberality, and much keener perception than men, when a new idea is presented, a new doctrine taught, or a new fact asserted, she grasps it at once, and with the rapidity and clearness almost of instinct, decides upon its merits or truthfulness; and if her decision be favorable, she enthusiastically advocates and supports it. Thus the common saying has obtained—"Once get the women on your side and you are safe;" and we are happy to state that we have the ladies all in favor of the MUSTANG LINIMENT. They have tried it for caked breasts, sore nipples, sores, chafes, and burns on children, as well as for croup and mumps; also, for corns, tooth-ache, pains in the limbs and joints, sore eyes, eruptions, cuts and bruises, and they have always found it effectual—and they go about like angels, as they are, proclaiming it to their friends and to all they see or hear tell of, who are suffering. We have daily calls for it by persons who say such and such ladies recommended them to try it.

Go on ladies in your "good Samaritan" work, and thousands will bless you for your timely advice.

HATE AND LOVE.

BY GEORGE HARTWELL.

I hate the bands that bind me down
To pompous heartless form;
The studied words, the soulless thought,
All groveling as the worm;
The base deceit, the deadenhd soul,
The hollow-hearted tone;
The careful smile and measured step,
All heartless as a stone

I hate the hand that warmly grasps
When the heart within is cold—
(Mark the earnest gaze and willing tongue!)
Such friendship's bought and sold.
I hate the fiend that will dash the cup
In which hope's blessings glow,
And then will pierce the burdened heart,
And gaze on the crimson flow.

But I love the man with a feeling soul,
Whose passions are deep and strong;
Whose chords, when touched by a kindred power,
Will vibrate loud and long;
The man whose word is bond and law—
Who ne'er for gold or power
Would kiss the hand that would stab the heart
In adversity's trying hour.

I love the man that will dare to lift
His voice for the struggling poor;
The man that will open his heart, nor close
Against the beggar at his door.
Oh! give me a heart that will firmly stand
When the storm begins to lower—
A hand that will never shrink, if grasped
In misfortune's DARKEST hour.

From the New York Evening Post.

DOCTORING BEGINS AT HOME.

Raspails's contempt for his own Profession—True Causes of Disease—How to keep well—How to select and furnish your Apartment—"Pugging"—The Garnishing of an Infant's bed—How to Prepare your own—Chimney-Pot Hats and Stays—Culinary Hygienics—The use of Water—"Goitres"—Pickles and Seasoning for Food—"A little Wine for the Stomach's Sake"—Salads and Garlic—The use and abuses of Alcholic Drinks, and how to detect Bad Liquor—Winter Clothing—Ladies' Dresses—Hints for Housekeepers—Municipal Regulations for Apothecaries—Advice to Mothers, "Work, wash, and pray."

Dr. F. V. Raspail, the famous French physician and chemist, well known in the French revolution of 1848 as a great republican of the reddest dye, and who expiated his political sins by long imprisonment at Vincennes, has for the last ten years been in the habit of publishing every fall a sort of health almanac; he calls it the "Manual Annuaire de la Sante," in which he advocates, with singular boldness, many new and important doctrines upon the proper means of keeping the physical system in a healthy state. Previous to his debut in the political world, he was known to scientific men as an eminent chemist, and any suggestions on hygienic subjects from him are entitled to attention. His work is full of instruction on every sebject connected with the regimen of the body, sometimes detailed with singular minuteness, and always with ingenuousness. From a well-compiled digest of the last publication, in a late number of the "Household Words," we have extracted the following, and trust our readers will ponder it carefully, and none the less carefully, because he speaks without much respect of physic and physicians:

Health, Raspail maintains, is the normal of regular state of life, fitting man for the performance of his natural and social duties. Illness is the exceptional state; it reduces him to the position of a useless encumbrance on society. The art of preserving the health is called hygiene; the art of recovering or restoring the health when lost or enfeebled is called medicine. Now, it being self-evident that health is a desirable and disease a highly obnoxious state of life, it naturally follows that the study both of hygiene and medicine are of the greatest importance, and should be as widely disseminated as possible; yet by one of the strange and apparently inexplicable contradictions of our nature, mankind seem to have agreed, by a species of tacit understanding, to neglect or ignore altogether those branches of knowledge that concern them most.

M. Raspail enumerates among the causes of diseases, the introduction of foreign bodies into the organism; of poisons, or substances which, far from being adapted for assimilation and the development of the organic tissues, combine with them only to disorganize and destroy them. Next, long-continued excess of cold and heat, or sudden transition from one temperature to another; contusions; solutions of continuity of the muscles; hurts and wounds; the introduction into our tissues of gramineals, (grasses,) dust and sweeping of granaries, awns, prickles, down of plants or of grains; which, when present in the cavities of our organs, generate or develop themselves there, or swell under the influence of moisture. Again, want or impurity of air; for the most trifling alteration of the constitution of the atmosphere causes a disturbance of the regular functions of our organs. Pure air is the bread of respiration. Other causes are privation, excess, insufficiency of food, bad quality and adulteration of the alimentary substances. People die of indigestion as well as of starvation; the suffering in the one case are equal to those in the other; and the indigestion of the rich may be looked upon as a species of set off to the starvation of the poor.

Others, again, are the external and internal parasitism of hydatids, maggots, larvæ of flies or caterpillars, ticks, insects, coleoptera, and especially intestinable worms that seize on the infant in the cradle, and often adhere to man through life, quitting him only in the grave, where they hand him over to other worms. Indeed, M. Raspail ascribes the "parasitism of the infinitely small" as the cause of nine-tenths of our diseases. He finally ranks among aids to it, if not causes of illness, moral maladies—violent impressions, wounded affections, deceived hopes, disappointed ambition, weariness and despair. Hereditary and constitutional diseases he seems determined to ignore, and is even silent to the diseases of deformity and defective organization. The causes are perhaps self-evident.

Now, having told us why we are ill, the author proceeds to tell us how we can keep well. Short and sentenous are his hygienic precepts. You are to choose a dwelling exposed to the sun, but sheltered from the noxious eminations of swamps, ditches and rivers, gasworks and factories. You are not to inhabit the kitchen floor if you can help it. Let your dwelling room be high, and look to any point of the compass but the North. (This would not suit artists, to whom a northern aspect is a desideratum.) Don't turn your bedroom into a work room, library or kitchen. Keep one window at least in it open all day. Do not place anything in it that emits, smells agreeable, or otherwise.—Banish even flowers; they evolve suffocating gases. The walls should be painted, or papered with a good sound paper, pasted down firmly with size scented over the fire with black pepper, aloes or garlic(!), which M. Raspail terms the "camphor of the poor." Have no paintings on the walls, no hangings to the bed. Sleep on a hard mattress. Have no furniture in your bedroom but the bed, a washstand, and two chairs. Very healthy all these arrangements, no doubt, M. Raspail, but exceedingly ugly.

Stop the chinks between badly joined boards with a paste of flour, pounded pepper, pounded aloes, plaster and clay. By these means you will avoid draughts, need no vermin anihilator, and be enabled to set rats, mice, bugs and fleas at defience. I have heard of a somewhat similar process in the north of England; it is there called pugging. Rats and mice abhor aloes; rats-bane they don't care much for, especially if they can get a sufficient quantity of water afterwards. Put black pepper in grains, and small lumps of camphor, into the wool of matresses. Garnish the beds of infants of tender years with picked leaves of wood fern. (How far a border of the ferns of Great Brittain nature-printed of course, would be advantageous in garnishing a baby's crib, I am rather at a loss to know.) As an infant of tender years, I remember, myself, having had my bed garnished sometimes with the crumbs of French rolls, occasionaley with the bristles of a hair brush, cut up small, and on one occasion with a poker and a pair of tongs; but beyond producing a sensible irritation or urtication of the epidermis, I am not prepared to state what sanitary benefits I derived therefrom. M. Raspail can at least quote tradition in support of his leafy system of garnishing—for didnot the robin red-breast cover the little children in the wood with leaves, and were not these infants of tender years?

Wash your bedsteads frequently with camphorated brandy. Keep chloride of lime constantly at hand. Have a fire in your bedroom from time to time, and burn some vinegar on red-hot iron plate. Have your bed well aired every day. Change your body linnen night and morning. Take a bath as often as ever you can. Never scour a floor; wax and dry rub it. Let your clothes be made wide and easy. Gentlemen, leave off chimney-pot hats and all-round collars. The first press on the brow and chill the brain; the second impede the respiration. Ladies, don't wear stays. Nurses and mothers, never swaddle your babies. Tightness of dress is torture to an infant. When the weather is warm let your children roll and kick about naked in the open air: it will make them healthy and strong.

Now hear M. Raspail, upon culinery hygienics. Good cheer he says is one of the chief preservatives of health. Keep regular hours for your meals. Eat and drink in moderation; vary your dishes. Never force yourself to eat if you have no appetite. Rest yourself half an hour after each meal; then take some bodily excercise. Never use any other water for your drink or for culinary purposes, than spring water and well filtered river water. There are many diseases that arise entirely from the use of unwholesome water. Many epidemics might be traced to the abominable compound of dirt and putridity which the water companies are permitted to palm on us. Never drink water out of a ditch or pool, if you can possibly help it. You may swallow, unwittingly, small leeches even. If you happen to live in a country where geiter prevails endemically, (which is caused by the use of water that has filtered through mercurial veins,) put granulated tin into your cisterns and drinking vessels. The best bread for a hard working man is made of a mixture of rye, barley and wheat; fine wheaten bread is more adapted to men of sedentary occupation. A good savory potage (the French pot-au-feu, for which see Soyer,) is one of the most nutritive and wholesome dishes, particularly for a weak stomach.

Hear Raspail on pickles, sauces and condiments. If you can afford it, have always on your table by way of side-dishes, hams, sausages, anchovies, capers, green or black olives, mariades (pickled fish), tomato jelly, spiced mustard; in short, the best condiments you can afford; so that there may be a choice for various appetites. Do not listen to tirades of partisans of physiological doctrines, who from an idle fear of increasing the gastric affections under which they labor, dread and eschew the very things that would cure them. Season your stews ragouts with bay leaves, thyme, taragon, garlic, pepper, pimento or cloves, according to circumstances. Drink water when you can procure it good, but take also a little wine for the stomach's sake.

The addition of a reasonable quantity of alcoholic liquor tends to accelerate a sluggish digestion, by supplying the excess of gluten with an amount of alcohol that the natural process couldn't produce under the circumstances. Hence the necessity for good, wine or beer and other alcoholic beverages for northern constitutions. Flavor your cream or milk dishes with vanilla, orange flowers, or cinnamon. Roast your joints always before an open fire; never have them baked. Legs and shoulders of mutton should be stuffed with garlic. A good salad is the most agreeable condiment, and the best promoter of a digestion fatigued by a long dinner.—Wild and bitter endive make an excellent and wholesome salad. Put in plenty of oil, and (if your senses can bear it,) rub the bowl with garlic.

Mr. Raspail, as I before hinted, eschews teetotalism; but he inculcates and strongly recommends temperance—as what sane man does not! He advises those who are blessed with the goods of this world to prefer the light French wines (those so-called vins ordinares) to the fine sorts, and either to the Spanish and Portuguese wines—many of which (particularly the abomination compounded of bad brandy, geropigo and the refuse of grape skins, and sold dirt cheap under the names of port and sherry) are downright poisons, and will ruin the strongest constitutions. If you can't get good and pure wine, abstain from it altogether: so with beer. As to the more potent alcohols, brandy, rum, gin, whiskey, arrack, their comparative purity may be tested simply enough: pour a few drops on your hands and rub them together briskly.

Apply your nose to the palms and the smell will at once tell you whether you have a pure article or a Fousel Oil counterfeit; the Fousel Oil, which immediately betrays its presence by its repulsive smell, is a poison that you cannot too carefully avoid. Enjoy all the Creator's gifts cheerfully, but in moderation; and be not deceived when you see a gray haired glutton or a drunkard of four score, and say to yourself, "O, I can feast, I can carouse without stint. Here is a hog that has grunted in Epicure's style for eighty years." Remember that a drunkard who has taken no hurt by his drink is no more a proof of innocousness of drunkeness, than a soldier who has been to the wars and hath never been wounded, is of absence of danger in a battle.

A few more words on hygiene. Wear strong and solid boots in winter. Instead of an umbrella, which affords no real protection against the rain, carry a hooded cloak, made of light impermeable gauze, which folded up, may fit into your waistcoat pocket. Ladies, instead of encumbering yourselves with a parasol, wear a light broad-brimmed straw hat. Eschew and denounce the use of spun-glass tissues and brocades, which, unhappily, are again coming into fashion. They are confusion. Their use was very properly abandoned during the eighteenth century, because it was found that the pulverulent particles of spun glass affected the lungs most seriously, and often even fatally. I can corroberate this statement of M. Raspail from a fact within my own knowledge.

Some years ago the Mistress of the Robes of one of the principal metropolitan theatres, told me that an accomplished actress insisted upon wearing a dress of some newly introduced spun glass tissue or brocade in a Christmas piece. The dress was made in the wardrobe of the theatre, and, shortly afterwards, all the workmen who were employed upon it were laid up with sore fingers, whitlows, and severe coughs. Workmen employed in the preparation of colors or other substances into the composition of which mineral colors enter, wash your heads and hands, first in ley water, afterwards in soap water, when leaving work at meal times or at night. Bird stuffers never use arsenical or mercurial preparations to protect the skins you stuff against the voracity of insects. It is fraught with the most tenacious and fatal consequences to yourselves, and to the collectors and curators of museums of natural history.

The desired object may be obtained as fully and in a perfectly safe manner, by impregnating the internal surface of the skins with a solution of aloes and pepper, to be afterwards sprinkled with powdered camphor. House-painetrs, discontinue the use of the arsenical compound, known as Scheele's green; it is confusion. Substitute for it a green composed of iron and copper, which is cheaper, sanitary, and as beautiful a color. Housekeepers, have all your copper vessels tinned on the inside. Make all your pickles and preserves at home. Never boil half-pence with your Brussells sprouts to green them. It is destruction. Let your spoons and forks be of silver or tin, or of tinned iron, but on no account of German silver, or of any other of the multinamed compositions pretending to imitate or be substitutes for gold and silver.

The art of preparing a substance that shall in every way replace gold and silver remains as yet to be discovered. Keep your kitchens and dining rooms scrupulously clean. A clean kitchen is, in nine-and-three quarter cases out of ten, the criterion of a clean housewife and a happy household. Governors, prohibit the sale of arsenic absolutely; the prohibition ought also to extend to rat's-bane. Subject physicians' prescriptions of a dangerous nature to the control of a sanitary board; and make the apothecary who shall dispense a dangerous preparation equally responsible for the consequences with the physician who has prescribed it. For. M. Raspail maintains that the materia medica of the old school contains not one agent of a deleterious or dangerous nature, of which the therapeutic effects may be as fully and effectually produced by an innocous substance.

Tramps, gipsies, you that sleep in the open air, on the ground, in trees or haystacks, stuff your ears with cotton, or tie a bandage around your heads.—Otherwise, you may have ear-ache and affections caused by the introduction of seeds, beards of grass, etc., into the auditory tube, the nasal chamber, or wind-pipe. Mothers, feed not your children upon sweets, biscuits, or mucilages. They feed not them, but ascarides, parasites instead. Give them, rather, sound condiments and wholesome pickles. Wise men and women all look early upon life as a duty, upon death as an accident or necessity. Guard against the suggestions of hatred, and the aberations of love. Avoid enervating pursuits and expensive pleasures.

Rise in the morning as soon as you awake; go to bed at night as soon as you feel that it requires a strong effort of violation to keep your eyes open. Be angry as seldom as ever you can. Never go to law. Be economical, never avaricious. Work, wash and pray. So shall you live to a good old age, and your death, at last, be but an extinction of vitality, without pain, or suffering. Nay, the length of human life might equal the fabulous longevity of the inhabitants of the sea, if we had in every season a constant and invariable temperature around us. But we have not.

MC'LEAN'S VOLCANIC OIL LINIMENT is truly a celebrated remedy, and has done more to alleviate human suffering than any other remedy ever discovered.
One or two applications will relieve the most severe pain, bruise or sprain.
Two bottles will cleanse, purify, and heal the foulest ulcer or sore, and it will heal the most severe burn or scald without a scar.
Every family should have a supply constantly on hand, for use in time of need.
Read the following extract of a letter, which is incontestable proof of its wonder ful efficacy:

A BLIND MAN RESTORED TO SIGHT.

J. H. McLEAN—Dear Sir: * * * I have been suffering for four years with rheumatic sore eyes, being at times altogether blind. I procured the advice of several physicians, but none of them could do me any good. By the advice of a friend I applied your "Volcanic Oil Liniment," according to the directions around the bottle, and it has cured me permanently. I have used it since for bruises, pains, &c., and it has always given immediate relief. I live on the main road near Farmington.
Yours, respectfully, JOHN H. ALLERD.
Jefferson county, Mo.

For horses it is far superior to any other remedy for curing lameness, bruises, cuts, old sores, swellings, &c.
We say, then, to all who may be suffering from external diseases, call at once and get a supply. Thousands of bottles are sold (and used) daily, and we have never heard of a case where it has failed in giving relief when properly applied.
☞ For sale by J. H. MCLEAN, the proprietor, corner Third and Pine streets, St. Louis, and by all respectable dealers in Medicines everywhere

MEDICINE FOR THE BILLION!
A Certain Remedy for all Diseases of
MAN OR ANIMALS,
Requiring an External Application.
Warranted in every Case for which it is Recommended!

THE MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT!
Unlike all other popular medicines, it is used by many prominent members of the faculty, and many of the public Hospitals. Their prejudices have yielded to indisputable and incontrovertible demonstrations of cures performed where their remedies had failed.
It has cured more cases of
RHEUMATISM
than any other medicine ever used. Its efficacy in this terrible disease is acknowledged by all who have used it. It not only cures the complaint, but appears to give a vigor and elasticity to the limbs, before unknown, thus performing a double office.

A FEW TESTIMONIALS.

PATH FINDER OFFICE, May 11, 1854.
G. W. WESTBROOK:—
Please send me by the bearer three large bottles of your Mexican Mustang Liniment, as I wish to take it up to my place in Vermont, not thinking it advisable to do without it. I have used it in my family and on my horses, and have found it invaluable. Yours,
J. T. WHITNEY.

ELIZABETHTOWN, TENN., May 25, 1855.
MR. G. W. WESTBROOK:—
Dear Sir—It affords me much pleasure in saying to you that the Mexican Mustang Liniment outsells any medicine that I have ever had for sale, and comes nearer doing what it promises to do. Send me another supply, as I am nearly out. Yours respectfully,
JOHN SINGLETRAY, P. M.

PHILADELPHIA, June 11, 1854.
MR. G. W. WESTBROOK:
Sir—My son was afflicted with a swelling upon the knee joint, which confined him to the house. I had a doctor attending him for some time, but he did not do him any good. One of my neighbors told me to use the Mustang Liniment. I asked the doctor if I could do so, and he told me he thought I could not do better.
I procured one bottle, and in about a week he was able to go out. I can safely recommend it to the afflicted.
Respectfully yours, MRS. BENNETT.

W. S. Ladd & Co., of Portland, Oregon, writes that there is an immense demand for the Mexican Mustang Liniment in that country, and orders forty gross to be shipped by Golden Gate, that sails in a few days from New York.

Park & White of San Francisco, California, order 100 gross, to be forwarded by first clipper for that port.

PORT AU PRINCE, HAYTI, Jan. 16th, 1854.
I had the pleasure to receive invoice and boxes Mexican Mustang Liniment per Groton, and have no doubt it will have a brisk sale on the island.
GEORGE RACKSTER.

To give health, strength and elacity to the limbs, there is nothing can equal in effect, the
MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT.
FARMERS AND LIVERY STABLE KEEPERS
have need it for the following diseases with extraordinary success, certifying invariably to the efficacy of the Liniment, and the truthfulness of our assertions in its behalf:
Spavin, Splint, Ring-bone, Fistula, Wind Galls, Big Head, Bruises, Strains, String-halt, Scratches, Cracked Heels, Sweeney, Saddle, Collar, or Harness Galls, Hard Lumps or Tumor, Film, or other diseases of the Eye, Foll-Evil, &c.
The small sizes retail for 25 cents per bottle;
The medium size retail for 50 cents per bottle;
The large sizes retail for one dollar per bottle.
The medium holds three times as much as the small;
The Large holds nearly three times as much as the medium,
Therefore the large bottles are the cheapest.

FOURTH OF JULY, 1855.

Celebration of the Anniversary of American Independence, at Great Salt Lake City, Utah Territory.

'A Gallopade,' by Captain Ballo's Band.

Hon. J. F. Kinney, Chief Justice, read a speech.

Greeted by the roaring of cannon.

Major Edward P. Duzette displayed his unique performance on the brass drum, with violin accompaniements, much to the gratification and delight of the assembly.

Dr. Garland Hurt, Indian agent delivered an extemporaneous address.

Concluded amid the applause of the assembly, and the firing of cannon.

The following regular toasts were then read by the committee:—

The Declaration of American Independance—an event ever to be celebrated by the Latter Day Saints—the fruits of inspiration—S. W. R.

The Constitution of the United States:—For political wisdom and policy, among national institutions, its equal cannot be found.—S. W. R.

President Franklin Pierce—may he live till his popularity is equal to his virtues; and may no future President of the United States do any more harm or less good.—D. H. W.

Edinburgh Quadrilles, by Orchestral Band, very animatedly.

Music by Captain Ballo's Band.

Hon. A. W. Babbit addressed the assembly.

Greeted by loud peals of cannon.

The committee read the following toasts:—

The lamented Leonidas Shaver—the brightest star and pride of Utah's Judicary' and favorite of her citizens.—H. S. E.

The Governor of Utah—He is as he was, and as he is, so may he ever be.—S. W. R.

Utah Territory—May she continue to spread and prosper until her influence is felt among all nations, kindreds, tongues and people.—E. T. B.

The united States Supreme Court—Uncle Sam expects every man to do his duty, and so do the Mormons.—W. W. P.

The Territory of Utah—the hub of the great wheel of creation, 'spin away gals,' and clothe the heralds of holiness in home spun! Does that allude to polygamy?—W. W. P.

The American Eagle—May its wings cover the universe, and its down fall upon Ameriea.—J. M. B.

Hon J. M. Bernhisel, our delegate to Congress—'Twas not the whirlwind, nor the earthquake, but the still small voice, that showed the Lord was there. Well done, good and faithful servant.—W. W. P.

It was then moved and seconded that the Hon. J. M. Bernhisel be sent to Washington as the representative of this people. Carried by acclamation, and greeted by firing of cannon.

Deseret for ever!—Her own Governor, her own religion, her own legion, and her own 'peculiar institutions,' instead of office-hoppers, clod-hoppers, gal-hoppers, or grass-hoppers. What a day this is for a unit!—W. W. P.

Liberty of conscience—the bulwark of every government. Woe to the nation that muzzles it.—J. C. L.

Como Quadrilles, by the Orechestral Band.

Mr. Bernard Snow read the following, composed by himself for the occasion:—

An Ode to Freedom.

Freedom, thou purest gift of God to man;
A gem of truth from heaven's eternal store,
Dispersing errors of dark ages past!
The richest halo of immortal light,
And heaven-born offspring of the great I AM!
To thee, this hallowed day we consecrate,
And pay our adoration at thy shrine,
With hearts of humble gratitude to Him
Who kindly gave thy mission here to earth.
Nor while we eulogize thy sacred name,
Forget the noble hearts by thee inspired
So fix thy banner, and thy trumpet sound,
Ne'er awed by threats, or tyrant's sternest frown.
Their names our children's children shall revere,
And lisping accents join them in each prayer.
A Washington, with thee, by God inspired,
First in our heart, and foremost in thy cause,
With scores of comrades, honest, brave and true,
Who pledged their fortunes, lives—their honor, all
To thee, are treasured in our memory.
Thou didst triumph, though opposition howlded
As the fierce lightning from electric clouds,
Breaks its pent-up prison as if it scorned
The damp and chilly vapors whence it came,
And to the pure air wildly rushing forth
Makes old earth tremble, and the hills resound
With one tremendous anthem of glad praise—
Or as the mighty thund'ring avalanche
From tow'ring heights, by gravitation driven
Adding accelerating force each stride,
Leaping from cliff to cliff, and chasm to chasm,
Uprooting sturdy oaks, and low'ring pines
That to their native bed for ages clung,
Roaring, leaping down the rough mountain-side
With startling, awful, and terrific power,
So was thy course! No force 'gainst thee could stand,
For God was there, thy mission to direct!
Old Concord, Lexington, and Bunker Hill,
Will full attest the triumph of thy cause.
Then loud and joyous acclamations rose
From veteran heroes, and valiant sons
Who firmly by thee stood and faced thy foes!
Then aged matrons, with their daughters raised,
On bended knee, their orisons to heaven,
And humble gratitude a dwelling found
In every heart throughout the nation wide.
Then our fathers, when first in Congress met,
Felt its sacred influence o'er them shed.
Behold! what holy reverence filled the place;
What fervent hearty thanks were raised to God!
The while no sound was heard but thnt of prayer:
No thought intruded on a single heart
Of low-born, base and party schemes,
For self-aggrandizement or worldly gain!
No thought but one, and that, our country's weal!
Then, thou wert pleased, and God's approving smile
Was borne by angels to their quiet homes.
Jehovah then his matchless wisdom lent
To those that framed the instrument we love,
The guardian of our rights, and country's pride.
But ah! how false ambition thwart thy aims—
Hath thrown its base designs for cruel ends!
How filthy lucre, perched on chairs of state
Has tempted demagogues to watch for gain,
Who reckless of their country's weal or woe,
Concoct their party schemes at thy expense!
Where once profound deliberation sat,
And wighed with care all matters of the State,
Loud declamation, oft devoid of sense,
And tinged with blackguard cant, and vulgar phrase,
Escapes the lips of some pugnacious gent,
Whose pugilistic powers wo ld feign supply
His direful lack of brain and common sense!
Also for thee! how scandalized thy name.
Tyrants, beneath thy fair majestic cloak,
Stalk forth at midday and assassin like
Would pluck the pillars from thy sacred fane,
And reckless spill the blood of thp fair sons,
For no offence, save worshipping of God
In deed and truth according to his word!
The dearest rights thy Constitution gives,
Still violate and banishment in lieu.
But thou wilt live and prosper on the earth,
Despite of all infernal powers combined,
When kingly tyrants are dissolved to dust
And only as the things that were, are known—
Though hellish schemes and scandal's plots are rife,
To counteract the end by heaven designed,
They ne'er can prosper; and thy mission true,
Will thrive and flourish as the Lord ordained.
Yet (to their praise and glory be it said)
Some honest noble hearts defend thy cause,
That ne'er for paltry gain will turn aside,
Or lend an ear to selfish party bawl;
But like the proud and stately ship on sail,
Have kept their forward course in spite of tide
Or howling storms, that threatened to devour—
Or like the majestic engine o'er its track
Of iron, firm unyielding to its tread,
Now leaving far behind its steam and smoke
As only fit for sport of idle winds,
With course defined e'er makes the best of time,
With inward power of elements combined,
To reach its far off part and distant goal—
So they with minds on honest virtue bent,
Confer a lasting honor on thy name,
And win the hearts of all thy loyal sons!
'Tis such a one we sadly miss this day;
Whose voice with ours was wont to speak thy praise
And censure wrong, from whate'er source it came.
That voice is hushed! and death of thee has robbed
A valiant son, a gem of matchless price;
A true, impartial, virtuous, honest man,'
The fairest, "noblest workmanship of God!"
Long will remembrance of his honor live
In every heart among the faithful Saints.
Meanwhile thy work with power will still advance—
The soil so well prepared and tilled by thee,
Receptacle of that small mustard seed,
(Than which, no one is scarcely more minute,)
Hath yielded of its nourishment and strength:
The germ hath quickened and taken lively root,
And forth the widely, spreading branches came,
Reering heavenward, luxuriant in growth;
And though by the indignant trampled on,
And oft the butt of ridicule and scorn,
Still gains new strength by each opposing scheme;
Grows, flourishes, and thrives amid them all!
Already does its cooling shades invite
The way-worn, weary passengers of air,
Who gladly 'neath its shelter take their rest,
To sing of the, and praise thy holy work!
Still methinks through vistas of time unborn,
By faith and shadowy vision, I behold
The eagle, proud ensign of thy day's dawn,
Weary by flight in search of wonted rest,
Or cooling shade where once she welcome found,
Turn from the pale and with'ring scene of death,
With one loud doleful cry, and spread her wings
For a more genial clime in which to bathe—
When from her lofty height she spies below
The mustard's cooling shade, and hies to taste
Its fragrance, with emotions of delight!
She finds it equal to her soul's desire,
And joyously PROCLAIMS HERSELF AT HOME!

Greeted by the firing of cannon.

Yankee Doodle, by the Martial Band.

The following was then pronounced:—

Benediction by Elder W. Woodruff.

O God our eternal Father; we offer the gratitude of our hearts in thanksgiving and praise unto thy name, for the blessings we have enjoyed during all the days of our lives, and we ask thee, our Father in heaven, that we may ever be filled with gratitude, and thanksgiving, and with obediance to thy laws and commandments. We thank thee for the Constitution of the United States and receive it as a great legacy, and as a precious boon bestowed upon us from thee, through our fathers.

We pray that thy blessings may rest upon all the children of men who dwell upon this continent, in that manner, and in that measure, to maintain inviola e the principles set forth in the Constitution of the United States; that we, and our posterity to the latest generation, may enjoy continually that freedom and liberty guaranteed unto us; and may its influence and power spread upon all the earth, until the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ; until every man, woman, and child upon the whole earth shall bow the knee, and acknowledge Jesus the Christ, the son of the living God.

We acknowledge thy hand in the blessings we enjoy, and in leading us to these distant vallies, we know that thy spirit—the Spirit of Wisdom—governed thy servants in leading us here, and that the same Spirit has been manifested in the government, control, direction, and counseling of this people up to this time.

May these blessings continue with us, and may we ever be thankful, and humble, and never be ashamed to bow the knee to thee, and ackowledge thy hand in all things, in every blessing we enjoy, and every duty we are called to fulfil through our lives.

Let peace go with us to our habitations, and may thy spirit dwell in our hearts, and in the hearts of those who dwell with us, that we may revere thy name, keep thy commandments, overcome the world, and be saved in the kingdom of our God; which favors we ask in the name of Jesus Christ, Amen.

A Governor's salute was fired while the assembly were dispersing.

At sunset, firing of cannon; flags lowered.

The impromtu speeches and prayers were reported by Messrs. Watt and Long.

Thus passed off the 79th anniversary of American independance in Great Salt Lake City—a day long to be remembred by her patriotic citizens. No jar, nor accident occured to mar the harmony of the day.

ROBT. L. CAMPBELL,
Reporter of the day.

It was designed to print all that pertained to the celebration on the 4th in this number, but the manuscript of the speeches deferred until our next did not come to hand in season.—[Ed of the News.

(To be Continued.)

The Electric Telegraph and how it was first Discovered.

The name of the ship Sally will always be remember as intimately associated with the invention of the electric telegraph. In the year 1832, during the passage of that vessel from Havre to New York, a company of American gentlemen were assembled on her deck, conversing on several scientific subjects. Among them was Professor Morse, who was then pursuing the profession of artist, and who was comparitively unknown, except to a large circle of friends to whom he had endeared himself by his frank generous nature, and his simple unaffected manners. There was also Mr. Reeves, United States Minister to the Court of France and Dr. Jackson, a distinguished geologist. The conversation happened to turn on the then recent discovery of electricity produced by magnetism, or, more strictly speaking, the process by which electricity was produced from the magnet. Its importance aroused the attention of men of science in the Old and New Worlds, among whom it was the all absorbing subject of discussion. In the course of the conversation, Dr. Jackson stated that he had seen the operation successfully performed, and described the coil of wire round the magnet; when one of the company observed that it must take a considerable length of time for a current of electricity to pass through it. "No," said the Doctor, in reply, "I have known the electric current to pass through, several hundred feet of the wire in an instant. Don't you," he added, "remember the experiment of Franklin, to exhibit its velocity, and which resulted in proving that the rapidity of its flight could not even be calculated by time?"

Professor Morse, who was an eager listener to this part of the the conversation, remarked that he remember an experiment of the kind, and he immediately after suggested that if electricity was so rapid, there could be little or no difficulty in devising a plan by which, through its aid, information might be transmitted to a great distance.

The remark was received with a sort of general assent, but did not turn the conversation from the experiment which Dr. Jackson had been describing, and which was the subject of general interist. The active mind of our professor, however was busy; and that night the idea which he had conceived was worked out into a practical form. His leisure hours on board the Sally were devoted to the invention of an instrument which was to prove the possibility of transmitting intelligence by means of electricity between distant points. The result was the construction of a machine similar to that now used, with the exception that instead of the spring there was origonally a simple permanent magnet. It is sufficient to say, here, that he was satisfied with his success; but this was not all—it was merely the beginning of his labors—he had to contend against the skepticism of an unbelieving world, which had persecuted and tortured, even to death some of the noblest sons of science for the faith that was in hem.

After his arrival in New York he succeeded in making a perfect model of his machine. He accomplished this in his studio, in the University, where his time was divided between his great work and the instruction of some pupils in the art of painting. This was in the fall of 1835, when the University was in process of completion. Among his pupils were the distinguished historical painter, Daniel Huntington, and Mr. Looms, another, artist of much merit. Both these gentlemen acted as witnesses in the long and obstinately contested suit between Prfoessor Morse and Mr. O'Riley.

In 1837 a public exhibition of the invention was made in the University, the scene of his unremiting labors, before a large audience. A considerable number were attracted by mere curiosity—certainly not from their faith in the practicability of the invention. Little did they or the world imagine that one day, through its magic agency, the most distant parts of the world would be brought together, and that the great ocean itself would present no obstacle to the establishment of immediate communication between the Old and New Worlds.

A large number of persons, we have said were present, and witnessed the success of the experiment; it was conclusively proved that intelligence could be transported as quick as thought through a wire ten miles long. A few months after this Professor Morse went to Washington, and in February of 1838 exhibited his machine to the President, his Cabinet, and a large assembly of the members of both Houses. The same success attended this exhibition. The subject was soon after brought before Congress, and an appropriation asked for to construct a telegraph line between Washington and Baltimore. Thirty thousand dollars, it was stated, would be sufficient for the purpose, and as the amount was so small it was supposed it would be granted at once, but, like many other great measures of public utility, it was nearly killed by delay. Large bodies, it is said, move slowly, and never was the axiom more forcibly illustratedt than in this case.

The Committee on Commerce, to which the subject had been referred, reported promptly and favorably, recommending that an appropriation of thirty thousand dollars, the required amount, be granted for the construction of the proposed line. Week after week passed without any notice being taken of the report, month succeded, month, and still Congress took no action on it. Professor Morse, however not easily discouraged—he worked with untiring energy, in his studio in the University, for the means to support himself in Washington during the sessions of Congress, and in the midst of the greatest difficulties, the false promises of politicians the indifference of pretended friends, and the delays and the vexations of tedious legislation, labored with the most determined perseverance to secure the passage of the bill reported by the committee.

The first year passed the second was near its close, and still there appeared to be no prospect that it would be acted upon. Professor Morse during the interval between the sessions, went to England, having secured his invention here, and endeavored to obtain a patent from the British government.—This application, however, was met and opposed by Whetstone and Davy, and was defeated in consequence of their alleging that the invention had already been published, and that, according to English patent law, it was public property.

Failing in England, he went to France, where he succeded in obtaining a patent, and where his invention was exhibited by the great French astronomer, Arago, before the Academy of Science.—But although he was successful in securing the patent, when he attempted to construct a line from Paris to St. Gernain, the government interposed, and claimed the exclusive right to the use of the invention, on the ground that it was a government monopoly, and, that according to the laws of France, could not be possessed by an individual. Thus while there was one law requiring him to carry his invention into practical operation within two years, there was another which prohibited him from using it; and both being in conflict, he was compelled to abandon his design of using his patent in that country.

He now returned to his native land, and proceeded immediately to Washington, where he renewed his endeavors to procure the passage of the bill granting the appropriation of thirty thousand dollars. Towards the close of the session of 1844, the House of Representatives took it up and passed it by a large majority, and it only remained for the action of the Senate. Its progress through this house, as might be supposed, was watched with the most intense anxiety by Professor Morse. There was only two days before the close of the session, and it was found on examination of the calander, no less than one hundred and forty-three bills had precedence to it. Professor Morse had nearly reached the bottom of his purse, his hard earned savings were almost spent, and although he had struggled on with undying hope for many years, it is hardly to be wondered at if he felt disheartened now. On the last night of the session he remained till nine o'clock, and then left without the slightest hope that the bill would be passed. He returned to his hotel, counted his money, and found that after paying his expenses to New York, he would have seventy-five cents left. That night he went to bed sad, but not without hope for the future, for through all his difficulties and trials that never forsook him. The next morning, as he was going to breakfast, one of the waiters informed him that a young lady was in the parlor waiting to see him. He went in immediately, and found that the young lady was Miss Ellsworth, daughter of the Commissioner of Patents, who had been his steadfast friend while in Washington.

"I come" said she, to congratulate you."

"For what?" said Professor Morse.

"On the passage of your bill," she replied.

"Oh, no—you must be mistaken," said he.—"I remained in the Senate till a late hour last night, and there was no prospect of its being reached."

"Am I the first, then," she exclaimed joyfully, to tell you?"

"Yes, if it is really so."

"Well," she continued, "father remained till the adjournment, and heard it passed, and I asked him if I might run over and tell you."

"Annie," said the professor, his emotion almost choking his utterance, "Annie, the first message that is sent from Washington to Baltimore shall be sent from you."

"Well," she replied, "I will keep you to your word."

While the line was in process of completion, Professor Morse was in New York, and upon receiving intelligence that it was in working order, he wrote to those in charge, telling them not to transmit any messages over it till his arrival. He then set out immediately for Washington, and on reaching that city sent a note to Miss Ellsworth informing her that he was now ready to fulfill his promise, and asked her what message she would send.

To this he recieved the following reply, "What hath God wrought!"—words that ought to be written in characters of living light. The message was twice repeated, and each time with the greatest success. As soon as the result of the experiment was made known, Governor Seymour, of Connecticut, who is at present U. S. Minister to St. Petersburgh, called upon Professor Morse and claimed the first message for his State, on the ground that Miss Ellsworth was a native of Hartford We need scarcely add that his claim was admitted, and now engraved in letters of gold, it is displayed conspicuously in the archives of the Historical Society of Connecticut.

Numerous claiments have arisen since then to contest the right of Professor Morse to the invention of the electric telegraph; but the whole scientific world now recognizes our distinguished countryman as the first to prove the practicability of transmitting intelligence between distant points through the agency of of the electric current. The English have at last, after a long and obstinate struggle, given in and admitted the justice of his claims.—The February number of the North British Review, for the present year, has the following:

"The merit of inventing the modern telegraph and applying it in a grand scale for public use, is beyond all controversary, due to Professor Morse of the United States."

With what pride must he look back on the past, and how his heart must expand with joyful emotions as he contemplates the grand results which have been produced by his invention. Yet withal, Professor Morse is one of the most modest of men, and his countrymen need not fear that any honor which they may bestow upon him will ever change the unaffected simplicity of his character. WILD MEN OF BORNEO.

Further toward the North are to be found men living absolutely in a state of nature; who neither cultivate the ground, nor live in huts; who neither eat rice nor salt, and who do not associate with each other, but rove about the woods like wild beasts.—The sexes meet in the jungles or the man carries away the woman from company. When the children are old enough to shift for themselves, they usually separate, neither one afterwards thinking of the other. At night they sleep under some large tree, the branches of which hang low. On these they fasten the children in a kind of swing. Around the tree they make a fire to keep off the wild beasts and snakes. They cover themselves with a piece of bark and in this also they wrap their children. It is soft and warm, but will not keep out the rain.

These poor creatures are looked upon and treated by the Dayaks as wild beasts. Hunting parties of twenty-five or thirty, go out and amuse themselves with shooting at the children in the trees, with the sumpit, the same as monkeys, from which they are not easily distinguished. The men taken in these excursions are invariably killed, and the women commonly spared, if they are young. It is somewhat remarkable that the children of the wild people, will not be sufficiently tamed to be entrusted with their liberty. Solgie told me he never recollected an instance when they did not escape the very first opportunity, notwithstanding many of them had been treated kindly for years. The consequence is, all the chiefs who call themselves civilized, no sooner take them than they cut off the foot, sticking the stump in a bamboo of molten damar; their escape is thus prevented, and their services paddling canoes retained. An old Dayak loves to dwell upon his success on these hunting excursions; and the terror of the women and children when taken, affords a fruitful theme of amusement at all their meetings.

The following additional information is, however, somewhat unexpected. After speaking of the excellence of the iron and steel of the interior of Borneo, and of the extent of its manufacture among the Dakay tribes, Dalton continues:

"Those men whom I have noticed living in a state of nature, building no habitations of any kind, and eating nothing but fruit, snakes and monkeys, yet procure this excellent iron, and make blades sought after by every Dayak; who, in their hunting excursions, have in view the possession of the poor creature's spear, or mandon as much as his head, improbable as it may appear."

UNION OF SAINTS.

The principle of union is one of the most important principles connected with the government of God on earth or in heaven. All other principles are involved in it. It lays hold of things of time and carries them into eternity. For want of this principle families are broken up, societies are disorganized, and nations are rent assunder. Thousands of schemes, political and religious, have been devised in order to establish union among men, but all have proved abortive. No human scheme has ever succeeded in cementing society in that bond of union so much to be desired. The absence of this principle causes envy, jealousy, backbiting, evil-speaking, slander, murder and all manner of unrighteousness. The father rises up against the son, and the son against the father, and a man's worst foes are often those of his own household. Man has ceased to have cofidence in his fellow man. It has become an educational maxim, to treat an honest man as a rogue. It is therefore a difficult business to remove the prejudices and their kindred evils from the minds of men, and establish confidence between man and man.

The world needs a master spirit or physician who understanding the maladies under which society is laboring—has wisdom enough to prescribe a remedy, and the influence and power requisite to command attention. Great men have appeared from time to time, and have advocated and established, to some extent, their peculiar theories, which have flourished for a season, but having no root, have withered away. Socialism, Protestantism, Atheism, and Teetotalism have all been represented in their turn, as unfailing panaceas for a diseased world. Some have recommended Homœopathic doses, and others have strongly argued the eficacy of fifty-pounders. The grand desideratum of, the nations is a perfect system of moral, religious and political government.

It must be plain to all men, that such a system cannot be framed and constituted, without the inspiration of the Almighty, which, if ever realized, must be effected by Prophets and Apostles; for it is written, that God will surely do nothing but he revealeth his secrets to his servants, the Prophets.

It is well known by many thousands of people, that God has revealed from heaven, a perfect system of government, and has given Prophets and Apostles, Pastors and Teachers, for the work of the ministry, and perfecting the Saints that they may be all brought to the unity of the faith. No experiment was ever more successful than this has proved. It has effected more union in the world, produced more happiness, and accomplished more real good for the down-trodden sons of man, than any other system has ever effected. It has taken adverse and conflicting elements from a thousand systems and creeds, and has moulded and fashioned them into one beautiful organization, commanding the admiration of all who behold it.

It is not every one who has been in Zion, that has seen in it the kingdom of God, nor has every one of the baptised entered it; for the Saviour expressly stated that except a man was born of water he could not see the kingdom of God, and except he was born of water and the spirit, he could not enter the kingdom. Some men imagine, because they have obeyed the preliminary ordinances of the kingdom of God, that they are consequently safe and secure for time and eternity, and instead of seeking after the spirit of God and the revelations of Jesus Christ as their guide, they govern themselves by their Gentile notions, and use all their influence to govern others by the same rule. The Church of Jesus Christ is so constituted, that there is a place for every man, and no man can act out of that place without producing confusion and disorder. The Church has been very appropriately compared to the body of a man. which perfectly organized, is the most elaborate and harmonious piece of mechanism ever created. It is not sufficient that we do not act out of our place, but it is necessary that we should act faithfully in it. We are as liable to err in acts of omission, as in those of commission; they are both evils into which many fall, and should be equally studied and avoided.

The Prophet Brigham holds a power and influence that will bind up or harmonize the disorganized elements of the whole world. When the Saints are united in their feelings and purposes, they will control the wrath of their enemies and bind the devil. If the people, and nations, and tribes, and tongues, will not subscribe to the principles and adopt the policy of the Saints, and be led by Apostles and Prophets to a unity of the faith, they may be united in another sphere, and inherit all the glory of beings of a lower order. If men are not qualified to associate with Prophets and Saints, they may be qualified for the society of Socialists, Spirit-rappers, or some other grades of intelligences. We have various Quorums organized in the kingdom of God, each having its President and two Counsellors, so that all men may be judged and assigned their meritorious positions, it being decreed that every man shall be rewarded according to his works.

A STROKE AT FOLLY AS IT FLIES.

It is very rare that we find anything original in the St. Louis journals that could be considered anti-Mormon, or in any way detrimental to the character and interests of Mormonism; but we occasionally find a pusillanimous attempt on the part of some, to say something smart against Mormonism. The Morning Herald, has of late manifested a proclivity for anti-Mormonism, but we would respectfully suggest to our friend, the Herald, that if he thinks of propping up his declining journal at the expense of Mormonism, he never committed a more egregious blunder. Many have tried their hand at the same game, but have miserably failed. And no wonder; for it has been said by the voice of God, "no weapon that is found against thee shall prosper, and every tongue that is lifted up in judgment against thee, thou shalt condemn."

A few weeks since, the Herald made some false statements concerning "Famine in Utah," and "Brigham Young," and when followed closely upon the subject, said: "It matters little to us whether it is true or false, and we are willing to take the word of our correspondent that is not true, and there the controversy ends." This ought to be a caution to notre ami how he handles sharp tools, for doing so, many otherwise shrewd enfans have cut their fingers.

The last attempt of our cotemporary, was a review of the celebration of "the fourth of July," in Salt Lake City, and of a discourse delivered by Governor Young. If our friend thinks he has made an impartial review, and a faithful criticism of the above, we would most respectfully say, il se trompe. It reminds us, strongly, of a young and verdant member of "the lower House," who arose three times to make his maiden speech, but being unable to articulate more than "Gentlemen, I conceive," was told to set down; for he had conceived three times and brough' forth nothing, and it could not be tolerated; but our friend has conceived but twice, he may succeed next time. We shall see.

The Herald in his last attempt, in speaking of Governor Young's discourse on the 8th of July, says:

"The Governor is usually rich and racy, and, in this address, does not fall below the level of his former effusions. In it he explodes a great deal of wrath heretofore pent-up. He lets an unexpected cat out of the bag. Hitherto, we had supposed that nothing could be more harmonious than the relations that existed between the Mormons and Uncle Sam's military during the stay of the latter at Salt Lake.—But the fact seems to have been quite the reverse of this notion."

Now we think the Herald is very much behind the times, or is troubled with a very treacherous memory for we find allusions to "the corrupt and licentious Soldiers who were quartered in Utah last winter" and "the craven hearted wretches who fed and fattened upon Mormon hospitality, and then abused the kindness shown them by the grossest outrages upon decency and order" in his own paper more than a month ago. And now he would have us believe that he knew nothing of it till last week. "Oh! consistancy where is thy shame." The Mormon and Luminary have published details of the Vilainous conduct of the U. S. Officers and Soldiers in Utah months ago, and thousands of copies have been circulated through the States, but after all this we are told by the Herald on Saturday last that Governor Young had "let an unexpected Cat out of the Bag," for the Hearld had supposed till now "that nothing could be more harmonious than the relations that existed between the Mormons and Uncle Sam's Military during the stay of the latter at Salt Lake." Now we recommend the Herald and all others who assume the position of critic or censor of Mormonism, to go to school and learn something of the subject they pretend to criticise, and we recommend in particular that they adopt some means of strengthening their memory, lest they fall into still greater blunders than those we have mentioned.

FROM THE ELDERS.

We have been favored with a letter from Elder G. W. Hickerson, under date of Vandalia, Ill., Sep. 11th., from which we extract the following: "I have visited brother Elder in Marion county, in obedience to your request through my brother. I found him well, his faith growing in the work of the Lord. The family is pleasantly situated on a fine Farm and possesses a little above an ordinary degree of intelligence.

On Sunday the 9th at 4 P. M. I held a meeting in their school-house which caused some litle excitement, some said they must go home and commence to read their Bible, whilst others whispered tar and feathers.

The next morning before leaving, Mrs. Elder, wife to the young, Dr., told me if I came to preach any more the girls would give me a new coat, I laughed and told her I suspected she was in the Conspiracy, she said I had better not come back. When I gave her my hand to depart, I remarked laughingly, you'll have the tar and feathers ready by the time I return will you? "I'll help to hold you" she replied whilst the rest put it on. Raising up my umbrella, with my carpet bag on one end, threw it over my shoulder, and steping off in my old stoga boots followed by the doctor to put me on the nearest, way, said he, "you dont make an appearance like our ministers. They generally ride in fine carriages." "No sir," said I, and had like to have said, my wages are not so good, but for feelings sake I refrained, then said perhaps I make as good an appearance as the Prophet Jona, after being vomited from the Whale's belly with the grass-perhaps sticking about his head, marching through the Streets of Ninevah crying, yet forty days and Ninevah shall be overthrown. How little the world knows of the anxety resting upon the minds of the Saints for the building up of the Kingdom of God, the persecution, affliction, poverty and privation, through which they have to pass.

I have appointments on the Sabbath up to Oct. 6th I will attend Conference if no providential interference presents.

Elder H. W. Church writes us under date of Williamsport, Tenn., Sept. 5th, and says: "I am at this time in tolerable health, and enjoying the blessings of the Holy Spirit. I have been laboring in the counties of Hickman, Maury and Williamson. But the people in this part of the country do not appear to care but very little for the principles of Mormonism; the subject of politics has pretty much engrossed their attention this season. Notwithstanding the apparent indifference of the people, I hope through the blessings of the Lord, I shall be able to gather up a few honest souls for the vallies of the mountains by the next spring. My intentions are at this time to start soon to North Carolina, I have a great many relations in that part of the country. I would like very much to find a people disposed to obey the fulness of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. According to the intelligence I have received from Alabama, there is some prospect of a few being gathered out of that country, and also from Mississippi. I have heard from my wife's relations, and they give me a very pressing invitation to pay them a visit in that country."

There is a small branch of the church situated at Tom's Creek, Surrey Co., N. C. Anderson J. Clegg President. If brother Church could visit the brethren in that country in his peregrinations, his visit would be well appreciated.

Elder James Case writes us from Keokuk. He is well and enjoying as usual, excellent spirits, and says, "the Saints are progressing in the work of faith; and are doing first-rate."

Elder Harris has just come in from a visit to the Alton Branch, and speaks good things of the Altonions. He is highly pleased with his trip, so much so that we think he will soon go again. We are glad to hear of the peace, union and prosperity of our brethren, and we hope it may increase ad infinitum.

We have been favored with a short but facetious epistle from our esteemed friend Elder John Banks of Cincinnati, who suggests the possibility of becoming Blue Mouldy if confined too long in "the seventh hell" and is anxious to hear of Elder Spencer, as he can neither hear of him by "Urim nor by Thummim." We shall expect to see brother Banks, at our Conference on the 6th of Oct. He may then have a tete a tete with our worthy President, which will be a good opportunity to rub the mould off.

PROFESSOR Spencer arrived amongst us on Monday the 17th inst, but has been unable since his return, through sickness, to resume the more active duties of his mission. He has been suffering from an attack of chills and fever during the last fourteen or twenty days, and is consequently much debilitated; but with careful and attentive nursing, and the blessings of our heavenly Father we hope soon to see him convalescent. His short mission to the Cherokee Nation, has been highly satisfactory to himself, the brethren in the nation, and the Cherokees themselves, who are said to be particularly friendly and well disposed towards our missionaries, and the message borne them.

Our readers may expect much interesting and instructive incident from the editor, so soon as his health will enable him to re-engage in his literary labors; in the meantime, let the prayers of the faithful ascend to our Father in heaven for the blessings of health and salvation to rest upon brother Spencer, that his presence may soon be enjoyed by the congregations of the Saints, that the righteous may rejoice in his ministrations.

MORMON BATTALION FESTIVAL.

A Book of thirty-six pages, containing the minutes of the Mormon Battalion Festival, held in G. S. L. Valley in January 1855, has been republished for the Battalion and is on sale, at the Luminary Office, price 25 cents.

The Book comprises short and pithy discourses, volunteer toasts—and considerable interesting and important matter, that will not fail to interest those who give it a perusal.

WE think the following a very good opening for any of our brethren, who are accustomed to mining. We had some conversation with the [illegible] a few weeks since and we consider him a very honorable and gentlemanly man.

SWANCEE MINES, Tenn., Sept. 14.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LUMINARY:

DEAR SIR:—I write to inform you that it would be very agreeable to us, if it was in your power to send here a number of coal miners. There is an opening at present for about twenty-five men. If some of them have families so much the better. We are giving liberal wages, having increased the rate of pay to three and-a-half cents per bushel. There is a church and school house, here alike open to all parties.

As I told you recently, we will pay their fare from Nashville to this place, and secure to them steady employment.

We furnish all the mining tools required free of charge. Yours in all sincerity,

LESLIE KENEDY,
Captain Swancee Coal Mines.

A WESTERN Paper, chronicling the lamentable occurrnce of a staging attatched to a church being blown down, very feelingly says: "We are happy to state that over twenty persons were suddenly brought to to the ground safe, and one man, Mr. Wilkins, had his neck broke. Mr. W. was an estimable young man, and the father of a good many children, besides a large farm well stocked. He was fatally injured."

Correspondence.

From the Deseret News.

UTAH COUNTY.

HISTORIAN'S OFFICE, G. S. L. CITY, July 27, 1855.

EDITOR OF NEWS: On Thursday, July 19, I left this city for an excursion in Utah county. I took passage on board of Mr. Daley's Mail Coach. The mules of my former trip had been exchanged for an excellent pair of American horses, the carriage repaired, and we set out under very favorable circumstances.

Taking the county road, Mr. Norton of Provo, became our fellow passenger, which added to the six of us already in the coach, made a heavy load.

The fields looked barren from the effects of the grasshoppers and drouth, and really presented a very slim prospect for feeding the 60,000 inhabitants of Utah upon the delicious bread for which our Territory is so justly famed.

We dined at Draperville, where a good appetite enabled us to do ample justice to Mr. Brown's new potatoes and other vegetables, laid upon a foundation of ham and eggs.

Our load being heavy, we did not reach Provo till dark, after which I was visited by President J. C. Snow, and other brethren. After a comfortable rest, I continued on with the mail to Payson, arriving there at 11 o'clock, A. M., on 20th, where I stopped with Bishop Charles B. Hancock, where I again encountered the dangerous luxury of green peas, beans, and new potatoes, backed with ham and eggs, and the best mountain cold water which flows in Peteetneet creek.

I visited the city wall, their gardens, or the wreck of them left since the grasshoppers took their exit—Bishop Hancock's gristmill, which is a creditable establishment, and doing good business—a machine shop which is in course of erection—a foundation for a large tithing store house, 30 by 50 feet, which has been dug. The wall of the city is six feet high and six feet thick, and is one of the best, so far as it has gone, in the county.

At half past 6, I addressed the Saints assembled in the Bowery, and although the wind rendered it very difficult to speak, I delivered a somewhat lengthy discourse, which was listened to with the strictest attention by the large audience.

At 10 o'clock, on the 21st, I addressed the Saints in Palmyra school-house—a large assembly and a good meeting. The people were building a Bowery preparatory to the celebration of July 24.

I was accompanied to Provo by President Levi W. Hancock, Benjamin F. Johnson, Stephen Markham, John W. Berry, and five others, where we met in council at 5 o'clock, and had a very interesting prayer meeting at the close of our business.

Sunday 22, I went to Springville, and addressed the Saints in the Bowery, at half past 10 o'clock.—The wind blew so as to render it difficult to preach. In the afternoon, the Mayor, Wm. Miller, presented to the people the advice of President Brigham Young, given to the people of Utah, last Sabbath at Provo, in relation to the Indians. Remarks were made on the subject by a number of individuals, and a resolution was unanimously agreed to, requesting the City Council to assess a tax of 1 per cent. on all the property within the corporation, to be expended in educating the children, and otherwise ameliorating the condition of the Indians.

It was also resolved that all the Indians at present camped within the corporation, which comprised nearly all the red men of the county, should be invited to a public dinner together on the 24th of July.

Thus the people of Springville are taking the lead in the praiseworthy work of regenerating the Utah Indians. At the close of this business I addressed the Saints on the subject of the redemption of Israel, and the necessity of setting good examples for them to imitate.

At 5 o'clock, I attended a prayer meeting at the house of President Aaron Johnson. The Spirit of the Lord was with us.

On Monday 23, I visited Spanish Fork city, in company with Aaron Johnson and William Miller, and found the people all well—their crops had suffered almost entire destruction by the grasshoppers—was very kindly treated by the Mayor, Matthew Caldwell, Esq., Bishop Wm. Pace, and many other citizens, with whom we conversed.

The fort is pleasantly situated and is kept clean, which gives it a pleasant appearance, and this place also affords good sites for the establishment of machinery in consequence of the abundant mill power, afforded by the stream.

I arrived at Provo in the evening, and was invited by President Moore of the Seventies, to attend a prayer meeting at 7 in the morning.

Tuesday 24, at daybreak, the citizens of Provo were awakened by the firing of cannon, which continued till sunrise, at which time the gun (a six pounder brought from Nauvoo) burst, killing William Nixon, who applied the match—throwing pieces of the gun twenty-five rods, tearing the gun carriage to pieces, and breaking the tire, throwing one piece of it, thirty rods.

A coroner's inquest was held on the body by Justice Duke. The jury returned a verdict of death by the bursting of a cannon, which had been improperly loaded. The gun was under the control of Orrin Glazier; there was a wad of potter's clay next the powder, then some hay, and another wad of clay—the whole tamped in with a sledge hammer and rammer—although the Marshal of the day had given instructions the evening previous that no clay should be used. The gun was charged with 2 lbs. 3 oz. of rifle powder. Mr. Thompson, one of the firing party, remonstrated that the piece would burst if loaded in that way, but Glazier was sanguine that there was no danger.

The gun presented the appearance of being a most perfect piece of workmanship, made of very fine, soft iron.

This circumstance threw a deep gloom over the whole city, carrying mourning not only into the house of his father, Stephen Nixon, but into Mr. Collins' military school, of which he was a student; the twenty-four young men of whom he was to form one during the procession of the day; but throughout the entire community, a deep pang of grief was visible upon every countenance. He was one of the most exemplary young men in Provo.

At 7 o'clock, I attended a prayer meeting at A. J. Stewart's house—had a very agreeable and instructive season for two hours.

The Committee of Arrangements suggested to me the propriety of suspending the celebration on account of brother Nixon's death, but I advised that it proceed, but without the firing required by the programme.

The procession was formed, composed of the Mayor and City Council, Probate Judge, and members of the County Court, the Bishops of the different wards, President of the Stake and Councilors, twenty-three young men dressed in black, (Wm. Nixon's place being vacant,) twenty-four young ladies in white; the principal schools in the city, accompanied by their teachers; Mr. Collins' military school, &c., &c., all with their different banners and flags, which combined to give variety and interest to the scene, and passing through the principal streets of the city, assembled in the Bowery under the great flag, which was lowered half mast and shrouded in mourning, where I delivered a short address in relation to the sad accident of the morning; after which the assembly dispersed for one hour and a quarter, when the vast assembly again convened under the shade of the Bowery, where it was communicated to me by the committee of arrangements that the principal orator of the day, Hon. J. A. Kelting, was sick, and that A. P. Chesley Esq., who was to have delivered an address on behalf of the Pioneers, was indisposed. I was consequently earnestly requested to deliver an address.

Elder Philander Colton delivered a brilliant speech in behalf of the Mormon Battalion, showing the sacrifices, sufferings, exposure and fatigue which they were called to endure on their dreary march from the Missouri river across the great American Desert to California.

I followed, showing the Saints as the Pioneers of the last days.

The speeches were reported by John B. Milner.

Toasts, songs, recitations, &c., were given, displaying a great amount of genius, wit, taste and principle.

It was then resolved that the procession should attend the funeral of William Nixon in the order of this day.

Wednesday 25.—At 6 1-2 P. M., Mr. Daley's stage delivered me at the door of the Historian's Office—having traveled about 175 miles—the weather all the time being excessively hot.

At Pleasant Grove, Lake, and Lehi, the early crops having been almost entirely destroyed, their place was supplied by late planting with corn, potatoes, and some wheat—which is now perishing from the extreme drouth—the water in Dry creek having disappeared, and American creek affording an insufficient quantity to supply one half the wants of the farmers. Springville and Palmyra have a sufficient supply of water as yet for the late crops; but the small portion of wheat which escaped the ravages of the grasshoppers, from the injury it received is thinner, the straw shorter, and the heads smaller than last year. Their corn and potatoes can be matured if sufficient care is taken to prevent the destruction by cattle.

Payson is scantily supplied with water to mature its second planting; Peteetneet not containing half its usual amount at this season, and twice the quantity being required to mature the late crops, that has been heretofore.

At Provo the people possess the amount of water necessary to make a very large fall crop, with sufficient surplus over their own wants to supply many of their neighbors. The fences are poor, and the cattle unruly, and many of the cattle owners unwilling to put them into herds, or secure them in pastures. A great amount of the precious grain is destroyed every night by these unruly animals, which are rendered the more rabid by the great scarcity of grass in the immediate vicinity of the town.

From my limited observation, I am of the opinion that if fifty men were employed by the citizens of Provo, to herd their cattle on the rich grass vallies of that river and on the benches in the neighborhood, that the grain being destroyed would amply pay the expense, not to name the great advantage it would be to the cattle, and the amount of suffering that would be prevented by the saving of the grain; although I do not believe the one third of that number are required.

Celebrations of the 24th of July, were held at Palmyra, Springville, Pleasant Grove, Lake City, and Union Fort, (G. S. L. Co.) and the people enjoyed themselves in the best manner imaginable.

Yours very respectfully, GEO. A. SMITH.

Miscellaneous.

From the Millennial Star.

Meeting of Elders from the Valley, at 36 Islington, Liverpool.

We cannot express the heartfelt joy and satisfaction we experienced in greeting the brethren whose arrival was announced in the last Number of the Star. Some of them are old campaigners in "Mormonism," and have for many years been accustomed to look its enemies in the face, while others of them have been cradled in "Mormonism," have grown up to manhood under its influences, and are going forth, for the first time, into the world, as defenders of the cause of Zion. They are filled with fire of celestial origin, which burns brightest in Utah, and will materially assist in piling on the fuel and stirring up the flames of Gospel light in these lands.

On Wednesday evening, the 15th ult., by invitation, they met together at 36 Islington, Liverpool, and increased interest was added to the re-union by the presence of Elders G. D. Grant, James Ferguson, S. W. Crandall, J. P. Park, and J. A. Little.

Elder Little has furnished the following report of the meeting, which we deem of sufficient interest to lay before our readers—

The meeting was opened by singing "Come, come ye Saints," &c. Prayer by Elder John L. Smith. "How firm a foundation," &c., was then sung, after which President F. D. Richards arose, and the spirit and power of his calling rested abundantly upon him in giving the following counsel and instructions to those present—

My beloved Brethern and Fellow-laborers—I greet you with a hearty welcome to these lands, to which you have been sent to preach the Gospel and gather Israel, and I thank the Lord and brother Brigham for sending you to assist us in our labors. There is no field of labor on the earth, in the midst of the Gentiles, where you can enjoy so much of the Spirit of the Lord, as you can in these missions.—The Spirit is active and powerfully at work among the Churches in these lands. You will find that the Saints have great faith, and that they are constantly increasing in knowledge and intelligence, and in the Spirit of Zion. When you get among them, you will feel that they are a portion of our Father's house, and that they are your kindred in spirit and faith. You will not find it difficult to labor among them, to teach them the principles of salvation, for, through their faith and desire to hear, the Holy Spirit will rest down upon you richly while ministering to them.

When you go forth among the Gentiles, you will find all manner of abomination and corruption, and you will feel like buckling on your armor, reproving wickedness in all places, and declaring the judgments of the Almighty with great boldness.

I shall not send you forth two and two, as was done in the early periods of the Church, for every one of you is a host within himself. When done in your various fields of labor, seek after the Spirit of revelation, through the prayer of faith, to guide you. The power of the holy anointing is upon you, and you should feel as though you had no need of any man to teach you, for the holy unction which is within you shall teach you all things necessary for you to know under the varied circumstances of your ministry.

Do not allow yourselves to get into a stereotyped system of doing things, because others have done so before you, but go at it the "Mormon way," act according to the circumstances of the case, and let the spirit and power be in all you do. In going among those who have different habits and customs from your own, you will have to conform a little to their prejudices and peculiar views, in order to gain access to them, but you need not stoop to their level, nor conform to their notions of right and wrong, so as to compromise the truth or the Holy Spirit.

The Saints in these lands are very affectionate. They appreciate the labors of the Elders who are sent out from Zion, and highly esteem their instruction and counsel. You could go to no part of the world where you would be received more cordially. In the midst of all these blessings you will find the devil ever at work to surround you with temptations; and if you get out of these lands without finding efforts made to ensnare you; you will escape better than many of your brethren have done before you.

The Lord could once look with some degree of allowance upon many foolish and frivolous things that were done, in the days of the ignorance of His people. Both the Elders and the Saints could do things then, and keep the Spirit of the Lord, which now would lead them down to darkness and to death, on account of the greater light and knowledge which He has revealed. The time has come when the Elders must walk circumspectly, and keep themselves pure and unspotted from evil and transgression, or the Spirit of Revelation will not abide with them.

Do not give occasion for any one to accuse you of partiality in your associations, or of showing any feeling of nationality, but love those who love the Kingdom of God, and labor dilligently to build it up, whether it be man or woman, I will give you a little instruction concerning the organization of the Church in these lands. (This was not reported.) I wish you to acquaint yourselves thoroughly with the organization of the Conferences and Branches so that you may know how to take hold of things in an effectual manner.

In going out to your fields of labor, let me remind you, brethern, that unless you practise your faith, and live daily in the lively excersise of it, you will not have power. Honor the Word of Wisdom, if you would preserve your health and strength, and have influence with the people, and power to accomplish the work assigned you. If you neglect it, your power will ooze out, your influence will pass away, and you will be shorn of your strength.

In this field of labor, that measure of the spirit may be enjoyed which will enable a man to lay aside many imperfections, if he has them. Do not as you value your salvation and that of your families, as you regard the holy hopes which dwell in the bosoms of your wives and children, and as you prize the blessings of brother Brigham, and the First Presidency—do not lay your Priesthood down, or condescend to anything that will bring dishonor upon it. Excercise your gifts in faithfulness, and the power of your Priesthood will increase upon you more and more, and you will increase in the blessings and power of it in all your ministrations among the people—they will rejoice in your labors among them, and will load you with blessings, and you will be enabled to return home with joy and gladness in your hearts, and with the blessings of your families, and the authorities of the Church, upon your heads.

I doubt whether you will find anywhere else, except in G. S. L. City, that warmth of fellow feeling, that cementing together in the bonds of union and brotherhood, that there is among the Elders in these lands, for here, from the force of surrounding circumstances, they learn more fully to appreciate the worth of each other. When you are in your fields of labor, write often, and keep up communication, and think not, if your letters are not all answered, that they are received with indifference, or are troublesome. On the contrary, I am always gratified to receive letters from my brethern, to learn what progress they are making, and the prospects which surround them, and I take pleasure in answering when circumstances and the pressure of of business will permit. In this way the ties of the Holy Priesthood will be strengthened, and a communion kept up, which will increase your faith and influence.

From the time that you leave this place, to go to your several fields of labor you will feel the spirit and power of your missions resting down upon you more than you have done.

When you are before the people, remember that you have been in the house of the Lord, and realize the weight of the Covenants you made there, and the Keys of knowledge and power which you there received. Then you will have strength to stretch your faith and to contend successfully with the powers of darkness, and overcome every difficulty which may arise before you.

We are apt to be slack of faith, that is if you are like me. I frequently have occasion to reproach myself before the Lord for my lack of faith, for He often bestows upon me far greater blessings than I have faith in my heart to expect, and I know it is the same with others as it is with me, more or less.—Therefore I say unto you brethern, stretch out your faith, bring out the energies of your souls, and dash into the battle with the Gospel armor on, and God will give you power to do all the great good which you desire to do to your fellow creatures.

I say unto you brethern, strengthen yourselves in the name of your God, for, when you are out among unbelievers, you will find it requires great strength to successfully combat the powers of evil, for the curtain of darkness is shutting down thick and strong around these eastern nations, and they are becoming drunk with the spirit of war and bloodshed. The reason why the clouds of darkness are thus crowding around the Gentile nations is because God has turned his favor to Israel.

I wish to remind you, brethern, that in going out to save others, you must first learn to save yourselves. Remember you are not in a clear mountain climate, 4000 or 5000 feet above the level of the sea. You will find the air here very different from that in Utah. You are here almost on a level with with the sea, and much of the time the atmosphere is damp with rain, and thick with coal smoke, sulpher, and other poisionous gases. Therefore be careful in your public speaking, to control your voices and not suffer them to rise to too high a pitch while you are in a warm and excited state, but try to speak in your common tone of voice where the situation of your congregations will allow, and thereby avoid bleeding or other diseases of the lungs, which some of our brethern have suffered from, It is however necessary sometimes to have a little extra lightning, and that accompanied with a special clap of thunder.

There are a great many more things to say which would be useful and instructive, but we have not time to say them to-night.

I am not going to talk much, for I wish you all to talk and feel happy together.

May the Lord bless you. Amen.

After President Richards had closed his remarks, each of the brethern present arose in turn and expressed his feelings and desires. The Spirit rested down upon them, the fire of the Lord burned in their bosoms, and it was truely a time of refreshing from His presence. The Elders who have been laboring in these lands, testified of the abundant blessings which the Lord had poured out upon them, and expressed their thankfulness for the benefits to themselves which they had realized in their labors, while those who had newly arrived were filled with faith, hope, and a humble desire to fulfil their missions faithfully. Several of the songs of Zion were sung during the evening, and to conclude this cheering interview and soul-stirring interchange of sentiment and feeling appropriate refreshments having been duly prepared, the body was properly nourished and strengthened, that it might be able to keep pace with the mind. In seperating some of the brethern who had just arrived, expressed their agreeable surprise at finding so much of the Spirit of Zion in these distant lands.

For the Luminary.

THE CELESTIAL LAW.

To succeed in any calling, branch of trade, art, or science, is to be thorough in the application of its principles, without which nothing eminent is attained. This remark applies with especial force to religion,—the celestial law of life; for to gain the blessings it affords, we have to do our "whole duty"—to fulfil every requirement of the Gospel. The nature of things is such in the celestial law, thet if we neglect even in "one point," we are counted guilty of all. We do not mean to say by this, that a partial observance of righteousness does not bring a partial blessing, no, but we do say, to gain the celestial glory, blessing, and privilege, to dwell with the "Father and the Son," we shall have to observe the "whole Law." it is by following out this law that we become "joint heirs with Jesus Christ"—"become one with Him—to sit with him upon his throne as he sits upon his Father's. Yea, become Gods possessing creative power. For has he not said "he that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also, and greater works shall he do, because I go to the Father."

Who else may expect to gain this the highest estate and glory of which the Sun is typical, but those who live for it in their lives?

The celestial law may be disregarded in many points, and yet we may gain the glory of a Minor Kingdom, "for there is one glory of the Sun, another of the Moon, and another glory of the Stars," &c., but it is so ordained in the celestial regulations that it must be fulfilled in every particular, otherwise there is no admittance into its presence and glory.

This glory is reserved for the choisest of Gods race, for those who have been valiant in the cause of truth—who counted not their lives dear; for those who pre-eminently love righteousness and hate iniquity; who for their God and truth would do, and suffer anything, yea, at their earthly peril—at the risk of their lives and liberty, would declare the truth, the will of God, yea, though put in durance vile, or encounter death, anything rather than yield the truth. Job would suffer torment the most excruciating but he would not deny or curse his God. Many would take up their abode with sheep and goats, or with the wild beasts of the Mountains; they would endure scourging and imprisonment, but they could not be turned from following out the law, though men reviled, scoffed, and persecuted, or hell opposed with its fury and rage. They endured that they might obtain a better resurrection. Paul counted not the troubles of this life to be compared with the exceeding and eternal weight of glory, that awaited him in the celestial Kingdom of God.

Such worthiness God notices and marks its possessers as his special favorites, and will put upon them "his own name," give them of his own glory, and take them into his immediate presence, and make them kings and priests, and give them dominions, and they shall reign forever.

Having such knowledge the ancients knew for what they suffered, it was for the better resurrection. Knowing God, knowing His purposes, knowing the reward which was theirs through obedience, how could such men be moved from their posts of duty? Their position in the world, their body and their heads might be moved, but their purposes never. They sought a house eternal in the heavens, among the many, a mansion especially prepared for them.

Such men having the future unfurled to their view, scaled the height of yonder world, and saw the glory of heaven pass and repass before them in vision, yea and partook partially of its blessings, they beheld the country afar off and wandered cheerfully as strangers in a strange land looking for the full recompence of reward. They acted like men in probation for no toil or suffering was anything to them, compared with the reward and glory they sought.

What is required in our day to enable men to suffer, die, and become martyrs for religion, is thoroughly to believe in Him, to see enough of Him to know for what they suffer, and to become acquainted with the purposes of the Almighty, then they work out His law willingly, being assured that the results will be for their good, exaltation and glory in the end. What is wanted is confidence in God's justice and veracity, and a knowledge of His power, and to be assured that He takes a cognizence of their doings, and then though the're in torment, and suffering, for His cause sake, they feel it is no concern of theirs, it is the will of Him who reigneth, who could prevent if He thought proper.

By such knowledge they become resigned, believing all things, circumstances and occurrences in life are for their good—to work out their exaltation in the future life.

It may seem hard that the law is so rigid and exacting, that the conditions should be so stringent; but it must be remembered we are in contract for the highest prize ever offered to man. The highest glory and bliss it is possible for God to bestow, or our natures to enjoy. So it is not to be expected that this distinction will be awarded to the common efforts of life. How are the really noble and worthy to be rewarded? With the same glory as the indifferent? If so, what inducement would there be for the extra exertions and self-denial that is sometimes necessary to forward the interests of the kingdom of God?

We know that the law is stringent, and requires us to be perfect, "even as our Father in heaven is perfect." We know that the standard is raised high, so much so that "few will be saved" in that glory which is the highest. But few in any age of the world have been sufficiently faithful to attain to this glory. And it is manifest in the last days but few will "endure to the end," for we are told that the earth will be burned up and but "few men left." Hence it is asked "who shall abide the day of His coming, and who shall stand when the Son of man appeareth?"

Celestial glory was never intended for the half-hearted, for the luke warm, for the person who is continually forming excuses to avoid doing his duty—who only works when commanded, and then with an unwilling heart. Such a one never aspired even to know the law, much less to follow out its provisions to perfection.

"It is no trifling thing to a Saint in very deed," cheerfully to leave houses and land, father and mother, brothers and sisters, wives and children, friends and associations of youth, and all we hold dear to enter a life of toil and privation, but nevertheless it is only to such this promise "a hundred fold reward and life everlasting" is made. It is to those who do these things "for the sake of the gospel." We have no promise given to us of reward, when we bring upon ourselves trouble, through our own folly. No, but when we openly put our earthly all, our liberty, our lives, wives and children, and all we possess, in opposition to the world and the devil, for righteousness sake, when we have taken this position for the sake of the gospel, for the salvation of the people, for the spread of truth, and the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth among a dark and benighted nation, when we voluntarily enter this contest at all hazard and valiantly hold out to the end, manifesting we are on the side of truth; it is then we are counted warriors of life and generals in the truth, when we have "brooked the scorn of men and triumphed over the enemy, it is only then we are entitled to the distinction of the King of heaven as His nobles and to enter His house to go out no more forever.

Our Saviour said He would make His disciples "one with him" to realize the great extent of this blessing we have only to read the passage "all power is given to me in heaven and on earth," &c., now as the disciples were to become "one with Him," they of course were to possess similar power "in heaven and on earth," when the kingdoms shall be the Lord's. Obedience to the celestial law, is to bring about all this. To say nothing of this great glory and power, even to gain the blessings of this life, the spiritual blessings promised, we have to "observe all things whatsoever He hath commanded," to be "doers of the word" and to continue until we become "perfect men" to the measure of the statute of the "fulness of Christ."

Such is the blessing, honor, glory, dominion, dignity and title to which mortals may aspire, "through Him who loved us." If it is objected that this is too great, we shall never attain unto it, we have only to say if the objection has any force at all, it is against the whole of the scriptures. We are the children of God and what is more natural than that He, much more than our earthly parents should desire and labor for us to become like unto himself—to be one with Him. And because many will not accept His good offer in full, argues nothing against His high intention. Before this notion is opposed, reflect and reason analogically, and see how great we are now, from what we were in infancy, see how great the difference between helpless child and man, forming and organizing the materials around him into useful and beautiful machinery, and carry on this improvement until it shall have continued for eternities, under the instruction of the high one on high, Jesus Christ, and even the Father, and who shall say what will be the result? Such instruction will unfold more in a few hours than our ablest teachers can in a lifetime.

It once seemed as impossible for mortals to make steam engines, steamboats and telegraphs, as it now seems to "make a flower, resurrect a body, or, create a world." When we shall become acquainted, and as familiar with eternal things as we are with earthly things, it will be all clear, simple and easy.

But before we do these things, we shall have to learn the great principles of the heavenly science, and apply them practically to gain the great results, salvation, exaltation, creative power, and eternal lives in the celestial kingdom of God.

St. Louis, Sept. 18th, 1855. S. J. LEES.

FROM COUNCIL BLUFFS.

Brother Spencer: We have a branch of the Church here, of some eighty members. Brother W. H. Folsom is the Presiding Elder, who, with brother F. A Brown and myself, hold meetings regularly every Sabbath, and preach and bear our testimony to the truth of Mormonism. The old members have generally been re-baptised, and a few new ones have embraced the truth; but it is an up-hill business here, as is the case in every place, from which the authorites of the Church have removed. It then becomes a kind of spiritual whirlpool that gathers within its vortex, all the filth and scum of apostacy that floats in the wake of the Church. But we are determined by the help of God, to keep up the organization here, to bear our testimony that our garments may be found clear of the blood of this people, when we are called to give an account of our work upon the earth.

A difficulty occurred in Nebraska, day before yesterday, near old Fort Calhoun, respecting a claim. A Mr. Goss, of this county, was shot through the heart. His body lay at the Pacific House, in this city, during yesterday. Five other men were wounded, but not fatally. Much excitement existed here yesterday, and I understand, men were volunteering for both parties, to fight the matter out, but I look for nothing serious to take place.

Yours respectfully, L. O. LITTLEFIELD.

Correspondence of the London Times, Aug. 31

The Late Popular Riots in France—Socialist Aid Expected in Paris.

The Union de l'Ouest gives some further particulars relative to the late disturbances at Angers:

The rioters first attacked the barrack of the firemen at Trelaze and carried off their arms; they also broke into several private houses and took away fowling pieces, pistols and gunpowder. Being thus provided with a certain quantity of arms, the rioters, at that time about 250 in number, proceeded towards the slate quarries, and on their way broke into several shops where gunpowder was sold, seized in all about 200 kilogrammes of it in five bags, which they placed in the cart, afterwards seized by the armed force. It was after they had got this supply that they obtained the greatest number of their recruits, and it was about three in the morning when they arrived at the faubourg Bressigny, of Angers, and it was there that the troops charged and dispersed them. In addition to Guerin and Chauvin, mentioned yesterday, three other noted anarchists were arrested, namely, Conet, compromised in the affair of the secret society Marianne; Taim, acquitted at the late trial in Paris for that affair; and a man named Foin, also known to have formed part of that society. The reason put forward for assembling—dearness of food—was evidently only a pretext. The real object of the rioters was pillage and the carrying out of socialist doctrines. The number of arrests amounts to 115.

There is no doubt of the movement being socialist. The rioters expected to be assisted by other towns, and it appears they had calculated on something occurring in Paris. But the wonder is how they could be led away by such a delusion. The government it is said were, at first, unwilling that the affair should be noticed at any length in the press, or any importance attached to it. It only deserves importance inasmuch as it proves that the old leaven of socialism is not yet extinct, and that there still exists those for whom plunder and the guillotine (for Marianne is but the cant term for that levelling engine) is the only policy. The war in the Crimea no doubt diminishes the interest that would otherwise attach to such an incident; but the authorities are wrong in preventing its exposure. The government, how secure soever it may be, cannot surely suppose that it is so loved as that no human being in France would think of overthrowing it, or that it is so powerful as to be exempt from disturbances at all times and in all places. There are few governments (not even that of the beloved and bastinadoing King Bomba), who are so privileged. The government of France ought not to be sorry to show that the elements for the subversion of order and society are still to be found here, for their existence would prove the necessity of its own force. The easy repression of such outbreaks is a proof of that force, and it is only a weak or unpopular regime that would be afraid of publicity.

ARRIVAL OF THE BALTIC.

New York, September 20.—Among the passengers in the Baltic, from Liverpool, is the new Spanish Minister to the United States.

Lord Napier publishes a correspondence, in which he showes that he only carried out the orders of the Government in not attacking Cronstandt.

England is paying worthy honors to the late Abbott Lawrence. As Minister to the court of St.—James, he rendered himself very popular, and these demonstrations are well deserved.

Fergus O'Connor is dead.

The Queen of England has gone to Balmorel.

Difficulties have arisen between England and Naples, and the latter, it is said will be called to account.

The cholera is raging in Italy.

From the Crimea, Gen. Simpson telegraphs that he is ready for offensive movements again.

The Russians made a sortie, from Sebastopol, and destroyed some gabions.

The Russians were actively engaged in bridging the harbor, for the purpose of removing the defences to the North side, should the South side of Sebastopol be taken.

Rumors of new negotiations were still current at Vienna.

The evils of the divided command in the Crimea were more felt.

There was a rumor that all the troops at Tchernaye were to be united under one commander.

The allies are building railways to transport goods during the winter. They were actively engaged in preparing for a winter campaign

General Simpson reports daily heavy casualities.

A Russian two decker was burnt in the Bay of Sebastopol, caused by the bursting of a shell.

A great fire occured at Moscow, which lasted one entire day.

There was severe suffering at Odesse, on account of the want of the necessaries of life.

Affairs in the Baltic were in statu quo. The maintainence of the fleet there cost £30,000 per day.

The Turks had defeated the Russians at Kars.

From Spain, it is stated that the Carlists have not abandoned their plans to produce a civil war.

For the Luminary.

A PLEA FOR THE POOR.

Oh! you who never throw away a thought
On poverty, by sad misfortune brought,
Ye silken sons of pleasure, just reflect!
For one short moment, you, who now bedeckt
With every comfort that this world affords,
And titles pompous—Reverends, Princes, Lords.
Nature; dead within you, that you cannot hear
The voice of poverty, disease, and chill despair,
Know you not, that we by nature's laws
Sprang from one parent, one great first cause?
Can you not then feel a brother's woes,
While wealth and luxury your table o'erflows?
Are you not stewards, with plenty at command?
Shall the orphan's cry go wailing thro' the land?
While you, in splendor, loll at ease,
And close your ears to Heaven's decrees.
Oh, no! the rich man Dives, a solemn warning sends,
"Go tell my brothers, and all my wealthy friends,
That riches are a canker, and if not used aright
Will perish in the handling, and take a rapid flight;
Let not the sons of want, be driven from your door,
But clothe the naked, help the weak and feed the poor."
Then show for once, a little sense of feeling—
Relieve the want that's o'er your brother stealing,
Soothe his distress, and raise his drooping spirits,
Remove the burden which now his mind inherits.
Think you, those riches can command eternity—
An everlasting bliss, and God's society?
"If life were merchandise, and we could buy,
The rich would live and the poor must die."
But God, omnipotent with wise decree
Pronounced, in death mankind should equal be,
For bodies from the earth did rise—
Our spirits came forth from the skies—
To dust the bodies will again return—
The spirit with its God sojourn.
Ye sons of fortune, if you wish to gain
A celestial kingdom, free from care and pain,
Let not your brother plead, and plead in vain;
For God knows all and will reward again.
Do not then, close your heart to reason's prayer,
But freely to the shrine of Charity repair;
There, from the treasury of your abundance throw,
That which will make the poor man's heart to glow;
Lay up in heaven, treasures, not corrupt with rust,
Ere death intrude, and you return to dust,
Else will thy gifts with thee decay,
And all thy wealth be swept away.
Repent you of your sins, and be baptised for them
To be remitted, have hands laid on by appointed men
Whom God hath chosen—the Holy Ghost I say
You shall receive, if these commands you will obey.

Alton, Ill. SPECTACLES.

Mustang Liniment and the Ladies.—In our opinion, nothing is above the comprehension of women; and with less prejudice, more liberality, and much keener perception than men, when a new idea is presented, a new doctrine taught, or a new fact asserted, she grasps it at once, and with the rapidity and clearness almost of instinct, decides upon its merits or truthfulness; and if her decision be favorable, she enthusiastically advocates and supports it. Thus the common saying has obtained—"Once get the women on your side and you are safe;" and we are happy to state that we have the ladies all in favor of the Mustang Liniment. They have tried it for caked breasts, sore nipples, sores, chafes, and burns on children, as well as for croup and mumps; also, for corns, tooth-ache, pains in the limbs and joints, sore eyes, eruptions, cuts and bruises, and they have always found it effectual—and they go about like angels, as they are, proclaiming it to their friends and to all they see or hear tell of, who are suffering. We have daily calls for it by persons who say such and such ladies recommended them to try it.

Go on ladies in your "good Samaritan" work, and thousands will bless you for your timely advice.

McLEAN'S VOLCANIC OIL LINIMENT is truly a celebrated remedy, and has done more to alleviate human suffering than any other remedy ever discovered.

One or two applications will relieve the most severe pain, bruise or sprain.

Two bottles will cleanse, purify, and heal the foulest ulcer or sore, and it will heal the most severe burn or scald without a scar.

Every family should have a supply constantly on hand, for use in time of need.

Read the following extract of a letter, which is incontestable proof of its wonderful efficacy:

A BLIND MAN RESTORED TO SIGHT.

J. H. McLean—Dear Sir: * * * I have been suffering for four years with rheumatic sore eyes, being at times altogether blind. I procured the advice of several physicians, but none of them could do me any good. By the advice of a friend I applied your "Volcanic Oil Liniment," according to the directions around the bottle, and it has cured me permanently. I have used it since for bruises, pains, &c., and it has always given immediate relief. I live on the main road near Farmington.

Yours, respectfully, JOHN H. ALLRED.

Jefferson county, Mo.

For horses it is far superior to any other remedy for curing lameness, bruises, cuts, old sores, swellings, &c.

We say, then, to all who may be suffering from external diseases, call at once and get a supply. Thousands of bottles are sold (and used) daily, and we have never heard of a case where it has failed in giving relief when properly applied.

DESERET.

Ye Saints in all nations, turn hither your eyes,
To the place in the west where tall mountains arise,
Where the valleys are clothed in the loviest green,
Where the air is so pure and the skies are serene;
For liberty smiles in these valleys for you,
And health, peace and plenty are smiling here too.

Lo! our flag on the mountains is being unfurled,
While empires and kingdoms thro'out the whole world
Are breaking to pieces and passing away,
Still here shall the ensign of liberty stay,
And proclaim to all people that happy and free
Are the sons of the mountains, and ever shall be.

That, unused to a life of inactive repose,
They range the wild mountains tho' covered with snows;
That of temperance, health, and industry possessed,
The first haughty tyrant who dares to molest
Shall find, to his sorrow, that brave hearts and true
On these mountains erected this ensign for you.

Then come from all nations wherever you be,
Ye good, wise, and noble, who wish to be free;
For here in the mountains doth liberty dwell,
And her voice sweetly echoes from mountain and dell;
That voice which once cheered her bold votaries on,
Who fought by the side of brave Washington.

And the spirit which ever the brave dothi ncite
For their home and their country and freedom to fight;
But peace shall be ours, and liberty too,
While we in the mountains our labors pursue;
And the path of industry shall lead us to wealth,
While enjoying three blessings—peace, union and health

And when from all nations these blessings have fled,
When those who've oppressed us are laid with the dead,
Still our glorious banner above us shall wave,
And this be the home of the free and the brave;
Still in virtue and knowledge shall Zion increase,
And be known in all nations—The Kingdom of Peace.

KANSAS AFFAIRS.

One of the Editors of the Southern Democrat, published at Parkville, has been recently travelling in Kansas, and is publishing the result of his observations. He visited Lawrence, the head quarters of the Abolitionists, and describes the town and what he saw there. He notes the hotel as a contrivance to frighten the "Border Ruffians." It is nearly finished, is built of stone, is four stories high, with a flat roof. "The walls, rising some distance above the roof, are pierced with a regular tier of port-holes, through which they expect to look, and strike terror to the hearts of the timid settlers in the "border counties." "Did you ever?" Frequent allusion was made, by some of the inhabitants, to the port-holes, with a hint that they had plenty of "Sharp's rifles."

He visited the Big Spring, where the Convention of the Revolutionists was recently held, and Reeder nominated for Congress, and sketches what was done. He arrived on the second day of the Convention, and was struck with the appearance of several flags and pennons floating in the air, on one of which the following mottoes were distinctly delineated, 1st, Liberty; 2d, No more slave territory; 3d, Victory or death; 4th, Kansas must be free, and under all, Topeka, 1855.

Resolutions were passed repudiating the late Legislature, and declaring determined resistance to the laws enacted by that body.

Colonel Lane, formerly of Indiana, addressed the Convention, saying that they had placed themselves in a revolutionary position; that he thought it impolitic to urge this resistance; that Gov. Shannon was clothed with all the powers of this, the greatest government in the world, to resist and put down this revolution; that he had declared in a speech, which some of them had heard, that he recognized the laws passed at Shawnee Mission as legally enacted, and pledged himself to see that they were executed.—He said that he knew Governor S., and knew that what he had said he would most certainly execute. You have repudiated the Legislature and resolved not to submit to its enactments. The only way to settle the question is by admitting Kansas as a free State. The North has a majority of two in the Senate—some with pro-slavery proclivities—but that situated as Douglas is, he would do anything to get Kansas in as a free State; that on the passage of the Kansas bill, not a Northern man had the remotest idea of its ever being admitted as a slave State. He continued: We have laid down a platform that is to strike terror to the hearts of our opponents.—(We did not understand the nature of the platform, but as there was much gasing about resistance and war, we suppose it must have been based upon this idea.) Make your resolve to form a constitution—send it to Congress, and in twenty days after it reaches there, we will be admitted as a free State. (In a horn.)

Judge Schuyler advocated the measure of electing a delegate, outside of the laws, and sending him to Congress with the facts in the case. He thought Congress would do something for them. He said he was angered and humiliated to hear Governor Shannon remark on the course he would pursue. Angered and humiliated to see a man appointed from one of the Northern States, come and throw himself in with another State, and resolve to use the power with which he was clothed to execute the laws passed by the Missouri Legislature for their government. He continued: Oregon will be seeking admission as a State. No two free States can be admitted at once. If two States are admitted, one must be slave.—Which would it be? He did not think Kansas would be admitted; that on this theme of Kansas, must rest the next Presidential election.

The committee had reported that they considered the idea of forming a constitution premature; and Mr. Touton had something to say about it.

He was from Missouri; he was born there and was glad of it. He was a true Southern man—born 700 miles South of where he then stood, but was opposed to slavery, with all his powers, in all its bearings. (Applause.) He continued: We have a President, and Missouri flushed with victory, and a Legislature, just adjourned, to oppose us. But for one, I will never submit to those laws except in death.

Mr. ——thought it was unfortunate that the question of forming a State Constitution had been sprung in the Convention, and that the only proper way to dispose of it, would be to endorse the call of a Convention on the 19th, to consider the propriety of forming a State Constitution. He was in favor of forming a Constitution, but did not think it would be admitted. The Kansas bill, which he was always opposed to, guaranteed all that he could ask. But it had been violated.

We have flung off the Territorial government—are now under no government—shall we ask for another? He believed Congress would sympathise with them, and make appropriations to defray the expenses.

Mr. Houston thought that step would weaken the cause; that numbers were opposed to paying the tax that must follow, and in that emergency, would vote with the Pro-Slavery party.

After a protracted debate, the report of the Committee was disposed of by endorsing the call for a Convention to be held at Tecumseh, on the 19th.

Reeder was then nominated, and this precious set of mischief-makers and law-breakers adjourned. —[Mo. Republican.

Homœopathic Method of Curing a Nuisance.

The following anecdote of Talma, the great tragedian, is recorded in a late English Journal:

For several weeks, each time he played, Talma remarked a hunchback, who always sat in the same place—one of the front stalls at the right of the theatre. This little hunchback was critical and often evinced his disapproval of certain points made by the actor in a most marked and impatient way.

This conduct annoyed Talma. Each evening he determined that he would not allow himself to be disturbed by the opinion of this gentleman, nor to notice his expression of dissatisfaction—he would give himself up entirely to his part; but this he found was impossible. In spite of himself, his eyes were attracted to this villainous little hunchback, whose fatally magnetic gaze caused him to turn to that part of the stage: and at last this evil power troubled him to that degree that of all the audience he recognized but this one systematic and obstinate detractor.

Talma, irritated, really tried by this evil influence at length determined to break it up if possible.

He called upon the gentleman at his own house, and said to him:

"Sir, I have come to beg a great favor of you! Of course I do not wish to deprive you of the pleasure of attending the play, nor to insist that you shall find me admirable when I have the misfortune to displease you! But I entreat that you will take some other place in the house, that I may not have you directly under my eye—for I confess that you exert a strange influence over me, and that your gestures, your maintien, your whole person occupy me so entirely, that I feel scarcely able to go on with my part."

"I am sorry for it!" sneeringly replied the little hunchback; "but I shall retain my old place! I do not know why I should change it in order to render you a service. No, my dear sir, I really am quite unhappy in refusing you, but I wish to study you quite at my ease, and I shall retain my accustomed stall!"

Talma went away absolutly enraged.

"Parbleu!" said he; "but I will have my revenge, you old scoundrel!"

He went to the theatre, engaged the five other stalls situated beside the one occupied by his vexatious enemy, and passed the day giving them away—these choice seats—with discretion.

In the evening a gentleman came and took his place in one of these stalls.

"See," said the habitues of the orchestra, "our friend the hunchback will have company this evening—his neighbor is deformed!"

The door of the next box is opened—a second gentleman enters.

"Oh, another hunchback! Why, one would swear this was expressly arranged—a rendezvous of three hunchbacks!"

A fourth person enters.

A burst of laughter welcomes the new comer. He is a fourth hunchback!

At last the fifth invited makes his appearance, and is received with laughter and stamping of feet. The fifth is also a hunchback!

Upon the rising of the curtain the accustomed hunchback arrived.

The audience awaited him with impatience they were all standing. He recived a complete ovation of applause. The bravos thunderd around him.

Our little hunchback, pale with vexation, took his place among his brethern, who themselves—laughed at the oddity of the position. During the entre acte he made his escape, not to appear again. Talma was avenged, and homœopathy had its precedent for the cure of an evil by pitching it over its own head with aggravation.

REMARKABLE FEAT OF A SAILOR.

There is a story that a sailor has volunteered to start from Careening Bay on the first favorable opportunity, and, single-handed, to destroy each ship successively. He asserts that he is in possession of a secret method by which he can move along beneath the surface of the water, and breathe as easily as if he were in a diving apparatus supplied with air by a pump, and that he can carry with him an explosive machine of sufficient power to drive a hole through the bottom of the largest ship. All this may end in smoke, as so many other assertions of possessing secret powers of destruction appear to have ended. A few afternoons since a small skiff, fitted at its sides with what appeared to be not unlike a life-boat apparatus, was carried down by the French towards Careening Bay, and perhaps this gave some coloring of truth to the story. Besides, the sailor gave a proof on the night of the 19th instant that at any rate he was clever enough to approach a ship undetected, notwithstanding a very careful guard being established to mark his coming. As a proof of still further ability, he announced to the officers of her Majesty's ship London, that he would come in the course of that night and chalk up the name of the ship on her side, just above the water-mark, do what they might to prevent him. The challenge was accepted, double sentries were posted, and some volunteers among the officers kept a look-out, but no one was observed to come near, and all on board were convinced that no one had come near the vessel. Daylight, however, showed the letters conspicuously chalked on the ship's side, as the sailor had said they would be. It has been suggested that the means by which his feat was accomplished was an atmospheric boat, capable of being guided when sunk beneath the surface of the water, and supplied with a reserve of air enough to last a given time for the support of its adventurous owner. It is stated that he could not have swam alongside without being observed.

Camphor and Insanity.—The Toronto Colonist says; "We are informed that no less than eight persons have been admitted into the lunatic asylum in a state of insanity, occasioned by consuming quantities of camphor to prevent cholera.—and kept from time to time eating small quantities of it. Others took it disolved in brandy. In all cases where it was taken in any quantity it produced insanity. It is a fact well known that a comparatively small quantity of camphor will set a dog mad, and that he will soon afterward die."

Somebody says, "A wife should be like a roasted lamb—tender and nicely dressed." A scamp adds, "and without sauce."

McLEAN'S VOLCANIC OIL LINIMENT is truly a celebrated remedy, and has done more to alleviate human suffering than any other remedy ever discovered.
One or two applications will relieve the most severe pain, bruise or sprain.
Two bottles will cleanse, purify, and heal the foulest ulcer or sore, and it will heal the most severe burn or scald without a scar.
Every family should have a supply constantly on hand, for use in time of need.
Read the following extract of a letter, which is incontestable proof of its wonderful efficacy:
A BLIND MAN RESTORED TO SIGHT.
J. H. McLean—Dear Sir: * * * I have been suffering for four years with rheumatic sore eyes, being at times altogether blind. I procured the advice of several physicians, but none of them could do me any good. By the advice of a friend I applied your "Volcanic Oil Liniment," according to the directions around the bottle, and it has cured me permanently. I have used it since for bruises, pains, &c., and it has always given immediate relief. I live on the main road near Farmington.
Yours, respectfully, JOHN H. ALLERD.
Jefferson county, Mo.
For horses it is far superior to any other remedy for curing lameness, bruises, cuts, old sores, swellings, &c.
We say, then, to all who may be suffering from external diseases, call at once and get a supply. Thousands of bottles are sold (and used) daily, and we have never heard of a case where it has failed in giving relief when properly applied.
☞ For sale by J. H. McLEAN, the proprietor, corner Third and Pine streets, St. Louis, and by all respectable dealers in Medicines everywhere

Mustang Liniment and the Ladies.—In our opinion, nothing is above the comprehension of women; and with less prejudice, more liberality, and much keener perception than men, when a new idea is presented, a new doctrine taught, or a new fact asserted, she grasps it at once, and with the rapidity and clearness almost of instinct, decides upon its merits or truthfulness; and if her decision be favorable, she enthusiastically advocates and supports it. Thus the common saying has obtained—"Once get the women on your side and you are safe;" and we are happy to state that we have the ladies all in favor of the Mustang Liniment. They have tried it for caked breasts, sore nipples, sores, chafes, and burns on children, as well as for croup and mumps; also, for corns, tooth-ache, pains in the limbs and joints, sore eyes, eruptions, cuts and bruises, and they have always found it effectual—and they go about like angels, as they are, proclaiming it to their friends and to all they see or hear tell of, who are suffering. We have daily calls for it by persons who say such and such ladies recommended them to try it.
Go on ladies in your "good Samaritan" work, and thousands will bless you for your timely advice.

MEDICINE FOR THE BILLION!
A Certain Remedy for all Diseases of
MAN OR ANIMALS,
Requiring an External Application.
Warranted in every Case for which it is Recommended!

THE MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT!
Unlike all other popular medicines, it is used by many prominent members of the faculty, and many of the public Hospitals. Their prejudices have yielded to indisputable and incontrovertible demonstrations of cures performed where their remedies had failed.
It has cured more cases of
RHEUMATISM
than any other medicine ever used. Its efficacy in this terrible disease is acknowledged by all who have used it. It not only cures the complaint, but appears to give a vigor and elasticity to the limbs, before unknown, thus performing a double office.

A FEW TESTIMONIALS.
Path Finder Office, May 11, 1854.
G. W. Westbrook:—
Please send me by the bearer three large bottles of your Mexican Mustang Liniment, as I wish to take it up to my place in Vermont, not thinking it advisable to do without it. I have used it in my family and on my horses, and have found it invaluable. Yours,
J. T. Whitney.

Elizabethtown, Tenn., May 26, 1855.
Mr. G. W. Westbrook:—
Dear Sir—It affords me much pleasure in saying to you that the Mexican Mustang Liniment outsells any medicine that I have ever had for sale, and comes nearer doing what it promises to do. Send me another supply, as I am nearly out. Yours respectfully,
John Singletray, P. M.

Philadelphia, June 11, 1854.
Mr. G. W. Westbrook:
Sir—My son was afflicted with a swelling upon the knee joint, which confined him to the house. I had a doctor attending him for some time, but he did not do him any good. One of my neighbors told me to use the Mustang Liniment. I asked the doctor if I could do so, and he told me he thought I could not do better.
I procured one bottle, and in about a week he was able to go out.
I can safely recommend it to the afflicted.
Respectfully yours, Mrs. Bennett.

W. S. Ladd & Co., of Portland, Oregon, writes that there is an immense demand for the Mexican Mustang Liniment in that country, and orders forty gross to be shipped by Golden Gate, that sails in a few days from New York.

Park & White of San Francisco, California, order 100 gross, to be forwarded by first clipper for that port.

Port au Prince, Hayti, Jan. 16th, 1854.
I had the pleasure to receive invoice and boxes Mexican Mustang Liniment per Crolon, and have no doubt it will have a brisk sale on the island.
George Rackster.

To give health, strength and elacity to the limbs, there is nothing can equal in effect, the
MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT.
FARMERS AND LIVERY STABLE KEEPERS
have need it for the following diseases with extraordinary success, certifying luvariably to the efficacy of the Liniment, and the truthfulness of our assertions in its behalf:
Spavin, Splint, Ring-bone, Fistula, Wind Galls, Big Head, Bruises, Strains, String-halt, Scratches, Cracked Heels, Sweeny, Saddle, Collar, or Harness Galls, Hard Lumps or Tumor, Ruin, or other diseases of the Eye, Poll-Evil, &c.
The small sizes retail for 25 cents per bottle;
The medium size retail for 50 cents per bottle;
The large sizes retail for one dollar per bottle.
The medium holds three times as much as the small;
The Large holds nearly three times as much as the medium,
Therefore the large bottles are the cheapest.

REMARKS

By President Brigham Young, Tabernacle, June 17, 1855.

[REPORTED BY G. D. WATT.]

Perhaps it is expected that I will make a few remarks, after hearing the statements made by our Delegate, the Hon. J. M. Bernhisel.

I presume that but few of this congregation, and I may say that but few of the people of this Territory have a thorough knowledge, or even a general understanding, of the business transactions and responsibilities of our Delegate in Congress. It is a matter this people have not immediately before them—it does not directly concern them—hence they do not inquire into it.

Brother Bernhisel has given you a very brief sketch of the doings of Congress, necessarily omitting most of them. Doubtless the people of this Territory were perfectly satisfied with the labors of their Delegate during the last session of Congress; or, in other words, it would be hard to find an individual who is the least dissatisfied with him, though it is true that the greater part of the people do not understand what should constitute a proper cause for approbation or disapprobation. They are not dissatisfied with him, and I am not dissatisfied with him, neither have I ever been. He has been in Washington during the past six years, most of which time he has spent there for this people. The general government paid him for the services of four years; the appropriation for the services of the first two years another received.

I can say freely that I am perfectly satisfied with the labors of Dr. Bernhisel in Washington; and I will further say, for the satisfaction of the parties concerned, that, I very much doubt whether we could find another man, belonging to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, who could go to Washington and do as much for this people, in the capacity of a representative, as the one we have sent for years past. Why do I doubt this? In the first place, he is a man of sterling integrity, firm to his faith, punctual, industrious, fervent, and always on hand to do everything that can be done. Another reason is, but few of the talented men who belong to this church could go to the seat of Government and endure the slang and misrepresentations which the Dr. has endured.

The Dr. is different from that class in this respect, he can endure their insults and abuses. It is true they have to be offered, if at all, behind his back, for you cannot easily find a man who will abuse him to his face, as he is so kind in his manner, so gentlemanly in his appearance, and so easy in his deportment, treating everybody with due courtesy and respect. When a deadly foe to his operations and to the interests of his constituents is in the field, that is the first man the Dr. visits, and he labors to make him our friend.

Having before us these reasons, with many others equally weighty, that might be given, I doubt whether there is another man in the Territory, or belonging to the church, in or out of the Territory, who could have accomplished what brother Bernhisel has done in Washington for this people. I am confident that I should not stay there long; for there is too much fight in me.

You have seen some persons who, when mad, would fight a whole crowd, as readily as they would a single person.

I am somewhat of that temperament: if I should get mad in Washington I would as soon fight the whole crowd as one individual, and they would use me up. There are but few spirited men who would endure the abuse and lies heaped upon this people.

There is one statement which I have already made in this stand twice or thrice, but I will now make it again before our Delegate, for it has caused him much trouble. It has been reported in the United States that Brigham should have said that the President of the United States could not remove him from his office. I will repeat what I did say, as nearly as my memory will serve me. Exhorting the brethren and sisters, I said, "do not be alarmed, neither let your hearts sink within you, or be worried in the least with regard to a new Governor's coming to this Territory, for the Lord Almighty will preserve your present Governor unto you as long as He pleases, and no power can hinder. And if it is His will to remove the present Governor, know ye that it will be for the best."

That is the spirit of what I said, if not the exact words; and I say so now. President Pierce has been in power long enough to try the experiment, and there have been many to influence him to remove the Governor of this Territory from office. Is it done? It is not; though we nearly thought it was, when Col. Steptoe received the appointment; but the Lord operated upon the Col. to continue his march to California. He received his commission, but he would not be qualified. There were many applicants for the office, but they have not yet got it, and the Lord can baffle them as long as He pleases. He turns the hearts of men when they know it not, and the mysterious workings of His providence among the people they do not understand. He rules in their midst, and controls the nations of the earth according to His will and pleasure; so He does in this case, and will continue to do, just as long as seemeth Him good. When He wishes another Governor here, the proper person will be on hand; until then, there is no power beneath the heavens that can simply remove the present Governor of Utah, much less the loyal people who inhabit these mountains.

The people abroad are at enmity with us; we expect this, for they have been our enemies ever since we have been Saints, or professed to be. Are they opposed to us in consequence of the doctrine which has been alluded to by brother Bernhisel, I mean polygamy? No. Let the Methodists, Church of England, Presbyterians, or any other popular church, adopt that principle and it would be applauded to the skies. They are not opposed to us in consequence of the doctrine of polygamy.

Has the wrath of the enemy become any more enraged since that doctrine has been published than it was before? No, not one particle. Christ and Belial cannot be made friends; the devil is at war with the kingdom of God on the earth, and always has been, and will continue to be, until he is bound. They do not personally hate you, nor me, any more than they did Joseph Smith whom they have slain; they do not hate the Latter-day Saints any more now than they did twenty years ago. The same deadly hatred was then in the heart of every one who had the privilege of hearing the doctrines of this church and refused to embrace them, that we see exhibited at this day. If they had had the power, twenty or twenty-five years ago, they would have slain the Prophet Joseph as readily and with as much rejoicing as they did when they massacred him in Carthage Jail, in the State of Illinois. It is not any particular doctrine or men and women that they are opposed to, but they are opposed to Christ and to the kingdom of God on the earth. I observed here last Sabbath, let the wicked rage and the people mock on, for now is their day and it will soon be over. Let them do all they can, and if they have power to destroy any more of this people, Amen to it; what will it do? It will only augment the cause of Zion, spread the Gospel of salvation, and increase the kingdom of God on the earth. Their persecutions will never destroy this people or the everlasting Gospel. Every time they have killed any of this people and opposed the Gospel, both have increased ten fold, and the work has spread still the more; yes, more than it would have done had they let it alone, and not have come against the Saints to drive them from their possessions. If it is wisdom that the Saints should be driven again, it would be the greatest blessing that could come to this people, for it would give greater permanency to the kingdom of God on the earth.

As I said when I commenced preaching twenty-three years ago and saw the same spirit of persecution exhibited then as subsequently, let us alone, persecutors, we do not wish to fight you, for we have not come to destroy men's lives, or to take peace from the earth, but we have come to preach the Gospel and to make known to you the things of the kingdom of God. If your doctrine is better than ours let us know it, for we are searching after the true riches, we wish the light of heaven to accompany us, we are searching after salvation, and if you have anything better than this, let us have it, and if we have anything better than you, you are welcome to it.

But just let us alone, for we are determined, in the name of Israel's God, not to rest until we have revolutionized the world with truth; and if you persecute us we will do it the quicker.

I say the same now. Let us alone and we will send Elders to the uttermost parts of the earth, and gather out Israel wherever they are; and if you persecute us we will do it the quicker, because we are naturally dull when let alone, and are disposed to take a little sleep, a little slumber, and a little rest. If you let us alone we will do it a little more leisurely; but if you persecute us we will sit up nights to preach the Gospel.

To return to our Delegate. It is not my intention at this meeting to mention whom I think we had better send to Washington, as I did two years ago this summer when brother Bernhisel arose to speak here, at which time we nominated him for our next Delegate. Before he is again elected I wish to learn whether he is willing to return. The office is a toilsome one, and is a mission which is not desirable to any Elder in this kingdom; but if I can learn that he will accept the mission I have no question but that he will have to round up his shoulders and go again. If he declines accepting, and wishes to be excused, we will pick up somebody else. Who? Why the man who will do the least hurt of any man we can find, as for doing much there in the way of getting our just share of the appropriations, we care not whether he can do it or not, for we care not whether they make them or not.

True, the members of the Utah Legislature get their per diem, and some money has been appropriated to this Territory, but is it paid to the Territory? No, only a small portion of it, and it has leaked out that they have determined in Washington, never to pay another dollar to Utah, until they can have all the federal offices in this Territory filled by persons of their own choice.

A few of the brethren have received some money for the labor they have done on the military road, but I think I can take men on to that route, for which $25,000 were appropriated and said to have been expended, and do more good work with $6,000 or $8,000 than has been done with the $25,000.

They wish political gamblers to have the money, in order to work corruption, and make the influence of money effect the ballot box, as in the United States, and thus use the appropriations for this Territory to subserve party purposes and pander to corrupt favoritism. They had better keep the money out of the Territory, than bring it here with such objects in view.

If the government of the United States never pay another dime to this Territory, I will insure that in ten years we shall be ten times better off than if we received a hundred thousand dollars a year from them, and that too upon natural principles.

I will use a familiar comparison to illustrate this. Suppose that a father has a number of sons and one of them wishes to set up for himself; whereupon the old man furnishes him a farm, buys him a team, builds him a house, and puts bread into the house for his family, buys his seed corn, a plow and harrow; shows him how to plow, and perhaps sends one of his hired men to plow for him. In a great majority of such instances, the son will remain inactive upon his plantation, leaning upon his father for support until he becomes indolent, and say, "if I want wheat I can go and get it from my father, or if I want a team, a barn, a house, or anything else, the old man will supply them; I have nothing to do but call upon my father."

Now what is that boy good for? He is not worth a red cent; turn him out into the world alone and he will starve to death. But first learn him to go and earn his farm, his teams, and his bread stuff; to understand the value of everything by knowing how to earn it, and he will become independent like the father, and know how to take care of himself.

So it is with States and Territories. Let them be unduly fostered and sustained by the General Government, and it will lead them into idleness, inactivity, and corruption; they will not be as spirited and active as when they are made to rely upon their own resources.

What does it do still further? You distribute money here, and what would you see, should men come in here this fall willing to pay a high price in money for the little grain that will be raised here this season? I tell you these poor men and women would have to suffer for the want of it, as those who have it, at least many of them, will sell the last mouthful for money, as has been done. Men have taken their grain from their wives and children, and made them live on wolf flesh, in order to get money. The love of money raises trouble among a people and sends them to the devil.

We want none of their money, and if they are not disposed to send it here, I care nothing about their money's coming; and this proves to me, and should to you, that I do not care about a man's getting one dime appropriated to this Territory. But we will send a Delegate who will do no hurt; and if it were not that the hue and cry of "treason against the General Government" would be made, we would not send a Delegate at all; or were it not that they would say, "now you have proof sufficient that the Mormons mean to secede from the Union, as they have sent no Delegate;" and thus hatch up a pretext for commencing fresh hostilities against us.

It has been observed that the people where Judge Douglas resides say to him, "what are you going to do with Utah? we hope you will do something to put down this odious doctrine, for they will have more women than one, and they will acknowledge them openly." (I am now talking in accordance with their practice). "We want to hire our women in the dark, and pay them a few dimes, or dollars, use them as long as we wish, and then kick them out of doors. But the Mormons will own them, give them their name, acknowledge their children, and educate them."

That is one great difference between the Mormons and the Gentiles, and, upon natural principles, that is, to outward appearance, in reality all the difference there is, though we are laying a foundation for another state of being. Are they men of virtuous character who talk so about the Mormons having more wives than one? How odious it was last winter, in the sight of certain men who were here, to think that we had more lawful wives than one; yet they would creep into your houses, and try to coax your wives and daughters away from you.—What for? Was it to make them more honorable, to give them a better character in the midst of the inhabitants of the earth, sustain them better, and make them more comfortable, and acknowledge them? No—they wanted to prostitute them, to ruin them and send them to the grave, or to the devil, when they had done with them.

I do not know what I shall say next winter, if such men make their appearance here, as were some last winter. I know what I think I shall say, if they play the same game again, let the women be ever so bad, so help me God, we will slay them.

If any wish to go to California to whore it, we will send a company of them off; that is my mind, and perhaps some few ought to go, for they are indeed bad enough.

There are some things I learned, when I was in the South country lately, which I do not wish to mention, because of the friends of those girls who are gone; but when they passed through the Southern settlements they were weeping all the time, and they are perhaps now in their graves. The men who coaxed them away did not intend to take them to California. If any offer to do the same things again, in these mountains, "judgment shall be laid to the line and righteousness to the plummet;" and they say that Brigham does not lie.

If they want women to go to California with them, we will send a company of the same stripe, if they can be found, and then both parties will be suited to and for each other. I would rather follow her to the grave, and send her home pure, than suffer my daughter to be prostituted. I will not suffer any female member of my family to be polluted through the corruptions of wicked men.

Write this to the States if you please. If there are any Gentiles or hickory Mormons here, and so disposed, write it down and send it to Washington, that if they send their officers and soldiers here, to conduct themselves as they did last winter, they shall meet upon the spot the due reward of their crimes.

Though I may not be Governor here, my power will not be diminished. No man they can send here will have much influence with this community, unless he be the man of their choice. Let them send whom they will, and it does not diminish my influence one particle. As I said, the first time I spoke on this stand, my Governorship and every other ship under my control, are aided and derive direct advantages from my position in the Priesthood.

The office of Governor is not necessarily in the lest degree incompatible with the upright course of any person clothed with the Priesthood; but, on the contrary, such a person should be far better qualified to wisely and righteously administer in any civil office, and in this manner the channel of true intelligence would be opened, and light and truth flow freely into every avenue of social life.

There are more things I might talk about, but no matter now, as the meeting has been held long enough. I say, God bless you. Amen.

YELLOW FEVER

No Abatement—Scenes in Norfolk and Portsmouth.

The telegraph to-day reports that the fever is on the increase.

BELTIMORE, Wednesday, September, 19.—The steamboat from Norfolk this morning, reports an increase in the mortality of that city, and Portsmouth. At Norfolk there were forty-five deaths on Monday, and twenty up to noon on Tuesday.

At portsmouth there were seventeen deaths between dusk on Monday and noon on Tuesday.

A large number of new cases had also occurred.

Among the deaths at Norfolk were Dr. Geo. L. Upshur, ex-Mayor Delancy, and another son of Rev. A. Smith.

Josiah Wills, President of the Virginia Bank, and John Tunis, Sen., were among the sick.

RELIEF FROM PORTLAND.

PORTLAND, Me., Thursday, Sept. 19.—A meeting from our leading citizens was held last evening, for the purpose of aiding the sufferers from yellow fever at Norfolk and Portsmouth. A committee of twelve was appointed to solicit subscriptions.

EXPERIENCE OF A VOLUNTEER NURSE.

A volunteer nurse writes to the Baltimore American as follows:

"But hardened as I thought I was by two weeks' residence among the dying and the dead, I could not resist a thrill of horror that overwhelmed me on one occasion, when attending a dying man, who was a raving maniac, and threatened my life because I would not let him get up; and to raise an alarm, would every now and then cry fire, with a most unearthly yell. And to add to all this, just as he was breathing his last, a tremendous thunder-cloud came up accompanied by the loudest clap of thunder I ever heard. I assure you my feelings were anything but pleasant at that time, during which his poor mother, 85 years of age, was wringing her hands and walking the floor in the greatest agony. It would have required a man with a heart of stone to have resisted shedding a few tears of sympathy with this poor woman whose heart seemed to be breaking."

CLERGYMAN DEAD.

Rev. Mr. Chrisholm, of St. John's Episcopal church in Portsmouth, who was reported dead some days since, and afterwards contradicted, is now said to be dead; as is also Mr. Bagnell, the Baptist clergyman at Norfolk. Mrs. Jane Dewey, a wealthy lady of Norfolk, is also dead. Mr. Chrisholm's church has been opened every Sunday morning, up to the period of his attack by the pestilence. Though the number there was small, and was gradually diminished Sunday after Sunday, by deaths and sickness, he always gave an appropriate lecture.

The wife of Mr. Chrisholm died a few months since, and he was buried by her side.

A CLEAN SWEEP.

Mr. Alexander Watt, of the firm of G. W. Farrant & Co., of Norfolk, who died on Monday, had previously lost his wife, her mother, two sisters, a brother, and a partner in business. He leaves four orphans, two of them sick with fever.

A REMARKABLE SABBATH.

Yesterday was a remarkable Sabbath. Such a one as the oldest inhabitants never witnessed, and we have some octogenarians. For want of ministers for some, and congregations for others, not a church was in service, and yet it is proverbially the most church-going community in the country. What a sad and mournful commentary upon the desolation and havoc of the pestilence that walketh in darkness and spareth neither age, sex, nor condition.

CLOSED STORES AND DECAYING PROVISIONS.

It is suggested, for the information of absent grocers and men of trade and traffic, that they would do well to send their keys to some friend and authorize him to open store and sell the goods that are spoiling and perishing by long confinement. Something might be saved by the sale, at some price, of a few necessaries much wanted, as well as by the timely removal of articles that have already become of no value at all. A few shops are open upon a very limited scale, and by them some things might be sold which have to be sent for to New York and Baltimore. Indeed it would be an act of charity in some of the absentees, and not more than a fair contribution of their substance, to give away the things they have abandoned to loss and ruin to many of their poor and helpless neighbors. An organization is formed at the Howard office to furnish wagons for distribution of food and refreshments to the families in the suburbs of the city, who, from distance and affliction have become unable to send to the depot for them. And their name is legion.

DEATHS.

The estimable lady of Mr. Bernard, the well known druggist, and daughter of T. G. Broughton, Esq., the excellent and venerable editor of the Herald, is dead, and also a child of hers; also Robert Saunders; Miss McHenry, of Monroe, La.; W. B. Ceco, a worthy brick-mason; Mrs. John Belone, John Green, Mrs. Quiek, a child of Mrs Hammer; Mr. Casey, a shoemaker; a sailor at the Marine Hospital; Michael Glennan, grocer; a child of F. Dalby, a white boy in charge of Rev. Mr. O'Keefe of the Catholic Church, Peter Gray, Mrs. John D. Gordon, daughter of Thomas White, Mrs. F. A. Perier, Evelina White, J. Cherry, a very well known police officer; Mr. Watt, second member of the firm of Farrant & Co's extensive clothing establishment; Rev. Bagnal, Baptist preacher; a promising son of Mr. Bagnal, of the Virginia Bank; H. Waltington, brick-mason; a daughter of L. Gibson.

CONTRIBUTIONS FROM BALTIMORE.

The Baltimore contributions amount to $35,906.

HOW THE FEVER COMES.

A correspondent writes, "I have gone into the infected room, and witnessed the fearful disease in all its stages—the chill, the pains—pains in the head, the back, the limbs, the breast, the bowels, and sometimes all over and through the entire system. One told me that the flesh seemed to be torn from his limbs. But in some cases the pains are not very severe. And then, the fiery, yellowish, or reddish and melancholy eye; the saffron tinge of the cheek, the parched, dry skin, the dozy, drowsy sleepy feeling that comes over the sufferers and precedes dissolution, and the black vomit, and often the blood vomit, when the patient throws up quarts of pure blood—and it comes from the nose and the mouth in a stream. Then death has marked his victim, and youth, lovliness, goodness, nothing is excepted—the man, the woman, the child, the friend, the parent, the dearest companion, must die and be buried—and buried quickly, or else fill the air with the hateful pestilential stench, as has been said to say, but too often the case during the fearful time of woe, almost unequaled, and death and dessolation without parallel in the recently prosperous and happy city.

WEATHER.

The weather is damp and sultry—wind, east, but only a very light breeze during the day. Heavy showers, deluging the streets, and filling up all the low places from which the water cannot run off.—The atmosphere is unpleasant, and offensive odors are emitted in many parts of the city.

NURSES.

There are a number of valuable nurses here from New Orleans, Mobile, Charlestown, and a dozen able physicians, &c., and they are invaluable and indispensable. It would be difficult to tell what the people would do without them. Many persons have died for want of proper and efficient nursing.

From the Squatter Sovereign.

DISSOLUTION OF THE UNION.

"The signs of the times" protend that unless an immediate check is put by the sober, sensible people of the North, upon the unbridled spirit of fanaticism that is now running riot, the glorious fabric of Constitutional liberty, which was reared by the best blood, of the best men the world has ever produced, will in less than three years be crushed into fragments, dismembered and destroyed.

Already the preparation is being made for the dire alternative of war, rather than servile submission, old Virginia, the mother of the sages and and heroes of the revolution, and of the Constitution, has commenced to "don her harness" for the coming conflict, and even the Empire State, through her soundest and ablest paper, the "National Democrat," re-echo's the notes of warning. Is there no Patriotism left in the land that gave birth to a Warren, a Stark, a Hamilton, and a hundred others, whose blood mingling with that of Washington, Morgan, Marion, and others, who gave to the world the infant republic, that has since grown to be the greatest nation on earth? Is there not patriotism enough left there to crush this incendiary monster? Or must such men as Fred Douglas, Garrison and Giddings, destroy this blood bought temple of liberty?

We confess that our fears are that there is not, and that in a few short years we shall be another example of the inability of man for self-Governs ment: another example of the crimes and follies perpatrated under the name of liberty.

EXCHANGE ON SALT LAKE.

Emigrants, Missionaries, and all persons wishing to carry or send money to any part of Utah, are hereby notified that we have made the necessary arrangements, and are prepared to furnish SIGHT DRAFTS on Gov. B. Young, or on any of the principal Mercantile houses in Salt Lake City. Bring or send your money to the Luminary Office, and drafts for the same amount will be returned to you, or forwarded by succeeding mail to any person in Utah, as you may direct. Duplicates will be furnished, whenever required, so that in case of failure of mails, no loss will be sustained, and you will avoid the risk of transporting specie, besides the Church wish to use it here.

ST. LOUIS, 1855. ERASTUS SNOW.

THE St. Louis Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, will commence on Saturday morning, the 6th of October, at half past 10 o'clock, when we hope to see a good attendance.

PRESIDENT SPENCER is still too ill to resume his labors in the editorial department, but the chills and fever have now left him, and we hope that in a short time he will be sufficiently strong to re-commence his literary operations, when the Luminary will shine with increased lustre and brilliancy. In the meantime, we shall endeavor to reflect the light of the greater planets, which we trust will prove a means of lighting up the minds of many who now sit in darkness, and prepare them to enter the courts of Zion, in the celestial kingdom of God, to sit down with Abraham, Isaac and Jacob.

We have received reveral orders from the Cherokee Nation for the Luminary and books. We are glad to see a disposition among the people of the nation, to read and study our faith and doctrines. The Indians in the nation are not those ignorant barbarians some have imagined; but they are smart and intelligent men, and many of them lovers of literature and science, and studiously devoted to the attainment of knowledge and understanding. When a people are willing to read, examine and judge for themselves, there is some hope that they may receive gospel, and be saved in the kingdom of God.

We feel sanguine in regard to the Indian mission, and those brethren who are now laboring among the sons of Joseph are highly honored in being intrusted with so important a mission. In this mission, is fulfilled partually the promises of God to faithful man who dwelt upon this land some ages ago. This mission involves, moreover, the promises of God made to Joseph in these last days, according to which we learn that before Jusus comes in power and great glory, taking vengeance on all who know not God, and obey not the gospel. The sons of Ephraim must flourish in the west, and be prepared as a young lion to go through, tread down and destroy his enemies.

THE INDIAN WAR.

The Missouri Republican of the 27th, contained a lengthy communication from the Plains; written by one of General Harney's command. The writer seems to be much elated by the late battle, and treats on the killing of the Indians as of so many dogs.—He is most likely a brave fellow, for he tells us he was near being left out of the engagement, but was admitted into the Doctors' staff. In that capacity, surrounded with the dead and dying; and the squaws and children we presume he had a good opportunity of displaying his bravery; and particularly when collecting the Indian trinkets (of which he speaks) as presents to his friends. If he ever lives to see his Chere Mere again. It is to be hoped he may that he may reap the laurels so bravely won upon the field of battle.

The writer says: "The Infantry moved up in beautiful style upon the village. As we moved up, the Indians showed signs of parley; but as we came for war and not for peace, we paid no attention to them. The Indians being well mounted, were about to escape us as we thought, when we determined to talk a while with them, so as to give the Dragoons time to show themselves. We gave the signal, when the chief, Little Thunder came up to us.

We had a long talk with him, and discovered that this was the band which had attacked the Mail Train. While talking with the chief, we perceived a great commotion among the Indians, which showed us plainly that the Dragoons were near. The conference was broken up, and the Infantry were ordered to place their rifles at long range of from six hundred to one thousand yards, and advance rapidly. The Indians ran, of course, to the hills, and were in a fine position to repel an attack of Infantry when the Dragoons showed themselves, then, I can assure you, dear ———, the fun commenced in reality. I never saw a more beautiful thing in my life. When the Infantry saw the Dragoons coming down in such beautiful style, they gave one yell, which resounded far and wide. The Indians threw away everything they had in the world. We suppose we killed about seventy. You know they carry off their dead so rapidly that it is almost impossible to say with certainty as to the number killed or wounded. We lost four men killed, four wounded and one missing.—They shot remarkably well. We, of necessity, killed a good many women and children. We took forty women and children prisoners, a good many horses, buffalo meat enough to supply the whole command for some time. I do not suppose the Indians in this country ever had such a perfect clearing out as upon this occasion. They will have cause to remember Gen. Harney for a long time. In their rout they threw away powder horns, saddles, and everything they had in the world. We destroyed everything that could be found; that is what we could not bring away. The Big Chief is supposed to be killed; it almost amounts to a certainty. The horses were ordered to be turned over to the Government. I have a great many trinkets taken on the battle field which I shall bring with me, if I should ever be so fortunate as to see St. Louis again.

Reflections upon the Goverments of the Earth and the Government of God.

In an age of the world so replete with discoveries in science, and the successful applications of those discoveries to the every day business of life, as witnessed in the electric telegraph, locomotive engines, and a thousand other inventions. It is not surprising that there should be an effort in the spiritual world to keep pace with the spirit of the temporal. The worn out creeds of our fathers won't satisfy this generation. The Roman Catholic Religion, so venerated by our ancestors does not comprehend nor provide for the wants of the world now. L'Eglise Anglican and her younger daughters have all equally failed in supplying the nations with that their circumstances require. The world is so disordered and disunited and ignorant, that in the aggregate, it does not know its own want, "for darkness has covered the earth and gross darkness the minds of the people." Its judgment nationally, is not of much greater importance — for though there are those that are called civilized and christian, and others barbarian and heathen — a close proximity proves that the former in very many things, are more blind and barbarous than the latter.

There are not wanting men in all nations, and woman, too, forsooth who, troubled and afflicted in spirit on account of the folly, ignorance, and wickedness of the world, have sacrificed the labor of their lives to devise a remedy. But the task has been too herculean for mortals to perform, and some have entered hopeless into the spirit world, whilst others still remain to witness the effect of their folly. There is one remarkable fact self-evident to every observer. No religion ever invented by man or Devil, has affected any real good for mankind. Nor has any spurious religions ever comprehended the faith of the Saints, or the eternal truths of heaven. Therefore when God revealed the everlasting gospel to the earth, and the faith once delivered to the Saints, they were considered innovations, and were unceremoniously repudiated.

It is plainly intimated in the book of Revelations that an angel would come from heaven in the last days with the everlasting gospel, to preach to them that dwell on the earth, to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people. And inasmuch as this age cannot extend beyond the last days, it must be admitted that there is a possibility, if not a strong probability, that we are living in the last days, and in the very time when God has declared that he would set up his kingdom, that should be given to his Saints, and stand forever. And, if so, then the Latter-day Saints, or as vulgarly called "the Mormons," are the people of God's choice, who constitute the kingdom of God, and who will take the kingdom and the greatness of the kingdom and possess it forever.

No one possessing any claim to rationality will pretend to deny the right of heaven to preside over the affairs of our little earth — and if the governments of the earth are defective in their organization, and incompatible with the government of God, why should it not be overthrown and destroyed? Who will say he who created the world has not a right to overturn the heterogeneous Governments of men, and establish his own kingdom in the earth? And if he shall please to give the kingdom and the greatness of the kingdom to his Saints as He has promised, who shall change his purpose, and wrest the kingdom from his mighty hand? The Lord has permitted the nations to govern themselves without his immediate presence, or interference, or that of his special Ministers, for so long a period that they conceive it to be their legitimate right to legislate for themselves, independent of angels or God. And no sooner did the prophet Joseph, enunciate the laws of God, than Judges, Magistrates, Editors, and Priests, raised the cry of Treason, which being published by gentlemen of such high respectability in the world, was sufficient to enlist the sympathies of the ignorant and enthusiastic populace against him and his followers. And it is only those who reason and judge for themselves, who can possibly learn their error, and understand the true position of the Latter-day Saints, and the legitimacy of that authority vested in them for the proper government of the world.

This subject has been the grand bone of contention between the prophets of God, and the quasi-governors of the earth, in all ages, when prophets have been raised up, and inspired, and delegated, from heaven to establish righteousness upon the earth. So tenacious of governmental powers were the rulers of the Jews when Jesus dwelt with men, that they sought every opportunity to take his life. So fearful were they that he would become the king of the Jews, that they were prepared to slay him rather than suffer him to be their leader. The same spirit lives and reigns in the hearts of the children of men now, that madly ruled their actions then. — Governor Young is not maligned and execrated for any misconduct anymore than John the Baptist Jesus Christ, or Joseph Smith were. John and Joseph, were murdered without law — Jesus had the shades of law thrown over him, to mock in his exit from from this corrupt and blood-guilty world.

God has permitted his servants to be killed and the government of the world to be wrested from his people heretofore. But we have a positive assurance it will not be so in these last days; for though many may be slain, and the balance driven from State to State, and nation to nation, the kingdom of God will be within them; and whether they establish themselves in Missouri, California, or in the Pacific Islands, they will still hold in their hands a power that will sooner or later govern all the earth. "Let us alone," says the prophet Brigham, "and we will take our time about it, and do it leisurely, but persecute us and we will do it the faster." Some ignorant bigots have harped at Governor Young's sayings and have tried to make them mean Treason, or something that would convict him, so that a pretext might be had to take his life, as they did his noble predecessor. But he stands in a place where the venomed shafts of his enemies cannot reach him, and where blood-thirsty mobocrats dare not assail him. Under his controlling influence, virtue must be respected, and the sacred rights of man, guaranteed by the Constitution of our country, will be maintained inviolate. And whilst confusion, anarchy, and revolution, rend assunder and trample under foot the blessings purchased by the noble deeds of the worthy dead; the prophet Brigham and the noble spirits he has gathered around him, will carefully collect the choice fragments, and reorganize them in one consolidated body, that will defy all earth and hell rend assunder and destroy.

It would appear from the news brought from Europe by the steamers Canada and Washington, that Sebastopol has at length fallen into the hands of the besiegers—and it is now said, Sebastopol is taken, a more determined and bloody seige has been rarely if ever witnessed since the seige of Jerusalam by the Romans. The dispatches as yet received contain but a very unperfect statement of so great and long expected an event. Nor are we prepared to say that the items received are strictly correct. The telegraph wires or their prompters, or both are often freakish, and we are often compelled to wait for the slow coach to correct its errors. In this instance its announcement of the slain, ranges from thirty to sixty thousand, but thirty thousand is but a very small item when passing through a Telegraph Office.

The final Bombardment of Sebastopol must have been a terrible business for those concerned, sorties assaults and repulses almost innumerable had been sustained with comparative indifference, until Sebastopol was considered impregnable and eternal; but hotly and furiously besieged by French and English troops, the brave and stirdy Russians were compelled to evacuate the south side of the city, leaving to the conquered a second Moscow. The Russians are still in possession of the northern portion of the City, but will doubtless be compelled shortly to abandon their position, the latest despatch from Sebastopol says that 25,000 men has embarked at Balaklava, for the north of Sebastopol, and that the Russians were in full retreat for Perekop.

Prince Gortschakoff telegraphed on the 9th that Sebastopol, after sustaining a most infernal fire, and repulsing six successive assaults, "found we could not drive the enemy from the Malakoff of which they had possession, our troops resisted to the last extremitiy. The enemy found nothing in the southern part of the town but blood stained ruins."

The events of the present victory will now be a subject for a thousand speculations by Politicians and Journalists of all nations, and this western world will wait with intense interest, the next grand move and its results. The United States has looked on through the piece with stoical indifference, although some factions have expressed strong sympathies for Russia, to such, the war news will be anything but interesting, but the final sympathies will undoubtedly be lavished upon the final victors, whoever they may be, and until then it will be said, good for Russia and good for the Allied armies.

Correspondence.

LETTER FROM BENJ. L. CLAPP.

HOUSTON CO., TEXAS, August 10, 1855.

DEAR BROTHER SNOW: Surrounded with enemies and unfavorable circumstances, I sit me down to give you a short sketch of my labors in this far off land. I should have written before this time, but hearing nothing from you, after writing a letter or two, I thought I would hold on and visit St. Louis; and be at Conference. But on my return to this place from a mission that I took to the North of this place, I found in the Luminary that I was appointed to organize a Conference in this State, I also learned from the same source the whereabouts of Elders Thomas and Martindale. I was glad to hear from them, as it was the first I had heard from them in a long time. I wrote to brother Thomas at Brenham some time ago, but as yet have got no answer.—Brother Martindale wrote to me last winter, he said his health was not good. I answered his letter and requested him to come to me, but got no answer, and have not heard any reliable news from him till a short time back; on which account I feared that he was no more.

I have preached in some twelve counties in this State. The power of God has rested down upon me, and I never was able to deliver my testimony in greater plainness than on this mission. I have only baptized about twenty persons in this State, and some of them not of the kind. I can't say that there is a prospect of many more at present, though there are scores of people in this land that are willing to confess the truth, but have not got moral courage enough to come out and embrace it. There is another portion that say they would believe it if they could believe the Bible. What I have baptized are so scattered that I have not been able to even organize a branch. So you can see that if there is wheat here, there is not much of it ripe, as I stated previously. But I then felt as I do now, determined by the help of God to hunt it out. But I must think there will be some good come out of it at last, as the devil has got awful mad about something and is stiring up his emissaries to try to stop the work of God.

To give you a full history of his operations I must commence a little back. Brother J. D. Alpline, living in Madisonville, Madison Co., Texas; wrote to me to come and preach in that place. I went and commenced lecturing, and continued for seven days. There was quite an interest manifested, and a good many were seemingly ready to take hold of the work. One man was baptised by the name of Mangrum. I left for the present, in about three weeks I returned and preached at the same place again, still good prospects of doing a good work; the devil now thought it high time to commence his work. So the next night after I left (to fill some appointments in another county). A negro man came to brother Mangrum's about twelve o'clock at night and waked him up. Mangrum knew the negro, and supposed that some of the family was sick, but the negro retreated towards the waggon shop. He could not understand what he wanted but followed him to the shop; the negro stopped and showed Mangrum a peck of corn and asked him if he did not want to buy it. He told him no he did not want it and asked him what he brought it there for. When on a sudden six white men stepped out and said to Mangrum, damn you, we have got you now and we will handle you damned rough. They laid right hold of him and would not even let him go to the house to tell his wife what was up. They led him to the tavern and kept him till eleven o'clock the next day, without any process whatever, guarding him with firearms, and would not suffer even his friends to speak to him. At last they legalized the matter and brought him before a Justice of the Peace and tried him, but found no cause of action, although some did their best at swaring. So failing in this attempt, they discharged him, swaring they wanted to get him into jail and shoot him, and make him wiggle like a possum as the mob did old Joe Smith. From this honorable manner they went to whipping negroes to make them confess that Mangrum, Alpline and myself were engaged in running negroes to Salt Lake. They swore that they would kill Mangrum and run all the Mormons out of the county. But some of the leaders of this holy band, came to Mangrum and told him if he would renounce Mormonism he should be protected. He told them that he would die first. His friends seeing they would kill him, advised him to leave, which he did; sacrificing about four hundred dollars worth of property, for one hundred. And is now on the route to Salt Lake, about one hundred and fifty miles from the place of his persecutions, working at his trade to get means to go on with. This persecution followed me over into Leon county; an adjoining county to Madison, and while I was preaching in the upper room of the court-house, some of the baser sort brought a pole to the door, and swore they would ride me on it (they would have had a good load) as soon as I was done preaching. But I finished my testimony and came off unhurt from this persecution.

I went on the mission referred to above, going from place to place, offering the gospel in almost every town and settlement in my range, till I arrived back in Leon county. I preached in quite a number of places, but was only envited to preach the second time in one place. In this mission I passed through ten counties, making a circuit of about five hundred miles. On my arrival, I found that the devil had been lustily employed in stiring up his desciples to persecute the Saints of God. The third day after my arrival, I was at the house of a friend by the name of Lynn, whose wife I had previously baptised. The weather being warm, I sat in the shade before the door looking up the road, I saw a company of men on horseback coming down the road, (a part of the company was in arms,) they rode up to the door, when the Captain addressing himself to me said, is your name Clapp. I answered in the affirmative. Well says he, we have come to tell you that you have got to leave the county forthwith. I asked them if I had broken the laws of the land, or the law of God. He answered we do not know nor care, but damn your old thevish soul to hell, you shall go. and go quick or you won't be able to go. This body of demons in human form, numbered fourteen. The Mormons are all ordered out of that county, and even brother Reagan, a man of irreproachable character, is ordered out by the influence of his wife. I think the object is to get his property.

Well you see under these circumstances, I left willingly, because I could not help myself; and came over into Houston county, about eight miles distant from where I was, to my nephew's, Lewis R. Clapp's, who is also an Elder in the church. I was here but two or three days before I and he both got a polite note to leave, myself in particular, or they would come over and cut my back all to pieces. The weather being exceeding warm, and my horse and myself, too worn out from the fatigues of the journey just ended. I did not see how I could go before making some arrangements; and so we determined to stand our ground. Our position just at that time reminded me much of the story of "Pady and the bear," for truly we had but little assurance of any help on our side, and on the other hand we did not think they could get much help from the immediate vicinity, so we thought that if any would come and look on, they would see a great fight, if they should come as they had sworn they would, as we had the tools on hand; but it was no go, they did not come for they found it would not work so well as they thought at first it would. The thing is now beginning to re-act, and I do not know but good will grow out of it. So I am at my nephews in peace, and have been for a few days, it being almost impossible to travel under the scorching rays of the sun.

I will now proceed to give you some of my feelings that I have in this land while pressed down with heat and surrounded with enemies, in this far off southern land (and only weighing 280 lbs.) a few days ago I was reading the blessing that I received under the hands of Elder John Taylor in Great Salt Lake City, preparatory to this mission.—And I felt to thank God, and took courage, and notwithstanding the decision of your Conference did not reach me as soon as I could have wished, yet be assured that not a stone will be left unturned that can be turned by me for the up-building of the kingdom of God on the earth. I have thus far used all the wisdom that I am master of to plant the standard of truth in this land, but as yet it does not show to be much that I have done. But I do not feel discouraged, for I feel that in due time I shall reap if I faint not, and whether I reap or not, I shall have this pleasing reflection that I have faithfully declared the truths of heaven to this people, and have not been ashamed of the gospel of Christ, and have been filled with the Holy Ghost, and the mighty power of God has rested on me, and almost hopeless cases of disease has been healed under my hands. And I feel to rejoice that I am counted worthy to bear affliction for the name of Christ, and for the testimony which I bear concerning His servants Joseph and Brigham, and the organization of His kingdom in these last days.

In contemplating these things I am filled with joy, and the testimony of Jesus Christ rests upon me, and causes me to predict good for Israel, and assures me that the coming of the Lord draweth nigh. And while the dreadful war cloud is gathering in blackness over the heads of almost all kingdoms and nations, and while the earth and seas are reddened with human gore at Sebastopol in the Crimea. The loud cries of civil war and disunion in our own beloved America; and party strife and religious discord have entered into almost every circle and association; and confidence has fled from almost every State and nation, and the signs in earth and heaven, indicate the immediate fulfillment of some of the most important prophecies left on record. I say with all these things before us, I feel that it is high time for men of God to be up and doing. For one I can say that it is my whole hearts desire that the blessings of our heavenly Father may rest down upon us, inspiring each one for the performance of his duty; and while the Elders are distributing the gospel by proclamation to the nations of the earth, may their Presidents and editors be inspired with the spirit of the Holy Gods from on high, according to their superior station, and have wisdom to send forth messages of eternal truth, as the Luminary from St. Louis, the Mormon from New York, the Millennial Star from England, and many other smaller lights, all contributing their portion to forward on the great work; while the Deseret News like a commanding officer in this mighty army, gives orders in due time, showing forth the master spirit that dwells in our worthy President Brigham Young, and thus dispeling the darkness that has so long hung over the minds of men, and saying to every true Israelite of God, the times are fulfilled, the day has broke that never more will close. Go out of Babylon and prepare for a visit in Zion, and the resurrection day. May the choicest of heaven's blessings rest down upon our worthy Presidency in the vallies of the mountains, and all their co-workers in every kingdom, State and nation, is the prayer of a fellow laborer in the bonds of the New Covenant.

BENJAMIN L. CLAPP.

P. S. It is my desire to go home next spring, if you have any counsel for me, I should be pleased to receive it. If letters should come to that office for me, please do me the kindness to take them out and send them to Crocket, Houston county, Texas. The arrangement that brother Thomas has published in the Luminary will not be much changed.

B. L. CLAPP.

SMYTH CO., VA., Sept. 4, 1855.

PRESIDENT ERASTUS SNOW:

I now drop you a few lines to let you know how I am getting along in this part of the vineyard. I have charge of between two and three hundred members of the Church of Jusus Christ in Virginia, and North Carolina. I am preaching and baptiziug through this land all I can, and if you have a surplus Elder whom you can recommend as worthy of his calling, tell him to come over and help us.

I had a worthy brother and fellow laborer in the gospel covenant, whom all the Saints loved, and the world could not hate, because of his confirmed walk and conversation through life; but he has left this stage of action to visit the spirit world, to reap a glorious reward for his labors in the cause of Christ. I would to God that all men were as he; for he lived the life of the righteous and died a righteous death. Brother Samuel Rogers was greatly lamented by all the Saints in this part of the vineyard.

I must say to you, President Snow, that since the LUMINARY has come to hand, it has revived the hearts of the Saints who were bowed down, and for my own part, I cannot help thanking you for coming down from the hill of Zion to defend the truth, and let the world know there are two sides of the question to read, instead of the one that has been going the rounds of the journals, clothed with the basest of lies, which are preached from the pulpits by those long faced hypocrites who have no more regard for the souls of men than for the beasts of the field. Money is their motive—it is money that leads them to preach their dogmas, for which they are determined to persist in error.

May God bless all his Saints througout the world —may the Elders gird on the whole armor of God, that they may resist all opposition and come off more than conquerors, and go home to Zion laden with many sheaves. ABSALOM M. YOUNG.

FORT RILEY, Sept., 9, 1855.

DEAR BROTHER HART:

Thinking that the Saints may be desirous to hear a few lines from us, I take the present opportunity to write a few lines to you, and to my brethren and sisters in the St. Louis stake of Zion. I was very much surprised, and felt a great deal of regret, when I received the news of the departure of brothers' Snow and Andrus, for the valleys of the mountains; for I had anticipated the pleasure of their company in crossing the Plains; but it is an old adage "man proposes but God disposes," and as I feel at all times to bow to the divine authority, I say God bless them, and speed them on their way; and pray God to hasten the time when I can give them the right hand of fellowship in Zion.

Our position here as a branch of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, is as good as we could have anticipated, considering the circumstances under which we have labored since our arrival here, this place having been visited by a sad and mournful calamity, namely, Cholera; which carried off a great many people which composed the inhabitants of this place, both military and civil; and I feel to thank may heavenly Father for the preservation of our lives, and for the enjoyment of health and strength, and the manifestation of his Holy Spirit which we enjoy from time to time.

I have no doubt the brothers and sisters would desire to know how we pass our time in this isolated place. To such I would answer, we have on Sunday morning, sacrament meeting, and in the evening preaching meeting, on Monday night council meeting, Tuesday and Wednesday, prayer meeting, Thursday, testimony meeting, Friday prayer meeting, and on Saturday evening we meet for mutual instruction, and discuss the principles of eternal truth. So by this you see we have not much time left to get dull or dispirited. And as for our Sunday meetings we do not confine ourselves to four walls, but stroll into the woods and hold our meetings there, with the green sward under our feet, and the canopy of heaven over our heads. There is often one thing appears strange to me, and that is no meeting room to subscribe to, nor poor to help, for we have neither here, but let me tell you, that does not make us forget our obligations in St. Louis, for we intend to take up a subscription the next pay day, and forward it to you the first opportunity.

When we first organized this branch, I was dictated by the spirit that rebaptism of the whole branch would enable us to enjoy a greater portion of the Spirit of God, and I asked the brethren and sisters if they were willing to be rebaptized, to which they cheerfully give their consent, so that on the evenings of the 30th and 31st of July, the whole of the branch were rebaptized without one exception and one more added to our number, by baptism; so that you see we have broken the ice in this place, besides having become acquainted with a brother and his family by the name of William Carroll, who lives at Wild Cat Creek, about fifteen miles north of us. About the second or third Tuesday after we arrived here, he came to our meeting and formed an acquaintance with the brethren. He passed through on his way to the valley last spring. He has settled down for a time there as circumstances prevented him from reaching the valley, but is desirous of gathering as soon as he can. On the 19th of Aug., I sent two of the brethren there to preach, as I found that brother Carroll had been preaching and delivering tracts, (which we had given him,) among the people in his neighborhood and gone as far as he could, for there were a great many enquiring after the truth, and he did not know what day he might be called upon to administer baptism; so I instructed the brethren that if they found brother Carroll to be as good a man as I judged him to be, to ordain him to the office of an Elder which they did, having first rebaptized him. So by this you see that our small branch is extending and I pray God that it may extend until it fills the whole territory, for there are many honest hearted people scattered throughout this country, and I think if some of our travelling Elders would visit this portion of the Lord's vineyard, they would reap a rich harvest for their labors. I should send some of the elders out that we have here, but that their engagements bind them to work here until the 10th of November, so you see we are helpless in this matter.

Brother Carroll has offered the use of his farm to any of the Saints that may wish to train their cattle the forth coming winter, so that if any of the brethren wish to stay here next winter, they will have a place where they can keep their cattle in safety. There is one thing which rejoices the hearts of the Saints here, that is the kind of treatment they receive from those in authority over us. We have every opportunity of worshipping God unmolested according to the dictates of our conscience, which is no small favor in the position we are placed in, and I pray that the brethren will continually conduct themselves in that way and manner, before God and man, which will bring honor to themselves and the cause they are engaged in, and that those who are placed over us may never regret having employed a company of Mormons.

Which I ask in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

Yours in the everlasting covenent,

CHARLES CHARD.

A few words to my brethren in the Fourth Ward, before I close: Dear brothers and sisters, having so long neglected to write to you, I feel this an opportunity that I should not let pass, to express the feelings of my heart to you, with whom I have been immediately connected. If I begin to mention names the Lord only knows where I should stop, as there are so many with whom I have enjoyed the spirit of God, that I will abstain from individualizing and say to you all as a whole, that my prayers are continually assending unto God, in your behalf, and I know that yours are answered in my behalf, and I am anxiously looking for the time when we shall meet again, if not in St. Louis, in the Vallies of the mountains, just as God shall direct, and I pray God to bless you in the name Jesus Christ,

Believe me to remain, your friend and brother,

In the everlasting covenant,

CHARLES CHARD.

General Prospects of the Work—Emigration of the Saints —Returning home of the Elders, &c.

SIDNEY, May 31, 1855.

PRESIDENT F. D. RICHARDS:

Beloved Brother—* * * * In this place we are so far off from the Saints in the other parts of the world, that it takes a long time to get news. We do betimes hear from Liverpool and G. S. L. City, which always does our hearts good; especially so, when it conveys to us the interesting intelligence that the work of the Lord is rolling forth, and that in nearly every land where the Elders are travelling.

As regards these lands, the Lord is blessing the labors of His servants, and establishing His word through their ministrations.

Although this island is but a fragment broken off from the main land, yet it is nearly as large as North America; but it is much more difficult to travel here than upon that continent. Notwithstanding this, the Elders have successfully entered many parts of these colonies, and have been prospered in their labors.—Considering the number of laborers, and the peculiar nature of the opposition that we have had to contend with, the work has spread here as rapidly as in any other land.

Wherever the Elders have gone they have succeeded, with the exception of Moreton Bay* * This place will be tried again, when I hope that our efforts may be more successful; for I do not like to be thwarted in the purpose for which the Lord has sent me here.

Mostly in entering new places, there is great opposition manifested, and should the Elders give way under such influence, their efforts would be fruitless; but this must not be permitted. Truth must be rolled forth by the power and influence of the Spirit of the Lord, until all the honest in heart have been warned, so that if they will they may escape before the judgments decreed overtake this land. The work is moving on in every direction throughout these colonies.

In New South Wales, the work is more prosperous than in the other colonies. The Saints are more numerous, and the calls for help more frequent and urgent.

In Adelaide, the brethren have been much blessed in their labors, several branches having been organized. Elder A. P. Dowdle has had the Presidency of that Conference. In consequence of ill health he had permission to return home. He gathered up twenty-seven souls out of that Conference, whom he brought up to Victoria, where they united with the Saints of that Conference, and went on board the brig Tarquenia, bound for San Pedro. She sailed on the 27th of April. Elder Dowdle, seeing the condition of the work, desired to stay a few months longer to assist in rolling it forth, to which I consented, so that he still remains with us. Elder B. Frost had the charge of the company above alluded to. They numbered seventy-two souls.—They were all in good health and spirits. Elder P. Smith of this mission, and also Elder Robert Owen of the Indian mission, accompanied them.

There are many Saints left in Adelaide, some of whom intend to leave in April next. Elder John W. Norton is in charge of that Conference, which includes the whole of South Australia. He has several Elders under him as Presidents of the respective branches, but their circumstances will not permit them to travel.

Since the departure of Elders Frost and Smith, Victoria is left without an American Elder. There are many Saints in that colony also, who are doing their utmost to gather as soon as circumstances will permit. The Elders in charge are young and inexperienced—this will cause me to have to travel much in their midst. The prospects in that Conference are good—they are crying for more help.

We want Elders who have had an experience in the work, and of good physical strength; for it is hard to travel in this land. To preach and travel here, soon wears a man out. The cause of so much travelling being necessary is, that the settlements are scattered.

My mission being extensive, it requires much time to be spent in travelling, and it takes considerable means to support it, for travelling expenses are much higher here than in any other place where I have been. It costs on an average about £3 per day to visit the different Conferences. This presses heavily on the brethren who have to bear the whole.

From the foregoing, it is manifest that we want a number of Elders who can be stationed in the localities where the organized branches are, so that these heavy travelling expenses would not be necessary.

The present mission numbered ten, when we arrived here. One, Elder John Hyde, formerly of Stockport, England, died; Elder William Hyde returned with a company of Saints in March, 1853; and two more have returned in the last company.—This reduces the number to six.

Another company of Saints will be sent out in August next. This will go from New South Wales. Two or three more Elders will leave then; for when an Elder begins to desire to go home, I cannot feel to say stay, except it should appear that the spirit of the mission has not left them, as in the case of Elder Dowdle, as but little good will be done by one who is thus anxious to return home.

Another company will leave here in April, 1856; at which time, the Lord willing, I intend to return. Elders Frost and Owens visited Van Dieman's Land, but their stay was short. Both having returned, that place is left without an Elder: but I shall endeavor to send one as soon as possible.

New Zealand is becoming a place of some interest. The mission at that place is being prospered. During my visit there to open up the Gospel, I travelled over a great portion of that colony, visited the principal cities and towns; preached in every place, and several applied for baptism. I left Elder William Cooke in charge of the work there, and returned to Sidney. Elder Cooke had one Priest with him. The latest intelligence from him informs us that he had organized a branch of ten members at Wellington, and had established several places for preaching on the South Island. He wrote from Nelson, at which place he met with considerable opposition, chiefly from the priests; but they cannot stop the work; many are investigating the principles. He calls earnestly for help, having more than one thousand miles to travel, to reach the principal cities.—The settlements are generally on the sea-board. There are no roads from one to the other in the interior. The communication is by water, and the passages are generally very rough. The climate is mild, very good for vegetation and grazing. It is also very healthy. My feelings are, that there will be a good work done on those islands.

I have now given you an outline of the work here at the antipodes, whether it is such as is required I cannot tell, for the 46th No. of the Star has not come to hand.

Give my kind love to all the Elders from the Valley, and except the same for yourself, and may the Lord abundantly bless you, is the sincere desire of your fellow laborer in the Gospel of Christ,

AUGUSTUS FARNHAM.

FROM CALIFORNIA.

Great excitement in Amador County — Six Americans murdered by Mexicans — Particulars of the Tragedy — Pursuit of the Murderers — Three of them Lynched.

Amador county has been the scene of one of the grossest outrages ever perpetrated. A correspondent of the State Journal gives the following particulars:

Yesterday morning, the 6th inst., a party of Chinamen were attacked about three miles below this place by a gang of murderers, composed mostly of Mexicans and Chilenos, and it was said a few Americans were among the number, and succeeded in getting about $1,500 in dust from the hard working "Johns." No more attention was paid to the band of highwaymen until last evening, about half past ten o'clock, when our little town was thrown into great excitement, by the report that about twenty pistol-shots had been fired in Chile Town at several of our citizens. In a short time every citizen armed himself in view of securing the parties. Our constable and Justice King, accompanied by several worthy citizens, proceeded to Chile Town and in an attempt to affect an entrance into a house, a party of Mexicans presented their pistols and fired at them, but fortunately no body was hurt. A great cry was at once raised, and every body was after them, but without success. In the meantime, a guard of citizens was appointed to protect the place. Nothing more was heard until this morning about five o'clock. A messenger arrived from Bancheria, two miles and a half from here, who informed us that last night, about eleven o'clock four Americans, one lady and one Indian were murdered by the Mexicans. Your informant with a great many others proceeded to the place. On arriving there upwards of fifteen hundred persons had collected, and a coroners inquest was being held. Here a horrible spectacle was presented — the like I never had seen before.

In a public house, called Rancheria House, in which the Mexicans made their attack, they killed two strangers who had come in to stay that night, and wounded Mr. Diamond severely; but it is thought that he will recover. They also killed Mrs. Diamond. In this place I cannot award too much praise to the ladies in this vicinity, who proceeded at once to the scene and did all in their power for the wounded men. I must also add that Mrs. Diamond left three children motherless, the youngest being only two months old; who were taken in charge by Mrs. Clark and another lady whose name I could not learn. I have no doubt but everything will done to make them comfortable.

The Mexicans next proceeded to the store of Mr. French, where they procured, after bursting open the safe, and killing Mr. French and his clerk, the sum of $7,000; when they proceeded to parts unknown. In the meantime, a messenger was dispatched to Jackson, and the sheriff accompanied by a posse of upwards of one thousand citizens, started in different directions, and there is little doubt but they will be captured.

After the coroner's inquest was held, the mob, who had by this time arrested about thirty-six Mexicans, proceeded with them about one hundred yards east of the town, to an oak tree, and there a motion was made to hang all thirty-six of them, but through the exertions of several gentlemen, a jury of twelve was selected from the crowd, and three Mexicans who gave their names respectively as Pertervine, Trancolinio, and Jose, were found guilty of murder, and after half an hour's time they were hung on the tree, under whose shade their trial had been conducted.

The testimony elicited was strong against them; one witness swore that he (witness) saw defendants run from the dance house to the store, and saw them about the store at the time the murders were committed, and that they (defendants) joined in the chorus of "Hurrah for Mexico." One of the defendents was identified as being connected with the late notorious Joaquin. But it said that the leader of the band now in this vicinity is the real Joaquin. Many thefts have been committed in this neighborhood, too numerous to mention, and no person feels safe from this desperate band of murderers.

While the trial was being conducted, the outraged community turned out en masse and burned the Spanish dance house and every Spanish house in the place. The flames made much headway, and it was feared at one time that the whole town would go to ashes. A large body of men — your informant, a fireman of your city, included — by great exertion stopped the progress of the flames. I must not forget to mention that one of the parties named in this communication as being two strangers, who were stopping at the public house, was still alive at one o'clock and Drs. Kasmir and Box did all in their power to save him, but of no avail, as he died in one hour afterward.

After the three were hung up, the citizens of Racheria passed a resolution that no Mexican shall hereafter reside at the above place; and every Mexican, who shall be found at Rancheria after seven o'clock this evening should be requested to leave and receive one hundred and fifty lashes in the bargain.

SEBASTOPOL TAKEN!

30,000 KILLED ON BOTH SIDES!

HALIFAX, September 27.—Sebastopol has been taken after three days' bombardment, commencing on the 8th.

SECOND DISPATCH.

The allies were repulsed six times, and lost 20,000 men, the Russians 10,000.

The Russians blew up the defences and fleet, fired the city, and evacuated it.

Five French Generals, including Gen. Bosquet, were among the slain.

An unsuccessful attempt was made to assassinate Napoleon.

THIRD DISPATCH.

The bombardment of Sebastopol continued without intermission from the 5th to the 8th, when the assault commenced. The French attacked Malakoff and Careening Bay; the English assailed Redan. Six repulses were sustained by the French before Malakoff, but on the seventh attempt they carried the works, and hoisted their eagles in Malakoff.—The slaughter was terriffic. It is estimated that 2,000 English, 15,000 French and as many Russians, were killed—making an aggregate of upwards of 30,000.

During the night succeeding the assault, the Russians evacuated the entire South side, first blowing up the defences, sinking all the ships, firing the town, and leaving nothing but smouldering ruins.

A large allied force was marching along the coast, to intercept the retreat of the Russians inland.

The allies found immense materials of war in Sebastopol.

It was reported that instructions had been sent to the allied Generals, in case of Gortchakoff seeking to capitulate, to demand that Russia shall surrender at discretion, all troops, stores, and fortified places, including Odessa.

FOURTH DISPATCH.

The London Times sums up the assault upon Sebastopol as follows: On Saturday, a victorious assault was made upon the Southern part of the town. Before night the French flag waved in triumph upon Malakoff Tower, which fell before the indomitable courage and perseverance of the assailants; and within a few hours more the Russian garrison had evacuated Karabelnaya and the Southern portion of the fortress, after blowing up the magazine and principal works and setting fire to the town in many places. They then endeavored to withdraw by a bridge across the harbor, from the terriffic scene of devastation and defeat.

So fell Sebastopol! These great events terminate the siege.

The Moniteur has the following dispatch:

CAPTURE OF MALAKOFF.—The assault was made at noon of the 8th, and its redoubts and Redan carried by storm, amid shouts of Vive L'Empereur! We immediately occupied ourselves in lodging there, and succeeded in doing so at Malakoff. Redan and Careening Bay not tenable, owing to the heavy fire of the artillery which poured upon the first occupants of that work. On beholding our Eagles floating on Malakoff Tower, Gen. Mesalles made two attacks on the Central Bastion, both of which were unsuccessful. Our losses, meanwhile, were very heavy.

FIFTH DISPATCH.

The plan of the attack was, that the British troops should storm the Redan, and the French the Malakoff. The extreme right of the French made a diversion on the Little Redan, and the united attack of the English, French and Sardinians was made on the Central bastion. All these attacks appear to have been made simultaneously, with great spirit and energy. But the one eminently successful, and which eventually decided the fate of the day, was that made by Generals Bosquet and McMahon on the Malakoff. Both the Redan and Central Bastion were several times in the possession of the storming parties, but so accurately did the guns of the enemy cover these works that, as soon as the allies had gained possession of them and the Russians retreated, the fire which opened upon them was so murderous, that they found it impossible to hold the position so gloriously won.

The French eagles, however, once floating over the Malakoff, the victory was half gained, and the bombardment continued with increased impetuosity and fierceness. Having now the Southern part of the town within range, the English and French mortars opened their infernal fire on the doomed city, and the effect was such that the whole place in a short time was in flames and literally reduced to ashes.

Great rejoicing followed the announcement of the victory in England and France. Bells were rung, guns fired, and all Paris was illuminated.

Another unsuccessful attempt on the life of Napoleon had been made at the Theatre Italian.—[Mo. Republican.

ROMANCE OF INDIAN LIFE.

A private soldier writing from Fort Laramie, under date of March 12, mentions the following incidents of the massacre of Lieutenant Grattan:

"I will give you two facts connected with the massacre, which I have never seen in the newspapers. A musician, one of the party, owned or married a squaw, and on the unfortunate day when she saw danger threatening the troops, she rallied her father and her brother to preserve her lover. When he fell wounded, she rushed to him to protect him from the arrows or perish with him. Her father shot several arrows at the other Indians, and was wounded himself in the zealous defence of the soldier. Then he sat down and wept as he could do no more. The hostile Indians then rushed on the wounded soldier, tore him from the embrace of his faithful squaw, and scalped him before her eyes. After this she would not be prevailed upon to eat or drink, and starved to death, dying in nine days, and glad to go to regain the presence of one she loved so dearly. The only soldier that reached here alive was found by an Indian, who, instead of scalping him, ministered to his wants, carried water to his hiding place, and endeavored to bring him into the Fort during the night, but being unable or afraid to accomplish his purpose, he turned back to Mr. Bordeau's house, bearing the wounded man, or as they said, "that dog." The reply of the noble, friendly savage was, "this white man must live, or I must die," and he bore him off in safety. Such generous deeds should be remembered.

REPUBLICAN STATE CONVENTION.

The Delegates representing the Republican party of this State will assemble at Syracuse on Wednesday, to set forth the principles which that party is organized to uphold, and nominate candidates who will faithfully reflect those principles. We confidently anticipate results which will strengthen and animate the advocates of universal freedom.

There are some outside of the new organization, but very few even pretending to favor it, who talk of a restoration of the Missouri Compromise line as its great object. We know no reason why that line should be re-establised. In its origin, it was forced upon the free States against their deepest convictions and energetic struggles, by the combination of the all but unanimous South with a few doughfaces from the North. The free States rose in their might to forbid the admission of Missouri with her ultra slave constitution. She refused to make it republican, and for two years she was kept out of the Union by the representatives of the North. At length, she was admitted by the caving in of a few Northern members, on the condition, stipulated by the South, that all States thereafter to be formed to the North and West of Missouri should inflexibly be free, while others should be free or slave as their inhabitants should decide. On this express conditon Missouri was admitted. The stipulation referred to the Territory then belonging to the United States, and made no allusion to any other. Under its operation, Arkansas and Florida have been admitted as slave States, and there is no more Territory from which slave States can be made, except that on which the Creeks, Choctaws and other Indians have been settled, and which is solemnly guaranteed to them forever.

The South has received her full share of the consideration stipulated in the Missouri compact—it is now our turn. That compact prescribes that Kansas, Nebraska, and all the territory West of them which belonged to the United States in 1821, shall in due time come into the Union as free States, and not otherwise. We demand the fulfilment of this contract—not its extension. The South has repeatedly offered to make a similar bargain with respect to the territory acquired, or which may hereafter be acquired, of Mexico or Spain; but the North has always refused to make any such bargain. We have fairly bought and paid for the positive exclusion of slavery from all the territory already defined; we demand the fulfilment of that contract without evasion, repudiation, or any sort of bicker whatever. As to any new compromise or bargain to let slavery colonize and possess so much of Mexico, Central America and the West Indies as she may hereafter grab, we are utterly opposed to it, and so, we believe, are the people, of the free States. Let it be evermore understood, then, that what we seek is the fulfilment of an old bargain, not the contraction of a new one. The Missouri restriction (forbidding slavery in all United States territory of 1821 North of 36 deg. 30 min.) we insist on; but no bargain exists, or will hereafter exist, under the compact of 1820-21, affecting territory South of that line.

In view of the imminent peril of the cause of freedom in Kansas, we trust the State convention will keep as close to the practical issue as a may be. The Fugitive Slave Law, and many other bad laws, will require attention in time; but let us first secure freedom in Kansas, and thereby settle the future of Nebraska, New Mexico, and Utah. With Kansas free, it will be morally impossible to smuggle slavery into any State north or west of her, for the slaves will be freed by their transit across her soil. Kansas is the Malakoff of this struggle, and must be held at any cost.—[New York Tribune.

RISE AND BUILD.

His foundation is in the holy mountains. The Lord loveth the gates of Zion more than all the dwellings of Jacob.—Psalms lxxxvii. 1, 2.

Rise and build a house for God!
Bring your free-will offerings now;
On Mount Zion, his abode,
Bow in thankful homage, bow.
Bring the silver and the gold,
Let the streaming incense rise;
Poor and rich, young and old,
Join in loving sacrifice.

Build a temple to his praise,
Offer unto God his own;
Raise the walls in triumph raise.
Lay with shouts, the corner stone;
Dig the strong foundations deep,
Turn in faith' the yielding sod;
Hearts and hands united keep,
Work in love, and work for God.

Pour the voice of mighty prayer,
Heaven will come to your relief;
Cast on God your every care,
Stagger not through unbelief.
Daily labor, watch and pray,
Soon the top-stone shall appear;
Multitudes keep holy day,
Kneel and wait, and worship here.

Witnesses for Christ, arise!
Soldiers of the cross draw near;
Lift your banner to the skies,
Open your commission here.
Blow the gospel trumpet, blow,
Cry aloud, to sinners cry;
Spare not, till the world shall know,
God has brought salvation nigh.

Here, as at Jerusalem,
Let the fire of God come down;
Send the cloven tongues of flame,
Every faithful message crown.
Conquering Jesus, O, appear,
Gather thousands by thy grace;
Carry on thy victories here,
Clasp the world in thine embrace.

HON. STEPHEN A. DOUGLAS.

The Hon. S. A. Douglas delivered a speech in this city on Friday evening the 21st, which was partially reported for the Republican, from which we take the following interesting items:

"Mr. Douglas at the time we got within hearing distance, was advocating the constitutional right of the new States to enter the Confederacy without any other restrictions or restraints than those imposed by the Constitution. The new States are as sovereign and as independent as the old; and any attempt at dictation, by which the wish or will of their citizens is to be tramelled, takes from them the dignity of sovereignties and reduces them to the level of colonies or dependencies. Neither the Government, nor the members of the Union separate or collectively, has a constitutional right to interfere with the domestic or local arrangements of a new State when she asks for admission into the Union. Those matters are left to the people of the State to decide. It was thus considered by the framers of the Constitution, and that instument admits of no other construction. In proof of this, it is only necessary to refer to history. Of the thirteen States which formed the Union originally, twelve of them were slave-holding. It is not probable, therefore, that he subject of the non-admission of new States because they should adopt the institution of slavery, received any fervor when such a large majority existed. It was wisely provided, that with such an extensive territory, embracing various interests, the local affairs peculiar to different sections should be left to the judgment and decision of the people of those sections, and that general principles alone should be adopted by the Federal Government suitable to the maintenance and interests of the whole. This view was further coroborated by the subsequent acts of many of the old States. Six of them after the adoption of the Constiution, at various periods thought proper, to abolish slavery within their limits; and this they did without petitioning Congress for the right, or receiving a single remonstrance thereto from any that retained it.

The Kansas-Nebraska Bill contains nothing more than a recognition of this fundamental principle of the Constitution. It does not say that slavery shall, or shall not exist in these territories; it only maintains the right of the citizens there to determine the matter for themselves, and act as their best interest shall seem to require.

The speaker advocated the constitutional right of the people of a Territory to legislate for themselves and denied the authority of the Abolitionists of the north, or of any other section of the country, to make laws for, or regulate the local affairs of a Territory. Why should not the citizens of a Territory be permitted to legislate for themselves? They are certainly as capable as others for the performance of such duties. Who are the people of Kansas? They are the citizens of Missouri, Ilinois and other States of this Union; men who, before their removal to that section, were entitled to all the privileges of the elective franchise, and were considered sufficiently able to perform the duties of American citizens throughout the whole range of their requirements. The mere act of emigrating certainly did not dispossess them of their mental powers. In leaving Missouri for Kansas, a man is supposed to take his mind along with his body, and if that mind was sufficiently enlightened to participate in legislative affairs here, why may it not be permitted to take part in legislation there? The people of the Territories are better acquainted with their own interests than others possibly can be, and this a strong additional reason — a practical evidence — that they should be permitted to attend those interests. Acquainted with the principles of self-government, they do not ask the fanatics of any other State, to interfere in their behalf. Under the impression that they are fully capable of performing all duties conducive to the general welfare, they have enacted they own laws; and if these laws shall prove defective or bad, it is within their province and power to modify or repeal them, as experience shall suggest.

The argument advanced, that the people of the Territories are not capable of legislating for themselves, is the same argument used by despotism everywhere. Go to the Emperor of Russia and ask him why he does not permit the people of his empire to participate in the law making power, and he will tell you that they are unfit for such duties. Go to the Emperor of Austria and interrogate him on the subject, and he will reply that the German masses are inadequate to the task. Propound the question to any other despot, and the reply will be the same. Shall we copy after absolutisms, and apply the slavish restrictions to American citizens? If any one is willing to occupy such an anti-republican position, to him my advocasy of the Nebraska bill will prove offensive I maintain, said the speaker, that in accordance with the principles of our Government, the people of every State and Territory have a right, and should be permitted to make their own laws, without any restraint or prohibition save those expressly contained in the Constitution. Any interference not recognized by that instrument, is a step towards despotism, a curtailment of sacred vested rights, which should be arrested and redressed at as early a moment as posible.

It will be found upon examination that all the isms of the day bear a striking resemblance. Their common parantage is fanaticism. Some individuals are monomaniac on the subject of niggerology, or Abolitionism; others, on Liquor-lawism, or a system of compulsory morality; others again, are fanatical on Know-nothingism, and so on through the whole catalogue of isms. In Illinois these isms are extremely productive, and there they will be found combined, like an allied army, against the Constitutional rights of the citizen. Whatever may have been their differences in politics heretofore, these fanatics now unite as one man in support of a common candidate, from the office of President of the United States to that of constable, be he a Know-nothing, Abolitionist, or Maine Liquor Law advocate. They all recognize the relationship and affinity existing between them, and mutually render the ablest support for the welfare and success of each.

There is no despotism more galling than that which peers into domestic affairs — which enters a man's house, and proscribes what he shall eat and what he SHAN'T drink. We may look upon such an innovation at first as a very little matter; but it is nevertheless an infringement of the liberties of the citizen. One portion of the Constitution, by its enforcement is destroyed, and this only tends to further aggression. Go on your beautiful levee, and sever one strand of the hawser which retains a noble steamer at her berth — it is not much, to be sure, and weakens the cable but a little; but then sever another, and another, and soon that magnificent palace, the pride of your harbor, will float a powerless hulk to your shore. So with the Constitution; we must preserve it entire — live up to its repuirements in all its parts, if we would preserve the sacred ark of our liberties. Many persons deem it a crime for a man to indulge in ardent spirits in any form. Lager beer with such is a sin, and whisky and brandy are infamous. But others, again, think differently. Each is entitled to his opinion, and each should be allowed to practice what he preaches. The teetotaller is not compelled to act against his convictions; no law of the land should compel another to refrain from indulging when his inclinations leads in that direction. In truth, we can only preserve the blessings we enjoy by extending to each and all the privileges conferred by the Constitution.

Abolitionism came first, and now we have Know-nothingism and Maine-law-ism. One would take away a man's property and interfere with the sovereignty of a State; another prescribes on account of religious opinions; and the third enters the domestic circle and institutes the most exacting scrutiny. I contend that every State and Territory has the right to regulate within themselves the laws by which they shall be governed. Missouri must regulate for herself — Illinois for herself — Kansas for herself; and the people of these portions of the country should be the sole guardians of their own laws; When such laws do not conflict with the Constitution of the United States, no other party or power should be permitted to interfere. Upon this great principle was the Nebraska bill, and other measures founded. If it be wrong, then the Constitution of the country is wrong; if it be bad and defective, then the organic law of the land is bad and defective.

[A question was here propounded to the speaker, asking his views in relation to the policy of establishing slavery in Kansas,]

Mr. Douglas replied: The same question has been frequently asked in my own State. I will answer here as I answered there. It is none of my business to say what is good or bad policy for the people of Kansas. I am a citizen of Illinois, and have no voice in the council halls of that Territory. When I entertain a wish to participate in her legislative policy, I shall become a citizen first, and then with the legal right of a voter, exercise the rights guaranteed to her people. But the question is significant, and fully bears out the provisions of the bill. That provision leaves the question to be answered by those most deeply interested, and the difficulty to be met by those best acquainted with all the attendant circumstances. I deny the right of the citizens of Illinois, Missouri, Massachusetts, or of any other State, to interfere with Kansas in her Territorial organization or the institutions she may adopt, when they are within the limits of the present Constitution.

I hold that when Massachusets, through her Legislature, created a corporetion, with five millions of money, for the purpcse of sending the worst portion of her population into Kansas to control the elections there, they performed an act in express contravention of their duties, in violation of their oaths of office, and were guilty of an encroachment on the liberties and rights of that portion of the Union, as though they had really attempted to enforce their policy by the bayonet."

Great Battle with the Indians—80 to 100 killed—The Indians completely routed—All their Camp Equipage and Provisions Captured—American loss trifling.

Gen. Harney has signalized his advent into the Sioux country by one of the most gallant and complete victories ever obtained over an Indian enemy. The victory is so thorough as to strike terrior into the whole of the savage tribes occupying that extended section of country. Still, there may be hard fighting to do before they are completely subdued. As yet, we are without details, our own letters not having come to hand. But other letters, immediately from the battle ground, have been received in this city, from which we gather some of the details of the battle.

The engagement took place on the 3d inst., at the Sand Hills, on the North fork of the Platte. The entire force of the United States troops who participated in the engagement is stated at four hundred and fifty men. Maj. Cudy was in command of five companies of the 6th Infantry. Col. Cooke had command of two companies of the Second Dragoons, one company of Infantry, mounted, and a company of Artillery. The whole force under the command of Gen. Harney.

The battle commenced early in the morning, and lasted several hours. Gen. Harney ordered Col. Cooke's command to place themselves in position some distance in advance of the Infantry, and so as to come down with full force upon the enemy. This movement was successfully performed about three o'clock in the morning. The engagement was then brought on by the Infantry, who attacked and drove the Indians in the direction of Col. Cooke's command. They were of course ready and eager for the fray, and commenced a desperate attack upon the enemy. They soon routed them, and a running fight followed for some ten miles. At a point of rocks, a portion of the Indians are said to have made a stand, and to have fought with great desperation. But they were completely routed—having seventy or eighty men killed, and fifty women and children taken prisoners. They suffered also the loss of all their camp plunder —a large amount of dried buffalo meat, their lodges, and fifty horses. The Indian women, it is said, fought furiously.

On the part of Gen. Harney's force, five or six were killed, and as many wounded. No officers were among the killed.

The Indians who were concerned in this battle were the Brule Sioux of the Platte—the same who were concerned in the massacre of Lieut. Grattan's command, near Fort Laramie, and the murder of the mail party, and who have frequently defied the United States to meet them in battle. Among the papers found with them, were the way-bills of the mail which they had captured.

The letters speak of the engagement as a very gallant and well conducted affair, as it undoubtedly was, to be successful in killing so many of the enemy and the capture of their women and children.

This war will not end here. The Indians will not be satisfied with a single engagement, though the result has been most disastrous to them. It is not probable that they will again risk a general engagement, but their policy will be to annoy and harrass our troops, by inviting pursuit into distant and inaccessible portions of the country, and there giving them battle. But they will find Gen. Harney, and the forces under his command, ready to meet and chastise them at any point and under all circumstances.

We hope to receive full accounts of this battle by to day's mail. All that we have stated is from an authentic source.—[Mo. Republican.

MC'LEAN'S VOLCANIC OIL LINIMENT is truly a celebrated remedy, and has done more to alleviate human suffering than any other remedy ever discovered.
One or two applications will relieve the most severe pain, bruise or sprain.
Two bottles will cleanse, purify, and heal the foulest ulcer or sore, and it will heal the most severe burn or scald without a scar.
Every family should have a supply constantly on hand, for use in time of need.
Read the following extract of a letter, which is incontestable proof of its wonderful efficacy:

A BLIND MAN RESTORED TO SIGHT.

J. H. McLEAN—Dear Sir: * * * I have been suffering for four years with rheumatic sore eyes, being at times altogether blind. I procured the advice of several physicians, but none of them could do me any good. By the advice of a friend I applied your "Volcanic Oil Liniment," according to the directions around the bottle, and it has cured me permanently. I have used it since for bruises, pains, &c., and it has always given immediate relief. I live on the main road near Farmington.
Yours, respectfully, JOHN H. ALLERD.
Jefferson county, Mo.

For horses it is far superior to any other remedy for curing lameness, bruises, cuts, old sores, swellings, &c.
We say, then, to all who may be suffering from external diseases, call at once and get a supply. Thousands of bottles are sold (and used) daily, and we have never heard of a case where it has failed in giving relief when properly applied.
☞For sale by J. H. MCLEAN, the proprietor, corner Third and Pine streets, St. Louis, and by all respectable dealers in Medicines everywhere.

Mustang Liniment and the Ladies.—In our opinion, nothing is above the comprehension of women; and with less prejudice, more liberality, and much keener perception than men, when a new idea is presented, a new doctrine taught, or a new fact asserted, she grasps it at once, and with the rapidity and clearness almost of instinct, decides upon its merits or truthfulness; and if her decision be favorable, she enthusiastically advocates and supports it. Thus the common saying has obtained—"Once get the women on your side and you are safe" and we are happy to state that we have the ladies all in favor of the MUSTANG LINIMENT. They have tried it for caked breasts, sore nipples, sores, chafes, and burns on children, as well as for croup and mumps; also, for corns, tooth-ache, pains in the limbs and joints, sore eyes, eruptions, cuts and bruises, and they have always found it effectual—and they go about like angels, as they are, proclaiming it to their friends and to all they see or hear tell of, who are suffering. We have daily calls for it by persons who say such and such ladies recommended them to try it.
Go on ladies in your "good Samaritan" work, and thousands will bless you for your timely advice.

MEDICINE FOR THE BILLION!
A Certain Remedy for all Diseases of
MAN OR ANIMALS,
Requiring an External Application.
Warranted in every Case for which it is Recommended!

THE MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT!
Unlike all other popular medicines, it is used by many prominent members of the faculty, and many of the public Hospitals. Their prejudices have yielded to indisputable and incontrovertible demonstrations of cures performed where their remedies had failed.
It has cured more cases of
RHEUMATISM
than any other medicine ever used. Its efficacy in this terrible disease is acknowledged by all who have used it. It not only cures the complaint, but appears to give a vigor and elasticity to the limbs, before unknown, thus performing a double office.

A FEW TESTIMONIALS.

PATH FINDER OFFICE, May 11, 1854.
G. W. WESTBROOK:—
Please send me by the bearer three large bottles of your Mexican Mustang Liniment, as I wish to take it up to my place in Vermont, not thinking it advisable to do without it. I have used it in my family and on my horses, and have found it invaluable. Yours,
J. T. WHITNEY.

ELIZABETHTOWN, TENN., May 25, 1855.
MR. G. W. WESTBROOK:—
Dear Sir—It affords me much pleasure in saying to you that the Mexican Mustang Liniment outsells any medicine that I have ever had for sale, and comes nearer doing what it promises to do. Send me another supply, as I am nearly out. Yours respectfully,
JOHN SINGLETRAY, P. M.

PHILADELPHIA, June 11, 1854.
MR. G. W. WESTBROOK:
Sir—My son was afflicted with a swelling upon the knee joint, which confined him to the house. I had a doctor attending him for some time, but he did not do him any good. One of my neighbors told me to use the Mustang Liniment. I asked the doctor if I could do so, and he told me he thought I could not do better.
I procured one bottle, and in about a week he was able to go out.
I can safely recommend it to the afflicted.
Respectfully yours, MRS. BENNETT.

W. S. Ladd & Co., of Portland, Oregon, writes that there is an immense demand for the Mexican Mustang Liniment in that country, and orders forty gross to be shipped by Golden Gate, that sails in a few days from New Yook.

Park & White of San Francisco, California, order 100 gross, to be forwarded by first clipper for that port.

PORT AU PRINCE, HAYTI, Jan. 16th, 1854.
I had the pleasure to receive invoice and boxes Mexican Mustang Liniment per Croton, and have no doubt it will have a brisk sale on the island.
GEORGE RACKSTER.

To give health, strength and eiecity to the limbs, there is nothing can equal in effect, the
MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT.
FARMERS AND LIVERY STABLE KEEPERS
have need it for the following diseases with extraordinary success, certifying invariably to the efficacy of the Liniment, and the truthfulness of our assertions in its behalf:
Spavin, Splint, Ring-bone, Fistula, Wind Galls, Big Head, Bruises, Strains, String-halt, Scratches, Cracked Heels, Sweney, Saddle, Collar, or Harness Galls, Hard Lumps or Tumor, Film, or other diseases of the Eye, Poll-Evil, &c.
The small sizes retail for 25 cents per bottle;
The medium size retail for 50 cents per bottle;
The large sizes retail for one dollar per bottle.
The medium holds three times as much as the small;
The Large holds nearly three times as much as the medium,
Therefore the large bottles are the cheagest.

ADDRESS.

TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STASES.

We have been appointed by a convention of citizens of Missouri, mainly representing that portion of the State lying contiguous to the Territory of Kansas, to lay before you some suggestions upon a topic which vitaly concerns our State, and which, it is believed, may to a serious extent affect the general welfare of our country.

We propose to discharge this duty by a concise and candid exposition of facts, tc ching our condition and its bearing upon Kansas, accompanied with such reflections as the facts naturally suggest.

That portion of Missouri which borders on Kansas contains as nearly as can now be ascertained, a population of fifty thousand slaves, and their estimated value, at the prices prevailing here, is about twenty-five millions ot dollars. As the whole State contains but about one hundred thousand slaves, it will be seen that one-half of the entire slave population of Missouri is located in the eighteen counties bordering on Kansas, the greater of which is separated from that Territory by no natural boundary, and is within a days ride of the line. This part of our State is distinguished by a uniform fertility of soil, a temperate and healthful climate, and a population progressing rapidly in all the elements that constitute a prosperous community. Agriculture is in a most flourishing condition, and the towns and villages which have sprung up indicate a steady progress towards wealth, refinement, and commercial importance. Nor have the higher interests of education, religion and science been neglected; but common schools and respectable institutions of a higher grade, and churches of every Christian denomination are found in every county. The great staple of this district is hemp, although tobacco, and corn, and wheat are also largely produced. The culture of hemp has been found profitable—more so than cotton in the South; and this fact, with the additional ones, that almost every foot of land within the counties alluded to is wonderfully adapted by nature to its production, in greater quantities and finer qualities, and at smaller cost, than in any other State in the Union, and that the climate is such as to permit the growers of this article to reside on their estates,-will readily explain and account for the unexampled growth of the country. Already it constitutes the most densely populated portion of our State, and its remarkable fertility of soil and general salubrity of climate, with the facilities for outlet furnished by a noble river running through its midst, and two great railroads, destined soon to traverse its upper and lower borders, will render it, at no distant period, if left undisturbed, as desirable and flourishing a district as can be found in the Mississippi Valley.

An idea has to some extent prevailed abroad, that Missouri contained but a very small slave population, and that the permanence of this institution here was threatened by the existence of at least a respectable minority of her citizens, ready and anxious to abolish it, and that only a slight external pressure was necessary to accomplish this purpose. We regret that this opinion has to some extent received countenance from the publication and patronage of journals in our commercial metropolis, evidently aiming at such a result. Without, however, going into any explanation of political parties here, which would be entirely foreign to our purpose, we think it proper to state, that the idea above alluded to is unfounded; and that no respectable party can be found in this State, outside of St. Louis, prepared to embark in any such schemes. In that city, constituting the great outlet of our commerce, as well as that of several other States and Territories, it will not seem surprising that its heterogeneous population should furnish a foothold for the wildest and most visionary projects. St. Louis was, however, represented in our Convention, and it is not thought unwarrantable to assume that the resolutions adopted by this body have received the cordial approbation of a large and influential portion of her citizens.—Other counties, besides St. Louis, outside of the district to which our observations have been principally directed, were also represented by delegates; and had not the season of the year, the short notice of its intended session, and the locality where the Convention was held—remote from the centre of the State—prevented, we doubt not that delegates from every county in the State would have been in attendance. Indeed, a portion of the upper Mississippi and lower Mississippi counties are as deeply, though less directly interested in this question, as any part of this State; and their citizens are known to accord most heartily in the sentiments and actions of Western Missouri. Even in the Southwest part of our State, from the Osage to the borders of Arkansas, where there are but few slaves, the proceedings of public meetings indicate the entire and active sympathy of their people. From the general tone of the public press throughout the State, a similar inference is deducible, and, we feel warranted in asserting, a very general, if not unanimous concurrence in the principles adopted by the Lexington Convention. Those principles are embodied in a series of resolutions appended to this address, and which, we are happy to say, were adopted with entire unanimity, by a body representing every shade of political opinion to be found in the interior of our State. These facts are conclusive of the condition of public sentiment in Missouri. The probabilities of changes here in reference to the question of slavery, are not essentially different from what they are in Tennessee, or Virginia, or Kentucky. In relation to numbers, a reference to the census shows that Missouri contains double the number of Arkansas, nearly double the number of Texas, and about an equal number with Maryland.

These facts are stated with a view to a proper understanding of our position in reference to the settlement of Kansas, and the legitimate and necessary interest felt in the progress and character of that settlement. Previous to the repeal of the Congressional restriction of 1820, by which Missouri was thrown into an isolated position in reference to the question of slavery, and made a solitary exception to a general rule, her condition in regard to the territory West of her border, and yet North of the geographical line which Congress had fixed as the terminus of Southern institutions, was truly unenviable. With two States on her Northern and Eastern border, in many portions of which the Constitution of the United States, and the Fugitive Slave Law, passed in pursuance thereof, were known to be as inefficacious for the protection of our rights as they would have been in London or Canada, it was left to the will of Congress, by enforcing the restriction of 1820, to cut Missouri off almost entirely from all territorial connexion with States having institutions congenial to her own, and with populations ready and willing to protect and defend them. No alternative was left to that body but to repeal the restriction, and thus leave to the Constitution and the laws of nature, the settlement of our Territories, or, by retaining the restriction, indirectly to abolish slavery in Missouri. If the latter alternative had to be selected, it would have been an act of charity and mercy to the slaveholders of Missouri, to warn them in time of the necessity of abandoning their homes, or manumitting or selling their slaves—to give them ample time to determine between the sacrifice of fifty millions of slave property, or seventy millions of landed estate. Direct legislation would have been preferable to indirect legislation, leading to the same result, and the enforcement of the restriction in the settlement of Kansas was virtually the abolition of slavery in Missouri. But Congress acted more wisely, as we think and with greater fidelity to the Constitution and the Union.

The history of the Kansas-Nebraska bill is known to the country. It abolished the geographical line of 36 deg. 30 min., by which the limits of slavery were restricted, and substituted a constitutional and just principle, which left to the settlers of the Territories to adopt such domestic institutions as suited themselves. If ever there was a principle calculated to commend itself to all reasonable men, and reconcile all conflicting interests, this would seem to have been the one. It was the principle of popular sovereignty—the basis upon which our independence had been achieved—and it was therefore supposed to be justly dear to all Americans, of every latitude and every creed. But fanaticism was not satisfied. The abolitionists and their allies moved heaven and earth to accomplish its defeat, and although unsuccessful they did not therefore despair. Out-voted in Congress, receiving no countenance from the Executive, they retired to another theatre of action, and strange to say, they prostituted an ancient and respectable Commonwealth—one of the Old Thirteen—to commence, in her sovereign capacity as a State, with the means and imposing attitude incident to such a position, a crusade against slavery, novel in its character, more alarming in its features, and likely to be more fatal in its consequences, than all the fanatical movements hitherto attempted, since the appearance of abolitionism as a political party in 1835. They originated and matured a scheme, never before heard of or thought of in this country, the object and effect of which was to evade the principle of the Kansas-Nebraska bill, and in lieu of non-intervention by Congress to substitute active intervention by the States. An act of incorporation was passed; a company with a capital of five millions was chartered; and this company was authorized to enlist an army of mercenary fanatics and transport them to Kansas. Recruiting officers were stationed in places most likely to furnish the proper material; premiums were offered for recruits; the public mind was stimulated by glowing and false descriptions of the country proposed to be occupied, and a Hessian band of mercenaries was thus prepared and forwarded, to commence, and carry on a war of extermination against slavery.

To call these people emigrants, is a sheer perversion of language. They are not sent to cultivate the soil, to better their social condition, to add to their individual comforts, or the aggregate wealth of the nation. They do not move from choice or taste, or from any motive affecting, or supposed to affect, themselves or their families. They have none of the marks of the old pioneers, who cut down the forests of Kentucky, Ohio and Indiana, or levelled the canebrakes of Tennessee and Mississippi, or broke up the plains of Illinois and Missouri. They are mostly ignorant of agriculture; picked up in cities or villages, they of course have no experience as farmers, and if left to their unaided resources—if not clothed and fed by the same power which has effected their transportation—they would starve or freeze. They are hirelings—an army of hirelings—recruited and shipped indirectly by a sovereign State of this Union, to make war upon an institution now existing in the Territory to which they are transplanted, and thence to inflict a fatal blow upon the resources, the prosperity and the peace of a neighboring State. They are military colonies, planted by a State government to subdue a territory opened to settlement by Congress, and take exclusive possession thereof. In addition to that esprit du corps, which of necessity pervades such an organization, they have in common a reckless and desperate fanaticism, which teaches them that slavery is a sin, and that they are doing God's service in hastening its destruction. They have been picked and culled from the ignorant masses, which Old England and New England negro philanthropy has stirred up and aroused to madness on this topic, and have been selected with reference to their views on this topic alone. They are men with a single idea; and to carry out this, they have been instructed and taught to disregard the laws of God and man; to consider bloodshed and arson, insurrection, destruction of property, or servile war, as the merest trifles, compared with the glory and honor of seducing a single slave from his master, or harboring and protecting the thief who has carried him off!

That such a population would be fatal to the peace and security of the neighboring State of Missouri, and immediate destruction of such owners of slaves as had already moved to the Territory of Kansas, is too clear to admit of argument. A horde of our Western savages, with avowed purposes of destruction to the white race, would be less formidable neighbors.

The colonization of Kansas with a population of this character was a circumstance which aroused attention, and excited alarm among our citizens here, and those who had already emigrated to Kansas.—Could any other result have been expected? Did sensible men at the North—did the Abolitionists themselves, expect any other?

Missouri contained, as we have seen, one hundred thousand slaves, and their value amounted to fifty millions of dollars. Have these fanatics who pronounced slavery an individual sin, and a national curse, ever yet pointed out any decently plausible scheme by which it could be removed? The entire revenue of our State, for ordinary fiscal purposes, scarcely reaches five hundred thousand dollars, and the abolition of slavery here would involve the destruction of productive capital estimated at fifty millions of dollars, or taxation upon the people of five millions of dollars annually, which is the legalized interest upon this amount of capital, besides the additional tax which would be necessary to raise a sinking fund to pay off the debt created. The constitution of Missouri prohibits the Legislature from passing laws emancipating slaves, without a full compensation to their owners; and it is therefore apparent, that tenfold the entire revenue of the State would be barely sufficient to pay the interest upon a sum equivalent to the actual money value of the slaves, without providing any means to extinguish the principal which such a debt would create. We omit altogether, in this calculation, the impracticability and impolicy and cruelty to both races, of liberating the slave here, with no provision for their removal, and the additional debt which such removal would create, equal, in all probability, to that occasioned by their mere emancipation. It would seem then, that the merest glance at the statistical tables of our State, showing its population and revenue, must have satisfied the most sanguine Abolitionist of the futility of his schemes. If the investigation was pursued further, and our estimate was made to embrace the three millions and a half of slaves now in the Southern and Southwestern States, and the billions to which our computation must ascend in order to ascertain their value in money, this anti-slavery crusade, which presents itself in a form of open aggression against the white race, without the semblance or pretext of good to that race for which the Abolitionist professes so much regard, and which stands so much higher in his affections than his own, is seen to be one of mere folly and wickedness, or, what is perhaps worse, a selfish and sectional struggle for political power.

It is a single fact, and one worthy of notice in this connection, that in the history of African slavery up to this time, no government has ever yet been known to abolish it, which fairly represented the interests and opinions of the governed. Great Britain, it is true, abolished slavery in Jamaica, but the planters of Jamaica had no potential voice in the British Parliament. The abolition of slavery in New England and in the Middle States can hardly be cited as an exception, since that abrogation was not so much the result of positive legislation as it was of natural causes—the unfitness of climate and productions to slave labor. It is well known to those familiar with the jurisprudence of this country and of England, that slavery has been in no instance created by positive statutory enactment, nor has it been thus abolished in any country when the popular will was paramount in legislative action. Its existence and non-existence appears to depend entirely upon causes beyond the reach of government action, and this fact should teach some dependence upon the will of an overruling Providence, which works out its ends in a mode, and at a time, not always apparent to finite mortals.

The history of some of our slaveholding States, in relation to efforts of this character, it would seem, ought to be conclusive, at least, against those who have no actual interests involved, and whom a proper sense of self-respect, if not of constitutional obligation, should restrain from impertinent interference. Virginia in 1831, and Kentucky more recently, were agitated from centre to circumference by a bold and unrestricted discussion of the subject of emancipation. Upon the hustings and in legislative assemblies, the subject was thoroughly examined, and every project which genius or philanthropy could suggest, was investigated. Brought forward in the Old Dominion, under the sanction of names venerated and respected throughout the limits of the commonwealth—well known to have been a cherished project of her most distinguished statesmen—favored by the happening of a then recent servile disturbance, and patronized by some of the most patriotic and enlightened citizens, the scheme nevertheless failed, without a show of strength or a step in advance towards the object contemplated. The magnitude of the difficulties to be overcome was so great, and so obvious as to strike alike the emancipationists and their adversaries. The result has been, both in Virginia and Kentucky, that slavery, to use the language of one of Kentucky's eloquent and distinguished sons, and one, too, of the foremost in the work of emancipation, "has been accepted as a permanent part of their social system." Can it be that there is a destitution of honesty—of intelligence—of patriotism and piety in slaveholding States, and that these qualities are alone to be found in Great Britain and the Northern free States? If not, the conclusion must be, that the difficulties in the way of such an enterprise exceed all the calculations of statesmanship and philosophy, and their removal must await the will of that Being, whose prerogative it is to make crooked paths straight, and justify the ways of God to man.

We have no thought of discussing the subject of slavery. Viewed in its social, moral or economical aspects, it is regarded, as the resolutions of the Convention declare, as solely and exclusively a matter of State jurisdiction, and therefore one which does not concern the Federal Government, or the States where it does not exist. We have merely adverted to the fact, in connexion with the recent abolition movements upon Kansas, that amidst all their fierce denunciations of slavery for twenty years past, these fanatics have never yet been able to suggest a plan for its removal, consistent with the safety of the white race—saying nothing of constitutional guarantees, Federal and State.

The colonization scheme of Massachusetts, as we have said, excited alarm in Missouri. Its obvious design was to operate further than the mere prevention of the natural expansion of slavery. It was intended to narrow its existing limits—to destroy all equilibrium of power between the North and South, and leave the slave-holder at the will of a majority, ready to disregard constitutional obligations, and carry out to their bitter end the mandates of ignorance, prejudice and bigotry. Its success manifestly involved a radical change in our Federal Government, or its total overthrow. If Kansas could be thus abolitionized, every additional part of the present public domain hereafter opened to settlement, and every future accession of territory, would be the subject of similar experiments, and an exploded Wilmot Proviso thus virtually enforced throughout an extended domain still claimed as national, and still bearing on its military ensigns the stars and stripes of the Union. If the plan was constitutional and legal, it must be conceded that it was skillfully contrived and admirably adapted to its ends. It was also eminently practicable, if no resistance was encountered, since the States adopting it contained a surplus population which could be bought up and shipped, whilst the South, which had an interest in resisting, had no such people among her white population. The Kansas-Nebraska law, too, which was so extremely hateful to the fanatics, and has constituted the principal theme of their recent denunciations, would be a dead letter, both as it regards the Territories for which it was particularly framed, and as a precedent to Congress for the opening of other districts to settlement. The old Missouri restriction could have done no more, and the whole purpose of the anti-slavery agitators, both in and out of Congress, was quietly accomplished. But the scheme failed—as it deserved to fail; and as the peace, prosperity and union of our country required it should fail. It was a scheme totally at variance with the genius of our government, both State and Federal, and with the social institutions which these governments were designed to protect, and its success would have been as fatal to those who contrived it, as it could have been to those intended to be its victims.

The circumstances of novelty is entitled to its weight in politics as well as law. The abolition irruption upon Kansas is without precedent in our history. Seventy-nine years of our national life have rolled by; Territory after Territory has been annexed, or settled, and added to the galaxy of States, until from thirteen we have increased to thirty-two, yet it never before entered into the head of any statesman, North or South, to devise a plan of acquiring exclusive occupation of a Territory by State colonization. To Massachusetts belongs the honor of its invention, and we trust she will survive its defeat. But she is not the Massachusetts, we must do justice to her past history to say, that she was in the times of her Adams, her Hancocks, and her Warrens; nor yet is she where she stood in more recent times, when her Websters, and Choates, and Winthrops led the van of her statesmen. Her legislative halls are filled with ruthless fanatics, dead to the past and reckless to the future; her statute books are polluted with enactments purporting to annul the laws of Congress, passed in pursuance and by reason of the special requirements of the Constitution; and her senatorial chairs at Washington are filled by a rhetorician and a bigot, one of whom studies to disguise in the drapery of a classic elocution, the most hideous and treasonable forms of fanaticism, whilst his colleague is pleased to harange a city rabble with open and unadulterated disunionism, associated with the oracles of abolitionism and infidelity—a melancholy spectacle to the descendants of the compatriots of Benjamin Franklin!

No southern or slaveholding State has ever attempted to colonize a territory. Our public lands have been left to the occupancy of such settlers as soil and climate invited. The south has sent no armies to force slave labor upon those who preferred free labor. Kentucky sprung from Virginia, as did Tennessee from North Carolina, and Kansas will from Missouri—from contiguity of territory and similarity of climate. Emigration has followed the parallels of latitude, and will continue to do so unless diverted by such organizations as Emigrant-Aid Societies and Kansas Leagues.

It has been said that the citizens of Massachusetts have an undoubted right to emigrate to Kansas; that this right may be exercised individually, or in families, or in larger private associations; and that associated enterprise, under the sanction of legislative enactments, is but another and equally justfiable form of emigration. Political actions, like those of individuals, must be judged by their motives and effects. Unquestionably, emigration, both individual and collective, from the free States to the south, and vice versa, from the slave States to the north, has been progressing from the foundation of our government to the present day, without comment and without objection. It is not pretended that such emigration, even if fostered by State patronage, would be illegal, or in any respect objectionable. The wide expanse of the fertile west, and the deserted wastes of the sunny south, invite occupation; and no man from the southern extremity of Florida, to the northern boundary of Missouri, has ever objected to an emigrant simply because he was from the north, and preferred free labor to that of slaves. Upon this subject he is allowed to consult his own taste, convenience and conscience; and it is expected that he will permit his neighbors to exercise the same privilege. But, no one can fail to distingush between an honest, bona fide, emigration, prompted by choice or necessity, and an organized colonization with offensive purposes upon the institutions of the country proposed to be settled. Nor can there be any doubt in which class to place the movement of the Massachusetts Emigrant Aid Societies and Kansas Leagues. Their motives have been candidly avowed, and their objects boldly proclaimed throughout the length and breadth of the land. Were this not the case, it would still be impossible to mistake them. Why, we might well inquire if simple emigration was in view, are these extraordinary efforts confined to the Territory of Kansas? Is Nebraska, which was open to settlement by the same law, less desirable, less inviting to Northern adventurers, than Kanas? Are Iowa, and Washington, and Oregon, and Minnesota, and Illinois, and Michigan, filled up with population—their lands all occupied, and furnishing no room for Massachusetts emigrants? Is Massachusetts herself overrun with population—obliged to rid herself of paupers whom she cannot feed at home? Or, is Kansas, as eastern orators have insinuated, a newly discovered paradise—a modern El Dorado, where gold and precious stones can be gathered at pleasure; or an Arcadia, where nature is so bountiful as not to need the aid of man, and fruits and vegetables of every desirable description spontaneously spring up.

There can be but one answer to these questions, and that answer shows conclusively the spirit and intent of this miscalled and pretended emigration. It is anti-slavery movement. As such it was organized and put in motion by an anti-slavery Legislature; as such the organized army was equipped in Massachusetts, and transported to Kansas; and as such, it was met there and defeated.

MASSACHUSETTS POLITICS.—The Springfield American declares it will not support "the Monster" born at Worcester, on Thursday. As a specimen of the spirit of the paper, we quote:

"A native American Convention will be called at once, and action will be the watch-word We have time yet to bury fusion and its emissaries face downwards, that the struggles of the monster shall dig him deeper into the ground."

THE great are under as much difficulty to expend with pleasure, as the mean to labor with success.

EXCHANGE ON SALT LAKE.

Emigrants, Missionaries, and all persons wishing to carry or send money to any part of Utah, are hereby notified that we have made the necessary arrangements, and are prepared to furnish SIGHT DRAFTS on Gov. B. Young, or on any of the principal Mercantile houses in Salt Lake City. Bring or send your money to the Luminary Office, and drafts for the same amount will be returned to you, or forwarded by succeeding mail to any person in Utah, as you may direct. Duplicates will be furnished, whenever required, so that in case of failure of mails, no loss will be sustained, and you will avoid the risk of transporting specie, besides the Church wish to use it here.

ST. LOUIS, 1855. ERASTUS SNOW.

THE HERALD'S COMPLAINT.

THE WOUND DRESSED WITH MORMONISM.

The random shot fired in the Luminary two weeks since, seems to have done some execution. We took aim at "folly flying," and it would appear from the fluttering of the "Herald," and his plaintive tone, that it has taken some effect. We hope he is not dangerously wounded, for we would not like to kill so fine a fellow, particularly as he has graciously condescended in many instances to publish the truth concerning Mormonism and the Mormons; which the Herald thinks is so rare an occurrence in the Literary world, that we ought to feel ouselves under peculiar obligations to him, for so manifest a display of courage and bravery. We are always pleased to meet an honest man, and more especially when we discover, one among the gentlemen of the quill; but we do not feel bound to deify, or in any way to pay him homage, and particularly if he should change his course of honesty and candor, and blow hot and cold as best may suit him. There was a time probably when we might have passed unnoticed the policy of our cotempories; but that was when the press was wholly anti-mormon, when our enemies published what they chose against us, and no journals were open for our reply. We wish it understood that, that time has passed away, and we have now the means of publishing our own defence. If the Herald or other of our cotemporaries are disposed to aid us in publishing truth concerning Mormonism, we can appreciate their co-operation and heroism, and will applaud their candor and honesty; but if they choose to take an opposite course and take occasion to publish falsehood, and strive to stir up strife and mischief as some are doing; we say, fire away gentlemen, but take care you don't blow your brains out, for you will certainly need all you possess, should the Mormons charge upon you, so prenez garde Messieurs.

The Herald after recapitulating and vindicating his honor and honesty, in defending and advocating Brigham Young's claims to the Governorship of Utah, which no sensible man would pretend to dispute, proceeds to caution us against our present policy and suggests the course he thinks we ought to pursue, in order to retain the few friends of the editorial order, who like himself, dare to say truth is true. We are of course profoundly grateful for the sage advice of our editorial friend, but we must confess our predilection for our own tactics, which imperitively forbid us to act the sycophant, to cringe or bow to our cotemporaries, or in any way to compromise the diginity of Mormonism. If we can conciliate our cotemporaries and enjoy their friendship on fair, honorable, and independent principles, we shall be proud and happy of the fraternity; but when we stoop from the dignity of our position to pander to the vitiated appetites of a corrupt community, or in any way tolerate or countenance those who do, for the sake of conserving their friendship, then let our name be obliterated from the planetary vocabulary, and our place be filled by one more worthy.

That Mormonism is true, is an incontrovertible fact, it was true before the Herald published anything concerning it, and we are not aware that it has been any more true since. We do not therefore feel ourselves under such peculiar obligations to our cotemporary as he would imagine; but we consider the bare insinuation a presumptious display of egotism, which needs only to be seen to be dispised.

In regard to our present and future policy, we would respectfully inform the Herald that we claim the privilege of dictating our own course and policy, and are fully prepared to meet the consequences; and to those who assume the right to prescribe the course we should or should not persue we would say be assured, gentlemen, that when we need your advice or counsel we will ask it, but in the mean time, we would recommend to your particular attention the Mormon creed, melez vous de vos affairs.

We are willing to give the Herald credit for all the truth he has ever spoken in favor, of "Mormonism and the Mormons," as we have already; but when he so far changes his course as to denounce or pronounce the people of Utah "a lot of wretches," whom but a week or two before he had intimated were the "most orderly, peaceful, industrious, and virtuous people on the earth." What are we to think? Will the Herald please reconcile his incongruous statements and explain this contradiction? Perhaps it was but a plaisanterie, as suggested concerning Governor Young, if so we advise him to be more careful and respectful in the future in his language concerning the people of Utah. If he should not, and we complain of him again. It cannot be said that we complain of him without reason.

The Herald cautions us against our untrammelled policy, on the ground that we are the smallest crowd and because the great mass of the American people detest and abhor the cause we advocate, and for this reason he thinks we ought to feel ouselves under peculiar obligations to be civil and courteous to the world around us; which means of course to the Herald. We will here repeat what we have said before, our policy is freedom of thought, liberty of conscience, and as American citizens, we claim independence of spirit in publishing our faith and principles, and we care not whether our cause be loved by our cotemporaries or despised. If they advocate occasionally our just claims, and defend our cause, it is no more than their duty, which if faithfully continued, will insure for them a corresponding reward. But we wish it distinctly understood that we are as independent of their opinions and patronage, as they can possibly be of ours, although our cause may be as the Herald insinuates, "condemned and reprobated by nine-tenths of the community." If the fate of our cause was to be decided by numbers, we are ready to admit, that our case would be difficult, and we might be compelled to succumb to those who would be our dictators, but understanding that one shall chase a thousand and two put ten thousand to flight, and but few will enter the kingdom of God and be saved, we therefore take courage, judging the future by the past that all things will be overruled by the Almighty, for our benefit and prosperity, both in this life and the life to come.

The Herald says, "he is not sure that the counsels of some of the influential press in this country, to carry fire and sword into Salt Lake Valley, and extirpate Mormonism and the Mormons by the strong arm of the United States Government, is but the ultimate purpose for the troops who have been gathered against the Indians; who after they have finished off the Sioux, may be ordered to try their hand on the Mormons."

We don't know whether the Herald has announced the above crude, unjust, and wicked suggestion with intent to scare the Mormons, and thereby frighten us into respect and reverence for our cotemporaries, or, whether it has been suggested to him by some addled brained fire eater, and he has merely published as a "a pleasantry." Whatever may have been his motive, in the publication, one thing cannot be denied, it manifests an ignorance of the disposition of the general government towards us, and of the instructions and orders given Gen. Harney. It displays, moreover, a mean suspicion, concerning the honest intentions of the general Government, that cannot be reconciled with reason, candor and honesty. The man who could believe the United States Government guilty of devising so diabolical a scheme, as that of wading through the blood of the Indians, preparatory to a general slaughter of the Mormons, deserves to be immortalized with Balaam's "Criter" and other members of the order.

We have too much confidence in our Government to believe the calumny perpetrated in the Editorial of our cotemporary; and we think he will have to publish a more plausiable story than the foregoing, concerning the United States Troops, and the Mormons before he will succeed in getting any sensible man to believe it. We have shown indisputable proof to the general Government, of our allegiance to its requirements, devotion to its interests, and loyalty to its constitution, and we believe our fealty and devoted integrity has been appreciated, and measurably rewarded, and we feel assured, the Herald's insinuations to the contrary notwithstanding, that there is sufficient wisdom and honor in the present administration to save it from the everlasting disgrace that would inevitably follow so unwarantable a proceedure.

The idea is not only an insult to the general Government, but it is altogether idle, vain and ridiculous. The observations of Captain Gunnison are sensible and just, and we recommend them to the special consideration of our cotemporary. In speaking of the Judges and other United States officers who have been sent among us he says:

"The whole U. S. army would be insufficient to govern and control a hostile population, on a line of five hundred miles, and enforce civil law by foreign judges." "So long therefore as they demean themselves as good industrious citizens, of the United States, being geographically separate from other society with no admiralty causes to adjudicate and pay their portions of the indirect taxation, for the support of the government, they feel a right to demand confidence enough to be allowed to have persons resident among themselves, appointed to adminster the laws over them, and fill official stations; and they can well laugh at all attempts to control them otherwise. They acknowledge the binding force of the Constitution, claim to be American citzens, and also to have a right that this courtesy be allowed them after so many privations and sufferings endured, to make the wilderness and desert a habitable abode. To enforce Rulers upon them from abroad by the power of the bayonet, will entail perpetual war, or necessitate the raising of a force, and making an expenditure of funds, such as has never been called for, at one time since our national existence. The theatre of war would be at a great distance, and all supplies must be transported a thousand miles on land carriages, and what would be gained in the end? Nothing but the same as persecution has heretofore given, increase of Mormon power.

Smarting under a bitter recollection of violence, that people could be easily goaded into rebellion, or rather into warfare. A small force would be a vain insult among them. Protection they ask not, nor do they need it. They are a mighty moral force among the threatening cloud of savages on our frontiers. We must remember that this is no insurrection of a part of a State, the population is a unit, engaged to a man in their freedom to govern themselves. They must be convinced of error before they can abandon their position without disgrace. And it will be a difficult thing to bring one portion of American citizens to fight against another on such an issue."

We have no fear whatever of the United States troops going into Utah to fight the Mormons. We think it would be a poor speculation for Uncle Sam to engage in. Although in his dotage, we think he has too much respect for himself to embark in so reckless an enterprise, particularly since the people of Utah have proved themselves the most orderly, peaceful, industrious, and economical of all his children. But the Editors of some of the popular journals want the troops to fight and carry fire and sword into Utah. We propose that they go themselves and take with them all the mean scoundrels they can muster. We think they would stand a good chance of being converted before they return, when they might be prepared to do us justice.

We have extended this article longer than we had intended, but one word concerning Governor Young and the famine, &c., referred to in Saturday's Herald. The famine in Utah, is, as we suggested some weeks since, "a bag of moonshine," and as it regards the prophecy imputed to Governor Young, concerning a seven years famine in Missouri, the Herald toughed it out, and in his own language, "here ends the controversy."

We have been favored with a short but agreeable visit from our friend the Hon. J. M. Bernhisal, who left Salt Lake City on the first of September, with the Mail, and arrived in this City the 4th October. He left St. Louis on the morning of the 5th, for N. York, en route to Washington, there to resume his labors as the Delegate from Utah.

The Letter Mail has not yet come to hand, although the papers have been delivered some days. The only correspondence we have received from S. Lake by this Mail, is, per favor of our Hon. Delegate. We think there must be a screw loose at Independence or some other quarter, otherwise we might receive the Utah Letter Mail in a little less than three or four days after the delivery of the papers. This matter should be looked into by the department, or those whose business it is to expedite the Mail delivery, as this delay occasions considerable inconvenience to merchants and others in this City and elsewhere.

On the first page will be found a very ably written address, to the people of the United States, upon the question now agitating the minds of the people north and south. The article has appended the names of four gentlemen of high character in the State, who being appointed at a general convention of the State's authorities, may be considered the bona fide expression of the major portion of the State of Missouri upon the Kansas question, and the subject of slavery. A subject that is likely to breed more mischief, and difficulty for our country than any question than has ever been agitated.

We have published the address in full, that those unacquainted with the main features of the subject may, by a careful reading become familiar with the real merits of the question, and be able to judge according. But we presume that most of our readers are like ouselves, comparatively indifferent upon that subject, excepting in that degree that it might jeopardize the perpetuity of the Federal Government.

Correspondence.

We are under obligations to the Hon. J. M. Bernhisel, for the following interesting letter from brothers Snow and Charlie, for which he will accept our best thanks..

FORT BRIDGER, Aug. 30, 1855.

DEAR BROTHER HART:

President Snow and myself arrived here this morning about 7 o'clock, having travelled sixty-eight miles since yesterday morning. We have been prospered on our journey, and expect to breakfast in the valley the day after to-morrow morning.

We are glad to be able to say that the emigrating companies of Saints are getting along finely. Their cattle look generally well, although from the protracted drouth, grass is exceedingly scarce. We hope that before the later campanies get along here the fall rains will have caused the grass to spring up, otherwise I fear they will suffer much.

We travelled from Fort Kearney to this place without an escort. The commanding officer at Fort Kearney could not spare a dozen men to escort the mail party; but all the force on hand was ready to march against the Indians to punish them for murdering the mail party last year, and on the same ground that we were obliged to pass over, exposed to the same danger. Charming consistency. At Fort Larimie the same excuse was offered, several hundred men, but all on duty. The mail must lay by or go on through the most dangerous part of the Indian country unprotected. Brother Snow and myself left the mail party on the evening of the 17th inst., and started on alone, after commending ourselves to the protection of Heaven.

The second day out from Larimie we overtook the first company of P. E. Fund emigrants, in charge of Capt. R. Ballantyne, assisted by Elders' Slorer, Pitts, Gardner, and Wager. They were about twelve miles beyond Larimie and were progressing finely. The Saints in this company seemed to enjoy the journey very much though most of them walked almost the entire distance. It was not a little wonderful to me, to see ladies with whom I was acquainted in the east, and knew as being sickly and delicate, unable to walk three and four squares, to market or shopping, without experiencing much fatigue, walk fifteen or twenty miles a day, and come into camp at night with light hearts, singing the song of Zion, and praising their God, that they were able to endure so much for the Gospel's sake. Capt. Ballantyne, is indefatigable in his exertions to promote the well being of the Saints under his charge, and enjoys the unbounded confidence and esteem of his entire company. We journeyed with this company until the morning of the 24th, when we left them two miles above Deer Creek, and drove on briskly and overtook Capt. Moses Thurston, with his company, about fifteen miles in advance of Brother Ballantyne. His company is all well. They have not lost by death a single person, cattle or horse, since their departure from Mormon Grove. We left on the same evening at 9 o'clock at the upper crossing of the Platte and drove in company with a couple of young men who voluntered to go two days travel with us. They turned back at the Warm Springs on the morning of the 27th, and we have travelled the remainder of the Journey to this place alone. The mountaineers and traders on the route are much frightened and assured us we were running serious risks to travel unguarded. But we trusted in the Lord and we have been thus far preserved. We turned our mules loose and laid down in our carriage, trusting in kind Providence to preserve us and our animals. Yesterday morning the 29th we came up to brother Blair's company in charge of Capt. Stevenson. They were all well, and getting along quite well. While I am writing this, brother Guyman is just starting out with the second company; all well.

Capt. Hindley with the first company was encamped on Bear river yesterday. We shall start in a few minutes, and on the morning of the 1st proximo, we hope to greet our wives and children and friends in the valley of the Saints.

Sister Hampton and Mary will be glad to learn that I saw Anna in Captain Thurston's company quite well, and much pleased to hear from home, and meet brothers Snow and Charlie. And sister Amanda will be gratified to know that I saw our brother Billy in brother Blair's company quite well, and we had a warm shake of the hands and an hour or two of friendly chat together. President Snow sends love to all the Saints. A kind remembrance to sister Hart, and believe me your fond brother in the Lord. CHARLIE.

P. S. This Fort has been recently purchased by the Church, and is now occupied by the Saints. We met here some ten or twelve wagons loaded with flour going out to meet the companies, for fear they may run short; also, several yoke of oxen are going out to replace those that may have died from the effects of alkali water or other causes. MUSICAL TOUR.

G. S. L. City, August 25th, 1855.

MR. EDITOR, SIR:—With the permission of President Brigham Young, a concert band was organized early this month, whose object was to visit the Northern settlements of this Territory, giving concerts of vocal, brass, and orchestral music in the various school-houses and boweries. The company consisted of John M. Jones, leader; Jonathan Grimshaw, clerk; Myron Brewer, treasurer, chaplain, and general spokesman; Philip Margetts, Henry Margetts, Geo. Wardle, Joshua Midgley, Henry W. Baker, (who joined us at Bingham's Fort,) and Alfred B. Lambson, teamster and doorkeeper; all but the teamster being members of the Nauvoo Brass Band.

We started on the morning of Monday the 13th inst., and staid for the night at sister Baker's, Bingham's Fort, having made our business known as much as possible on our way, intending to perform on our return. We had a recommendation from Bishop Hunter to the Bishops North of this city.

On Tuesday the 14th inst., we arrived at Box Elder, and were kindly received and entertained by President Lorenzo Snow, and Bishop Pierce. These gentlemen advised us to postpone our concert until the next evening, and they would take steps that evening and the next day to circulate the news.—Accordingly, on Wednesday evening we had the school-room pretty well crowded, and I am happy to say, the people were much interested with the performance, and all expressed themselves as being highly gratified. This remark applies equally to the whole of the concerts we gave on the trip.

I am sorry to say, that just previous to our arrival at Box Elder, the grasshoppers had made a terrible descent on the corn and late crops, and had done incalculable damage. The wheat crop was all cut, and the people busy hauling it to their stacks; some had suffered severely, not so much from the grasshoppers, as from the extreme drouth, while on some of the wet bottom lands the crops had turned out first-rate, averaging 45 bushels to the acre. A large band of Indians from the neighborhood of Fort Hall, under the pretence of gleaning, are committing great depredations on the wheat still in the fields.

On Thursday, the 16th inst., we proceeded to Willow creek, where sister Hubbard, in the absence of the bishop, her husband, did her best to make us comfortable, and was very anxious we should stay and give a concert that evening. Three of the resident brethren therefore kindly formed themselves into a committee, and went round to obtain subscribers, making arrangements for the concert to come off in the Bowery. Towards evening we were extremely gladdened by the arrival of Elder Parley P. Pratt, en route for this city. We immediately presented him with tickets, for which he thanked us in Spanish. He honored us by opening the concert with a few remarks and prayer, and we had a good time, the concert being numerously attended.—Bishop Hubbard was busy most of the day hauling wheat, in consequence of one of his hands being sick; but was released towards evening, and presided over the assembly. He has raised about a thousand bushels of wheat this season, and his brethren generally have done well, although they would have done better but for the scarcity of water. Brother Zondal and others exerted themselves to entertain us to the best of their ability.

On Friday the 17th, we arrived at Ogden Hole, and were hospitably and nobly entertained by Bishop Thomas Dunn, and his brother Crandell Dunn.—We gave a concert in the school-house in the evening to a very respectable and somewhat numerous audience. This is a fine and prosperous settlement, although their wheat crops this year are considerably below the average.

On Saturday the 18th, we proceeded to Bingham's Fort, but owing to a thunder storm in the evening, and the indifference of the Bishop, who is unquestionably a good man, but somewhat in years, we had a very poor turn-out to the concert.

Next day being Sunday, we went on to Ogden City, and found Bishop Browning quite up to the mark, welcoming us to his house and hospitable board, and exerting himself to make us comfortable. We attended the meeting at the school-house in the afternoon, it having been adjourned from the Bowery in consequence of the rain. At the close of the meeting, the Bishop announced our concert for the next evening, requesting the people to make it as generally known as possible. On Monday afternoon we serenaded the city with our brass music, (as indeed we had done at other places,) and in the evening we had a crowded house, the people evincing great satisfaction with our efforts to please them. President Loren Farr was from home during the day, but arrived in time to attend the concert, expressed himself in public as highly delighted with the performance, and invited five of the brethren to his house for the night, where he made them truly welcome to good beds and breakfast.

On Tuesday the 20th, we arrived at Kay's ward, where Bishop Wm. Kay, anticipating our arrival, had killed a sheep and a hog; and during our stay there, we were most sumptuously entertained by him, and his first counselor, Elder Edward Phillips, the entertainment being seasoned agreeably by a hearty welcome. This being a very extensive and scattering ward, we were counseled by the Bishop to stay until next day, and to give a ball in the afternoon and concert in the evening, to which we acceded.—A few however, gathered on the first evening expecting the concert to come off; and in order to make their disappointment as light as possible, we organized a dance for a short time, and the people departed with good feelings, giving in their names for next day. We arranged to give out family tickets to the ball and concert at one dollar each, and we disposed of fifty-two such tickets. Previous to our arrival the Bishop had appointed Elder John Bair as Marshal for the occasion, who magnified his office most praiseworthily, preserving the strictest order, and attending to the comfort of the people, who made quite a holliday of the affair, bringing out their wagon sheets and enclosing the Bowery on all sides, it being large enough to admit of twelve cotillions dancing at the same time. The treat went off to the satisfaction of all concerned.

The wheat crops in this neighborhood have suffered tremendously from the drouth, and the want of water for irrigation; the Bishop himself has only realized 300 bushels when he expected a thousand, and another person who was expecting to realize from eight hundred to a thousand, has managed to harvest one hundred and seventy-five bushels. This is a fair sample of the rest of the wheat crops there. They anticipate however, by another season to bring the waters of the Weber into use on their farms; and the brethren at the head of a company which is organized for that purpose, wisely took advantage of the gathering at our concert, and obtained subscriptions on the spot amounting to upwards of two hundred dollars.

Next day we hitched up and went on the Farmington, calling by the way at Mrs. Hector C. Haight's, whose husband is on a mission to England; she politely invited us to stay and take dinner, but our time would not admit of it; we therefore played two tunes before her door, and passed on. We had with us 15 lbs. of excellent cheese which her son Ordin had paid for his family ticket the day previous.

Arriving at Farmington, Bishop Hess kindly entertained us to dinner, and was, as far as he was concerned, desirous of a concert; but as for his people, their crops had been cut off by the grasshoppers, so that they did not average above fifteen bushels of wheat to a family in the whole settlement, which made them feel very poor; indeed much more so, he said, than they really are; and he was afraid there would be a very poor turn-out. Under these circumstances we concluded it best not to stay, and after playing the Bishop a tune, we passed on.

As we had already spent more time on the trip than we had anticipated, we did not feel like staying at Sessions' settlement, especially as it is very scattering, and it was too late in the day to notify the people. We therefore, after baiting the horses at Elder Dan Wood's, proceeded home, where we arrived a little after dark. Elder Wood stated the little wheat he had raised this season, (about 600 or 700 bushels,) was remarkably good, weighing 64 lbs. to the bushel.

The greatest regret expressed by the Bishops on our route, was the want of suitable houses for such occasions; but nearly all stated that arrangements had already been entered into to supply the deficiency this fall.

The amount of our admission for the entire series is $218,90, and our entire expenses, including candles, groceries, and concert bills, only amounted to $24 60; thanks to the liberality of the Bishops and their brethren. This being the first experiment of the kind in this Territory, we consider it on the whole to be successful, and in improving the taste of the people for fine music, highly beneficial. At least it was so expressed by the various Presidents and Bishops on the route. Yours, faithfully,

JONATHAN GRIMSHAW, Clerk.

Miscellaneous.

AN ELOQUENT LETTER.

We make the following extract from a letter of acceptance of E. D. Beach, Esq., the Democratic nominee for Governor of Massachusetts;

"It is a position wholly unsought, and well pleased I should have been had the honor fallen on some one of larger experience in the public service, and of more eminent fitnes for the duties of the office.

"At a time like the present, when the wild waters of strife are lashed into violence, to float ambitious men into office; when liberty of conscience and individual rights are invaded with a recklessness that alone arms anarchy with a power for evil; when constitutions oppose no barriers and no limits to legislative decrees; when religious intolerance is elevated as a test of political merit, the sole passport of favor; when the good old way of reaching moral results by precept and practice are scouted as the cast-of relics off a past age, and their places supplied only by penalties and imprisonment; when the bitterest and most dangerous elements of sectional animosity are invoked to array one portion of our common country in hostile antagonism to another portion; the spirit of patriotism would seem to demand of all her lawful votaries not only unbending firmness and integrity, but a devotion to the public service of the wisest counsels and the ripest experience within her call. If, however, it shall be the will of the people of Massachusetts to call me into service as her Chief Executive officer, whatever I am shall be devoted to her welfare."

SUMMARY OF NEWS FROM UTAH.

We have received copies of the Deseret News to the 29th of August, from which we extract the following items:

The Crops—From the North we hear good reports as to the yield of wheat, considering the damage done by the grasshoppers; who, in their depredations, seem to have been not altogether impartial—some fields having been entirely stripped, while others, immediately adjoining, have not been touched.

In Utah county especially at Provo and vicinity, we understand that through an abundance of water for irrigation, and the blessing of the Lord, the crops generally will be heavy.

Corn looks well, and the prospects are good for a fair yield throughout the Territory, and in some sections, it will be the principal grain. In many fields in the neighborhood of this city, we have noticed indications of serious injury to the crops from a destructive worm, and it will be well for farmers to examine their corn, and if possible, prevent further loss, for assuredly we shall need all that can be raised.

Potatoes are doing finely; and with plenty of corn and potatoes, there will be no danger of starvation.

Oats, from all we can learn, will not be an average yield. Many fields were cut for fodder while yet green, to save to the grasshoppers the task of devouring them.

Of the late re-sowing, that which has been well irrigated, looks promising; but where water is not in abundance, which is the case in various portions of this country, the yield will be small; but in most instances, good fodder will be raised, which is, the present season, no small item.

Melons are plenty in market, though very late, on account of the early and repeated failures, and subsequent re-sowing at a late period. While the weather continues warm, we may enjoy them; but late melons, in cold weather, by those who have regard for health, should not be eaten.

The Sugar Beet crop will be almost an entire failure in many parts, having been seriously injured by the grasshoppers.

Sugar making at Provo, we are glad to learn, continues to be a profitable employment. Cannot the saccharine be removed from the leaves without giving their flavor to the sugar? A few experiments in this new art will doubtless give results whereby a good quality of sugar can be produced.

Fruit, in the upper portions of the city will be somewhat abundant; in the lower portions there will be but little, having been cut off by the frosts.—There are grounds in the upper, or north-eastern part of the city, the soil of which is well adapted to fruit growing, needing only the skillful touch of the horticulturist, accompanied by the faith of the Saint, to bring forth fruit in every variety, and in its greatest perfection.

The weather for the past few days has been cool and pleasant during the day; the nights often quite chilly—high winds prevailing considerably.

The fires in the mountains still continue, notwithstanding the rain, and, in consequence, our view is much diminished in extent by the masses of smoke which cover the mountains, and sometimes fill the valley.

The temporary covering of the Bowery with willows is being completed.

Haying seems to be actively prosecuted. Now is the time—secure provender for your animals.

The Temple.—A perspective drawing of this splendid structure may be seen in a frame at the Governor's office. The work of cutting the stone for the walls is going forward vigorously.

The plastering and finishing of the Temple Block wall is progressing finely, the North line being completed, and nearly one half of the Eastern.

Fine houses are being reared in various portions of the city, and while the erection of fine houses, and the spirit of improvement generally manifest is a pleasing token of the perseverance and enterprise of the Saints, let them not, in the multiplicity of their own concerns, forget the House of the Lord. We say to the Saints, let the completion of this House be always before you, and fail not to render such aid in the work as God has placed within your reach.

Salt.—Large quantities of this article are now being deposited in the Tithing Store-house, and from present appearances, we shall have sufficient to save not only ourselves, but perhaps others who may desire it. There is not room to contain any more at present, so you may hold on with your salt for a while, and haul stone for the Temple if you please.

This salt is obtained from large lakes, which during high water form a part of Great Salt Lake, but the waters having receded, the salt remains upon the surface of the ground to the depth of from three to six inches, in inexhaustible quantities, and this at the distance of two or three miles from the Lake. It is very clean and white, but somewhat coarse.

The health of the City is generally good, though among children there is considerable sickness and some mortality.

At Pleasant Grove, Lake, and Lehi, the early crops having been almost entirely destroyed, their place was supplied by late planting with corn, potatoes, and some wheat—which is now perishing from the extreme drouth—the water in Dry creek having disappeared, and American creek affording an insufficient quantity to supply one half the wants of the farmers. Springville and Palmyra have a sufficient supply of water as yet for the late crops; but the small portion of wheat which escaped the ravages of the grasshoppers, from the injury it received is thinner, the straw shorter, and the heads smaller than last year. Their corn and potatoes can be matured if sufficient care is taken to prevent the destruction by cattle.

Payson is scantily supplied with water to mature its second planting; Peteetneet not containing half its usual amount at this season, and twice the quantity being required to mature the late crops, that has been heretofore.

At Provo the people possess the amount of water necessary to make a very large fall crop, with sufficient surplus over their own wants to supply many of their neighbors. The fences are poor, and the cattle unruly, and many of the cattle owners unwilling to put them into herds, or secure them in pastures. A great amount of the precious grain is destroyed every night by these unruly animals, which are rendered the more rabid by the great scarcity of grass in the immediate vicinity of the town.

Fillmore.—July 24, the health of the people was good, the weather dry and fires in the mountains.—Corn, potatoes and vines looked well.

The roof of the south wing of the State House is finished, the sash are all made, and the workmen are now busy laying the upper floor and in finishing off that part of the building.

A refreshing shower of about an hour's duration visited the city on the afternoon of the 5th instant, put out mountain fires, purified the air, swelled City creek, and slightly moistened the parched earth.

Tuesday, 24, at daybreak, the citizens of Provo were awakened by the firing of cannon, which continued till sunrise, at which time the gun (a six pounder brought from Nauvoo) burst, killing William Nixon, who applied the match—throwing pieces of the gun twenty-five rods, tearing the gun carriage to pieces, and breaking the tire, throwing one piece of it thirty rods.

A coroner's inquest was held on the body by Justice Duke. The jury returned a verdict of death by the bursting of a cannon, which had been improperly loaded. The gun was under the control of Orrin Glazier; there was a wad of potter's clay next the powder, then some hay, and another wad of clay—the whole tamped in with a sledge hammer and rammer—although the Marshal of the day had given instructions the evening previous that no clay should be used. The gun was charged with two lbs. three ounces of rifle powder. Mr. Thompson, one of the firing party, remonstrated that the piece would burst if loaded in that way, but Glazier was sanguine that there was no danger.

The gun presented the appearance of being a most perfect piece of workmanship, made of very fine, soft iron.

Dr. Bernhisel is re-elected to Congress without opposition.

From the London Times, September 11.

Brilliant Conduct of the Allied Troops.

Total Destruction of the Town, Fleet, and Fortifications, by the Russians.

On Saturday, the 8th of September, within a few days of the anniversary of the landing of the Allied forces in the Crimea, and 316 days after the opening of the besieging batteries against Sebastopol, on the 17th of October, 1854, a final and victorious assault was made upon the southern part of the town. Before night the French flag waved in triumph upon the Malakoff Tower, which had fallen before the indomitable courage and perseverence of the assailants, and within a few hours more the Russian garrison had evacuated the Karabelnaia suberb and the Southern proportion of the fortress, after blowing up the magazines and principal works, setting fire to the town in many places, and then endeavoring to withdraw by the bridge across the harbor from this terific scene of devastation and defeat. So fell Sebastopol.

The catastrophe surpasses in horrible interest, all the preceeding scenes of this gigantic contest. The columns of the allied armies, combined in a fourfold attack, struggled all day with equal valor, though with unequal success, against the principal points marked out for assault. The extreme right of the French attack was direeted against the work called the Little Redan, which was as first carried by the impetuosity of our allies, though they were subsequently driven back by the fierce resistance of the Russians.

The second and principal assault of the French army was against the Malakoff, which was carried by storm, and determined by its fall the fate, not only of the day but of the siege. A third attack was made by the British forces on the Great Redan, and although we learn that the salient angle of this formidable work was at one moment carried and occupied by our troops, it must be added that they were subsequently driven out of it by the fire of the Russian batteries which commanded it, and this check in some degree diminishes the exultation which will be felt in this country at the triumphant termination of the seige. The French columns on the left also assailed, in the fourth place the Central Battery, but failed to establish themselves in the work. We have no doubt that every man who attacked the defences of Sebastopol on that eventful day fought with the same undaunted gallantry and the same determination to carry the place or to perish in the attempt; and, although the results of these several attacks were unequal, all were animated by the same spirit and contributed to the great result. The first prize of this glorious victory belongs of right to our gallant allies the French since the Malakoff Tower, the key to the main position, fell before the vigor of their assault; but, with that chivalrous feeling which is the noblest bond of men who have fought and conquered together, the names of all those who carried the rugged defences of Sebastopol deserve to stand side by side on one page, and no invidious distinction shall sully or lessen their common renown.

The Russians on their side unquestionably defended the place with the utmost determination, and on more than one point they had the advantage over the besiegers. But it was the courage of desperation, for this effort was their last. No sooner were the outer works taken, which laid the town and the port at the mercy of the allied forces, than the men-of-war and steamers in the harbor were all set on fire, blown up, sunk or destroyed, either by the fire of the allied batteries or by the orders of the Russian authorities.

Such was the fate of the Russian Black Sea fleet, on which the Imperial government had expended incalculable sums of money and incessant labor—that fleet which two years ago threatened the very existence of the Turkish empire, but whose solitary naval achievement was the attrocious outrage upon a far inferior force at Sinope. Of the authors of that nefarious attack what remains?

The Emperor Nicholas sleeps in the vaults of St. Peter and St. Paul, no longer concious of the chastisement his wicked ambition has brought down on his empire and his heirs. The admiral who commanded and the crews who fought on that occasion have most of them fallen in the batteries of Sebastopol. The very ships for which Russia contended at the Conferences at Vienna as essential to her dignity and power, are torn plank from plank, and scattered upon the waves.

The dockyard and arsenal were already, on Sunday, in possession of the allied troops; Prince Gortschakoff, had, it seems, solicited an armistice, though we know not whether it was granted; but his troops were hurrying away with the utmost precipitation; and, considering the moral and physical result of such a defeat upon the remnant of his army, it may be doubted whether the Russian General can attempt to make any further stand on the north side of the harbor.

These great events terminate the siege of Sebastopol, properly so called, for the allied armies have achieved within the last three days the grand object of their enterprise. They have wrested from the whole military power of Russia a fortress which she had converted into a place of extraordinary strength and defended with innumerable hosts of her best troops. They have annihilated the naval power on which she relied to secure her supremacy in the Euxine, and to establish her authority from the shores of the Caucassus to the mouth of the Danube. But, above all, they have shown the servile and credulous nations of the East that the Powers now paramount in the world are not those of fanaticism and barbaric absolutism, but those of liberty and civilization. In this struggle, Sebastopol became at once the test of strength and the reward of victory. To reduce it by force or arms was to overthrow that colossal fabric of Russian influence which a century and a half of rapine and intrigue had called into being, until it overawed the surrounding nations and threatened the independence of Europe. While the expedition to the Crimea offered the incalculable advantage of circumscribing within a few square miles of the enemy's territory all the horrors of war, and of staking the strength of four empires on a single point, the result of our victory is as boundless as the globe.

It tells the world that the alliance of England and of France has stood the test of warfare by the sufferings of the camp and the perils of the field. It assures mankind that their united policy can impose its will and execute its resolutions, even through the timid stand aloof, and though men of baser minds may abandon the cause of their country in her hour of need.

We owe our success in no slight degree to the unwavering firmness with which the Emperor of the French has pursued this enterprise and adhered to the policy that dictated it. But we owe it no less to the clear and unanimous resolution of the people of England, whose mind was made up that this thing was to be done.

In the course of these events, which broke in so suddenly on our wonted avocations, we have had much to learn and much to bear. At times the tedium of suspended excitement became almost intolerable, and more than once the fainthearted or the factious lost confidence in the result. Yet what is the fact? What is it we have done?

A year has not yet elapsed since the allied armies set foot in the Crimea. Within that time they have won three picthed battles, and twice assaulted a fortress of extraordinary magnitude. They have encompassed the works of the enemy with trenches exceding over more than thirty miles of ground; they have armed these trenches with the heaviest ordinance, and kept up so incessant a fire that not only an incalculable amount of projectiles has been consumed, but five or six siege trains have been worn out.

They have created at Kamiesh, Eupatoria, and Yemkale three military stations which the Russians have not dared to assail, and Balaklava has become a populous mart. A railroad connects the harbor and the camp; an electric chain binds the Crimea to Europe, and conveys to us in a few hours the tidings of these triumphant successes.

Upwards of 200,000 men enamped within the lines of the Tchernays have been conveyed thither and are daily fed, clothed and housed from the resources of Western Europe. All this has been effected in spite of the rigor of winter, the heat of summer, and the distance of three thousand miles from our shores, and within one little year from the sailing of the expedition the leading objects of the campaign are accomplished and Sebastopol is in our power.

The military and political results of this event open a new chapter in the history of these transactions to which we shall shortly take occasion to revert, but, be they what they may, the grand fact now before us justifies the confidence we have never ceased to feel and rewards our hopes—for within twelve months from the commencement of this enterprise Sebastopol has fallen, and the power of Russia in the waters of the Euxine is at an end.

The Czar writes that the King of Prussia will accept no conditions derogatory to Russia.

It is reported that Russia offers to mediate between the United States and Denmark.

Cotton dull—declined one-eighth to one-quarter. Flour, 41s. Wheat, less active; red, 11s. 3d. to 6d. Money good demand; American stock quiet. Pork and Beef advanced.

Steamer not up at 8 o'clock this morning.

New York, October 3.—The Pacific arrived off Sandy Hook at seven o,clock last evening. The night was so dark she was not seen; a boat from her, however, reached the Hook between 11 and 12 o'clock P. M., and her news telegraphed to this city. Her dates are to the 22d ult.

Dispatches from Gen. Simpson, from the seat of war, had been received by the Government, describing the assault and capture of the Malakoff. He says that at twelve o'clock on the morning of the 8th, the French columns under Generals Bosquet, McMahon, Delamolte and Boyne, entered and carried the Malakoff with most impetuous valor.

The British columns stormed the Redan, but after a bloody combat could not hold it. The second assault could not be organized till the next morning, when the Redan was found to be evacuated.

The loss of life has been frightful, particularly among officers.

General Pelissier's dispatch had not arrived.

The retreat of the Russians to the Perekop is contradicted. It was assumed that they would be unable to hold the North Side of Sebastopol for want of provisions.

Nothing decisive was known in regard to the next move of the Allies.

Four thousand cannon, fifty thousand balls, and immense quantities of stores, was taken possession of by the Allies in Sebastopol.

The Czar Alexander, in his address to his army, says: "I rely confidently on your courage to repel all future attacks;" and in a letter to the King of Prussia, he says. he will accept no conditions of peace derogatory to Russia. The Czar, in company with the Grand Dukes, has signified his intention of visiting the Crimea.

The Turks still hold Kars, having held possession since August 7th.

No news from the Baltic.

The Emperor of Austria had congratulated Victoria and Napoleon on the victory of the Allies.

There was more talk of negotiations. The latest was that Austria was willing to take the work of mediating at Vienna.

FRANCE.

At Paris it was reported that Prussia had undertaken the work of mediation between Denmark and the United States on the Sound Dues.

In Paris there was considerable excitement at the high price of bread.

The exhibition of the Industry of all nations, will continue open till November 15th

The Empress was progressing favorably.

The Inauguration of Don Pedro, King of Portugal was celebrated on the seventeenth with great enthusiasm.

The King of Naples had sent apologies to England and France for recent insults.

Mazzini's revolutionary manifesto to the Neopolitans had been published.

Gen. Simpson's dispatch to Lord Panmure does not differ from those brought by the America. The English attack was led by Sir W. Codington and Lieut. Gen. Markham. The English officers killed in the attack on the Redan, twenty-five, wounded twenty-six, dangerously wounded twenty. The telegraphic dispatches say that Admiral Dundas was to leave Nargan for Lesmar. There was no later news from the Crimea.

It is said the Czar, on receiving the news of the fall, sent a dispatch, saying: "Russia never surrenders after a defeat."

Gen. Pelissier's latest dispatch, says: We are beginning to occupy the town of Sebastopol. The material left by the enemy is even more extensive than I anticipated.

Another dispatch says 1200 guns of large calibre besides 4000 of smaller.

Another dispatch from Varna, says: A detachment of French troops, who entered the Varna on the 14th. found streets full of Russians, and barricaded throughout.

The obstacles at the entrance of the port were about to be removed, so as to admit the entrance of ships.

A report says: When the Russians saw the French were masters of the Mulakoff, they blew up the Redan.

All the towers were ruined, but they had no time to blow up the Malakoff.

It is rumored that Gortschakoff has received orders to evacuate the Crimea.

Gen. Bosquet was wounded, but not seriously.

A letter from Warsaw, says: "As soon as Marshall Paskewitch, at Warsaw, received news of the fall, he dispatched his aid.de-camp to Sebastopol. It is certain many more troops are to be sent to the Crimea.

GOOD ADVICE.

This article is copied from Livesey's letter linings:

PAY YOUR DEBTS.

1. If you wish to secure the reputation of being an honest man, pay your debts.

2. If you would avoid bringing disgrace upon the religious party you belong to, pay your debts.

3. If you are anxious to get a good article, and be charged a low price for your goods, never delay to pay your debts.

4. If you wish to obtain for such credit as your business may require be sure to pay your debts.

5. If you would remain on terms of friendship with those you trade with, pay your debts.

6. If you would avoid embarrassing others who are depending upon the settlement of your account pay your debts.

7. If you wish to prevent mistakes and litigation, keep your accounts well adjusted, and pay your debts.

8. If you wish to aid in the circulation of money, never let cash remain by you, but pay your debts.

9. If you would do to others as you wish them to do to you, you ought to pay your debts.

10. If you wish to stand clear of the charge of lying, and making false excuses, pay your debts.

11. If you desire to pursue your business with peace of mind, pay your debts.

12. If, in the expection of death, you would like to leave your affairs in a satisfactory condition, pay your debts.

13. If you wish to do what is right in the sight of God and man, you must pay your debts.

14. Should your debts ever be so old, or should you have "taken the benefit of the act," if you have the means, you are not a just man, unless you pay your debts.

To enable you to pay, adopt the following advice:

Let your food, living, and equippage be plain and not costly; avoid expensive clothing; abstain from wine and all intoxicating liquor, and never keep it in your house; do not sink your capital by purchasing plate or splendid furniture; have as few parties as possible; be careful as to a speculation, and never extend your trade beyond your means; never aspire to shareholders in banks, railways, &c.; have as few men about you as convenient, and none of a suspicious character; be determined to refuse all offers of partnership; be careful as to lending money or being bond with others; avoid all law suits; keep your books posted, and look well to the accounts of your customers; bring up your family to economy and industry; if you observe these things, you will always be able, with good fortune, to pay your debts.

EFFECT OF KNOW-NOTHINGISM.

The Louisville Times, of a late date, thus describes the effects of the late massacre there:

"Hundreds fled the city in a night—while a few days made it thousands; and every week and every day since has added to the number. Portions of the city look as if they had been visited by some fearful pestilence. In all directions property is offered for sale at a depreciating value. Rents are down, and a general panic has seized the property holders of the city. One of them informed us, a few days since, that out of eight houses which he had rented to good tenants, on the day of the election, six are now vacant. Another, that out of eleven houses he had rented on the same day, nine are now vacant. Two evenings since another informed us that the whole of his (some ten or twelve) were vacant."

The Demise of a Newspaper.—The editor of a country newspaper thus abandons his vocation:

The Silver Creek Gazette with this number ceases to kick; it has been virtually dead for six months past, and in the meantime it has only been galvanized into a kind of spasmodic action merely for our own amusement. This will account to our friends abroad for anything strange or unusual they may have discovered in our course. We had some private wrongs to redress, and we have operated upon the dead carcass of the Gazette, that it might be made, in some of its antics, to give our enemies such side licks as we could not be led to expect from a more healthy action. We have been amply repaid, in our experiments thus far, for the fun we have got out of it: but as the amusement is rather expensive, we have concluded to suspend further operations and bury the defunct body out of sight as soon as possible.

How to Procure the Best Seed of Various Kinds.—When you set off your plants for seeding, such as cabbages, turnips, beets, &c., care should be taken to manure the ground well, with good, short, rotten manure; set them out in a damp, shady place if possible, so that the sun will not have too much power on them. When they come in blossom, cut out the middle stalk low enough to leave five or six Branches standing on the sides of the stalk below: the seed will be plump, full and true. At the time when the onions and leeks are in blossom, one-third of the middle portion of the blossom should be cut out, and the same operation should be performed on all blossoming vegetables. This is the way to procure true heads to cabbage and true bulbs to turnips.

IN DESERET WE'RE FREE!

BY W. W. PHELPS.

An earthquake seems to shake the globe,
And distant thunder jars the sea;
And every nation wonders what
Such mighty things can be;
And the lightning glares on the billowy main,
And the clouds roll up for a hurricane:
Yet the Mormons shout Hosanna!
In Deseret we're free!

There's Mene Tekel on the wall,
An awful, fearful mystery;
The mobs go forth, like kings to war,
In bloody majesty;
And the strongest thrones are tumbling down,
And the cholera and old death's in town:
Yet the Mormons shout Hosanna!
In Deseret we're free!

All hands are weak; all hearts are faint;
There's shaking of the powers that be;
The great to great exclaim alas!
"Are you as weak as we?"
And the answer comes on the nimble blast,
"Yes our glory's gone, and our days are passed;"
Yet the Mormons shout Hosanna!
In Deseret we're free!

'Tis joy to have a Mormon's faith,
Which comprehends Eternity;
'Tis joy to live in such a day,
And witness what we see;
As the nations rave, how they fly as chaff,
While the Gods in heaven do sit and laugh;
And the Mormons shout Hosanna!
In Deseret we're free!

ADDRESS.

If further illustration was needed of the illegality of these movements upon Kansas, we might extend our observations to the probable reception of similar movements upon a State. If the Massachusetts Legislature, or that of any other State, have the right to send an army of abolitionists into Kansas, they have the same right to transport them to Missouri. We are not apprised of any provisions in the Constitutions or laws of the States which in this respect distinguishes their condition from that of a Territory. We have no laws, and we presume no slaveholding State has, which forbids the emigration of non-slaveholders. Such laws, if passed would clearly conflict with the Federal Constitution. They differ only in the price of land and the density of population. Let us suppose, then, that Massachusetts should turn her attention to Texas, and should ascertain that the population of that State was nearly divided between those who favored and those who opposed slavery, and that one thousand votes would turn the scale in favor of emancipation, and acting thus in accordance with her world-wide philanthropy, she should resolve to transport the thousand voters necessary, to abolish slavery in Texas, how would such a movement be received their? Or, to reverse the proposition, let it be supposed that South Carolina, with her large slave holding population, should undertake to trasport a thousand slaveholders to Delaware, with a view to turn the scale in that State, would the gallant sons of that State, small as she is territorially, submit to such interference? Now, the institutions of Kansas are as much fixed and as solemnly guaranteed by statute, as those of Delaware or Texas. The laws of Kansas Territory may be abrogated by succeeding legislatures; but, so also may the laws, and even the Constitutions of Texas and Delaware. Kansas only differs from her condition in her limited resources, her small population, and her large amount of marketable lands. There is no difference in principle between the cases supposed; if justifiable and legal in the one, it it equally so in the other. They differ only in point of practicability and expediency; the one would be an outrage, easily perceived, promptly met, and speedily repelled; the other is disguised under the forms of emigration, and meets with no populous and organized community to resent it. We may elect by fraud, and constitute no fair representation of the opinions of the people of the Territory. This is evidently the excuse of the losing party, to stimulate renewed efforts among their friends at home; but even this is refuted by the record. The Territorial Governor of Kansas, a gentleman not suspected of of charged with partiality to slavery or to its advocates, has solemnly certified under his official seal, that the statement is false; that a large majority of the legislature was duly and legally elected. Even in the districts where Governor Reeder set aside the elections as for illegality, the subsequent returns of the special elections ordered by him, produced the same result, except in a single district. There is, then, no pretext left, and it is apparent that to send an army of Abolitionists to Kansas to destroy slavery existing there, and recognized by her laws, is no more to be justified on the part of the Massachusetts Legislature than it would be to send a like force to Missouri, with the like purposes. The object might be more easily and safely accomplish in the one case than the other. but in both cases it is equally repugnant to every principle of international comity and likely to prove equally fatal to the harmony and peace of the Union.

We conclude, then, this irruption upon Kansas by Emigrant Aid Societies and Kansas Leagues, under the patronage of the Massachusetts Legislature, is to be regarded in no other light than a new phase of abolitionism, more practical in its aims, and therefore more dangerous than any form it has yet assumed. We have shown it to be at variance with the true intent of the act of Congress, by which the the Territory was opened to settlement; at variance with the spirit of the Constitution of the United States, and with the institutions of the Territory, already recognized by law; totally destructive of that fellowship and good feeling which should exist among citizens of confederated States; ruinous to the security, peace and prosperity of a neighboring State; unprecedented in our political annals up to this date, and pregnant with the most disastrous consequences to the harmony and stability of the Union. Thus far its purposes have been defeated; but renewed efforts are threatened. Political conventions at the north and northwest have declared for the repeal of the Kansas-Nebraska law, and anticipating a failure in this direction, are stimulating the anti-slavery sentiment to fresh exertions, for abolitionizing Kansas after the Massachusetts fashion. We have discharged our duty in declaring the light in which such demonstrations are viewed here, and our belief of the spirit by which they will be met. If civil war and ultimate disunion are desired, and required, a renewal of these efforts will be admirably adopted to such purposes. Missouri has taken her position in the resolutions adopted by the Lexington Convention, and from that position she will not be likely to recede. It is based upon the Constitution, upon justice and equal rights among the States. — What she has done, and what she is still prepared to do, is in self-defence and for self preservation; and from these duties she will hardly be expected to shrink. With her, everything is at stake; the security of a large slave property, the propriety of her citizens and their exemption from perpetual agitation, and border feuds; whilst emissaries of abolition are pursuing a phantom — an abstraction, which if realized, could add nothing to their possession, or happiness, and would be productive of decided injury to the race for whose benefit they profess to labor.

If slavery is an evil, and it is conceded that Congress cannot interfere with it in the States, it is most manifest that its diffusion through a new territory, where land is valueless and labor productive, tends greatly to ameliorate the condition of the slaves. — Opposition to the extention of slavery is not then founded upon any philanthropic views, or upon any love for the slave. It is a mere grasp for political power, beyond what the Constitution of the United States concedes; and it is so considered by the leaders of the movement. And this additional power is not desired for constutional purposes — for the advancement of the general welfare or the national reputation. For such purposes the majority in the north is already sufficient, and no future events are likely to diminish it. The slave holding States are in a minority, but so far, a minority which has commanded respect in the national councils. It has answered, and we hope will continue to subserve the purposes of self-protection. Conservative men from other quarters have come up to the rescue when the rights of the South have been seriously threatened. But it is essential to the purpose of self preservation that this minority should not be materially weakened; it is essential to the preservation of our present form of government that the slave States should retain sufficient power to make effectual resistance against outward aggression upon an institution peculiar to them alone. Parchment guarantees, as all history shows, avail nothing against an overwhelming public clamor. The fate of the Fugitive Slave Law affords an instructive warning on the subject, and shows that the most solemn constitutional obligations will be avaded and scorned where popular prejudice resists their execution. The south must rely on herself for protection, and to this end her strength in the Federal Government cannot be safely diminished.

If indeed it be true, as public men at the north have declared, and political assemblages have endorsed, that determination has been reached in that quarter, to refuse admission to any more slave States there is an end to all argument on the subject. To reject Kansas, or any other territory from the Union simply and solely because slavery is recognized within her limits, would be regarded here, and we presume, throughout the south and south-west, as an open repudiation of the Constitution — a distinct and unequivocal step towards a dissolution of the Union. We presume it would be so regarded everywhere, north and south. Taken in connection with the abrogation of that provision of the Constitution which enforces the rights of the owners of slaves in all the States of the Union, into which they might escape, which has been affected practically thoughout nearly all the free Sates, and more formally by solemn legislative enactments in a portion of them, the rejection of Kansas on account of slavery, would be disunion in a form of the grossest insult to the sixteen slave States now comprehended in the nation. It would be a declaration that slavery was incompatible with republican government, in the face of at least two formal recognitions of its legality, in terms by the Federal Constitution.

We trust that such counsels have not the remotest prospect of failing in our National Legislature, and will not dwell upon the consequence of their adoption. We prefer to anticipate a returning fidelity to national obligations — a faithful adherance to the Constitutional guarantees, and the consequent prospect — cheering to the patriot of this and other lands — of a continued and PERPETUAL UNION.

DAILY SALVATION.

Every day salvation is what the world needs, and it is what the Saints should seek for. It is the only kind that will prove effectual and eternal. If, as each passing day comes round, the works belonging to it are performed in righteousness, the faithful man has secured his salvation thus far, and as long as he does this he is going on to perfection, and doing all that he can, and all that the Lord requires of him. This is the way, and the only sure one, of obtaining the gifts, powers, and ordinations of the Priesthood, and of coming to a knowledge of the principles of eternal increase. Theory alone will not save men, it must be combined with practice. The Saints may talk and sing about the bright things of the future, to stimulate their faith and cheer their hearts in the present hour of trial and affliction, but they will obtain salvation just in proportion as they perform the labors that are immediately before them.

There is nothing of greater importance to the Saints than keeping their covenants, not only with the Lord, but with their brethren and sisters, their wives and children, and the Gentiles with whom they associate and do business. All covenants or contracts made under the laws of the land where the Saints reside, are binding, and if they would be blessed and prospered, both temporally and spiritually, they should do their utmost at all times faithfully to keep them. No covenant made under these laws is of more importance than that of marriage. Many of the world, and possibly some of the Saints, have imbibed an idea that we as a people consider marriage contracts, made according to the laws of England and other countries, of but little or no force. On the contrary, we consider it of the greatest importance that these contracts should be faithfully kept until either the laws which made them binding, or the Priesthood, shall release the parties, and the latter exercises its power in this respect only in Utah. How can the Saints expect to keep covenants made under a celestial law if they prove themselves unworthy of the privileges and blessings of a lesser one, and are not able to keep the covenants and obligations of the marriage state in their lightest form. All that the Lord requires of His creatures is to keep the laws and fulfil the obligations of the sphere in which they are placed. If the Saints will keep the covenants which they have made under Gentile law in purity of heart, and according to the light and knowledge they have, it will be accounted unto them for righteousness. They will then be fitted to receive a higher law, of which they would be otherwise unworthy.

Men should stand in their place at the head of their families, and continually bear in mind that it is a small thing to be a master, but a great thing to be a father. Therefore let all your associations with the Saints, with the world, and more especially with your families, be in the kind and affectionate feeling of a father. You should seek unto the Lord in prayer and humility, that you may have power first to control yourselves. This is the first and most important step towards controlling your families, or anything else which may be in your charge. The spirit of a taskmaster is not the spirit of the gospel, therefore heads of families should let all their chastenings in their households be in a meek and quiet spirit, and they should remember that the spirit which they exercise in their families will be the one which will preside there.

Much has been said about the spirit of revelation, and yet it is very imperfectly understood. It is the privilege of the Saints so to live as to receive revelations contunually concerning all that is necessary for them to know in order to walk in the path of daily salvation, and control in righteousness everything committed to their charge. The operations of the spirit are so plain and simple that they are often unheeded, until bitter experience brings reflection, and it can then be seen when too late that its warnings were rejected. The Lord's ways are not like man's ways, and therefore the small whisperings of the spirit which He has given as a guide for His people, will often suggest things for their good which they in their self-conceited wisdom may think absurd and ridiculous. The Holy Spirit is a sure, unerring friend, and blessed is the man who strives to know its will, and follow its dictates, for his soul is filled with wisdom.

Some perchance forget their God in the day of prosperity, and when evil comes upon them suddenly, they find that He is far from them. When they or their families are sick, they find that their faith is weak, and that they cannot grapple with the power of the destroyer. A knowledge of revelation and an increase in faith are matters of cultivation, and are only to be obtained through diligent application and experience. Salvation is a science of which the Holy Ghost is the teacher, and the only principle of progress is the most attentive obedience.— Obedience to that will include obedience to all the authorities of the Priesthood, for they are dictated by the same spirit. Obedience, in order to be of a saving nature, must be attended with the testimony of the spirit that it should be rendered, and that cheerfully. That is, when the way is pointed out by the spirit, it should be walked in, no matter how simple, ridiculous, or unnecessary it may appear in a worldly view, or how many difficulties, dangers, or apparently insurmountable obstacles may stand in the way. When the Lord directs He will take care of the consequences, and it is not the business of the Saints to trouble themselves about them. It is this fearfulness in the hearts of the Saints, this want of confidence in their God and themselves, which continually hedges up their own way and blocks the wheels of this kingdom. The Lord is ready to stretch forth His hand, and make His power more fully manfest in rolling on His work, if He had a people sufficiently strong in the faith to endure it. Israel will be gathered as fast as they are prepared for it, and many now get to Zion who cannot endure the light that burns there. A Temple will be built just as soon as the Saints show by their faith and works that they are prepared for its blessings. Zion will be redeemed and the house of the Lord built, when a people are prepared to keep the pure laws which must govern there. Satan will be bound and the Millennium ushered in, in proportion as the faith of the Saints and the power of the Priesthood increase on the earth.

Everything admonishes the Saints that in themselves they will find all the obstacles which oppose their progress in the way of salvation. The Lord is ready and waiting to show them the way as fast as they will walk in it. Then let them be diligent in every good word and work, seek after the counsels of the spirit, and strive to realize that as each day passes by they have made some progress in the way of eternal life.

MC'LEAN'S VOLCANIC OIL LINIMENT is truly a celebrated remedy, and has done more to alleviate human suffering than any other remedy ever discovered.

One or two applications will relieve the most severe pain, bruise or sprain.

Two bottles will cleanse, purify, and heal the foulest ulcer or sore, and it will heal the most severe burn or scald without a scar.

Every family should have a supply constantly on hand, for use in time of need.

Read the following extract of a letter. which is incontestable proof of its wonderful efficacy:

A BLIND MAN RESTORED TO SIGHT.

J. H. McLEAN—Dear Sir: * * * I have been suffering for four years with rheumatic sore eyes, being at times altogether blind. I procured the advice of several physicians, but none of them could do me any good. By the advice of a friend I applied your "Volcanic Oil Liniment," according to the directions around the bottle, and it has cured me permanently. I have used it since for bruises, pains, &c., and it has always given immediate relief. I live on the main road near Farmington.

Yours, respectfully, JOHN H. ALLERD.

Jefferson county, Mo.

For horses it is far superior to any other remedy for curing lameness, bruises, cuts, oldsores, swellings, &c.

We say, then, to all who may be suffering from external diseases, call at once and get a supply. Thousands of bottles are sold (and used) daily, and we have never heard of a case where it has failed in giving relief when properly applied.

☞For sale by J. H. MCLEAN, the proprietor, corner Third and Pine streets, St. Louis, and by all respectable dealers in Medicines everywhere.

MEDICINE FOR THE BILLION!
A Certain Remedy for all Diseases of
MAN OR ANIMALS,
Requiring an External Application.
Warranted in every Case for which it is Recommended!

THE MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT!

Unlike all other popular medicines, it is used by many prominent members of the faculty, and many of the public Hospitals. Their prejudices have yielded to indisputable and incontrovertible demonstrations of cures performed where their remedies had failed.

It has cured more cases of
RHEUMATISM
than any other medicine ever used. Its efficacy in this terrible disease is acknowledged by all who have used it. It not only cures the complaint, but appears to give a vigor and elasticity to the limbs, before unknown, thus performing a double office.

A FEW TESTIMONIALS.

PATH FINDER OFFICE, May 11, 1854.

G. W. WESTBROOK:—
Please send me by the bearer three large bottles of your Mexican Mustang Liniment, as I wish to take it up to my place in Vermont, not thinking it advisable to do without it. I have used it in my family and on my horses, and have found it invaluable. Yours,
J. T. WHITNEY.

ELIZABETHTOWN, TENN., May 25, 1855.

MR. G. W. WESTBROOK:—
Dear Sir—It affords me much pleasure in saying to you that the Mexican Mustang Liniment outsells any medicine that I have ever had for sale, and comes nearer doing what it promises to do. Send me another supply, as I am nearly out. Yours respectfully,
JOHN SINGLETRAY, P. M.

PHILADELPHIA, June 11, 1854.

MR. G. W. WESTBROOK:
Sir—My son was afflicted with a swelling upon the knee joint, which confined him to the house. I had a doctor attending him for some time, but he did not do him any good. One of my neighbors told me to use the Mustang Liniment. I asked the doctor if I could do so, and he told me he thought I could not do better.
I procured one bottle, and in about a week he was able to go out. I can safely recommend it to the afflicted.
Respectfully yours, MRS. BENNETT.

W. S. Ladd & Co., of Portland, Oregon, writes that there is an immense demand for the Mexican Mustang Liniment in that country, and orders forty gross to be shipped by Golden Gate, that sails in a few days from New York.

Park & White of San Francisco, California, order 100 gross, to be forwarded by first clipper for that port.

PORT AU PRINCE, HAYTI, Jan. 16th, 1854.
I had the pleasure to receive invoice and boxes Mexican Mustang Liniment per Croton, and have no doubt it will have a brisk sale on the island.
GEORGE RACKSTER.

To give health, strength and elacity to the limbs, there is nothing can equal in effect, the
MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT.
FARMERS AND LIVERY STABLE KEEPERS
have need it for the following diseases with extraordinary success, certifying invariably to the efficacy of the Liniment, and the truthfulness of our assertions in its behalf:

THE LAW OF PLANETARY ROTATION.

DISCOVERED BY PROFESSOR ORSON PRATT.

TO THE EDITOR: Dear Sir--Permit me to announce to the world, through your valuable paper, an astronomical discovery, made by me on the eleventh day of November, 1854. I allude to a law governing planetary rotation. Telescopic observation reveals to us the fact that many of the bodies of the solar system, not only have a progressive velocity in their orbits, but a rotative motion upon their axes. Heretofore, the only means known to astronomers, by which to determine the exact period of a planet's rotation, has been a careful observation of the movements of spots upon its surface. For instance, spots are discerned on the Eastern limb of a planet's disc, which, instead of remaining stationary, gradually move across the disc in a Westerly direction, disappear for a few hours at the Western limb, and again re-appear in their former position on the Eastern limb. These spots are believed to be portions of the surface of a planet darker than the adjacent parts, and carried around by a rotation of the planet on its own axis from West to East.

By such observation, the period of the rotation of the planet Mars has been determined to be 24h. 37m. 23s. mean solar time; Jupiter's period, 9h. 54m. 12s.; and Saturn's period, 10h. 29m. 17s.--Mercury and Venus are situated so near the sun that it is extremely difficult to distinctly discern spots upon their surfaces. It is believed, however, by some astronomers that their observations are sufficiently exact to assign to Mercury a rotative period of about 24h. 5m., and to Venus a period of 23h. 21m. 21s. It is still maintained by some eminent observers that there is a small degree of uncertainty remaining as to the rotative periods of Mercury and Venus. Uranus is supposed by some observers to rotate on its axis in 9h. 30m.; but this planet is so far distant from us that it is generally believed that the present powers of the telescope are incapable of revealing any spots upon its surface sufficiently distinct to determine whether it has a rotation or not. Whether the asteroids and the planet Neptune rotate, the astronomical instruments of the present day are utterly inadequate to determine.

Do all the planets of the solar system rotate? Observation has, as yet, been entirely unable to answer this question. It is supposed from analogy that rotation is as extended in its operations as the progressive motions of planets in their orbits--that every planet turns upon its axis, producing the agreeable alternations of light and darkness, day and night. But how to demonstrate this analogical supposition--how to ascertain the periods of rotation of such planets as are beyond the reach of observation, has been a problem unsolved by the astronomical world.

Many eminent and distinguished astronomers have eagerly sought after some law, connecting the rotative periods of the planets with some known data of the solar system, such as their distances from the sun--their orbitual velocities--their masses, &c.; but all their laborious researches to develope such law have not been crowned with success--the law of planetary rotation has eluded their grasp.

Firmly believing, from my early youth, that the diurnal periods of the planets were the results of some hidden law, I have endeavored, at different times, to discover the same, so as to determine the periods of rotation by calculation instead of observation. After many fruitless researches in regard to the original causes of planetary motion, I was led by the indications of certain hypotheses to seek for the law of rotation connected with the masses and diameters of the planets, or, in other words, with their densities. These investigations resulted in the development of the following beautiful law:

The cube roots of the densities of the planets are as the square roots of their periods of rotation;

Or, which amounts to the same thing--The squares of the cube roots of the densities of the planets are as their periods of rotation.

But as the densities of globes are proportional to their masses or quantities of matter, divided by their volumes or by the cubes of their diameters, it follows that the rotation of the planets, considered as spheres, is proportional to their masses and diameters. The law, therefore, may be expressed in terms of the masses and diameters, as follows:

The squares of the cube roots of the masses of the planets, divided by the squares of their diameters; are as their periods of rotation.

To illustrate the correctness of this law, I will give the following examples:

Example 1. Given the mass of the earth equal to 1; its equatorial diameter, 7925,5 miles; its period of rotation, 23h. 56m. 4,090475s. mean solar time, which is equal to one absolute sidereal day; also the mass of the planet Mercury equal to 0,0627694; and its diameter 3140 miles; it is required to find the period of Mercury's rotation.

$$\frac{(1)^{\frac{2}{3}} : \frac{(0.0627694)^{\frac{2}{3}}}{2}}{\frac{(7925.5)}{2}} \quad \frac{}{(3140)} \quad 23\text{h. } 56\text{m. } 4.090475\text{s. : } 24\text{h. } 5\text{m.}$$

Example 2. Given the mass of Venus equal to 0.9043346; its diameter 7800 miles; and the mass, diameter, and rotative period of the earth, as in the first example. Required the period of the rotation of Venus.

$$\frac{(1)^{\frac{2}{3}} : \frac{(0.9043346)^{\frac{2}{3}}}{2}}{\frac{(7925.5)}{2}} \quad \frac{}{(7800)} \quad 23\text{h. } 56\text{m. } 4.090475\text{s.: } 23\text{h. } 21\text{m. } 21\text{s.}$$

Example 3. Given the mass of Mars equal to 0.145337; its diameter, 4108.26 miles; and the mass, diameter, and rotation of the earth, as in the first example. Required the period of the rotation of Mars.

$$\frac{(1)^{\frac{2}{3}} : \frac{(0.145337)^{\frac{2}{3}}}{2}}{\frac{(7925.5)}{2}} \quad \frac{}{(4108.26)} \quad 23\text{h. } 56\text{m. } 4.090475\text{s. : } 24\text{h. } 37\text{m. } 23\text{s.}$$

Example 4. Given the mass of Jupiter equal to 371.7547; its diameter, 88592.7 miles; those of the earth, as in the former examples. Required the period of the rotation of Jupiter.

$$\frac{(1)^{\frac{2}{3}} : \frac{(371.7547)^{\frac{2}{3}}}{2}}{\frac{(7925.5)}{2}} \quad \frac{}{(88592.7)} \quad 23\text{h. } 56\text{m. } 4.090475\text{s. : } 9\text{h. } 54\text{m. } 12\text{s.}$$

Example 5. Given the mass of Saturn and its rings exual to 289.0281; its diameter, 79160 miles; those of the earth, as in the former examples. Required the period of the rotation of Saturn.

$$\frac{(1)^{\frac{2}{3}} : \frac{(289.0281)^{\frac{2}{3}}}{2}}{\frac{(7925.5)}{2}} \quad \frac{}{(79160)} \quad 23\text{h. } 56\text{m. } 4.090475\text{s. : } 10\text{h. } 29\text{m. } 17\text{s.}$$

Example 6. Given the mass of Uranus equal to 20.625488; its diameter, 34500 miles; those of the earth, as in the former examples. Required the period of the rotation of Uranus.

$$\frac{(1)^{\frac{2}{3}} : \frac{(20.625488)^{\frac{2}{3}}}{2}}{\frac{(7925.5)}{2}} \quad \frac{}{(34500)} \quad 23\text{h. } 56\text{m. } 4.090475\text{s. : } 9\text{h. } 30\text{m.}$$

Example 7. Given the mass of Neptune equal to 26.87671; its diameter, 41500 miles; those of the earth, as in the former examples. Required the period of the rotation of Neptune.

$$\frac{(1)^{\frac{2}{3}} : \frac{(26.87671)^{\frac{2}{3}}}{2}}{\frac{(7925.5)}{2}} \quad \frac{}{(41500)} \quad 23\text{h. } 56\text{m. } 4.090475\text{s. : } 7\text{h. } 49\text{m. } 57\text{s.}$$

Example 8. Given the mass of Neptune equal to 26.87671; its diameter, 37500 miles; those of the earth remaining as in former examples. Required the period of the rotation of Neptune.

$$\frac{(1)^{\frac{2}{3}} : \frac{(26.87671)^{\frac{2}{3}}}{2}}{\frac{(7925.5)}{2}} \quad \frac{}{(37500)} \quad 23\text{h. } 56\text{m } 4.090475\text{s. : } 9\text{h. } 35\text{m. } 32\text{s.}$$

If in any of these examples the mass be divided by the cube of the diameter, the quotient will be the density of the planet. And if the density of the earth be taken as unity or 1, the densities of the other planets, deduced from the data given in the foregoing examples, will be as in the second column of the following table:

Name of Planet.	Densities, (the earth's being 1.)	Masses, (the earth's being 1.)	Diamtr. in mls.	Diameters, (the earth's being 1.)	Period of rotation in absolute sidereal days, (the earth's being 1.)
Mercury - - -	1.00934	0.0627694	3140.	0.3961895	1.00622
Venus - - -	0.96395629	0.9043346	7800.	0.984165	0.976824
Earth - - - -	1.000000	1.0000000	7925.5	1.000000	1.000000
Mars - - -	1.04346	0.145337	4108.26	0.51836	1.02877
Jupiter - - -	0.26616	371.7547	88592.7	11.17818	0.41377
Saturn and rings	0.29007	289.0281	79160.	9.988013	0.43899
Uranus - - -	0.25005	20.625488	34500.	4.353038	0.3985
Neptune - - -	0.1872026	26.87671	41500.	5.2362627	0.327246
Neptune - - -	0.263715	26.87671	37500.	4.7316697	0.400771

If in the examples, above given, the densities in the second column of the table be substituted for the masses and diameters, and the absolute sidereal period of the earth's rotation be considered as unity or 1, the calculations will be greatly shortened, for then the squares of the cube roots of the densities would be equal to the periods of rotation, expressed in absolute sidereal days, as in the last column of the above table.

Example. If the density of Mars be 1.04346, what will be its period of rotation?

$(1.04346)^{\frac{2}{3}} = 1.02877$ sidereal days, which is the answer.

The ratio of one mean solar day to one absolute sidereal day is as 1.00273791 to 1. Therefore, by dividing the sidereal days in the last column of the table by this ratio, the quotient will be solar days, which may be easily reduced to hours, minutes, and seconds, mean solar time.

To express the law of planetary rotation in general algebraical formula, applicable to the periods of the rotation of all the primary planets, let M, D, P, represent respectively the mass, diameter, and rotative period of the earth; and m, d, p, represent the mass, diameter, and rotative period of any planet, then we will have--

$$\frac{P^2 . D . m^{\frac{2}{3}}}{d . M^{\frac{2}{3}}} = p;$$ or in terms of the densities and periods, thus--

$$\frac{(\text{Planet's den.})^{\frac{2}{3}} . P}{(\text{Earth's den.})^{\frac{2}{3}}} = p;$$ or, if the earth's rotative period and density be each taken as unity or 1, then,

$$(\text{Planet's density})^{\frac{2}{3}} = \text{rotative period.}$$

As the rotative periods depend upon the masses and diameters of the planets, any errors entering into these elements by the imperfections of observation will necessarily affect the calculating periods of rotation in a proportionate degree. This will be more manifest by referring to the 7th and 8th examples in regard to the mass and diameter of Neptune. The mass which I have adopted in these two examples is that calculated by Professor Struve, from his own observations of the satellite attending the primary. The diameter, 41500 miles, is that given by Sir John Herschel in his 'Outlines of Astronomy.' The assumed diameter, 37500 miles, in conjunction with the same mass, gives a difference of 1h. 45m. 35s. in the calculated periods of rotation. Many astronomers have adopted 35000 miles for the diameter.

The diameter of Neptune is probably not yet known within several thousand miles, for an error of observation of three-tenths of a second of an arc, would at that great distance produce an error of over 4000 miles in the calculated diameter of the planet. The same statement is equally applicable to the determination of the mass. An error of observation on the dimensions of the orbit of Neptune's satellite, though it might be only a small fraction of a second of an arc, yet it would produce a great difference in the calculated mass. We can, therefore, in our calculations, only approximate the true periods of rotation in proportion as observation approximates the true ratio of the masses and diameters of the planets.

There is a great difference in the observations of astronomers from which the mass and diameter of Saturn are computed. Some have adopted 67,000 miles as the diameter; others, 73,000; and others again, 79160. Some have adopted the mass much less than we have assigned in the foregoing table. If we take the diameter at 67000 miles, and the mass at 175,245657, the ratio and the period of rotation will remain the same as in the table.

The renowned French mathematician--Le Verrier, to whose calculations the world are indebted for the discovery of Neptune, has revised the tables containing the elements of the planet Mercury, and has computed its mass much less than formerly received; hence, I have adopted Mercury's mass less than stated in the old tables.

It will be seen by the formula which I have given, that if the rotation is known by observation, the ratio of the mass and diameter can be calculated; and that if any two of the elements are known, the third can be calculated.

The periods of the rotations of the ultra-zodiacal planets or asteroids cannot be calculated until observation shall determine their masses and diameters.

Whether the law of planetary rotation can be extended to the rotative periods of the satellites, attending the four exterior planets of the solar system, is not known. It is supposed by some, from observation, that the periods of the rotation of the satellites are equal to their periods of revolution around their primaries; but this needs confirmation by further observation of greater perfection and accuracy than what the present powers of the telescope seem capable of affording.

From the masses and diameters of the four satellites of Jupiter, as given in Herschel's "Outlines of Astronomy," I find by the application of the law of rotation, the following relative or proportional periods. (Assuming the period of the rotation of the 1st satellite, nearest to the planet, to be equal to unity or 1.)

Jupiter's satellites.	Proportional periods of rotation, as calculated.
1st.	1.000000000
2nd.	1.788478493
3rd.	1.635488852
4th.	1.375555069

If it be true, that the rotative periods of these satellites are equal to the periods of their revolutions around their primaries, then the law does not apparently hold good for these secondary systems, unless the diameters and masses are affected with considerable errors; for instance, if the apparent angular diameter of the 2nd satellite be reduced the one-twentieth of a second of an arc, it would reduce the real diameter 116 miles, which would give a calculated period of rotation, such as should exist in order to correspond precisely with the ratio of the periods of revolution in their orbits. In the cases of the 3rd and 4th satellites, there would have to be a greater correction in order to make the rotative and orbitual periods of the same length. A mistake of a small fraction of a second of an arc, might easily be made in the apparent angular diameters. Likewise, as the masses are deduced from observations of the minute perturbations which the satellites exercise upon each other, it is evident that a minute error in such observations, would give a much greater error in the calculated masses. Therefore, masses and diameters might be assumed, within the limits of unavoidable errors, which would give calculated periods of rotation for the four satellites of the same length as their orbitual periods.

This remarkable law, connecting the periods of rotation with the masses and diameters of the planets, appears to point to some more original law of a higher order of genalization. Such was the case in regard to Kepler's law, connecting the orbitual periods of the heavenly bodies with their distances from their respective centres of motion. Newton demonstrated Kepler's law to be a necessary result of the more general law of universal gravitation.

Providence may raise up a Newton in our day who shall disclose to us the reason why, the cube roots of the densities of the planets are as the square roots of their periods of rotation.

I intend in some future communication, to present a hypothesis which will, if I am not mistaken, account for this curious law obtaining in the solar system.

With the most sincere desire for the development and diffusion of useful knowledge, I subscribe myself your most humble servant,

ORSON PRATT, senior.

THE NEW CLOAK,
OR
"MIND YOUR OWN BUSINESS."

"There! I declare, if Mrs. Burton hasn't got a new cloak!" exclaimed Mrs. Waxwell to her intimate friend, Miss Viney, as they came out of Church one Sunday.

"I see she has," replied Miss Viney, very quietly.

"I know her husband can't afford it; she will be the ruin of him yet."

"I suppose they know their own business best. At any rate, it's a blessing that you or I are not accountable for his misdeeds," said Miss Viney, who though what is technically termed an 'old maid,' was not of that class who have been slanderously styled gossip and busybodies. And we have purposely introduced her to refute the foul calumny that 'old maids,' are all medlers--and we are sure that all spinsters will be grateful to us for the service.

"I don't know about that," returned Mrs. Waxwell, with a dubious shake of the head; "Mr. Burten owes my husband three hundred dollars, and I don't believe he ever will get his pay, if things go on in this way. That cloak could not have cost less than thirty dollars."

"I presume they could afford it, or they would not have bought it--at any rate they know best."

"Mrs. Burton is a vain conceited, proud woman, and pride will have a fall one of these days."

"I hope not."

"I hope she will have a fall; she would drop some of those airs then."

"I never thought she was what might be termed a vain woman.

"She is; she is an impudent minx, and the sooner she is brought down on a level with her circumstances, the better for her and the world."

"She has the reputation of being a very kind hearted person, and an excellent neighbor."

"I don't care if she has; she likes to lord it through the village, and for one I won't be ruled by her."

"Really I do not understand you; she is as amiable and humble as any one need be."

"Amiable and humble, indeed! What did she buy that new cloak for, except to excite the envy of half the town and make them think she is somebody."

"I hope there is no one so silly as to envy her," and Miss Viney cast a significant glance full in the face of her companion.

"I don't for one; but I should like to teach her that she is no better than the rest of the world."

"She don't profess to be; she visits the neighborhood, and I am sure there is no better person in sickness than she is."

"All that may be."

"When you had the erysipelas, you remember she watched with you when no one else would."

"I know it, but is one to be tyanized over forever, because she watched a few nights with me?"

"How strange you talk."

"Do I? Didn't she buy that cloak on purpose to cut a figure through town, and make every body feel cheap?"

"No, I am sure she did not; she had no such motive," replied Miss Viney smartly.

"I don't believe it, there!"

"She is not such a woman as that!"

"Yes, she is, just such a woman as that!"

"I have seen none but you who feels bad about it."

"But me! La sake! I wouldn't have you think I feel bad about it. She can wear what she's a mind to, for all me; only I hope she can afford it, that's all.

"I think she can; she has the reputation of being a pretty careful woman."

"I don't care, but I feel it my duty to warn my husband to look about his debt. When things get to be so awful extravagant, there's no knowing what may happen."

"Mr. Burton is doing very good business, people say."

"Nobody knows anything about what he's doing. All I know is when 'Squire Smith sold him two cords of wood last week, and carried in the bill, he couldn't pay it. He actually put the 'Squire off till next week. That looks as though they could afford thirty dollar cloaks, don't it?"

With these sage reflections, Mrs. Waxwell turned down the lane that led down to her home, leaving Miss Viney to pursue her way and ponder on the extravagance of some folks.

Mrs. Waxwell loved fine clothes quite as much as any other woman in the nineteenth century, and this is saying a great deal. But then her husband was parsimonious, and though she loved nice things very much, she loved money more--which we take it, amounts to nothing more nor less than meanness.

Mr. Waxwell was a farmer and well off in the world. The advent of railroads in his native town had turned things topsy-turvy in general and the heads of the women in particular--to use Mr. Maxwell's language. Time was when they were content to wear a straw bonnet and calico gown to meeting; but now they had to rig out in silks and satin, with furbelows and all sorts of rigging attached to them, for all the world just like a clown in the circus. Such were Mr. Waxwell's views of the social influence of the railroad.

Society began to be a little "select," folks put on airs, and were all stuck that you couldn't touch them with a ten foot pole.

Farmer Waxwell did not like this state of things--it cost money on the one hand, and did not like to be thrown in the shade on the other. He was about the richest man in the place; but ten dollar bonnets and thirty dollar cloaks were abominations that he could not tolerate. Mrs. Waxwell didn't like to be outdone in the matter of dress and when she bought a new merino cloak the previous season, she had not a doubt it would be unsurpassed for two seasons, at least. When Mrs. Burton came out with the thirty dollar velvet, she found the wind was taken out of her sail, and she was as indignant as the case demanded.

In the rise and progress of the village since the advent of the railroad, two new stores had gone into operation, one of which was conducted by Mr. Burton, an enterprising young man, from the metropolis, who had brought a city wife and a great many city notions with him.

As with a great many who go from the city to the country he was exceedingly annoyed by that disinterested charitable attention to other peoples' business, which so extensively prevails in many rural districts. Mr. Burton kept his affairs to himself, and this bothered and perplexed the gossips. His wife had a way of attending to her own concerns--she had been brought up where people do not even know their next door neighbor. If she wanted a new bonnet, she never deemed it necessary to consult the neighbors in regard to her ability to afford it, or about the style and material.

Poor Mrs. Waxwell! her star began to decline when Mrs. Burton came to the village. She was no longer the leader of the ton, and her heart was burning with envy. Though she often received the kind offices of the store-keeper's wife, both in sickness and in health, she would willingly have crushed her, and she determined that her unconscious rival should suffer the consequences of her temerity.

Her first demonstration was upon her husband, whom she found no difficulty in convincing that Mr. Burton must be ruined by the extravagance of his wife, and that unless he immediatly collected his debt, he would certainly lose it.

As soon as she had done her washing on Monday, she "made some call," and embraced the opportunity of commenting freely upon that new cloak. The women told their husbands that Mr. Burton would certainly fail; and before three days had elapsed, there was quite a ferment in the place.

Nobody knew anything about Mr. Burton's affairs; he seemed to be doing a good business though no one knew of his having any money. He did not even own the house in which he lived; he had no property, apparently, but his stock. The careful old farmers, to whom in the course of trade he had become indebted for produce which he sent to Boston, began to be alarmed by these rumors.

It was in the State of New Hampshire; and at the time of which I write, the "grap law," was in force and is still, for aught I know.

One morning as Mr. Burton returned from a journey to a neighboring town, he found his stock attached to the claim of Farmer Waxwell--and all on account of that cloak his wife had worn to meeting on the preceeding Sunday.

He had not the means to pay the note at that moment, and while he was considering a plan to extricate himself from the dilemma, the news that his goods had been attached, spread all over the place. All the creditors were in hot haste to follow the track of Farmer Waxwell--for it was "first come, first served"--and in less than two hours a dozen had fastened upon the stock of the store.

This was a tremenduous result to follow in the train of a thirty dollar cloak, and a GOSSIPING OLD WOMAN.

"What do you think now, Miss Viney?" asked Mrs. Waxwell, as they met, soon after the store-keeper's disaster had been made public.

"I hope Mr. Burton will be able to pay his debts."

"But he won't--I know he won't!"

"Probably if they had given him any notice of their intention to demand the payment of their claims, he would have been prepared to meet them."

"I guess Mrs. Burton will not feel quite so stuck up after this."

"I hope you have done nothing to bring about this sad result."

"But I have, I made my husband sue his note, and when he put on, others did. Thirty dollar cloak indeed!"

"I am sorry you have done this; you may ruin Mr. Burton by it."

"That's just what I mean to do!" and Mrs. Waxwell's malignant expression betrayed the jealousy she had so long harbored.

"You did. It was very unkind and ungrateful in you to do so," replied Miss Viney, indignantly.

"Humph."

"Any trader would be likely to come out badly to have all his creditors pounce upon him with giving him a chance to collect his debts.',

EXCHANGE ON SALT LAKE.

Emigrants, Missionaries, and all persons wishing to carry or send money to any part of Utah, are hereby notified that we have made the necessary arrangements, and are prepared to furnish SIGHT DRAFTS on Gov. B. Young, or on any of the principal Mercantile houses in Salt Lake City. Bring or send your money to the Luminary Office, and drafts for the same amount will be returned to you, or forwarded by succeeding mail to any person in Utah, as you may direct. Duplicates will be furnished, whenever required, so that in case of failure of mails, no loss will be sustained, and you will avoid the risk of transporting specie, besides the Church wish to use it here.

The Luminary—Notice to Subscribers.

WE are in receipt of a letter from Thomas D. Brown, dated Fort Harmony, Utah, July 14th, acknowledging the receipt of Luminary, from Nos. 14 and upwards, and propounding some knotty questions concerning the whereabouts of the first thirteen numbers, which we will here answer for the information and satisfaction of our subscribers at Fort Harmony, and all other places where the first numbers of the Luminary have not been received. The demand for the Luminary has exceeded our most sanguine expectations, so much so that before the first three months had expired, we were run out of the first few numbers, which will account to our subscribers in Utah; and elsewhere, for the non-appearance of the first thirteen numbers. We have increased the issue twice, and from the present demand, we presume it will be necessary to publish an additional number at the commencement of the second volume. The present volume is drawing to a close; it is therefore desirous that our subscribers should as soon as possible renew their subscriptions, which will aid us in judging of the future demand.

THE LATE CONFERENCE,
the first Detachment of Volunteers and their Missions.

We publish in other columns of this paper the Minutes of our General Conference, which convened by appointment on Saturday the 6th inst. We necessarily omit in this weeks Luminary, the publication of the spirited remarks of the Elders, with which the business was richly interspersed. The representation from the branches was good, and the prospects seemed to be favorable for the progress of truth, during the next half year. Although meeting under certain disadvantages, through the absence of Presidents' Snow, Andrus and Spencer, yet we were made to rejoice exceedingly in the enjoyment of that spirit that dwells so richly with them; and we realized that though they were absent in body, yet they were present in spirit, for which we felt to say hosanna, hosanna, to God and the Lamb.

Our Conference will not soon be forgotton, by those who had the good fortune to be present. It might be truly said of those who participated in the Conference, that they were all with one accord in one place, praising God. One spirit seemed to pervade every bosom, and that spirit was so generous, noble, devoted, and true to the cause of God and the interests of his kingdom, that fathers, mothers, wives, children, business, and all other things were forgotten, or treated as subordinate considerations, in view of the honors and obligations of bearing forth the everlasting gospel to the sons of men. The holy angels and spirits of just men made perfect, must have rejoiced in beholding such a glorious display of nobility and devoted heroism, as evinced on this occasion by the majority of the Priesthood and Saints. How far the spirit of the old prophets and Saints, were instrumental in producing the holy aspirations, that filled the bosoms of the faithful, during the Conference, we are left to conjecture. One thing is certain, the spirit of the prophets and apostles of latter days was abundantly manifest, which caused all present to of one mind, reminding us of the spirit that reigns in Zion; which the Lord has measurably poured out upon us, through disobedience to the more perfect laws of Zion, which have been introduced and established with our present organization.

Those brethren who were appointed on Missions at this Conference are highly honored among the sons of men. Their names will figure in the annals of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, as the first detachment of volunteers from this stake of Zion, who leaving wives, children, and friends have gone forth into the vineyard, as ministers of our God. And we believe they are men of whom the angels and Gods need not be ashamed — they have few equals in these regions, and for their superiors we must look to Zion — the valleys of the mountains — the city of our God, where we shall find noble veterans who have passed through the ordeal these brethren are now entering, and have come off victorious over the world, the flesh, and the devil.

It will be seen from the Minutes of the Conference that five Elders are appointed to the Cherokee Nation. Two to Texas, and several to other places. From these Missions we anticipate considerable good will be effected before our next April Conference. It is desirable that the travelling Elders should keep us well posted, as to their movements from time to time, and of the success that will inevitably follow their faithful labors. May the God of Joseph and Brigham pour out his spirit upon them, that they may be fully qualified for every duty, and be able to search out the lost sheep of the House of Israel, and lead them home to Zion with songs of everlasting joy upon their heads. Let all the people say, Amen.

THE DAY OF GOD'S POWER.

The present position of the nations, is in every way calculated to bring to pass the saying of the prophet David, "He will make his people willing in the day of his power." Many ages and generations have passed and God has not had a people on the earth whom he has acknowledged as his Saints or people. And many hundreds of years have passed away when it could not be said that there was any particular manifestation of God's power. It would appear from the writings of the old Jewish prophets that there were certain times, seasons and dispensations when God has paid particular attention to the earth, and some of the inhabitants thereof, and at other times He has paid but very little regard to it or them. Hence the prophet said, "Thou shalt arise and favor Zion, for the time to favor her, yea, the set time, is come, and the Lord shall take pleasure in her stones and and shall favor the dust thereof, when the Lord shall build up Zion, then will he appear in his glory." If the Lord should appear in his glory to the Gentiles they would be consumed by the brightness of his appearance, and many who call themselves Saints, would say, let us not see thy face, or hear thy voice, lest we die.

There are those among the Saints who are always on hand and ready for every engagement and every emergency. Nothing comes to them amiss, prosperity or adversity, bonds, imprisonment or death, are all alike to them. They are prepared for every changing scene that could possibly operate against the interests of the kingdom of God. They are always ready and willing to lay hold of their duties and obligations. These are they who will be ready to meet the Lord when he shall come in flaming fire, taking vengeance on all who know not God, and obey not the Gospel.

There are some persons who want a great deal of persuading and coaxing, before they can be induced to serve the Lord faithfully. And before they are willing to do what the Lord wants them in all things, they have to be mobbed, driven, or otherwise chastened. And those who are always ready and willing have oftentimes to be afflicted with the slothful and disobedient, in order that the people, may EN MASSE, be ready to show forth the power of God, for God will make his people willing in the day of his power. When the Lord wanted his people to leave the upper part of this State, and establish themselves in a temporary resting place in Illinois, and build up a Temple to his Holy Name, he sent a mob against and drove them out; and again when it was necessary for them to go up into the tops of the mountains and rear a Holy Temple, unto which the nations should gather. The Lord made them willing, and in doing so, has manifested his wisdom and overruling providence, for in this dispensation He has made the deserted city like unto a wilderness, and the wilderness to which they gathered has become like a fruitful field and the Garden of the Lord,

We extract the following items from T. D. Brown's communication, he says:

"At this settlement and Cedar City, the grasshoppers have spared our crops; but North, throughout this Territory I hear they have destroyed much. The Iron Works and mills progress finely, and prosper.

I have just returned from an exploring expedition on the Colorado. It is desirable that goods should be imported to this Territory by water. We found the Colorado a navigable river, 200 miles above Fort Yumah; and believe it is so to within 110 miles of this settlement. The settlement on the Los Vegas prospers—the Indians peaceable; this makes this resting place of the U. S. Mail, and of emigrants by the Southern route, now desirable and pleasant. Upwards of 400 jolly Indians on the Muddy, desire the white man to teach them farming; already they grow not a little wheat, corn, potatoes, &c. And those south Santa Clara Utahs, have now upwards of 15 acres well cultivated, and good crops.

That you may prosper, and truth prevail is my prayer."

Elder James McGaw writes to President Spencer from Mormon Grove, K. T., under date of September 20, from which we extract the following:

"I arrived safely at the Grove on the second day after leaving you, though I had a rainy and muddy time. I found all things as well here as could be expected, though the hogs have destroyed much corn, and on account of the damp cold wheather, I can scarcely expect much to ripen. I shall endeavor to save the fodder which will be a large quantity. The brethren have put up twenty tons of hay. The cattle are all alive and have done well. Brother George Rust has found one horse, one ox, and one cow since I left home. When I can be liberated from here, I will take a tour up the river as was expected, unless otherwise ordered."

We shall be glad to have a visit from brother McGaw as soon as his circumstances will permit.

Elder B. F. Matthews writes us from Brewerington Miss., under date of September 14, and says:

"I take up my pen to let you know that I am in the Southern States. I was sent from San Barnidino, California, by Presidents Lyman and Rich, who preside at that place. I was appointed at a Conference held on the 6th of October, 1854. I arrived in Monroe Co., Mississippi, Feb. 4th, '55. I soon commenced to preach and many of the people commenced to believe and advocate our doctrine, and I thought the prospect was good for doing a good work in that country, but the people are generally given up to political questions that they have no mind to devote to religion.

I am now laboring in Itawamba Co., there are some to be re-baptised at my next meeting, which will take place on the 6th of October. I am quite alone here, my companion stopped at San Francisco, and I have not heard from him since. I am anxious to correspond with you, and would like to take your paper. I think of going through in the Spring to Salt Lake City, and shall pass through St. Louis en route; my company will be about 40 or 50. There are a great many calls for preaching in this country, more than there has been in any part where I have travelled. I have large crowds out every day.

MR. T. S. WILLIAMS left this City on Thursday, October 11th, by the F. X. Aubrey, bound for Weston. He well leave Weston on the 16th or 17th inst., (should no unforeseen circumstance prevent,) bound for Salt Lake City, in company of Eld. Peck and a young gentleman from this City. There are not many who would dare undertake the journey across the plains at this late season of the year. It is unquestionably a precarious undertaking, particularly, since Genl. Harney's slaughter of the Sioux Indians. We trust the little company will meet with no interruption, but will make a safe and speedy transit to their mountain home.

THE HERALD has briefly noticed the article contained in our columns last week, and urges his innocence so strongly that we are inclined to believe those statements made by him derogatory to Mormonism, an accidental plagiarism, and on confessions of faith will give him plenary absolution; but we hope in the future, it will be a caution who he copies after.

PRESIDENT SPENCER'S health is slightly improving. He is still in a very precarious position, but we trust through the constant attendance of Dr. Clinton, who is now attending him, the prayers of the Saints and the blessings of the Almighty, that he will soon recover.

JOEL H. JOHNSON, of G. S. L., will please accept our thanks for his poetic contributions. When the muse shall again inspire him, we shall be happy to receive additional favors of the same character. We shall be glad at all times to receive the literary productions of our subscribers, whether they be poetic or prosaic; which, if approved, will be admitted into the colums of the LUMINARY; and if not approved may still be admitted into an hororable place in our sanctum sanctorum, where the printers hand nor the capricious types will neither mutilate nor destroy.

Correspondence.

Texas Conference Announced—Winter Quarters for the Emigration.

ELLIS CO., TEXAS, September 18, '55.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LUMINARY:

Dear Sir—We take the present opportunity to give you a short account of affairs in this land. On the second day of the present month, a meeting was held in Madisonville, Madison county, at which myself and brother W. E. Moody attended, when it was resolved to search out a location for winter quarters, where the Saints of Texas can gather. for the purpose of preparing for a journey across the plains, to the valleys of the mountains. Myself, brothers Moody and Thomas were appointed to look out the place, and report to the Saints throughout Texas. Acccordingly brother Moody and myself set out for this county and arrived on the 12th inst. Next day we were joined by brother Thomas, and after looking around for several days, a place was made choice of on the North fork of Richland creek, in this county, seven miles from the little village of Milford, where we invite all the Saints of Texas, who expect to go with us to Utah next season, to assemble on or before the first of March next, by which time, we wish to be ready to set off. Those Saints who cannot come to this place with their families till starting time, would do well to send their cattle here, as there is a good muskut valley here, where stock will do well.

For the future, my Post Office will be Milford, Ellis county; brother Wm. C. Moody the same, and brother Preston Thomas, as heretofore, Vine Grove, Washington county. A Conference is appointed to be held at Winter Quarters, on the 25th of December, at which time we hope all the Elders in Texas, who can conveniently, will meet with us.

Praying for the prosperity of the Redeemer's Kingdom, we subscribe ourselves yours in the new and everlasting covenant. BENJ. L. CLAPP.
PRES. THOMAS.
WM. C. MOODY.

KEOKUK, October 3d, 1855.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LUMINARY:

Dear Sir: As I am about to leave Keokuk I feel it my duty to write a few lines that may be interesting to yourself and all those who love the prosperity of Zion. Since I wrote you last the Lord has abundantly blessed my labors in stiring up the Saints, and gathering unto the fold some of the lost sheep of the house of Israel.

I have re-baptised in Keokuk and its vicinity, nineteen persons, and baptised thirteen; among the number were whole households. The whole number that I have re-baptised since last April Conference is 108, baptised 39, married two couple, ordained nine Elders, two Priests, one Teacher, and one Deacon—to God be all the glory.

I received a letter last evening from an anxious enquirer after truth in Davenport, informing me that he and his whole household would be baptised.—Although this region of country is the old stamping ground of the Saints, from which they were driven a few years since, yet there are many honest persons who are enquiring after the old paths that they may walk therein; and Elders are needed to stir up those who are in the back ground, and to gather up the honest hearted in this section of country. To the Elders I would say it is a glorious work, and my heart rejoices in it. Although like one of old who had to fight with beasts at Ephesus. I have to contend with devils in human form, who call me a G—d d—d old man—a thief and a lier. Yet they don't frighten me. No! my confidence in God is not shaken, for there are more for me than against me. I am filled with the spirit of God daily. Angels are around about me, and my heart is full of blessings for the Saints, and the honest in heart.

I received good news from Manti, U. T., a few days since. The grasshoppers were leaving, and although the wheat crops were in some places cut off, there was no prospect of the Saints starving to death as our kind friends in the States had hoped. It rejoices my heart to know that the Saints in Utah are humbling themselves before the Lord, and are acknowledging His hand in the midst of His judgments I would just say to my friends in Manti who wish me to go home, that whenever the Lord tells me to go I shall go; or whatever He tells me to do I shall do, or be found trying. My friends must excuse me writing to them personally, as my time is pretty well taken up preaching, instructing and baptising. All is well with me.

Yours respectfully, JAMES CASE.

HISTORIAN'S OFFICE, G. S. L. CITY, Aug. 31, 1855.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE LUMINARY:

SIR:—Since mine of the 31st of July, there has been no material change in the weather; there was a little rain on Sunday the 19th inst., but with this exception the drowth has been very severe, and water for irrigation very scarce. The wells for family use are also getting very shallow. Fires have been raging in eastern Oregon, to a great extent, causing the atmosphere to be murky, and apparently foggy, in this territory. The corn, however, where watered sufficiently, is growing rapidly, and promises a good crop if the frost holds off long enough. The wheat is nearly all harvested, and I am sorry to say does not amount to half the usual average. But if the corn turns out tolerably, we shall not starve. The heat is still very oppressive, the thermometer often reaching 96° in the office, in the middle of the day; but the nights are getting rather cooler. Inflamation of the eyes is very prevalent; Elder Carrington has been laid up a month with that disease, but is now much better. The diarrhea is also prevalent, and there has been some cases of Cholera Morbus.

Dr. Bernhisel has just returned from a visit to Fillmore, and is much pleased with the appearance of the State house, one wing of which (60 feet by 40,) will be completed in time to accommodate the meeting of the Legislative Assembly, on the 2nd Monday in December, next.

Elder Parley P. Pratt, arrived from California on Saturday the 18th inst., accompanied by Elder James Hawkins, and other returned missionaries, from the Sandwich Islands, &c. He is in good health.

What with the various societies, philosophical and scientific lectures, and the new "Deseret costume," for the ladies, we have plenty of animation among us, even in this isolated far off region. We have an eye to improving our circumstances, and spreading ourselves, many stock farms having been established in the Malad and Cache Valleys', where grass is tolerably good, allthough it has been burnt off once this season. A church herd is being located in Cache Valley.

The California mail arrived on the evening of the 27th inst., by which I received a letter from Elder J. L. Heywood, who was at San Francisco, his health being considerably improved. Elder Amasa Lyman was preaching in the city. By letter from Elder John Steel at the Los Vegas, I learn that all the timber which could be found within forty miles of that settlement did not amount to more two hundreed good trees. Their prospects for crops are very good. They were raising a subscription for digging a well in the centre of the big desert.

The people of Parowan were cutting hay on the Beaver in consequence of the drowth.

Yours, truly, GEO. A. SMITH.

From the Missouri Republican.

LETTER FROM UTAH TERRITORY.

GREAT SALT LAKE, Aug. 31, 1855.

MR. EDITOR:—Business has been very dull in this city during the last two or three months, but the recent receipts of new goods created some activity in the market, though much less than in previous years. Crops will be so short, people, generally, will have no surplus to dispose of, beyond what will be required to obtain groceries, clothing, and some other indispensable necessaries. Stock is the only articles there is a superabundance of, and for these, merchants are disposed to trade; hence, the prospects for a large business this season are not flattering, as but little money circulate among the people.

Livingston, Kincead & Co's first train of wagons arrived on the 15th inst., Gilbert & Co's first division on the 20th, followed by the second and third on the 24th and 27th. Williams & Co's first train is expected in a few days, and others will arrive in the course of the ensuing month, so there will be an ample stock of goods to supply a diminished demand.

You will notice in the Deseret News some reference to a sweet substance discovered on the rocks and leaves of trees in Utah valley, large quantities of which have been collected, boiled, strained, and run into cakes like maple sugar which it resembles. I examined a barrel of it, and thought it had a bitter taste—owing, probably, to the juice of the leaves being extracted by overboiling—I found that it contained much sacarine matter. Since its discovery in Utah valley, it has been found in this, and no doubt extends to other valleys. Like honey dew, it is formed by the elements, and the most extraordinary circumstance connected with it, is the immense quantity extending over so great a space.

The health of the city has not been very good this summer. Cholera-morbus is the prevailing disease, and several, mostly children, have fallen victims to it. No doubt, decaying vegetation, owing to the drowth, was the primary and acting cause to produce an unhealthy state of the atmosphere. Fewer deaths, however have occurred than might have been expected, and there is less sickness now than has been. Sore eyes are more prevalent here among both adults and children, than I have known elsewhere, and the disease appear not only epidemical, but atmospheric, if not contagious—for it rarely attacks one member of a family without several others being effected. Many have derived much benefit from bathing the eyes with water from the Hot Sulphur Springs, as it appears to allay the influmation and impart relief. The temperature of one of these springs is 128° Fahrenheit, and its waters contain of Dr. Bernhisel, Delegate to Congress, will be a passenger by this mail. He was of course, elected without opposition, and is the most suitable man that could be sent. His affable manners, and the amiable traits in his character, cannot fail to secure him friends wherever he is.

Dr. Hurt, Indian Agent, returned on the 22d inst., from a visit to the Indians on the Humboldt, with whom he made a treaty. These Indians have been quiet for a year past, and with a little forbearance on the part of the whites, if is belived that no apprehensions need be felt by emigrants passing through their country. MINUTES OF THE CONFERENCE

Of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints, held in St. Louis, in the Church, corner of Washington Avenue and Fourth Streets, October 6th 1855.

The Conference was called to order at 10 1-2 o'clock, A. M., when the congregation sung the 22nd hymn, "Arise, O glorious Zion, thou joy of latter days," &c. Prayer was offered up by Elder John Banks. The 273rd hymn was then sung, "Praise to the man who communed with Jehovah," &c. Elder C. Edwards then moved that Elder James H. Hart, preside over this Conference. Seconded and carried.

The President then arose and made the following remarks:

BELOVED BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—Having been chosen by your vote to preside over this Conference, I arise to commence the duties and business of the same; trusting that the spirit of God will rest upon me, and this Conference, to direct us in all things pertaining to our interests and blessing, and the interests of all the Saints and all the branches in this stake of Zion.

In order that all things may be done orderly, and that we may have a faithful record kept of all our resolutions and discourses, I propose that James S. Cantwell act as Clerk of this Conference, and that S. J. Lees act as special reporter. [Seconded and carried unanimously.]

This is the united way in which I wish our business to be transacted through the whole of this Conference. I desire to see all things done in order and with common consent, that the Holy Spirit may rest upon us, and bless all things we do in the name of the Lord.

It is eleven months since we first met together in this city, accompanied by Elders Snow and Andrus, when this people was organized into a stake of Zion.

Many changes have been experienced since that time, but they have been sanctified to our good; there were few propably who thought or conceived of the amount of good to be effected by this organization. Some looked ed upon it as an empty name, that would not be attended with any particular blessing or benefits; others who were better posted up, foresaw the results that have been manifested since this stake of Zion was organized. President Snow is now at home in the valleys of the mountains, and brother Andrus is on his way there, and we are happy to learn from Dr. Bernhisal that he is getting on so well. He is in good health, and his company is pushing on vigorously and is likely to get to the valleys of the mountains in good order, for this blessing, I feel to thank God, and for all the blessings vouchsafed to our brethren.

There is one draw back to us at this Conference, we have not the company of Elder Orson Spencer. He is now sick, but he is in the hands of the Lord, who has power to heal and restore, and to bless and to save to the uttermost. If it be not the will of our Father who is heaven, that his spirit should now enter the spirit world, he will be spared to us. I know there is not a soul present but what desires that Elder Spencer, should be restored unto us, to bless this people; and if the desires of the upright and the righteous prevail with God, he will live to bless us, otherwise, we say not our will, but thy will, O, God be done.

I presume there are none here this morning but when they hold up their hands to vote for a measure will mean all they do, and understand what is implied in the act. We have had from time in our assemblies, such persons who have not voted with the saints, and have not offered a contrary vote, who have not had spirit, or confidence, or moral courage, or common honesty enough to manifest their feelings in a Conference as we desire; and after our Conference is past will boast that they have not voted for such and such measures, and throw all their influence against the execution of the measures we have adopted at our Conference. I trust there is no such individual here, that there is no such in the city who will longer call himself A SAINT, particularly an officer in this stake of Zion. I desire to see those measures adopted at our last November Conference sustained, with all our energy, and power, and all the measures of interest that may be adopted for the benefit of this stake of Zion. It is not an idle matter when we raise our hands to God, there is some import in the act, and the Lord takes cognizance of it, it is a solemn oath before the Lord and each other, and if we fail to perform it, thro' ignorance or inability the Lord may wink at it. But not so if we openly and knowingly violate our covenants, sin will be found on our garments; it is therefore, necessary, that we understand what we do, and execute all that the Lord requires at our hands in righteousness.

I am happy to have the company of brethren who surround me, we have with us Elder John Banks, with whom I have been acquainted from the time I first entered the kingdom of God, who first preached to me the everlasting Gospel, and who also sent me out to preach the same. I feel peculiarly happy, having his presence at the Conference and those of you that are acquainted with him will be glad to see him and receive instructions from his lips, during this Conference. We have several brethren here from the valley and the Presidents of the various branches, and though we have not Elders' Snow and Andrus, with us yet I feel it is our privilege to have the spirit of the Lord, we have the priesthood and blessings that our brethren left with us, that Brigham sent from the mountains. If we are faithful we shall have sufficient of the Holy Spirit to do that which the Lord requires at our hands and we shall rejoice during this Conference. I desire that our minds should be concentrated on the business of the Conference, and drawn from the things that do not concern us here, that all our energies may be devoted and consecrated to the Lord, during the time we remain together, that it may be for the glory of the Lord and the upbuilding of his kingdom.

I do not know how much business we may get through this morning, or this day, or to-morrow, and care little. I calculate that the Lord will give us his spirit throughout this conference, that we may be full of light and life. I am prepared to remain until we get through all that is necessary for us to accomplish, and if we do not get through to-morrow, we may on Monday, or some time during the week. I do not feel to hurry or press the business of this Conference, but shall let all things take their course as shall be directed by the Holy Spirit, then we shall rejoice and feel well.

I look upon those men whom I referred to in the beginning of my remarks, that were afraid to come and vote with us or offer a contrary vote, as poor mean creatures; they are not worthy the name of Saints, and particularly that of Elders in Israel, and if there are such, here, I hope they will leave, and I pray that the Spirit of God may be with us with the power and blessings thereof, to such a degree that they may not like to come and remain with us, but that they may go their way and associate with the Gentiles. I want to see all those that bear the name of the Saints, in this stake of Zion interested in the same, and not see some pulling one way and some another; but that we may have a long pull, a strong pull, and pull all together, without which we cannot get on very well. I believe we shall pull together during this Conference and accomplish all we desire, which is my prayer in the name of Jesus Christ. Amen.

The general authorities of the church were then presented before the congregation by the President, in the following order:

1st. That we support and sustain Brigham Young as President, Prophet, Seer and Revelator over the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in all the world. Seconded and carried.

2nd. Heber C. Kimball, and Jedediah M. Grant as his counselors. Seconded and carried.

3rd. The Twelve Apostles as the traveling High Council in all the world, with Orson Hyde as their President. Seconded and carried.

4th. The seven Presidents of Seventies with Joseph Young as their President, and all the Quorums of Seventies under them. Seconded and carried.

5th. John Smith as the presiding Patriarch to the Church in all the world. Seconded and carried.

6th. Edward Hunter presiding Bishop over the Bishoprick in the whole Church in all the world. Seconded and carried.

7th. Orson Spencer President of the Church in this part of the United States. Seconded and carried.

8th. James H. Hart as President of this Stake of Zion, with Charles Edwards and George Gardner as his counselors. Seconded and carried.

9th. That we sustain all the authorities in this Stake of Zion, and the kingdom of God throughout all the world. Seconded and carried.

The following local motions were put and carried:

That the 1st, 2nd and 3rd wards in this city, be divided. The 1st and 2nd wards under the Presidency of Bishop Edward Cooke. That Bishop William Lowe preside over the 3rd ward. That Bishop Charles Chard preside over the 4th ward.

The President then called upon Elder James Case to address the meeting. After which Elder John Banks addressed the meeting at some length. The meeting was then dismissed until 2 1-2 P. M., with prayer by Elder George Spritley.

Afternoon service commenced with singing; prayer was offered up by Elder George Gardner.

After which Bishop Joseph Shepherd of Alton, addressed the meeting.

Elder John Banks gave a report of his labors in Cincinnatti and neighborhood.

The President then moved that Cincinnatti, Cannelton, Pomeroy, and Alquina and all other places in that locality containing Saints, be organized, and called the Cincinnatti Conference, and that Elder John Banks preside over the same.

The President said Elder Erastus Snow gave him authority to receive tithing from the Church in St. Louis and adjacent branches. And Elder Orson Spencer from Cincinnati and all other places connected with this Stake. He proposed that Elder Banks receive tithing from the Cincinnati Conference, and account for the same to President Orson Spencer in this city.

After the above motion was passed, Elder James Case gave an account of his mission, and the success and opposition he met in the State of Illinois.

The President then moved that Elder James Case be released from his present mission, and take a mission to the Cherokee Nation, and that Elder William Orson Flavel, (of Keokuk,) be appointed to accompany him.

The President then spoke of Elders Elisha Edwards, and Whiting, (now laboring in Ohio with small success,) and proposed that they be released, and labor in Illinois under the Presidency in this city.

Elder Robert Humphreys was called upon to represent the condition of the Bellefontaine branch.—Having done so, he requested to resign the Presidency of that branch, having removed to the city.

The President moved that he be released, and that Elder Charles G. Shill be appointed to preside over that branch in his place. Seconded and carried.

Elders William M. Lewis of Platten, and John Burton of Calhoun, represented the condition of their branches; after which the Conference adjourned with prayer by Elder J. Banks, until 7, P. M.

Meeting commenced at 7 o'clock, by singing the hymn on the 294th page. Prayer by the President; after which Elder Isaiah Neilson, the President of the Danish branches of St. Louis and Weston, Mo., Mormon Crove K. T, represented the condition of those branches, which were good.

Elders Thomas Jackson of Springfield Ill., James Kinney of Centerville Ill., Philip Stringham of Jacksonville Ill., Bishop John Yates of Gravois Mo., George Spritley of Burlington Iowa, and Joseph Shepherd of Alton Ill., represented the condition of their branches, which were very good, and gave general satisfaction regarding the improvement among them, and of the growing interest manifested among the Saints for the upbuilding of the kingdom of God.

The President stated that we had got through the representation of the various branches, he would present the Bishops of the wards to the Conference to be sustained by vote, viz:

Edward Cooke of the 1st and 2nd wards, William Lowe of the 3rd ward, Charles Chard of the 4th ward, Andrew Sprowle of the 5th ward, Joseph Jones of the 6th ward, John Yates of the Gravois or 7th ward, Joseph Shepherd of the Alton or 8th ward.

The High Council was then sustained by name as follows:

James Wood, James S. Cantwell, William Gore, John Hawkins, William Morrison, William Henshaw, Amby Sands, Charles Brindley, Thomas Harris, Samuel J. Lees, John Powell, and James Brooks.

The President then proposed that Henry Eyring, (President of the Priests' Quorum,) be appointed a mission in the Cherokee Nation, under the Presidency of Elder A. M. Miller. That William Foster be appointed to preside over the Priests' Quorum, in the place of Henry Eyring: And that brother Nimrod Murphree be ordained to the office of an Elder, and that he take a mission as a traveling Elder in this Stake of Zion. Brother Murphree was called upon to state his feelings, he did so and at the conclusion, the meeting adjourned with prayer by Thomas Harris until Sunday the 7th, at 10 o'clock A. M.

Sunday, October 7th, meeting commenced at 10 A. M., by singing the hymn on the 1st page. Prayer by Elder James Case.

The President then introduced the monetary business of the Conference, by calling upon Bishop Thomas Harris, to give an account of the financial affairs of the church, after he had done so, the President moved that we accept of the report as satisfactory. The motion was carried by vote.

The Clerk was then called upon to give his report of the statistics of the Stake. He having done so, the President moved a vote of thanks for his attention to the duties assigned him. This motion was carried by vote.

The President then read his report of the tithing received during the past half year.

The President made a few remarks on the improved condition of the Stake, and the augmentation of the branches to nearly double to what they were in November, 1854; which was a great improvement, and the branches in Texas and Tennessee, not represented.

The President then spoke on various subjects, relating to the well-being of the Stake.

Elder H. J. Hudson (of Alton) being called on, addressed the Saints at considerable length; but we will leave these remarks to the reporter, to do them justice.

Elder John Banks then addressed the Saints for a short time. After which the meeting adjourned with singing and prayer by Elder Charles Edwards.

The President summoned a council to meet in the office immediately. The meeting was composed of the President and his Counsellors, the High Council, the Bishops of wards, the Presidents of Quorums, and the Elders from the outer branches.

The President called on the Presidents of country branches to state the position of their branches as regards sustaining travelling Elders among them. He also called on the High Council and Bishops to select such men as travelling Elders, that would be calculated to do good, as the Stake required it; he did not care what Quorum they belonged to, it was men of integrity who were wanted, and whole souls, and that felt an interest in the kingdom of God, and who felt an obligation upon them to carry the gospel forth to the people.

Elders James Case, Nathaniel G. W. Case, William Stringham, John Burton, Isaiah Neilson J. Palmer, William M. Lewis, Samuel J. Lees, Andrew Sprowle, John Powell, William Morrison, James S. Cantwell, James Wood, and George Spritley, addressed the meeting on the subject in question.

Elder James Case recommended brother Ralph Myles Curtis (of Keokuk) to travel and preach.

The President wanted two good men to go to Texas, he did not care whether they had families or not, if circumstances favored they could take their families with them.

It being time to resume the business of Conference, the meeting adjourned to Monday, October 8th, at 7 1-2 P. M.

The afternoon service commenced at 2 1-2 P. M., by singing; prayer by Elder W. H. Lewis.

The President blessed the bread, Elder Banks the cup.

After Sacrament the President gave notice of the special Priesthood meeting, and notified the Priesthood to attend.

Elder James Case, being called upon, addressed the meeting in a farewell discourse, which may appear with other discourses, when the reporter shall have them prepared.

The President then gave some instructions on the law of tithing, &c., which recommended itself to the understanding of the Saints.

He also stated that the "Luminary," was increasing in its circulation, and gave notice of the publication of the second volume, which would commence in about six weeks.

Elder Wm. M. Lewis, then addressed the Welsh Saints, in their own tongue, "and although we did not understand the language," we felt the good influence of the Spirit of God; during its delivery.

The meeting was adjourned till 7 P. M., with prayer by Elder George Gardiner.

The Conference assembled at 7 o'clock, after singing and prayer, the meeting was addressed by Elder John Banks; the congregation was large and attentive.

At the conclusion the meeting or Conference adjourned with prayer.

JAMES H. HART, Presd't.
JAMES S. CANTWELL, Clerk,
SAMUEL J. LEES, Reporter.

Special General Conference Meeting, held in the Church, October 8, on Monday, evening, adjourned from the 7th at 2 1-2 o'clock A. M.

The hymn on the 268th page was sung. Elder James Case engaged in prayer.

The President introduced the business of the meeting, after which he called upon Elder N. G. W. Case, to address the Saints, after which the hymn, "Come all ye sons of God," was sung.

The President said he would commence where he left off, on Sunday afternoon, he called on the brethren to give expression to their feeling, regarding the most eligible persons to go on missions, to help to buld up this stake of Zion. We invoke the spirit of God to assist us in this matter. The Lord requires not only one tenth but our talents and our all if necessary, to His use. He had promised to give an hundred fold to all who would devote themselves to his work. There would not be many appointed this time but we might have another special Council for the purpose when required.

The President then proposed that Elder George Gardner be appointed a mission to Sullivan, Maury county Illinois, and assist Elder N. G. W. Case, in that region of country. Seconded and carried.

Proposed that Elder Samuel J. Lees, be appointed from this Conference to succeed Elder Benjamin L. Clapp, in the Presidency of the Texas Conference. Seconded and carried.

Proposed That, Priest, John Restall, be ordained, to the office of an Elder, and go on a mission to Texas. Seconded and carried.

Elder Wm. Orson Flavel, was then called upon to state his feelings regarding his appointment to the Cherokee nation. Elder Flavel stated he was ready to go any where the authorities thought proper to send him.

Proposed that Priest, Henry Eyring, be ordained to the office of an Elder. Seconded and carried.

The President wished to know if Elder Banks required any assistance in Cincinnati, to which question Elder B. said he thought he could do for the present.

Proposed that Elder George Giles go on a mission to St. Joseph and Nebraska city, and organize branches there. Seconded and carried.

Proposed that Elder William Bricker, be appointed to take a mission to the Cherokee nation. Seconded and carried.

Proposed that Teacher, George Higgerson, be appointed to take a mission to the Cherokee nation. Seconded and carried.

The President then called upon brothers' Bricker and Higgerson, to state their minds relative to their mission. They did so, saying they were willing to obey the call if it was to go to the ends of the earth.

The President then instructed those who were appointed to the Cherokee nation to report themselves, to Elder A. M. Miller, in Gand Saline, as soon as they arrived there.

Proposed that Elder Robert Ouldcott be appointed to labour in the ministry where he is working. Seconded and carried.

Proposed that Teacher Geoge Higgerson be ordained to the office of an Elder. Seconded and carried.

Proposed that we establish a permanent fund in this stake, to be called "the Travelling Elder's Fund." Seconded and carried.

Proposed that we have a Social Party, to enjoy ourselves together before the missionaries leave; and that the proceeds be appropriated to the Travelling Elders Fund. Seconded and carried.

Proposed that the Bishops form themselves into a committee to manage the party and that there be no refreshments provided; the benefit of the fund being our object. Seconded and carried.

Proposed that Professer Sprowle, commence to make arrangements for the musical entertainment forthwith Seconded and carried,

Proposed that Elder Ralph M. Curtis of Keokuk, be appointed travelling Elder in that neighborhood. Seconded and carried.

The President then called upon the Elders, Priests, Teachers, and Deacons who had not joined their Quorums, to do so forthwith.

Moved that we convene on Thursday the 11th inst., at 7 1-2 P. M., to attend to the business of ordaining those appointed, who had not the office of the Melchisidec Priesthood, and attend to other business left over.

The President moved that we adjourn the Conference till the 6th day of April 1856. Seconded and carried.

The hymn, "Hail to the brightness of Zion's glad morning," was sung, and the meeting was dismissed with prayer by the President.

THE NEW CLOAK,
OR
"MIND YOUR OWN BUSINESS."

"I don't believe he has any to collect."

"Even your husband as well off as he is, might be embarrased if suddenly called upon to pay his debts," and Miss Viney looked significantly at her angry companion.

"I doubt it."

"He may have a trial," said the maiden lady, as she moved towards the store.

"What can she mean by that?" thought Mrs. Waxwell.

Miss Viney had some property of her own, and it was all in the hands of Farmer Waxwell, who had, on his own account, invested the greater part of it in railroad stock.

That is what she meant. She would claim the three thousand dollars her husband owed her, and a cold chill passed through her veins as the thought struck her. Farmer Waxwell was rich in houses, lands, and stock, all of which yield him a good income; but he had not three thousand dollars in money, and it might cost him some trouble to raise it.

"Don't cry my dear, I have enough due me in Boston to pay those debts, ten times over," said Mr. Burton to his wife, who was much alarmed by the storm which threatened them.

"What will people think?"

"What will they think when I pay them all? the whole amount is not nine hundred dollars."

Just then, Miss Viney entered the house. In a few words, she explained the circumstances which had led to the sudden "strike," among the creditors.

Mrs. Burton, kind soul, shed a flood of tears, when she heard how cruel Mrs. Waxwell had been—she whom she nursed with all the tenderness of a mother, when her frighted neighbors fled from the contageous disease.

"Never mind it my dear. We may expect anything from A MEDDLE, A GOSSIP, A SLANDERER," said Mr. Burton. "I must start for Boston in the noon train."

"Allow me, Mr. Burton, to offer you the money to discharge these liabilities. I have three thousand dollars in the hands of Mr. Waxwell.

"You are very kind and I accept your offer," replied Mr. Burton, "and next week I shall have the means of repaying you. I assure you I am worth at least five thousand dollars."

In proof of his assertion, he showed her various notes, mortgages, and certificates of stock.

"I presume if the people here knew that I was not a bankrupt, they would not have molested me. In spite of all my amiable neighbor, Mrs. Waxwell may say, I think I am abundantly able to give my wife a thirty dollar cloak."

"I never doubted it," replied Miss Viney, as she hastened on to the village lawyer, to put her note in course of collection.

Farmer Waxwell was at dinner, when the lawyer who was a personal friend, called upon him.

"Sorry to trouble you, but I am instructed to collect this note," said he.

"The devil!" exclaimed Farmer Waxwell.

"The ugly huzzy," added Mrs. Waxwell, as she perceived Miss Viney's prophetic words had been burdened with a meaning,

"I beg your pardon, madam," said the lawyer, "but if I understand it rightly, you have publicly boasted that you brought about all this difficulty."

"I!"

"Yes, madam; that new cloak did the business; you set your husband on, and all the rest followed him, so Miss Viney tells me."

"My gracious!"

"And now she wants the money to assist Mr. Burton out of the difficulty into which you have plunged him."

"That's plain speech, 'Squire."

"But true."

"I can't raise the money."

"Then I must sue."

"Can't we compromise?"

"Burton is worth at least five thousand dollars, and when he gets a remittance from Boston will pay all."

"I will dissolve my attachment, and be bound to the payment of the others. Will that do it?"

"Yes, if Miss Viney will consent."

Miss Viney did consent — she was a kind hearted lady — and the matter was compromised.

"Now, wife," said Waxwell, as he put the three hundred dollars in his pocket, which Burton had paid, minus thirty dollars which he held in his hand, "here's thirty dollars, and I think you'd better go and buy one of them 'ere thirty dollar cloaks. Your envy like to have got me into the cussedest scrape I ever got into in my life."

She would not take it; she was too mean to dress well herself, and too envious to permit others who were able, to do so in peace. But she gathered from the events of our story, a healthy experience of the wisdom of that excellent maxim:

"MIND YOUR OWN BUSINESS."

For the St. Lous Luminary.

THE WEDDING GUESTS.

BY JOEL.

Come Saints and sing to Zion's King,
A song of joy and gladness;
With heart and voice we will rejoice,
And drive away our sadness.

We'll watch and pray by night and day,
With lamps well trimmed and burning;
The watchmen cry the wedding's nigh,
The bridegroom is returning.

We will rejoice to hear his voice,
When we go out to meet him;
With love and grace behold his face,
With shouts of joy to greet him.

He'll cry, ye blest you are my guest,
Come ye into the wedding;
How joyful then we shall be when
We've had the bridegroom's bidding.

O then we'll sing to Zion's King,
Sweet songs of joy and gladness;
No more shall know the pains of woe,
Or heartfelt scenes of sadness.

Gen. Bosqet's Address to his Troops—The Emperor of the French to the Armies—The Emperor of Russia to his Army.

GENERAL BOSQUET'S ADDRESS TO THE TROOPS.—The following is the order addressed by Gen. Bosquet to the troops under his command, immediately before going into action:

"Soldiers of the Second Corps and of the Reserve! On the 7th of June you had the honor to strike proudly the first blow right to the heart of the Russian army. On the 16th August you inflicted on the Tchernaya a most shameful humiliation upon the enemy's army of relief. To-day is the coup de grace, the coup de mortelle, that you are to strike with that firm hand which the enemy knows so well by carrying his line of defence by the Malakoff, while our comrades of the English army and of the First Corps will commence the assult of the Redan and the Central Bastion. This is a general assault, army against army. It is an immense victory with which the young eagles of France are this day to be crowned. Forward, then, enfans! Malakoff and Sebastopol for us, and Vive l' Empereur."

THE EMPEROR OF THE FRENCH TO THE ARMIES.—Immediately on the receipt of the news of the capture of Sebastopol, the Emperor ordered the Marshal Minister of War to send the following despatch to General Pelissier:

"Honor to you! Honor to our brave army! My sincere congratulations to all."

At the same time the Minister of War wrote as follows to General Pelissier, by order of his Majesty:

"The Emperor requests you to congratulate, in his name, the English army for the constant bravery and the moral strength of which it has given proof during this long and trying campaign."

The Moniteur publishes the following:

"Some persons are greatly concerned about the importance of the North Fort, to which the garrison of Sebastopol retired after the capture of the town. That fort is not larger than one of the forts which surrround Paris."

THE EMPEROR ALEXANDER.—The following is the text of the order of the day addressed by the Emperor Alexander to his army on the fall of Sebastopol:

"The defence of Sebastopol, which has lasted so long, and which is perhaps, unexampled in military annals, has drawn upon it the attention not only of Russia, but of all Europe. From its very commencement it placed its defenders in the same rank as the most illustrious heroes of our country.

"In the course of eleven months the garrison of Sebastopol has disputed with a powerful enemy every inch of ground of the country which surrounds the town, and each of its enterprises has been distinguished by the most brilliant bravery. The obstnate bombardment, four times renewed, and the first of which has been justly styled "infernal" shook the walls of our fortifications, but could not shake or diminish the zeal and perseverance of their defenders. They beat the enemy, or died with indomitable courage, with a self-denial worthy of the soldiers of Christ, without a thought of surrendering.

"Regretting from my heart the loss of so many generous warriors, who offered their lives as a sacrifice to their country, and submitting with resignation to the will of the Most High, whom it has not pleased to crown their acts with complete success, I feel it a sacred duty, on this occasion, to express in my name, as well as that of all Russia, to the brave garrison of Sebastopol, the warmest gratitude for its indefatigable labors, for the blood it has shed in the defence, for nearly a year, of those fortifications which it erected in a few days.

"But there are impossibilities even for heroes.—On the 8th of this month, after six desperate assaults, which were repulsed, the enemy succeeded in getting possession of the important Kornilioff Bastion, (Malakoff,) and the Commander-in-Chief of the army in the Crimea, desirous of sparing the precious blood of his companions, who, under the circumstances, would only have shed it uselessly, decided upon passing over to the North side of the fortress, leaving only the blood-stained ruins to the besieging enemy.

"Those tried heroes, the object of the general esteem of their comrades, will doubtless give in re-entering actually into the ranks of the enemy, new proofs of their warlike virtues. With them, and like them, all my troops, animated with the same unbounded confidence in providence, with the same ardent love for me and my country, will always and everywhere fight the enemies that attempt to touch our sacred ark, the honor and the territorial integrity of our country; and the name of Sebastopol, which has acquired immortal glory by so much suffering, and the names of its defenders, will live eternally in the hearts of all the Russians, with the names of the heroes who immortalized themselves on the fields of battle of Pultawa and Borodino.

"ALEXANDER."

From the Millennial Star.

God's Latter-day Church and Kingdom.

"And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed; and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever."—Daniel ii. 44.

We presume that every person who has read the Bible with any care, is conscious that it foretells a great work to be accomplished by the Almighty in the last days—nothing more nor less than the establishment of His kingdom on the earth, which shall eventually bring into subjection to it every other kingdom, authority, and power. Should there be any Bible readers who are ignorant of these all-important facts, we can only say that it is a strong evidence of the truth of the Scripture which says, that darkness shall cover the face of the land, and gross darkness the minds of the people, and we would recommend such to read the whole Bible over again carefully, especially the writings of Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and Daniel. Then they will gain some idea, however faint, of the great and glorious purposes of the Almighty on the earth in these last days.

Why, is there a single subject in the whole range of the inspired writings that called forth the songs and praise and thanksgiving of the servants of God which this subject did? Is any other topic dwelt upon with more faith and fervor of spirit? Did not the fire of inspiration burn in the bosoms and blaze from the mouths of the ancient Apostles and Prophets most intensely when discoursing upon this pregnant subject? Were not the glories of that time when the kingdoms of this world should become the kingdom of our God and of His Christ, described in strains of the holiest and loftiest eloquence? Did not Prophets and righteous men desire to see that day, but die without the sight? Did not Jesus himself teach His disciples to diligently pray, "Thy kingdom come?" Was not this the burden of the song of the Elders in heaven—"We shall reign on the earth?"

It is very easy to acknowledge the truth with one's lips, but not so easy to acknowledge it in one's heart. Very many will be ready to say that all we have just written is very true and pleasing, but the realization of the matter—the practical part of the subject, there is the rub! How many amongst the mass of mankind really believe in their hearts that God may be now about doing His great work? And who, notwithstanding all that has been written of it, can realize to themselves a true view of the work in its commencement and progress—its varied phases, and the way in which it would be looked upon and treated by mankind in general? Few, very few indeed.

Well, reader, startle not when we inform you that the kingdom of God so much spoken of is actually set up—yes, is now existing, and in rapid progress towards the attainment of that position in authority, power, and dominion, which it is destined, according to prophecy, to reach. Suppose we give its past history in brief. First, reader, if you have any idea that the kingdom of God can exist without any relation to space, at once divest yourself of that notion. Room there must be for either an earthly or a heavenly kingdom. Where then is the territory—the place, for the establishment of the kingdom of God. Is there a spot in the eastern hemisphere where a people could grow up in the laws of God, and be as God's people always are—a separate and distinct people, holy unto Him, governed by His laws through the instrumentality of Apostles and Prophets, in short, of the Holy Priesthood? We unhesitatingly say no. The tyranny of emperors, kings, princes, and rulers, and the frigid illiberality of the laws, render it impossible for so choice an institution as the kingdom of God to gather together its subjects, and organize them according to His laws. A goodly land was held in reserve for this purpose, where the iron bondage of the governmental traditions of the old world cannot prosper. Four hundred years ago America was unknown to the eastern world. From its discovery by Columbus until the present, many of the boldest, freest, and most energetic spirits of the old world have been emigrating to the new, until it now possesses the most enlightened, liberal, and powerful people in the world. Though subject, in great part, to the domination of European powers for a time, God, to prepare the way before Him, inspired many of the people to throw off the foreign yoke, and to adopt a constitution the most liberal in the world, and one which presented not a single obstacle to the establishment of His kingdom.

The place being prepared, now for the commencement of the kingdom. And how was that brought about? Did some great soldier or tyrant make war upon and subdue a people, and then assume the right to rule over them? No, such wickedness and oppression are contrary to the common law of both heaven and that portion of the earth. God's kingdom is a kingdom of righteousness and peace. If it is ever at war it is defensively, or judicially—war either of self-defence, or as a punishment to the wicked.—But the pure policy of the kingdom of God is peace and good will to men, liberty to all to do right, and follow the principles of virtue, truth, and integrity. The policy of the kingdom of God is ever to increase life and happiness. Therefore not after the manner of men did the Lord set up His kingdom in these last days.

Behold that unlettered youth of 15 years of age. He can read and write imperfectly. He goes into yonder wood, and pours out his soul in prayer with faith to the Lord. The heavens open above him, the glory of God descends upon him, God the Father and His Son Jesus Christ reveal themselves to him. He is called to do a great and marvellous work.—Afterwards John the Baptist confers upon him the Aaronic Priesthood, and at another time Peter, James, and John bestow upon him the Priesthood of Melchisedec, with authority to build up the kingdom of God, and to administer in all the ordinances thereof, and on the 6th of April, 1830, at the house of Mr. P. Whitmer, Fayette, Seneca County, State of New York, United States of America, the Latter-day Church or kingdom of God was organized with six members, Joseph Smith, President, by revelation from God, and was called the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

From that time its numbers and its influence have continued to increase until at the present the Saints people the Territory of Utah, a dependency of the United States, and the Lord rules there, through His servant Brigham Young.

As God has not used fire and sword to obtain subjects and territory for His kingdom, by what means have they been secured? The subjects by [illegible] the territory by the oppression of the wicked. The Lord sends His servants into all the earth, crying repentance unto all people. Mankind in general are alienated from the laws of the kingdom of God, and are as foreigners. They may become its subjects by obedience to the law of naturalization, which is very simple—baptism in water for the remission of sin, preliminary to which are faith in God, and repentance of sin. The gift of the Holy Ghost is then imparted by the imposition of hands, which cheers the soul, enlightens the mind, strengthens the memory, purifies the affections, and unites in one the hearts of all. A life of continual and perfect obedience to the laws and wishes of God is then required, which, if rendered, entitles the subject to every blessing which he is capacitated to enjoy.

How are the officers or Priesthood of that kingdom chosen? By God Himself, He alone having the right—not by Him in person, but by revelation, or by dictation of His Holy Spirit, through those who hold the Priesthood.

How is this kingdom received by mankind in general? In the worst possible manner. The founder of it, with many others, has been barbarously murdered, the murderers still at large. The whole community have been driven at the point of the sword and bayonet time after time. The name of a Saint of God is considered but another name for everything that is false, ridiculous, vile, and degrading, and is consequently evil-spoken of, despised, and treated with contempt, yea, by some it is execrated.

But why? No satisfactory reason has been advanced. The strongest seems to be, "God damn the Mormons," as the Saints of the Most High are designated by the world. At the present time no pains are spared by those who do evil in secret to prejudice the minds of the government and people of the United States against the kingdom of God. It has broken no law to which it is subject, it has done or spoken no evil of any man. God is its guide and protector. It invites all men to become His subjects, to leave all wickedness, and to practise every virtue. Its words are for peace to all men all the day long, eternal life and happiness to all who will have them. Driven from civilization, it has found a refuge in the midst of the Rocky Mountains, where it has erected the standard of Truth and Liberty to the upright of every clime. But even there, in its secluded retreat, does the oppressor hunt for his prey, and strive his utmost to destroy the kingdom of God, by instigating a collision between the United States Government and the people of Utah. There seems to be a clique who are resolutely bent upon bringing such an issue to pass, like a parcel of brutal characters who pen two birds or animals in a corner, throw between them a bone of contention, and then urge them on by every horrid imprecation and uncouth gesture to an exterminating battle. But here failure is certain. Utah will not be caught in that trap, at least if she is faithful to the Lord, through those whom He has appointed. This trick has been tried before with the Saints, and has failed. She will bear much with patience. She will be long suffering and charitable. She will do everything that can reasonably be desired, and more. If smitten on one cheek, she will present the other. But if smitten on both sides, then she will commit her cause to the Almighty, and He will fight her battles, and overthrow her enemies with pestilence, fire, sword, and the elements, yea, they shall be consumed of the Lord, as effectually as were Sodom and Gomorrah of old, and the line of their posterity shall be cut off.

Will there be difficulty between the kingdom of God and the government of the United States? Perhaps there will be, but the provocation will arise outside the kingdom. The kingdom of God is bound to prevail over all the earth—to it every earthly government must eventually succumb, that God may be all in all, but, as far as His kingdom is concerned, this will be done on principles of honor, virtue, and righteousness, not by oppression and wickedness, so that the pure and upright among men will rejoice exceedingly all the time, and the wicked be condemned, and be continually fearing the future.—The Saints will not seek provocations, they have higher things to do—their business is to proclaim repentance to all the world, and to build up the kingdom. They know that the Lord will take care of the difficulties, for He has said He will provide for His Saints. But difficulties are bound to arise, opposition is sure to present itself, and as the United States government is now more nearly related than any other government to the people of Utah, it is possible that the next great difficulty and opposition will be with it, though the Lord knows, and every sane man ought to know, that Utah is the most loyal, patriotic, virtuous, and righteous territory of the United States. We cannot do better here than refer our readers to two discourses by President Brigham Young, and one by President Joseph Smith, on the relation of the Kingdom of God to the Government of the United States, published in the Journal of Discourses, Nos. 11 and 12.

God has declared that His kingdom shall never more be thrown down, nor the Priesthood be taken from the earth. What could be a more thrilling and soul-inspiring promise than this? We may expect difficulty after difficulty, opposition after opposition, each more formidable than its predecessor, for how can it be supposed that Satan will relinquish without many a convulsive struggle, the dominion he has so long held, though usurped. But the victory—that will repay. Not only must the Government of the United States acknowledge the hand of the Lord, and submit to His kingdom, but the government of Great Britain, of France, of Russia, yea, every government on earth, so they may as well do it with a good grace at first as an ill grace at last. Blessed is he who doeth right when he is obliged to do it, but far more blessed is he who doeth right of his own free will and choice. It may be thought a bold word to hazard, but the governments of America, Britain, France, Russia, and every other nation will yet know that if they voluntarily submit their authority to the Lord, through His Prophet Brigham, and bring over their nations with them to the Lord's side, they will save an untold amount of suffering. They may do it now with everlasting honor and benefit to themselves, but if they do not, the judgments of the Lord will eventually reduce them to submission to His laws, perhaps accompanied with eternal shame, and certainly preceded by the most "horrible and heart-rending" suffering.

We know that many people are dreadfully afraid of the "Mormons," but why need they be? The Saints are a poor and humble people, few in number, and destitute of the learning and science of the day. No righteous man need fear the Saints. Do they not traverse sea and land, without purse or scrip, to preach the Gospel of Christ to those that sit in darkness and the shadow of death? Have they not forsaken home and friends and comforts for the sake of truth and peace? Are they not a virtuous and upright people, striving with all their heart and soul to subdue every evil principle, and to continually watch every weakness, that they may be fit temples for the Holy Spirit to dwell in, and that the blessings of the Lord may rest upon them continually? Are they not ready to go to the ends of the earth, if the Lord says go, and to give up cheerfully their money, property, wives, children, yea, even the last drop of their blood, if the Lord says give? Are not their voices and their hands continually uplifted against evil? Do they not stretch forth their hands to far distant countries to help the upright poor to an abode of comfort and liberty? Then why should fearfulness seize on any but wicked hypocrites at the mention of the name of Saints? Is the time come when one of the Lord's people shall chase a thousand, and two put ten thousand to flight, and do it without moving a foot? Verily the unnatural tremor which many exhibit concerning the kingdom of God, cannot be the attendant of righteousness, for the Scriptures say "the righteous are bold as a lion," but "the wicked flee when no man pursueth."

But for their own sake, why do not the people let the Saints alone? Is it not plain enough for a wayfaring man though a fool, much more 'cute Yankees, to see that every attempt to put down "Mormonism" has only produced a diametrically opposite result? Remember the anecdote of the man kicking the mustard tree all over his field, and then, in a short time after, discovering, to his keen but unavailable chargrin, his whole field covered with mustard plants. So it has been with "Mormonism," and so it will be, for Jesus said the kingdom of God was like to the mustard tree.

As the kingdom of God grows in righteousness, and increases in power and influence, it will attract more and more the attention of the nations, and ere long will be the one great and all-absorbing topic of the day, filling the newspapers with speculation and gossip, quite as much as the present war does. The latest news from Zion will be sought after with the most astonishing avidity, and every step and move which the kingdom makes, will be passed with lightning rapidity from mouth to mouth, causing men's bosoms to heave with the pulses of uncontrollable passion, and raising the nations to the highest pitch of feverish excitement. But amidst it all, let the Elders and the Saints live continually in the practice of righteousness, walking humbly, faithfully, and diligently in their duties before God; so shall His Holy Spirit be their companion, and they shall be enabled to look with calmness and satisfaction, yea with increasing thankfulness and holy joy, when the wicked are paralyzed with fearfulness at the advance of the Church or Kingdom of God.

McLEAN'S VOLCANIC OIL LINIMENT is truly a celebrated remedy, and has done more to alleviate human suffering than any other remedy ever discovered.

One or two applications will relieve the most severe pain, bruise or sprain.

Two bottles will cleanse, purify, and heal the foulest ulcer or sore, and it will heal the most severe burn or scald without a scar.

Every family should have a supply constantly on hand, for use in time of need.

Read the following extract of a letter, which is incontestable proof of its wonderful efficacy:

A BLIND MAN RESTORED TO SIGHT.

J. H. McLEAN—Dear Sir: * * * I have been suffering for four years with rheumatic sore eyes, being at times altogether blind. I procured the advice of several physicians, but none of them could do me any good. By the advice of a friend I applied your "Volcanic Oil Liniment," according to the directions around the bottle, and it has cured me permanently. I have used it since for bruises, pains, &c., and it has always given immediate relief. I live on the main road near Farmington.

Yours, respectfully, JOHN H. ALLERD.

Jefferson county, Mo.

For horses it is far superior to any other remedy for curing lameness, bruises, cuts, old sores, swellings, &c.

We say, then, to all who may be suffering from external diseases, call at once and get a supply. Thousands of bottles are sold (and used) daily, and we have never heard of a case where it has failed in giving relief when properly applied.

☞For sale by J. H. McLEAN, the proprietor, corner Third and Pine streets, St. Louis, and by all respectable dealers in Medicines everywhere.

Mustang Liniment and the Ladies.—In our opinion, nothing is above the comprehension of women; and with less prejudice, more liberality, and much keener perception than men, when a new idea is presented, a new doctrine taught, or a new fact asserted, she grasps it at once, and with the rapidity and clearness almost of instinct, decides upon its merits or truthfulness; and if her decision be favorable, she enthusiastically advocates and supports it. Thus the common saying has obtained—"Once get the women on your side and you are safe;" and we are happy to state that we have the ladies all in favor of the MUSTANG LINIMENT. They have tried it for caked breasts, sore nipples, sores, chafes, and burns on children, as well as for croup and mumps; also, for corns, tooth-ache, pains in the limbs and joints, sore eyes, eruptions, cuts and bruises, and they have always found it effectual—and they go about like angels, as they are, proclaiming it to their friends and to all they see or hear tell of, who are suffering. We have daily calls for it by persons who say such and such ladies recommended them to try it.

Go on ladies in your "good Samaritan" work, and thousands will bless you for your timely advice.

MEDICINE FOR THE BILLION!

A Certain Remedy for all Diseases of

MAN OR ANIMALS,

Requiring an External Application.

Warranted in every Case for which it is Recommended!

THE MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT!

Unlike all other popular medicines, it is used by many prominent members of the faculty, and many of the public Hospitals. Their prejudices have yielded to indisputable and incontrovertible demonstrations of cures performed where their remedies had failed.

It has cured more cases of

RHEUMATISM

than any other medicine ever used. Its efficacy in this terrible disease is acknowledged by all who have used it. It not only cures the complaint, but appears to give a vigor and elasticity to the limbs, before unknown, thus performing a double office.

A FEW TESTIMONIALS.

PATH FINDER OFFICE, May 11, 1854.

G. W. WESTBROOK:—

Please send me by the bearer three large bottles of your Mexican Mustang Liniment, as I wish to take it up to my place in Vermont, not thinking it advisable to do without it. I have used it in my family and on my horses, and have found it invaluable. Yours,

J. T. WHITNEY.

ELIZABETHTOWN, TENN., May 25, 1855.

MR. G. W. WESTBROOK:—

Dear Sir—It affords me much pleasure in saying to you that the Mexican Mustang Liniment outsells any medicine that I have ever had for sale, and comes nearer doing what it promises to do. Send me another supply, as I am nearly out. Yours respectfully,

JOHN SINGLETRAY, P. M.

PHILADELPHIA, June 11, 1854.

MR. G. W. WESTBROOK:

Sir—My son was afflicted with a swelling upon the knee joint, which confined him to the house. I had a doctor attending him for some time, but he did not do him any good. One of my neighbors told me to use the Mustang Liniment. I asked the doctor if I could do so, and he told me he thought I could not do better.

I procured one bottle, and in about a week he was able to go out. I can safely recommend it to the afflicted.

Respectfully yours, MRS. BENNETT.

W. S. Ladd & Co., of Portland, Oregon, writes that there is an immense demand for the Mexican Mustang Liniment in that country, and orders forty gross to be shipped by Golden Gate, that sails in a few days from New York.

Park & White of San Francisco, California, order 100 gross, to be forwarded by first clipper for that port.

PORT AU PRINCE, HAYTI, Jan. 16th, 1854.

I had the pleasure to receive invoice and boxes Mexican Mustang Liniment per Croton, and have no doubt it will have a brisk sale on the island.

have need it for the following diseases with extraordinary success, certifying invariably to the efficacy of the Liniment, and the truthfulness of our assertions in its behalf:

Spavin, Splint, Ring-bone, Fistula, Wind Galls, Big Head, Bruises, Strains, String-halt, Scratches, Cracked Heels, Sweeny, Saddle, Collar, or Harness Galls, Hard Lumps or Tumor, Film, or other diseases of the Eye, Poll-Evil, &c.

The small sizes retail for 25 cents per bottle;
The medium size retail for 50 cents per bottle;
The large sizes retail for one dollar per bottle.
The medium holds three times as much as the small;
The Large holds nearly three times as much as the medium,
Therefore the large bottles are the cheapest.

REMARKS

By Elder George A. Smith, delivered in the Bowery, G. S. L. City, Sunday morning, August 5, 1855.

[REPORTED BY J. V. LONG.

I have listened, brethren and sisters, to the remarks of Elder Seth M. Blair with a good deal of interest, and I can appreciate to a considerable extent the sensation that a man feels when he leaves the division, corruption, and savage dispositions that are prevalent among the nations of mankind, and comes among the Saints. Where there is unity and the blessings of the Spirit of the Lord dwelling in the hearts of the people, peace and prosperity will attend their exertions temporal as well as spiritual, for they will act in unity, and their exertions for each others welfare being unanimous and simultaneous, success is bound to be their reward.

I am very happy to enjoy the privilege of seeing the faces, and listening to the voices and testimonies of our Elders when they return from their missions, and I do know that the greatest school to which any man in this church can be sent, is through the world to preach the Gospel. I used to say when I was a young man and was traveling to preach the Gospel, I would forgive the worst enemy I had if he would only travel among the Presbyterians, Seceders and Covenanters, in Pennsylvania and preach the fulness of the everlasting Gospel faithfully, without purse or scrip. I would forgive him from the fact that if he lived three months among them in that way, he would have been literally starved into a full atonement for any injury that he could have inflicted on me.

There was from the beginning, fixed hatred in the minds of the world at large against this people. It is not here as it is in the Christian world generally, for there the Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians and Universalists, although bitterly opposed to each other, yet they can all unite to persecute the poor Mormons; they are all in error together, but they can unite, whenever the truth comes along, and use all their combined influences to put it down.—They differ on a kind of complimentary principles, but when they speak of the Saints of God there is in the hearts of the whole of them, a deep seated deadly hatred, and they will do all in their power to put them down. I do not know how the people generally feel about it, but it must seem strange to individuals having the spirit of the Lord, that these different sects and parties who despise and hate each other, and differ so materially, and yet the very moment that an Elder comes into a city, town, or village they all unite to mob him out of the place. He may perhaps allude to some of their doctrines and perhaps not, but they will all join together to put down the Mormons. The only difficulty is that the Baptists, Universalists, Presbyterians and Methodists, and the others have all got different meeting houses or else we might conclude that their opposition to the Saints would unite them into one, for some of them believe that they will all be saved, notwithstanding their difference of opinion, but the very moment that a Mormon comes and preaches the first principles of the Gospel, you will see the utmost confusion among them, their preachers all put their heads together to form plans by which to overthrow Mormonism, and even if there is an infidel that they consider or think is a little smarter than they are, they will sustain him if they can persuade him to unite with them to put down Mormonism, and if arguments are likely to fail they start a fresh or more sure method by raising a mob and exciting the public feeling and driving out the Mormons, believing that to allow the Mormons to obtain any influence would be hurtful; they are fearful that it would really injure their cause. And what is the reason that such fear and alarm should seize them when the Elders go among them?

Why, it is plain and simple; the man of God who goes forth without purse and scrip, he has the truth, and he has the spirit of the Almighty God, and he has the truth as it was anciently and as it is modernly revealed, and he lays the ax at the root of the tree, and annihilates error wherever he finds it.

All the systems of Christendom have got so mixed up with the world, and so mixed and interwoven with the corruptions thereof, that the adversary has perfect dominion over them all, and hence the very moment that a man having the Priesthood comes along and pours in a flood of light upon the world, the adversary tells them like this, "why we should put that down or it will cause us trouble," and the very spirit that is in them is the spirit of the adversary, and they go to work with all their might and try to put down all who dare to advocate such strange doctrines, and thereby trammel everything under their control. And nothing is more sure than that when the spirit of the Lord is withdrawn from a people who have previously received the light of the Gospel—or who have had the opportunity of receiving it, they become violent persecutors, and hence it is that the editors of the newspapers in the United States breathe forth their most bitter anathemies against this innocent and law-abiding people, because that spirit of darkness which rules them, is afraid of the truth.

It was cowardly fear that caused the allies to banish Napoleon the 1st to St. Helena, and there watch him as they would a wild beast to the day of his death. It is a similar fear that causes the enemies of this people to attempt our utter destruction, and that promps the great writers and statesmen of the age to cry out "annihilate the Mormons, or Christianity is down," and thereby seek to raise the ruthless hand of military power to annihilate and destroy innocent, unoffending, law-abiding citizens of a rapidly improving Territory. Every honest man that comes into our Territory, after a short existence in the midst of the Saints reasonably concludes we have greater respect for the Constitution of the United States, than any other people, notwithstanding all that may have been said by howling priests about the tyranny in the midst of these mountains.

Circumstances have proven beyond all successful contradiction that the Elders and authorities of this church do respect the great principles of the Constitution, and the Latter-day Saints in and of every nation do respect the Constitution and laws of their country; the principles of their faith makes this obligatory upon them.

We have been driven from our comfortable homes in the United States, into these mountains, and it is only under the kind hand and protecting care of the Almighty that we are kept here; He gave us the privilege of sheltering and of staying here for the time being.

We are the children of the Most High, and we have been called upon by Him to make sacrifices for the building up of His kingdom, and it behooves us to be awake to our duties as sons and daughters of God. And I tell you it is for us to depend upon Him, the giver of all good, and if we do not so live as to be partakers of the blessings of the fulness of the Gospel, and of His watchful care we may anticipate that more destruction will come upon our heads, for the Lord will purify us.

We are blessed indeed to be in a position which is of the utmost importance to the fulfilment of the purposes of God and the accomplishment of the Latter-day work, which we shall be the means of bringing about if we dedicate ourselves to the interests of His work.

We are perfectly aware of the bloody hatred that exists towards us throughout the world, and we are perfectly aware of the hot persecution that we have to endure because of our religion; we know the people of God always were persecuted, and we expect they always will be, until the power of the devil is subdued and the kingdom and the greatness thereof shall be given to the Saints of the Most High, to possess forever and forever. Although we have met with opposition from all quarters, yet thousands and thousands of exertions have been made by this people for the express purpose of causing the inhabitants of the world to abandon their corruptions, forsake their wicked practices, leave off and repent of their foolish doings; and our constant exertions have been rebutted, with constant abuse, from those we were trying to benefit.

The blood of our Prophet and Patriarch, and hundreds of innocent men, women, and children, and the destruction of millions and millions of dollars worth of property, the long list of abuses to which we have been subjected, and the patience, forbearance, and fortitude with which these abuses have been borne, only prove in the first place the intense hatred with which the world hate us, and in the second the sterling integrity of the people called Latter-day Saints, and their determination to abide the laws of their country.

Then I say let us be united, and let our voices ascend to Him as the voice of one man, and let every foolish notion depart from our midst that we may have power with Him, for I tell you we depend alone upon the Almighty for protection, and if we depend upon His arm and upon His power we can work in faith believing that He will help us. I do know that if this people were united and would exercise faith and listen to the counsel of the Presidency as they ought, and be united as one man, that all the powers of earth and hell could not prevail against them; and if no power could prevail, of course there would be but little danger. But if feuds, discord, selfishness and contentions are permitted to break up our unity, we shall then become like others weak in consequence of our division.

I have listened with pleasure to the remarks of our brother, and I can appreciate his feelings while he preached the everlasting gospel on the soil of Texas for the liberties of which he had in the days of his youth perilled his life on many a bloody battle field.

I realize the sensation of endearment of native country that flows in the breast of a man who has been driven from his rights and privileges, a feeling of a peculiar nature, for when a man is abused by those around him, it is rather humiliating to have to quietly submit to be deprived of his rights; but we have to seek those rights we cannot get at the hands of our fellow men at the hands of the Almighty; for wicked men will not extend them to us, and therefore we must depend upon Him who is the source of all good, and from whom protection must be derived, for as the Lord lives, peace is taken from the earth, and every man's hands is against that of his neighbor, and death and destruction and all the powers of earth and hell seem to be manifest to bring about the consumption determined for the last days.

There is considerable anxiety among the Elders to go and preach the Gospel to distant nations, to those who profess to be enlightened, but brethren and sisters, let us preach the Gospel at home, in our houses, to those natives in the mountains who are sunk in misery and distress.

Let us open good schools for the Indians, and use the influence that we have got, for their redemption, and let us endeavor to bring them back to the light, bring them back from their long lost and degraded condition, bringing them back to the Gospel enjoyed by their fathers, for they prophesied that their children should wander in darkness for many generations, and then the Lord would commence His work amongst them again, and let us do it, and do it with faithfulness and tenderness, with kindness and generosity, and act as fathers would act towards their children, and let us spend our means and labor; let us toil and even spend our all for their redemption and preservation. And let us not take hold of it as a light matter, as a matter that we will never let come near our hearts, but with willingness, long suffering and continued endeavors to do them good, and when we are foiled in our endeavors to benefit those people let us recollect that we are not to be discouraged, but let us remember that we are to keep trying, and pray God to give you wisdom to act aright. Put away from your hearts all desires to shed their blood, and put far from you the disposition that causes you to think they are troublesome and we should like to get rid of them. Let us consider that they have rights here, that they are the original settlers. They have natural rights, and all our kindness and generosity, and all our faith exercised to benefit them will be acknowledged.

I know the feelings of some; they think the best and only method to deal with them would be to kill off and exterminate their race.

But the Lord has placed us here to try us, and if we have suffered He will bless us for our labors among that people.

Do not let us be weary, but let the hearts of young and old throb with emotions to be missionaries, throb with desires to teach them the arts of civilization.

Let these be our feelings and desires, and may God bless us in our faith and works that we may bring them back to the knowledge of their fathers and the blessings of the Gospel according to the promises. Amen.

DISCOURSE

Delivered by Elder John Banks, on Saturday morning, Oct. 7th, 1855, in the St. Louis Conference.

[REPORTED BY S. J. LEES.]

BRETHERN AND SISTERS: I have feelings this morning of no ordinary kind, in being called upon to address you. When I say my feelings are of no ordinary kind, I say so from the fact of the pleasure, delight and satisfaction it affords me to address an audience composed chiefly of Saints who come from the land of my birth, including the Islands of the Sea.

I rejoice in the spirit I have seen manifested in this City during the few days that I have been here. And in the spirit of unanimity which has been evinced this morning in the votes taken to sustain by your faith prayers and confidence the authorities of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter day Saints; or, in other words the Church of the Living God—a Church that does not stand as many suppose isolated independent, a section of what is called a Christian community, no, but it stands associated with all Prophets, Apostles Evangelists Pastors Teachers and Saints, that now live, that ever will live, or that ever have lived, a church that holds communion and is intimately connected with all the Heavenly hosts—a church that so far as its members have progressed in knowledge of eternal principles of Salvation, are associated with all the intelligent beings and spirits that compose the church of the first born, the assembly of just men made perfect, and with the Gods. A church composed of members that were pre-ordained to exist on this delapidated earth, at a time and season in its history when fraught with great and wonderful events. Who have to sustain a position and figure in a dispensation, which has been called the dispensation of the fullness of times. Who are the representatives of a church that will have power and jurisdiction over the whole world. A church that holds the keys of life, everlasting life, a church that holds the keys of death, everlasting death, and of hell, a church that holds the keys of all legitimate and everlasting power. A church that has the privilege of communion with Jehovah through the medium of Apostles and Prophets Evangelists Pastors and Teachers. A church that has the privilege of communion with the Holy Ghost. That takes of the things of the Father and the Son, and revealeth them to those who love God and keep his commandments. A church to which every thing belongs, even thrones, principalities powers might and dominions, and all things past, all things present, and all things that are to come.

It may be thought by some that this is speaking largely, but it does not approach the confines of that which has been, that which is, and that which will be, no, I have barely touched upon the subject; for I presume that "Eye" hath not seen, Ear hath not heard nor hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive the things which God hath laid up in store for those who love him and keep his commandments. From our ignorance, our inexperience, and the shortness of our lives, it is impossible that we can have very bright, full, complete, and adequate conceptions of the great and glorious designs of the Creator. Can any man that has his eyes open, and understands the truth, who has passed through the Temple—the Lords House, and received his washings and anointings. Can any man who has received power and authority to preach the fulness of the gospel and prevail with God. Can any man who has been privileged with sitting under the teachings of an inspired Prophet Seer, and Revelator of God. Can he possibly feel otherwise than I do when called upon to speak to his brethern and sisters in the capacity of a conference, or in any other Capacity? I think not.

I rejoice this morning in your presence. And I rejoice that all things are favorable with the Church with which I am associated. All things are favorable in Heaven, and this is where our greatstrength lies. I believe that the martyred dead, and the spirits under the alter have not ceased to cry—how long, Oh! Lord righteous and true dost though not avenge our blood on those that dwell upon the earth. And that spirit by which they received revelation a thousand years ago—said wait a little longer, until your brethern the Prophets have been slain in like manner. They have still the same sentiment in their bosoms, they still believe in the same doctrine, and they are still engaged in the same old fashioned song. All glory and all majesty, and all dominion be ascribed unto our God, we shall reign with him on the earth I believe that all things are moving on in Heaven in perfect order. And that the redeemed are rejoicing to day just as much as they did in ancient times. And that the sanctified and Glorified are excercising the same faith that we are excercising day by day and have the same hope, and the same conception of their calling that we have. Who regard him who rules in the Heavens—the Great Eloheim as the Father of their spirits—beings who like ourselves regard the Lord God of Isreal as the source from whence all help, all power, all salvation and everlasting life proceeds.

I rejoice in believing that all things work together for good to them that love God that are called of God according to his purpose. I am one of those that rejoice to hear of wars and rumors of wars, of earthquakes in divers places—and of the sea heaving itself beyond its bounds. I am one of those that rejoice in prospect of the nethermost regions exerting all there power, that they have opened the flood-gates of delusion, and of the spirits of the damned being sent to the earth to rap, and knock, and kick, and lie, and reveal just what they please to reveal. I am one of those who rejoice to hear of a small squadron of the Lord's host being sent into Utah Territory to nibble with a gormandizing appetite the product of the labors of the Saints of God. I am one of those who rejoice in the report of Presidents Kings Potentates and Rulers swelling themselves out in all the dignity of darkness, and in all the insignificance of unrighteousness and exclaim—it is time that something was done to put down Mormonism. I rejoice to hear of that wanton spirit that talks of taking cannon and placing it on the heights of Ephraim and leveling the Temple of God, as it rises on the tops of the mountains, I am one of those that rejoice to see exultation in the minds of men, the hatred and malice that fill the hearts of the wicked on this continent, and in all lands and countries against the heritage of the most High God. I say—I am one of those who rejoice in witnessing all these things. And however imperfect my conduct may have been in years that are past, and however imperfect it may be at the present time—I am glad to know that I obey one commandment, namely. "When you see these things transpiring; then lift up your heads and rejoice for your redemption draweth nigh." Every day, every hour, and upon every occasion, I obey this most important commandment. And if there was no other evidence that I belong to the right stock, and that I am in favor of the kingdom of God, and that I have a portion of his good spirit, this is one evidence that is incontrovertible.

Now it is somewhat singular in reading the journals of the day, and in observing the spirit that pervades the minds of men with regard to the work of God. What sympathy they have for the people of Utah. We hear them say "no doubt there are good people among them, but they will be sure to die this winter. What a pity they should be left to perish, only think, a people from the East and West the North and the South, from every land and clime, and all left to perish in a barren and cursed wilderness." They will say sometimes "we have charity to believe that some of them are kind, decent and charitable people. What a pity it is," and in the next weeks journal we find them exulting in the sentiment that "the grasshoppers will settle the question, if nothing else will, this will accomplish the desires of our hearts; and that will show that the prayers of our venerable Pastor, have come up before the Lord of Sabbaoth with acceptance. It is not a little wonderful to see this people who talk so much of cannon, who talk so much of organizations and combinations of every description, how alarmed and frightened because a few grasshoppers have eaten up a few cabbages. What a wonderful display of confidence and patriotism, how surprisingly these persons figure in the sight of heaven. Let the Lord God send but one troop of grasshoppers, and the world is thrown into a state of alarm; fear takes hold of them, their knees smite together, for they are not sure but next season they will come round this way and visit them. There is a great deal of foresight in them in discerning these things. They are not entirely destitute of intelligence, but can just discover some things in their true light, and according to their faith so shall it be done unto them.

If the grasshoppers should come upon them, having obtained renewed strength and increased numbers during the winter, they would come to the help of the Lord against the mighty, and their appearance would be terrible. If you were this day in Utah you would find less sympathy and alarm than is at present in your city, or in any part of the United States. The people of Utah believe in the God that led up Israel in ancient times out of the land of Egypt, with a mighty hand and an outstretched arm. They believe in that God that opened the avenue of the seas, and sustained His covenant people in the wilderness, at the glance of whose eye the quails of the heaven assembled in myriads around the tents of Israel. They believe in that God who could invest the stammering Moses with power that when he smote the rock the waters gushed out. It does not matter whether it was wood or iron that he smote it with, the Lord ordered him to go forth and smite the flinty rock to sustain Israel in the hour of need. They believe in Him that governs, controls and sustains all things. They believe it is His prerogative to regulate and set in order all things in heaven and on earth. They have faith and confidence in the covenants He made with our forefathers—and believe He is willing to bestow blessings upon the children that were promised to the fathers, even the gospel of salvation, and the church of the living God, and though suffering from the effects of tradition, the manner in which they have been taught, the disadvantages under which they have labored in accumulating knowledge, yet they are a unit on the earth, and they're a unit in heaven, and the same authority and the same power which is in heaven, God hath revealed through the holy angels and His holy spirit, to be sealed upon the sons of earth, and they feel strong in the sentiment that there is no gift however great, no heaven however high, no intelligence however exalted but they can aspire unto through faith in Jesus Christ, and obedience unto His commandments.

Shall a man without eyes, without ears, without hands, who is in himself entirely helpless, in whose veins rankles the gangrene of Gentilism, a spirit that would dethrone the Almighty, shall such a man defy heaven with impunity? Shall we fear such men? Verily no. Heaven would be ashamed of the church on earth if subject to fear from such like characters. But all things are right, everything comes in its season and produces but one effect, that is, to build up the kingdom of God, the gathering of Israel, preparing the way for the coming of the Messiah, and for the blessing and salvation of all those who love God and keep His commandments. Can any of you tell how things can be better? All is perfectly right. The church of the living God is full of amens. The heavens resound, and the holy Ghost exults in bearing testimony concerning it. Hear it Oh earth! And bow yourselves down before the Lord and worship Him. Yes, all things are about right, all the debts that this church owes to the Gentiles it is able to pay any hour, and all those who are endebted to us we know on what principle to make them accountable, so there need be no difficulty or contention. If all things are not according to our mind or their's, only wait a while and we will make all right. May the Lord bless you.—Amen.

FIVE HUNDRED HUSBANDS WANTED.—Last week, at the Halifax Borough Court, John Thomas, a sawyer, was charged by Mr. Jennings, relieving officer, with having left his wife and family chargeable to the union. The relief given had been after the rate of 7s. 6d. per week. The officer pressed for a conviction, on the ground that there were no fewer than five hundred deserted wives within the Bradford union, with 1,017 children, involving an annual expenditure in relief of nearly £20,000. Mr. Cheeseborough (one of the magistrates) expressed his regret to hear this, and said it showed a very low state of morals. The defendant was allowed a week to repay the amount of relief which had been given to his family.—Lond. Times.

Does not this prove that England's social laws are seriously at fault? Might she not take a useful lesson from Utah?—Millennial Star.

THE following rather amusing conversation recently took place between a traveler and a squaw in Central Michigan. The squaw had a "papoose" on her arm that was exceedingly white for a member of her race, which fact induced the gentleman to ask if it was not a half-breed; whereupon she replied: "No, no—not a drop of white blood about it—half Indian and half Missionary.

EXCHANGE ON SALT LAKE.

Emigrants, Missionaries, and all persons wishing to carry or send money to any part of Utah, are hereby notified that we have made the necessary arrangements, and are prepared to furnish SIGHT DRAFTS on Gov. B. Young, or on any of the principal Mercantile houses in Salt Lake City. Bring or send your money to the Luminary Office, and drafts for the same amount will be returned to you, or forwarded by succeeding mail to any person in Utah, as you may direct. Duplicates will be furnished, whenever required, so that in case of failure of mails, no loss will be sustained, and you will avoid the risk of transporting specie, besides the Church wish to use it here.

COL. STEPTOE AT WASHINGTON.

A correspondent of the New York Times writing from Washington city, is of opinion that Governor Young will not be turned out of office during this administration, but that it will be left for President Pierce's successor to perform that dangerous and formidable coup d'etat. We opine the same, and firmly believe in the Governor's statement "that he will continue to govern Utah as long as the Lord wants him to hold that position; and that President Pierce, nor any other President will ever remove him until God shall reveal it through the authorized agent in the Federal Government." And it is pretty evident that many more have become converts to the same doctrine; and many of the editorial fraternity, and Judges and Statesmen too; for nothing is more certain than that God lives and reigns over the hearts of the children of men and turneth them at his pleasure. And whilst the Lord lives, Brigham's authority and sacred rights will be protected and secured from all the plots, schemes and machinations of his enemies. We are not so much surprised that they are now believers in the above dogma, as we are that they should have ever been so doltish, as to misunderstand or disbelieve it. Had they been Soft Shells or Know-Nothings we should not have wondered, however, we will let them pass, and they may peradventure learn wisdom by a demonstration of their own folly.

The Times' correspondent writing from Washington says:

"Col. Steptoe, of the U. S. Army, is here, the guest of the President at the Executive Mansion. It will be remembered he was appointed by the President last winter to succeed Brigham Young in the Governorship of Utah, but declined to accept the responsible position. I understand it is his opinion that no other than a military Governor, with an adequate military force, can ever prove the error of Young's boast, that he will be Governor of Utah until God Almighty tells him he need be Governor no longer. As Military Governor, Col. Steptoe would undertake to teach the Mormons the necessity of obedience to Federal authority, but not otherwise. It is now a year and a half since the President's determination to test the question of sovereignty with the Mormons was announced, but the issue has not yet been made."

We question very much the truth of the foregoing, we believe it a libel on the gallant Colonel. His honorable and gentlemanly conduct in Utah last winter, has secured for him the esteem and confidence of the people of Utah, and it will require some stronger testimony than the ipse dixit of a penny a liner to enduce us to believe the Colonel capable of undertaking the irrational, unconstitutional and reckless business of military Governor of Utah, in order to teach her loyal subjects allegiance to the government they have never repudiated or in any way dishonored, the idea is preposterous.

If Mr. Drummond's estimate of the population of Utah be correct as it undoubtly is, it being confirmed by the Historian, Col. George A. Smith, we think it probable that Utah will be sufficiently metamorphosed and stately in her sphere by the next administration, that she will not be under the necessity of truckling to her sister States for Governor or other officers, civil or military, whom they might wish to palm upon her.

The people of Utah are not children nor ignoramuses, and therefore cannot be expected to submit to every indignity and outrage the epanletted outsiders might be disposed to practise upon them, and if it be supposed that a military company can subjugate the people of Utah, crush their free spirit and compel them to abandon the holy laws and ordinances of the Lord, laws and ordinances that are rendered doubly sacred by the blood of Prophets and Saints which has been shed in their defence, we think it will be discovered a miserable blunder, and would entail consequences upon the people of the United States that would never be obliterated, but would darken the fair escutcheon of the nation with a bloody deed that would stand unequalled on the black page of history, and bring everlasting shame and disgrace upon the ruffian savages who dare to advocate or attempt the execution of so foul hearted and damnable an outrage. But we do not apprehend any immediate danger of such an enterprise, although there are doubtless many who would like to stand in the distance and look on, yet we think there are but very few who would like to jeopardize their lives in so dangerous and inglorious an undertaking.

PROCLAMATION OF MAZZINI.—M. Mazzini has addressed a proclamation to the Italian people, calling upon them to rise. The insurrection, he maintains, is the easiest thing in the world to realise and to bring to a successful issue. He urges his countrymen by every argument imaginable, to seize on the present opportunity; if they do not, they will become the object of contempt to the world.

We have heard and read considerable from time to time upon the rights of women. We copy from an English paper this week, an article upon Woman's Wrong's. And these wrongs we are sorry to say are not confined to Europe, but our own boasted land — America. And even St. Louis, will furnish evidence of woman's wrongs inflicted by the cruel hand of him who ought to be her protector and savior. We have heard within the last few days of the inhumanity and barbarism of men in this city, who, after pledging themselves to sustain, comfort, and bless their wives', have outraged, and in every sense cursed them.

Some persons have suggested the propriety of sending Christian Ministers to Utah, to evangelize the Heathen Mormons, but we think the Christian Gentiles of London, New York, St. Louis, and other cities of modern Babel, might be materially benefitted by adopting the policy of poligamic Mormons, for example here is a Christian magistrate in London, hearing a complaint of a woman nearly killed by her husband, commits him for six months, after which the wretched monster is authorized by law to claim her as his wife, bone of his bone, and flesh of his flesh. In Utah he would be executed and damned, and his wife would be given to one who is worthy of her, this is the heathenish custom of the Mormons so reprobated by our Christian neighbors. Again, when a young and virtuous female is seduced by the Gentile brotherhood, a few dollars will pay the damages awarded by the Christian Judges. But in Utah, if a female is dishonored and seduced, his heart's blood is demanded as a lawful recompense. This is one of woman's rights guaranteed by the laws of God established in Utah.

THE Editor of the Tennessee Baptist, is the author of a book entitled, "The Iron Wheel, or, Republicanism Backward and Christianity Reversed." The following extracts are from the Reverend Author, and are particularly recommeneed to the perusal of Methodists:

"Methodism cannot be justly called a church of Christ." "Methodism is a human invention — the grand daughter of Rome — the grand child of the man of sin and son of perdition: the church cannot fellowship it." "The first chapter of the discipline is wholly untrue." "Methodism without either altar or divinity — its members are preachers all unconverted." "Methodism the popery of protestantism," etc. "The doctrine of the power of the keys held by the Methodist clergy in common with the pope." "Thirty untruths taught in the baptism of one infant."

"Masonry has equal — yea, far superior claims than Methodism to assume the title and demand the regard and consideration of a church of Christ." "It is a society set on foot by man, not professing the slightest conformity to the word of God." "What is such a society but a great rival and antagonistic institution to the church set up by the God of Heaven?"

"The Methodist system is death to all the institions for which Washington fought and freeman died." "All the Methodist preachers in this country were tories;" and yet he says again, "Methodism is only sixty-eight years old." "The Methodists are the merest puppets ever wired or worked by stratagem. Oh! my country! how much is to be feared for thy liberties from these!" "The Methodism of the discipline is a naked clerical despotism, and in essence popery itself, and the worst of popery — Jesuitism." "A Methodist society is an inquisition, not a church." "I unhesitatingly pronunce it anti-Christ." "The preachers are tyrants, circuit-riders scandal-mongers, hypocrites and deceivers."

The author, would doubtless wish us to believe that his own system is immaculate and Divine, but unfortunately for him, his own beloved system has been also weighed in the balance and found wanting. And every charge he can sustain against Methodism (infant sprinkling excepted) we will engage to sustain against sectarianism, his own church included. If Methodism is a human invention — the grand-daughter of Rome, and without the slightest conformity to the word of God, and antagonistic to the church set up by the God of Heaven? Such is sectarianism in general, and the system of the Reverend author in particular, which we are prepared to prove both by reason and revelation. If our Baptist cotemporary would sustain his position, or, that position he has assumed, let him bring forth his strong reasons, and prove the legitimacy of his Priesthood and organization or honesty acknowledge their papel origin. If derived from the church of Rome why not honestly confess the fact? If his system is a human invention that has grown out of Catholicism; and it is out of his power to prove to the contrary; why not honorably acknowledge it? Will our Baptist friends consider these questions, and answer them candidly? We shall see.

TOTAL ECLIPSE OF THE MOON.—On Thursday, Oct. 25th, there will be a total eclipse of the moon. It will take place in the morning about three o'clock.

THE population of Iowa is estimated at 600,000, and is constantly increasing. Twenty-five years ago the country was a wilderness tenanted only by the savage.

THE Northern Light from California brings the melancholy news of Cholera on board the Uncle Sam. The Captain reports the death of 103 adults, 8 children, and nine seamen, making in all 120.—Those who died in the Port are not included. It is supposed the number was not less than 200.—The deaths were generally very sudden, none surviving over from two to six hours from the time they were attacted. The panic on board was dreadful; wives abandoned their husbands and husbands their wives' while both abandoned their children.

A wonderful story of a massacre of emigrants by the Indians at Devil's Gate is published by the Oregon Argus which has lately arrived in the California Mails. After giving the names of several as killed who are known to be still perambulating on Terra Firma some of whom have been seen in this City.

The Argus gives the following particulars which may be taken for what they're worth:

"The savages, after a hurried slaughter of such as fell in their way, retreated to the mountains, driving the stock before them.

In the morning the survivors packed up what provisions they could well carry, burned the wagons and everything that remained, and then started for Salt Lake on foot.

They accomplished the journey in thirteen days, four of which they were without a morsel to eat.—They laid their case before Brigham Young, who kindly called a Mormon council, levied a contribution and fitted them out with five teams, with which they continued their journey to Sacramento.

THE VALLIES OF UTAH.

The following interesting communication was written by W. W. Drummond, U. S. officer, in Utah, to the Chicago Daily Times, which we copy from an exchange, for the perusal of the readers of the Luminary:

"By the virtue of law I am assigned to this the judicial district. My head quarters are at Fillmore City, in Millard county, the seat of Government of this Territory. At Fillmore City there is now being erected a splendid State-house, built of a superior quality of stone of a redish cast, and no doubt very durable. One wing is nearly completed, and will be in readiness by the second Monday in December, at which time the Legislature meets. This city is one hundred and sixty miles south of Great Salt Lake City, and about two hundred and fifteen miles south of the line dividing Utah and Oregon Territories, and is centrally located in the territory. Great Salt Lake is the largest city in the Territory, and contains fifteen thousand inhabitants. In it are a number of fine stone hotels, school-houses, &c. A large majority of the population of the city are of foreign birth, mostly English. The next city of importance is Provo, on the Provo river, about fifty miles south of Salt Lake City. Provo is a beautiful place, containing factories, mills, &c., with three thousand inhabitants, about equally divided between native and foreign birth. From Provo south there are a number of villages and settlements all the way down until you reach the California line. Much of the land is quite productive in all kinds of grain.

In the county of Iron, is to be found an inexhaustible quantity of stone coal, as well as extensive quantities of iron ore. Forges and furnaces are in operation in the county of Iron for the manufacture of iron, which is soon destined, in the ordinary course of things, to become a source of great profit. Copper, lead, chalk, plaster of paris, as well as gold, are to be found in great abundance in different parts of the Territory. In the lake of which you have heard so much, is to be found salt in the greatest abundance, which can be obtained simply by driving a wagon into the edge of the lake, and with a common shovel filling it to its utmost capacity, at no other cost or expense, and is free for Jew and Gentile, saint and sinner. Among the grains cultivated here with success are to be found wheat, rye, Indian corn, barley, and oats. Among the vegetable kingdom, are potatoes, onions, tomatoes, beets cabbage, lattuce, radishes, as well as peas and beans in great abundance. Peaches are cultivated to some extent, but no apples as yet. There are many fine nurseries in different parts of the territory, which in a few years will yield a full supply of fruit. Wild fruit of different kinds is quite abundant, and is a good substitute. Owing to the long continued dry weather and plague of grass-hoppers last spring, grain, grass, and all kinds of vegetation is very scarce, and much fear is felt for the sufferings of the poor, who are numerous, and who will suffer unless aided by some now unseen hand.

Not a single hive of bees is to found in the territory. It is said that a number of years since a deep snow fell in these mountain valleys and caused all the buffalo on the West of the rocky mountains to die of starvation. There are none West of the mountains at this time. Among the wild animals you will find the black, and grizzly bear, and wolves of different kinds, two or three different kinds of deer, elk, mountain sheep, and different kinds of hare and rabbits. There are of the feathered tribe, the sagehen, prairie-hen, wild duck, and geese quite abundant, but no quails. Geese, turkeys, and the common hen are quite abundant. Horses, both wild and tame, mules, cattle, and sheep, grow finely, and live mostly the year round on grass, and said to be in better order in the winter than in the summer, there being no flies in winter.

The institution of negro and Indian slavery exists in this territory, there being quite a number of Southern men here who brought their slaves with them. The Indians are sold into slavery by one another and subject to perpetual bondage, and make good, active, ready, and obedient servants.

The prevailing religion is that of the Latter-day Saints, although an occasional sermon is delivered by persons of different persuasions. The population of the territory is variously estimated at from sixty to one hundred thousand, the most of whom are active and industrious. No business man in this country performs more bodily and mental labor than Gov. Brigham Young.

The Surveyor General, Gen. D. H. Burr, of Washington, is here, and has opened an office in Salt Lake City, and entered upon the duties of his office, two parties of surveyors being at work, led by Mr. Joseph Traskalawski. Gen. Burr, is a mild, gentlemanly, pleasant man, popular in his office and firm in all his efforts. A splendid mansion is being built by Gov. Young, said to be nearly capacious enough to hold his whole family. A fine dwelling is being built by Col. A. W. Babbitt. the Secretary of this Territory, and whose name is well known to the Democracy of Illinois. Mills and factories of all kinds, demanded in a new country. are in successful operation throughout the whole territory where settlements are made. Great credit is due to the Mormons for their efforts in common schools in all the settlements; a school house is the first good building erected. They are the most industrious community I ever saw. Strongly devoted to their religious faith, many of them of them are of the best men and women, while far too many are basely corrupt. So far I have been most kindly and and cordially treated by all citizens and inhabitants of this valley and territory.

An apparently miraculous crop of sugar is being made from the honey dew, which falls on the leaves of the cotton-wood exclusively. It is made by soaking the leaves in water, and then after taking the leaves out pursuing the same course which is taken in the manufacture of the ordinary maple sugar. A sample of this sugar I send by this mail to our esteemed Senator, Hon. S. A. Douglas.

OBITUARY OF ORSON SPENCER.

It becomes our melancholy duty to announce the decease of our well beloved brother Orson Spencer, late editor of the Luminary and President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in the Ohio and Mississippi vallies. He breathed his last on Monday, October 15, 1855, at 3 o'clock A. M., in the city of St. Louis, Mo., after an illness of forty days. He died without a groan or struggle, and could hardly be said to have tasted the pangs of death. Peace and serenity have characterized his whole life, and were manifestly enjoyed during his illness, and were sealed and engraven upon his placid countenance in the hour of death; and all who saw him felt to wish that their life might be the life of the righteous, and their last end like his.

It will be remembered that sometime in July, or early in August, 1854, our deceased brother left his home in Salt Lake City, being appointed by the First Presidency on a mission to Cincinnati, where he remained until July, 1855, when he was sent for by President Erastus Snow to take the editorial chair of the Luminary. He lost no time but left his field of labor immediately, and arrived in St. Louis on the 7th of July, and was forthwith installed in that position he filled with so much ease and dignity. He remained but a very short time in this city, being called to go on a mission to the Cherokee Nation. He started July, 21st, and remained in the camp at Atchison until the last company of the emigration had taken up their line of march for the valley, when in company of Elder James McGaw on the 5th of August, he proceeded on his mission to the Cherokee Nation, where he remained until the 5th of September, when having completed his mission and finding himself attacked with fever accompanied with chills, which prevailed in the Nation at that time, he returned immediately to St. Louis, where he arrived on the 17th of September, fatigued, debilitated and afflicted.

For about ten days after his return he was subject to the chills and fever with more or less intensity, and when finally broken up, the disease assumed a mild stage of typhoid fever. The general symptoms discoverable through his illness, were torpidity, lassitude and debility, over which he found it impossible to rally. He was attended during his illness by Dr. White of this city, and Dr. Clinton from Philadelphia, who was sent for expressly to attend him. The Dr. arrived here on Thursday the 11th inst. He found brother Spencer in the very last stage of his illness; he had that morning given up hopes of life, and had resigned himself and committed his family into the hands of the Lord. When he first saw brother Clinton he felt revived and encouraged, and almost sorry he had shown signs of weakness in giving up. But notwithstanding he was so anxious to see the doctor, and expressed such faith in his prescriptions and ministrations, no inducements were sufficient to get him to take anything calculated to restore him. He therefore gradually declined and finally expired, fully satisfied with life, and rejoicing in the hope of glory beyond the tomb.

Dr. Clinton had no hope of his recovery from the first. It appeared evident that his earthly course was run and that he had finished the work given him to do, and he could say with full assurance, I have fought the good fight, finished my course and kept the faith, henceforth there is laid up for me a righteous crown, which God the righteous judge will give unto me, and not to me only, but unto all who love his appearing.

Between three and four o'clock on Monday afternoon the brethern and sisters commenced to gather around the house of brother Swales—where the remains of our respected brother lay awaiting interment—anxious to obtain a last look at him they so much loved, and when Dr. Clinton stood o'er the lifeless form, after addressing the mournful spectators in praise of the noble and generous character of the deceased, he fixed his eyes upon him, and exclaimed pathetically. "Brother Orson, farewell; we shall soon meet with you again." Every heart responded to the sentiment, Amen. The scene was solemn and imposing. The Doctor's heart was too full for further utterance and he was relieved by Elder John Banks who offered to our Father in Heaven a most beautiful and appropriate prayer.

Soon after four o'clcok the funeral procession was seen moving towards the Cemetry, where after a short address from Elder James H. Hart, the earthly Tabernacle of our brother was interred (for a season) with a sure and certain hope of a resurrection to eternal life. Although but little notice had been given, and consequently but little opportunity offered the Saints to prepare—yet there were not fewer than twenty or, twenty-two carriages, filled with brethern and sisters who followed the remains of brother Spencer to their temporary resting place, as a last token of esteem and affection.

It is not our province to review the life history and character of the deceased. We leave that pleasing task to an abler pen, suffice it for us to say, that as President of the Churches in the British Isles, and editor of the Millenial Star in the years of our Lord 1847 and 1848, and as special messenger from Zion, to the City of Berlin Prussia in the yer 1852 and as chancillor of the University of the State of Deseret—and every other position of trust occupied by him in the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter day Saints, all prove him to be one of the best and noblest of the sons of God—who enjoyed the fullest confidence of his brethern, and utmost affection of all the Saints. And we feel deeply to sympathise with his bereaved family, who by this dispensation of Providence have sustained a loss which cannot be restored until the grave shall give up its sleeping dead. Then will the Valiant Orson be clothed with immortality and eternal lives. Henceforth brother Spencer will be numbered with the illustrious dead, who have worn out their bodies in the cause of God, who have not counted their lives dear unto them, so that they keep the Commandments of God and are accepted of him. His name will be honored and revered by the righteous and their seed forever; and many generations shall call him blessed. For truely blessed are the dead who die in the Lord for they rest from their labors and their works follow them.

RUSSIAN WANT OF STORES, &c.—The Cologne Gazette has a letter from St. Petersburg stating that the stores of the government of Kherson are completely exhausted, as merchant vessels have ceased to bring corn from the fertile countries of the Don by the Sea of Azoff. The forage for the animals employed in transport must now be brought from Perekop, and even the water they require—for there is no forage in the Crimea, and the springs are dried up. The Salgir has become quite a little rivulet. The crop of potatoes has also failed, and the price risen more than threefold. Vegetation is everywhere withered, and the price of corn is constantly on the rise at Simpheropol.

A ROOSTER was flogged recently in Connecticut for crowing on Sunday.

Correspondence.

HARTLAND, MICH., October 9, 1855.

DEAR BROTHER SPENCER: I feel happy for the privilege of giving my testimony, through the Luminary, to the world, that I am still on the side of Mormonism, or the truth, just as they please to have it, it makes no difference; for Mormonism is the truth, and truth is Mormonism. If there is any people that can find a feast for the mind in this imperfect state, it is those who have embraced Mormonism; I mean genuine Mormons—those who love the truth more than they love error, and who love God more than they love all things else. How often we are led to contrast the difference between the religions of the present age—as it is practiced among the different sects—and the religion revealed in former ages, or that enjoyed by the Latter-day Saints. One is love of God and love to man, while the other is to those who believe as I do. Who ever knew of the Savior exulting over the sufferings of human beings, however much they were opposed to his doctrines, he loved them still, and could pray his Father in heaven to forgive his enemies, and even prayed for his murderers. The same spirit prevails among the Saints of God in all ages of the world, and as the Savior and former day Saints had to suffer for the scoffs and insults of the professors of the powerless forms of the religion of the age, so do the Latter-day Saints have to endure the same. The devil was the same now that he was then, he was opposed to new revelation then and he is the same yet. But what is the spirit manifested by the great mass of Christendom, towards the Latter-day Saints. (I except those who are willing to look at both sides.) Why, they all ought to be slain, they are not fit to live, they are trying to contrive a plan to overthrow the government, and when they get a little stronger they will kill off every body but Mormons, and we had better stop it where it is.

Such characters had better be cautious lest the Mormons in Utah, kill a portion of the world by throwing the rocky mountains at them, and drown the balance by upsetting the Great Salt Lake. What real christian can laugh at or make light of the inhuman butchery of Joseph, and Hyram Smith, or of the expulsion of thousands of American citizens by mob violence, thousands of miles from what is called the civilized world. Yet strange to tell there are those (and many of them too) who stand in the pulpit and there exult over the misery of others, brought upon by bloody persecutors, and there they give their consent to these bloody heart rending scenes. Do they have the spirit of Christ; no, Christ said love your enemies, and they not only hate their enemies, but they hate their best friends, for never did the world have a greater friend (the Savior excepted) than brothers Joseph, Brigham, and others, who have sacrificed all for the kingdom of God's sake. Thus they show their hatred to God and his people. And when I look at the wickedness and corruption that is in the world, my prayer is, O, Lord hasten the time when the Saviour shall come and put an end to wickedness, that his people may obtain that rest so long and anxiously looked for. I hope to have a place in the kingdom of heaven, while I may live on the earth, that I prove myself worthy of a seat in his everlasting kingdom hereafter. Our hearts are made glad through the intellligence and good instruction that we receive through your paper, the Luminary, and we hope it may prosper, and through the good instruction contained therein, many may obtain a knowledge of the truth.

Your brother in the gospel of Christ,

WM. M. WHITE.

Encouragement to the Faithful.

BY JOEL.

Go! thou suffering Saints of earth,
Concious of thy heavenly birth;
'Midst the storms that round the foam,
Trace thy journey to thy home.

What, though storms around the rage,
What, though earth and hell engage;
To deprive thee of thy rest,
Thou shalt not be dispossessed.

Though arrayed on every hand,
All thy foes around thee stand;
They cannot thy will controll,
Neither can they harm thy soul.

Robed in innocence and love,
Truth and wisdom from above;
While this garb doth thee suroound,
Foes shall never thee confound.

Go, thou suffering Saints resigned,
Go, with pure and heavenly mind;
Go, midst storms that round the foam,
Go, regain thy heavenly home.

For the Luminary.

DEAR BROTHER HART: I resume the use of my pen to communicate a few thoughts to you whilst staying in the garden city as you are aware, I was unable to remain during the whole of the sitting of Conference; but the short time that I was privileged to assemble with you, gave a new impetus to my resolves, not that I felt a disposition to flag any previous to the Conference, but every energy of my soul was aroused to assist in securing the overthrow of the kingdom of Satan, and the building up the kingdom of the Messiah upon the ruins thereof.

I have attended several Conferences since my identity with the church of Christ, but never did I realize the spirit of God so pre-eminent in all your deliberations, union of action with a marked progress in keeping the laws of this Stake of Zion, was manifest in the representation of the various wards. It has often been a matter of reflection with me, how my brethren laboring in their varied fields with every kind of opposition to grapple with, return from the Conference, to meet the same spirit, but with a cheerfulness that I did not get the key to till our last Conference. It is on such occasions that the servant of God by mingling with his brethren, receives the union of spirit, and hearing the varied experiences of the Elders, a spirit of emulation and holy ambition is engendered, and nothing short of open war with the enemy of man will suffice. Another cause of the renewed ardor of the Elders is the varied instructions that are given from the President and others whom he may call upon to assist him in this part of the Conference exercises. Who among the Elders present will forget the remarks made by Elder Banks and others on that occasion; although the absence of our beloved brother Orson Spencer, together with the cause thereof, would occasionally present itself; nevertheless we were consoled by the knowledge that we had his faith and prayers for our success. One remark made by brother Banks in his able review of the tottering kingdoms of the earth and their convulsive gasps for life, during anarchy, confusion and strife of the most deadly character. Well now for the remark, he said that the nations of the earth were struggling in the vortex of destruction and "swelling themselves out in all the dignity of darkness." This remark has occupied my mind not a little since it fell from the lips of brother Banks. I am not going to bore you in a letter with all the varied features that it has presented itself with to me, but try to arrest the attention of my brethren in the Priesthood, and make it useful to the edifying of the Saints. How pregnant with meaning! how apt the illustration! the "dignity of darkness," there is a biting sarcasm, significant and expressive in the language. Would to God the mighty men of earth could learn the sublime truths of heaven as they are inculcated in the gospel of Christ, for when the Saint of God hears of war, and rumors of war, nation rising against nation, then he has cause to rejoice, for by these things he knows that redemption draweth nigh, for when men striveth for the mastery, to subjugate their fellows that they may the more easily oppress them. We have the evidence and full force of the expression, "the dignity of darkness," an inflated pride the offspring of the usurper of this our earth, for dignity like modesty is of two kinds, the genuine and the counterfeit. Real dignity has an evanescence, a nobleness about its actions that tells its own coming. It never cries out "lo! I am here! bow down!" But in the majesty of its silence it attracts, and without noise is applauded. It brings admiration from all classes, and praise from the ignorant and the refined.

The counterfeit belongs to display and arrogance, and never fails to disgust all whom it approaches. When the Prophet Joseph Smith came forth with the everlasting gospel twenty-five years ago with his simple testimony "God hath sent me" unattended by this world's show and pomp. How few anticipated the speedy development of an organization so majestic in its character, so sublime in its purposes, making steady inroads upon the systems of men, not gaining conquests by the sword and the shedding of blood, but by the simple force of truth in opposition to mob-rule, persecution bitter and relentless, and purposes the most vile attributed to the Lord's anointed. Yet amidst all that can be said or done, it lives, it flourishes, it is rising in majesty, power and great glory. The kings of earth know it, scattered Israel rejoice in it, Lucifer and his hosts tremble at it, the nations are tottering and will soon fall before it, and Christ will reign all in all.

Oct. 10, 1855. SPECTACLES.

GRASSHOPPER TRAPS. — In our rides in the grasshopper country, we saw thousands of the deep holes which had been dug in the earth by the Indians, to entrap their luxurious food. These holes contained about a bushel and a half, and we believe we saw holes enough in Yuba, Butte, and Sutter counties to have collected fifty thousand bushels of grasshoppers. The Indians will grow fat this winter. — [California Farmer.

NEW KIND OF SUGAR.

The following is a letter from Elder L. N. Scovil to Br. Joseph Cain:

"PROVO CITY, July 31, 1855."

"Last week a sweet substance was discovered on the leaves of the trees. A few began to gather it by stripping off the leaves and soaking them in water; in this way Br. A. Daniels made 11 lbs of sugar in one day; it looks and tastes like maple sugar. Many scores of men, women, and children are now engaged in gathering it.

"Br. Aaron Daniels has just brought in three specimens which he sends to your care, and which you will please to deliver as follows, viz: one cake to Prest. B. Young, one to Br. Geo. A. Smith, and the other to Br. A. Carrington. Br. Daniels says he made 20 lbs yesterday, and he thinks it is getting better every day.

"When it was first discovered some said that it was honey due, others said it proceeded from the Cotton wood leaves, but it is found on all kinds of leaves and on the rocks. My children have gathered and brought in a quantity of it, which they had taken from the leaf, as it is deposited, many of the leaves have scales of this sweet substance as thick as window glass, and some a great deal thicker.

"Br. Daniels tells me that his process is to cut the twigs from the trees and after soaking in water strain and boil, similar to making maple sugar. I have tasted some excellent metheglin made from the same substance."

The cakes of sugar above mentioned came safe to hand, the grain and color very closely resembling maple sugar when it is run into cups or moulds.—The color and slightly bitter taste were doubtless due to the leaves, and probably arose from their being soaked rather too long.

NOTICE.

The following named Elders elected to go on Missions, are requested to report themselves to Elder Orson Pratt at the stand in the Bowery, in Great Salt Lake City, by half past 9 o'clock A. M. on Sunday, the 12th of August. Those that cannot then report themselves will do so as soon thereafter as they can consistently.

FREE LOVE IN NEW YORK.

O. J. Victor, of the Sandusky Register, has been on a visit to New York, and has witnessed many dreadful and shocking things. In the course of his investigations he attended a Free Love Meeting. Hear him for his cause:

On Broadway is a room occupying the whole fourth story of a large building, where gather the professors and diciples of the "Free Lovers."—These persons abrogate the marriage laws, and deny their binding force. They propose, as the only true marriage, that persons of both sexes shall come together from "affinities"—that is, they will live together as man and wife when their spiritual nature assures them that they are fitted for one another, and shall only live together as long as as their natures are "harmonious"—when this harmony ceases, the parties are at liberty to chose other associations, and bed and board with other of the opposite sex if it pleases. This is the sum and substance of the whole institution; regard it as they may, and its fruits may be easily guessed.

We entered the room at 8 o'clock. At one end of the large saloon was an ante-chamber, carpeted nicely and fitted up with sofas, tables, &c. A company of men and women—including several persons whose names would not look well in print, but who ought to be known nevertheless, were gathered around a table, reciting French to Professor Batchelor, the somewhat noted French Socialist, and conjugator of Albert Brisbane and Stephen Pearl Andrews. After a short time the lessons were over, when commenced the usual hilarity of the evening. The attendance became constantly greater—chiefly of young men and women. The exercises consisting of promenading—the men clasping the women around the waist, and talking apart in low tones.—This was in earnest of the "assimilation of soul," so beautifully set forth by these impractable abstractionists, and it was also in earnest of such a sin as this pen cannot record without a sense of humiliation for poor perverse human nature.

The promenading and "reasoning together" goes on for a while, when music strikes up and the floor is filled with dancers. All, then, looks well enough to the careless observer; but let a watchful eye be kept, and see the pressing of hands that is going on, the leering of eyes, and the encircling of waists by gentlemen's arms, and there is little room for doubt of the character of the "affinity which would bring souls harmoniously together." We looked on in utter astonishment, and could but turn in indignation to the apostles of such a gross deception, to protest against its enormity.

In a lady present we found a willing communicant, and facts enough were given us to authorize the interposition of the strong hand of the law to break up the gatherings. Young women, beautiful and accomplished, were pointed out to us as having given themselves up to the embraces of certain young men, for whom they had an "affinity," while the brotherhood looked on approvingly, and seemed to regard it as entirely proper! One beautiful French girl, present, looked worn and exhausted; it was told us by our lady informant that, six weeks ago, Madamoiselle was as blooming loveable a creature as ever graced any parlor—that she had become so thoroughly indoctrinated with the Free Love principles as to become a truthful disciple—and, as a consequent, she had become the mistress of four or five of the "spiritual minded," and was now but the wreck of what was a pure woman a few weeks since. This we were assured, was but one of many instances; and yet the Club was rapidly increasing, drawing within it many people of intelligence and virtue, who thus blindly sell themselves to the Devil, in the pursuit of an abstraction which is but impurity itself in reduction to practice.

A POLITICAL PRISONER BEATEN TO DEATH IN NAPLES. — A letter in the Paris Presse, says: — "I give you the following from a certain source. Everybody now knows of the death of the unfortunate Lorenzo, who was bastinadoed for having replied with dignity to the insults of the sbirro Campagna. It should be known that Lorenzo's bourreaux were ordered to pause four minutes between every blow of the stick, and the number of blows awarded was one hundred! The surgeon in attendance remonstrated after the fiftieth stroke, and declared that if the punishment was carried further, death must inevitably ensue. But neither the generous intervention of the surgeon, nor the piercing shrieks of the victim could stay the executioners. The hundred blows were scrupulously given (the four minutes interval being observed throughout,) and after a torture which lasted seven hours, the unfortunate man was transmitted to the prison hospital, where he very speedily expired."

WRONGS OF WOMEN.

It is our belief that any decent baboon would instinctively shrink from association with a brutalised wretch, named George Rose, charged before Mr. Ingham at the Thames police-court with the most barbarous treatment of his wife. She had been fifteen years manacled to the monster, and had endured fifteen years of "ill-usage, pain, and sorrow." She appeared before the magistrate a most frightful object, testifying by bruises and mutilation to the atrocities committed upon her by her ruffian lord and master. The poor creature's eyes were blackened—black as her husband's heart. When the victim had moaned her evidence, she sank—writes the reporter—exhausted in a chair. We give the horrors in her own words:

"I am in great pain; my body is covered with bruises, and I can scarcely walk. He said he would not be easy till he was hung for me. He continued beating and kicking me; the blood poured from my nose and mouth, and my eyes were nearly closed up, when I got to the window, which was broken, and threw up the sash. I called to the people below to save my poor child, and I threw it into the arms of a person in the street. I was hanging over the window, with my head and arms downwards, and quite helpless, when he beat me again with his fists, and deliberately lifted me up by the heels and threw me out of window, and I became insensible. I can recollect no more."

The poor woman would, doubtless, have been killed had she not been caught in her descent in the arms of the landlord of the house. Mr. Ingham, having expressed his sympathy with the suffering victim, and his loathing of the monster husband, regrets that he can do no more than sentence the wretch to six months' imprisonment with hard labor. He was sorry he could not commit the prisoner for twelve months. And wherefore could not the magistrate commit the ruffian for trial on a charge of attempted murder? He owned he would not be easy until hung for his victim; and straightway does his best to arrive at such condition of easy-mindedness, by throwing the woman out of the window into the street? If this be not attempted murder, what is? Shall it be necessary that Ann Rose be a corpse before she can wholly escape the homicidal hands of the wretch to whom, by the cruel inhumanity of the laws, she is to the end of her days joined and fettered? Though her flesh be beaten black, though her bones be broken, she is still flesh of the miscreant's flesh, still bone of the monster's bone. Six months pass, and the fellow, freed from gaol, may finally obtain his heart's content by murdering his victim, for such sweet satisfaction making up his mind to the passing inconvenience of the gallows. But wherefore should not the woman be assured protection by a lengthened sentence on the wretch thirsting for her blood? Can it be doubted, if Mr. Ingham had committed the fellow for trial on the just charge of attempted murder, that any jury could have failed to convict him? Any judge upon the bench have failed to transport him for the term of his unnatural life? We think not.

Mr. Ingham further said, in lamentation of his own limited powers of punishment, "If the legislature had supposed such a case as this could have arisen, it would have given the magistrates power to inflict twelve or eighteen months' imprisonment on such a cowardly and brutal ruffian as the prisoner." We wholly disagree from the magistrate; for the punishment of such ruffians the legislature has provided judge and jury, and life-long penal servitude. To the fullest and fellest intent George Rose is a murderer; the demon did his worst to spill the blood of his victim; and if her life-blood does not actually stain his hands, the attempt nevertheless stains his heart, and stamps his forehead with the mark of Cain. Yet Mr. Ingham thinks that twelve or eighteen months' imprisonment would be meet punishment for such a monster!

When will the sacredness of human emotions, the sanctity of human feelings rise to the social and legislative value of property? When will mere women, in social and legislative consideration, ascend to the worth of pocket handkerchiefs? Had Rose picked a pocket once, twice, thrice of a bandana, he might, on the third conviction, as a thief incorrigible, have been sentenced to fifteen years' transportation.—Whereas, he crowns fifteen years of brutality wreaked upon his wife, with a final attempt to murder her, and his punishment is six months' hard labor and six months' wholesome prison nutriment! The six months passed, the monster returns to his victim.

When will the wisdom of Parliament resolve itself into a committee for the Suppression of Cruelty to Women? We protect the household cat from ill-usage—but the wife is the allowed victim of the villain who owns her; his property upon whom he may inflict tortures—and still the property bears his mark. The church sanctifies the chattels as his goods, however he may outrage and desecrate God's fairest, tenderest work. Stop: there are exceptions Money makes all the difference.

If Ann Rose were Lady Ann Rose, it is mos likely that she could obtain separation and security from Sir George, duly purchaseable in the Ecclesiastical Court; but even then, as the law holds, she must still carry the links of the broken marriage chain—she is not set free, but is only rescued from the hateful domination of her destroyer; she must still be branded with his name; still revolt at the daily thought that her tyrant is still, nominally, her owner and her master.

Is not this a crying wickedness; a slander on our civilization? The sacred state of marriage is outraged by such conditions; and what should be the holiest ties of life are made as chains of brass, brass corroding.

LATER FROM EUROPE.

ARRIVAL OF THE ATLANTIC.

NEW YORK, October 18.—The Collins steamer Atlantic arrived at 8.30 this morning, with Liverpool dates to October 6th.

Sebastopol was certainly to be blown up by the Allies, and mines were being sunk for that purpose.

Gortschakoff's army was threatened by large forces of the allies from Eupatoria and Badair.

On the 29th of September, some Russians were defeated near Eupatoria, by French cavalry, with a loss of fifty killed and 105 prisoners; French loss six killed and twenty-seven wounded.

Gortschakoff reports that the third ineffectual movement had been made on his left flank.

A portion of the allied fleet sailed on a secret expedition, supposed to be for Nicolayef or Odessa. The Czar was at Odessa. He has issued an encouraging address to the Russian people.

A collision is anticipated between the Western Powers and the King of Greece, on account of the latter's Russian proclivities.

The food question is still serious in both France and Germany. The Bank of England had still further advanced its rates of discount 5 1-2 per cent.

The Allies have mounted a large number of mortars at Sebastopol, preparatory to bombarding the Russian position on the North side.

A new Danish Constitution has been promulgated at Copenhagen. Prince Ferdinand, uncle to the King, having refused his signature, was dismissed from the command of Zealand.

The Russians had captured a Turkish convoy at Kars, with provisions for the garrison, 1000 horses and 300 men.

The restrictions on the importation of salt into Russia had been abolished.

The revenue returns of Great Britain show an increase of 8,500,000 pounds sterling, owing chiefly to the additional income tax.

Lars still held out, but its provisions are nearly exhausted; it was anticipated, however, that the snow would compel the Russians to retire.

The Ericsson arrived at Southampton September 29th.

The correspondent of the London News says the Russians are making preparations for the evacuation of the North side.

Gortschakoff has published a hopeful address to his soldiers. He admits the loss of from 500 to 1,000 men per day, for the thirty days previous to the close of the siege; but says in conclusion, Sebastopol only enchained us to its walls—we are now free—a new war commences.

We learn that the Czar has left Nicoloff for the Crimea. Various Russian and Prussian accounts state that the war is to be carried on with the greatest determination, and that the Crimea is to be defended to the last extremity. Monavieff, who is now in Asia, will take the place of Prince Gortschakoff, who is to become Minister of War.

Moscow advices state that 193,000 men have been added to the military forces of Russia. A letter from St. Petersburgh states that the evening before the Emperor's departure for the South, a grand council was held, at which it was decided to carry on the war with the greatest energy. Accounts had been received from Constantinople to September 24th. 13,000 men of the Anglo-Turkish contingent forces had left for Varna, where they will take up their winter quarters.

The French cavalry defeated the Russian cavalry near Eupatoria and fifty of the latter were killed.

The Allies have placed 120 mortars on the North side of Sebastopol, but Gortschakoff telegraphs that they had not undertaken any movement up to the third.

The Czar says, his people shall shed the last drop of blood to maintain the integrity of the Empire, and that he will sacrifice every man rather than yield.

The Allies it is reported, demand as an indemnity for the expenses of the war, either the session of the Crimea, or the union of the Bessarabia to the Danubian Provinces.

Omar Pasha was concentrating 50,000 troops on the Asiatic frontier.

A St. Petersburg letter says, at a Council, at which the Emperor was present, it was determined to carry on the war with the utmost energy, and the Czar ordered Nesselrode to announce this determination to the Russian agents in foreign countries.

Gortschakoff is to be appointed Minister at War, and Gen. Mouravieff will assume the command of the army in the Crimea, and defend the Russian position to the last extremity.

LORD BROUGHAM WITH THE SPIRITS.

A circumstance which has excited the most extraordinary sensation among the privileged few who have been admitted within the sphere of its operations, has taken place at Ealing, a village on the Uxbridge-road. A young gentleman named Hume, a native of Scotland, but who has resided for many years in America, is now on a visit at the house of a Mr. Raymer, a highly respectable solicitor. Mr Hume is what the Americans term a medium, and through his instrumentality some extraordinary, and, if true, miraculous occurrences have taken place.

The spirits of deceased persons have been heard and felt in Mr. Raymer's house, and a variety of circumstances have taken place, which the persons who were present affirm could not have been produced except by supernatural agency. One of the spirits is supposed to be that of a son of Mr. Raymer, a little boy about eleven or twelve years of age, who has been induced to write to his parents under the cover of the table. and the writing is, to all appearances, precisely similar to that of the child when alive. Mr. Raymer, who is thoroughly convinced of the bona fide of the affair, has invited several persons to witness the manifestation, and among them the Rev. Mr. Lambert, the incumbent, who has become a devout believer in the existence of these communicative spirits.

Some rumors of the spirit manifestations having reached Lord Brougham, the medium had an interview with the noble and learned lord in the presence of Sir David Brewster, when several unaccountable revelations were made, and even Lord Brougham has confessed himself amazed and sorely bothered. to comprehend the description of agency by which an accordion was forced into his hands and made to play, or his watch taken out of his pocket and found in the hands of some other person in the room, for such are among the vagaries performed by the Ealing spirits. The house of Mr. Raymer is, of course, besieged by persons anxious to witness the manifestations, and scarcely a night passes that some scoffer is not converted into a true believer in the mystery of spiritual manifestations.

RUSSIAN SHIPS DESTROYED.

It may not be uninteresting at the present moment, to give a statement of the Russian fleet at Sebastopol previous to the invasion of the Crimea by the allies. It consisted of the following ships: —

Ships of the Line.	Guns.	Ships of the Line.	Guns.

Smaller vessels — The Nearch, Srella, Orlanda, Drolik, Ziabiaka, Lastorga, Smaglaga, 11, and sixty-four gun boats.

Steamers — Twelve, six large and six small. Among the first are the Vladimar, Bessarabia, and Gromnestetz, which were remarkable for their power and the range of their guns.

In all one hundred and eight sail, mounting two thousand two hundred guns. The existence of this imposing fleet continually threatened Turkey. Created at an immense cost, it has been destroyed without having achieved anything from the time of its building but the disgraceful murder of four thousand Turks at Sinope. Admiral Nachimoff, who commanded on that occasion, is dead. Never did ships meet with a more ignominious end — sunk by their commanders without a fight! — the admiral killed, with an unenviable reputation attached to his memory! — the crews shot down while working the guns of Sebastopol! This is a terrible blow for "Holy Russia!"

We are told sometime since that the vessels under water had been embalmed with pitch and tar, with a view of fishing them out again some day. If, therefore, it was considered by the enemy worth while to float them, the same rule applies to the allies, and we may yet see a Russian man-of-war at Portsmouth. We shall find the guns in the defensive works of Sebastopol, so that, with the exception of a few pair of spurs, which Russian naval officers are reported to wear, we might rig up a complete Muscovite craft, despite the sacrifices made to prevent getting hold of a trophy.

Poetical Department.

Press on and Hope the Best.

Should adverse skies appear to frown,
And dismal prospects loom,
Should ne'er success your efforts bless,
And all before engloom;
Though some arround should selfish prove,
And merciless the rest;
Though summer friends should cease to love,
Press on and hope the best.

Where's the use to yield the day
To every puny woe?
The really brave are ne'er subdued,
Though all the world's their foe;
No! show mankind your noble part
Can blunt the keenest test,
That greater stuff is in your heart,
And on and hope thebest.

To fools and cowards leave camplaint,
But strive and battle on;
The brightest crown is hardest earnt,
More pricely when 'tis won.
He is o'ercome who owns he's beat,
And feeble stands confessed,
He's sure to win who scorns defeat
And struggles for the best.

If times be bad, and men be hard,
'Twill do no good to sigh,
But tax your skill with greater will,
To make them better try;
They feel them worst who pining cursed
Admit themselves depressed,
And while they pine, those will be first
Who hope on for the best.

Talk not of fate, nor doom deplore,
Nor sink in sad repose,
The really great will make their fate,
Though all mankind oppose!
A vic'try bought instead of fought
Would lose its valued zest;
Then would you rise mean things despise,
And hope and gain the BEST!

G. S. L. City. J. HYDE, Jr.

From the St. Louis Intelligencer.

We have never known a time when political parties were so diversified as at present, in the United States; and thousands find it necessary, daily, to ask themselves, where shall we go?

A President of the Republic is to be elected next year; and the welfare of the country requires that he should be chosen on some national platform, which shall be acceptable to the patriotism of all sections of the Union.

Influenced soley by a desire to shape our course so as to sustain the best interests of the American people, we confess to a perplexity under present circumstances, which gives great anxiety. What is to be the National, Union, conservative party in the coming contest, is a question not easy to decide at present.

But a few months ago, the American party seemed to suit the occasion, to fit the crisis, and to meet exactly the wants of the country. It had originated in a political necessity which existed to reform abuses that had grown out of the treatment which naturalized citizens had received at the hands of the two old parties, who had alternately courted them until they had come to consider themselves a power in the State, and by their separate organizations, their foreign societies, their allegiance to a power above the constitution, had given sericus cause of alarm to the people of America. It was deemed right, by Americans, that they should retain the rule of their own country, and not tamely yield it to men who had been invited to an asylum, but had attempted to make it the theatre of ambition and insolence, intolerable to the rightful rulers of the country.

Hence originated the American Party; and the Platform put forth by the National Council at Philadelphia was national, conservative, patriotic. It infringed no rights of any class, in either section of the Union, but presented a basis on which we fondly hoped to see erected a power to fill the Presidential chair with the virtue, talents and experience required in 1856. That this great object is yet to be accomplised, we do not despair; but it is not to be disguised that events in the northern States are discouraging.

In Massachusetts, the American Party seems to be debauched, past all redemption, by a union with abolitionists, "Republicans," and other factions who are prepared to go into the Presidential contest on none other than sectional issues. The "fusionists," or "Republicans', as they dare to call themselves, have gone beyond all precedent in the plan which they have adopted of agitation on the slave question. They have abandoned the Missouri compromise, and no longer pretend to urge its restoration; but are preparing, on this one issue of slavery, and without a single national principle in their creed, to agitate a question which has no place legitimately in the party strifes of the country. The late convention in Worcester passed the following as part of their platform:

"As to the territories and future States, we know no geographical limits. We desire to see all the future States free, North and South. Secure free States of the South-west, and this will be no longer a geographical issue. Had our ancestors been true in 1820, there would have been free States at the South. Had this generation been true there would have been free States at the South. There may yet be free States at the South, if we are true hereafter. The Missouri Compromise made freedom and slavery geographical distinctions. That is now repealed. We accept the issue which that repeal forces upon us—slavery or freedom every where. Henceforth we recognize no geographical line. Our motto is, no North no South—freedom for all the territories. No new States, but free States, North or South."

There is no mistaking this. It means war on the South, and nothing else, and even boldly admits that the issue is "geographical"—the very kind of issue which WASHINGTON, in his farewell address, most solemnly counselled his countrymen against.—The New York Tribune, the leading organ of the factions, holds this language:

"There are some outside the new organization, but very few even pretending to favor it, who talk of the restoration of the Missouri Compromise line as its great object. We know no reason why that line should be re-established. In its origin, it was forced upon the free States against their deepest convictions and energetic struggles, by a combination of the all but unanimous South with a few Doughfaces from the North."

And it is with men who hold such views that the recent American Party of Massaehusetts has affiliated.

In New York, the American Party has retained the form of a seperate organization, and has nominated its own seperate ticket; but the Whigs have joined the one idea coalition of the "Republicans," and placed themselves on the geographical issue of the Massachusetts fusionists, abandoning every old Whig principle. In the confusion of parties, it is impossible to predict the results of the election in New York; but we fear that the American Party, while retaining its virtue, will find itself in that State powerless for good.

We have already adverted to the condition of things in Ohio, where the election will be held today. There factions have a combination in favor of the Chase ticket, which, we fear, will render the American Party as powerless as it will probably prove to be in New York.

In Pennsylvania, the Canal Commissioner is the only State officer to be elected to-day; but the Company which has joined the American Party is suspicious. It is manifest that many of the corrupt and broken down politicians of the State—men entirely destitute of all principle but love of office have crept into the American party, and are endeavoring to bring it into the Abolition Crusade.

What, then, are Americans to do? Where shall we go?

These questions were never so pressing, or so hard to answer, as now. The best policy, we believe, is for the party to stand on its own platform for some months yet, and observe the devolopments of the times. The skies may brighten. The adverse events of the past three months have been unexpected. The next three may bring changes for the better equally unexpected. And as there is no National Whig party—no Whig organizations in any State but Massachusetts—the relics of the old Whig party scattered throught the Union, may yet gather round the American standard, and give us strength enough to interpose for the safety of the country, with a candidate for President on our own national platform.

But if this does not happen—and the fusion, sectional, anti-Union, fanatical, one-idea "Republican" agitation goes on, there will be but one course left to all honest and patriotic men. At all hazards, this geographical party must be put down. To terminate this geographical war, there must be a union of all men who love their country, for some Presidential candidate of national principles, let him be nominated even by the Democracy. If the American Party has not the strength to rescue the country trom this sectional agitation, a party must be found that has. If the Democracy of the nation shall purge itself of Van Burenism in the North—of mobocracy in Missouri—and disunionism in the South—it may become national enough to combine vast strength. Unless it does so purify itself, the American party that sustains the Philadelphia platform, will be the only safe party for the nation.

THE NEWS FROM EUROPE.

POSITION OF THE ARMIES IN THE CRIMEA.

There is evidently some confusion and misstatement in the telegraphic account of the Canada's news; and it seems probable that the whole has reached us after being diluted and refracted by passage through a British medium. Up to the 26th of September, that is to say fifteen days after the capture of the city by the Allies, no decisive movement had taken place. The Allies were apparently possessing themselves quietly of the town, without serious molestation from the Russian forts on the north side: and the Russians were doing their best to strengthen their front on Sebastopol, and to extend their left wing on the Bakshiserai road. Some practice between the batteries had taken place, which proved that the guns on the north shore had a range extending completely over the city to the trenches of the late beseigers; but on the other hand, the French artillerymen felt confident of replying with good effects from Fort Nicholas. Four days before the last dispatch left, Gortschakoff an allied detachment advancing over the heights of Inkerman, drove in the pickets of the Russian centre; a skirmish ensued, which ended as usual in the retreat of the Russians behind their works. On the following day, Gortschakoff ascertained—what every one knew before—that a force of some 20,000 men had landed at Eupatoria, and doubtless reinforcing itself with all the men that could be spared from the Turkish garrison, had marched in a south-easterly direction, towards the Simpheropol and Bakshiseral road. Whether the telegraph blunders, or Gortschokofl, we shall shortly learn; it is pretty certain that he force detatched for the expedition from Eupatora must be nearer 40,000 than 20,000 men.

The position, therefore, is precisely what we supposed it would be, when the news of the capture of the town first came to hand. The Russians already think of falling back from the forts on the north side; but the allies, as prompt as they, press eagerly forward to cut off their retreat. By the first of October, supposing that no general action has taken place before that day, the allies will have completely surrounded Gortschakoff. In front they will press forward under cover of the Russian batteries they have taken, while every strong position on the road to Bakshiseriai will be occupied by the force marching from Eupatoria, and the detatchment which—as the Russian General remarked with so much anxiety on the 17th—has been reconnoitering the Baidir valley. Escape will be wholly impossible. To winter where he is will be equally impossible, for the allies will cut off every araba that attempts to reach him from the interior. There will be nothing for it but to fight. And unless the Russians show themselves better men in the field than they did at Alma, Inkerman and Traktir Bridge, there will be some chance of Prince Gortschakoff's visiting Paris this winter.

There are two sides to erery question, and doubtless some zealous Russo phile could give a brighter aspect to the Russian prospects. The attitude of the Czar and the Grand Duke does not look as though they anticipated so serious a disaster as the loss of their army. We have no information of the number of Russians who may lurk in the neighborhood of Simpheropol and Bakshiserai, nor whether the Eupatoria detatchment can succeed in occupying the northern road. Gortschakoff shows no signs of weakness; the present contingency must have been foreseen; and it is improbable that he has allowed himself to be caught without seeing a way out of the trap. Finally, if the Russians can fight at all, they will fight now: a love for surrendering has never been their fault. Still, allowing for all these circumstances, it cannot be denied that the prospects of the allied-army have never been so bright since they landed in the Crimea as they are at present.—[N. Y. Herald.

From the New Bedford Mercury.

WHAT IS THE CRIMEA.

Homer calls it the land of the Læsbrygonians, who were giants and ate men's flesh, and from whom the "much enduring" Ulysses escaped with some difficulty. The Crimea is also known to tragedy as Tauris, and the custom of sacrificing all strangers upon its altars, which then prevailed, shows that from the earliest ages it was a dangerous place for foreigners. Then it was called Cimmeria, the land of darkness To the sun-loving islanders of the Egean night and storm and eternal winter dwelt beyond the Euxine sea which only a few adventurous mariners dared to penetrate. Cimmeria! there is meaning in that name. It is only Crimea in its full development.—It was one of the halts of the Caucasian tribe in their first western migration. The Tartars (Scythians they were then called) drove them out, and on they went, these wandering Cimmerians. They called themselves Cimbri when they arrived in Europe.—A portion of them in Wales, with fantastic legends of the fall of Troy in their early and mythical history, are still known as the Cymbri, but they are the parents of all the race of the Celts; and now the invaders, English, French, Scotch and Irish, are only seeking their ancestral place, and making themselves at home after a tolerably long absence. They have found there the old Scythian tribe who ejected them. To be sure their former conquerors have not been in possession the whole time, nor very much of it. Little more in fact than half a century is it since they finally took it into their keeping; for, after driving out the Cimmerians, they (these Scychian Tartars) were themselves expelled; but they have come back and got the start of the original owners, who now, after near two thousand years, have just returned to look after the old homestead.

There is another little association with the Crimea that to us Americans is interesting. One John Smith, the John Smith, the adventurous Captain of Virginia, was also a warrior against the Turks or Tartars. He cut off several Moslem turbans with heads inside of them, but was unluckily captured and sold as a slave. He was carried up the Straits of Kertsch and into the Sea of Azof. Somewhere in the Crimea or thereabouts his captivity ceased. He killed his master, seized his horse and clothes, and rode for dear life and the nearest Russian post, at that time to him nearly synonymous ideas. He was kindly received, and passed along from one Muscovite station to another back to friends and civilization. With every step a new instalment of gratitude became due from him, which he duly discharged through his heirs and assigns; for he founded Virginia. Virginia one day, with her sister colonies, became the United States of America. England was at war with France and her own revolted colonies. The house of Bourbon and the house of Guelph had no leisure to look eastward. In fact, there was not an "Eastern question" at all. Catherine of Russia stepped in with her armies, and the Crimea was hers. France came to the rescue only too late. English country gentlemen were too full of the Middlesex election and the American war, the "no popery" riots and the national debt to think much of the schemes of the Czarina. Their Indian empire was but just beginning, and no Napoleon had taught them the value of the paschalik of Egypt to the overland route to the East. The fall of the Crimea was but the annexation of a barren Khanet, a revolted State of Turkey. The Austrian Empire could hardly have taken more interest in the annexation of Texas than England then did in the Crimean transfer to Russia, The seeds of future calamity are sown in silence. "The tempest is foretold by a little cloud no bigger than a man's hand" which comes out of the sea; but to-day the Crimea is the centre of the world's gaze, and what is now passing on its soil may be changing the whole visible current of affairs.

We have made, in the foregoing, large draughts on a very entertaining and able article in the North American for October.

Mustang Liniment and the Ladies.—In our opinion, nothing is above the comprehension of women; and with less prejudice, more liberality, and much keener perception than men, when a new idea is presented, a new doctrine taught, or a new fact asserted, she grasps it at once, and with the rapidity and clearness almost of instinct, decides upon its merits or truthfulness; and if her decision be favorable, she enthusiastically advocates and supports it. Thus the common saying has obtained—"Once get the women on your side and you are safe;" and we are happy to state that we have the ladies all in favor of the MUSTANG LINIMENT. They have tried it for caked breasts, sore nipples, sores, chafes, and burns on children, as well as for croup and mumps; also, for corns, tooth-ache, pains in the limbs and joints, sore eyes, eruptions, cuts and bruises, and they have always found it effectual—and they go about like angels, as they are, proclaiming it to their friends and to all they see or hear tell of, who are suffering. We have daily calls for it by persons who say such and such ladies recommended them to try it.

Go on ladies in your "good Samaritan" work, and thousands will bless you for your timely advice.

A FEW TESTIMONIALS.

PATH FINDER OFFICE, May 11, 1854.
G. W. WESTBROOK:—
Please send me by the bearer three large bottles of your Mexican Mustang Liniment, as I wish to take it up to my place in Vermont, not thinking it advisable to do without it. I have used it in my family and on my horses, and have found it invaluable. Yours,
J. T. WHITNEY.

BLIZABETHTOWN, TENN., May 25, 1855.
MR. G. W. WESTBROOK:—
Dear Sir—It affords me much pleasure in saying to you that the Mexican Mustang Liniment outsells any medicine that I have ever had for sale, and comes nearer doing what it promises to do. Send me another supply, as I am nearly out. Yours respectfully,
JOHN SINGLETRAY, P. M.

PHILADELPHIA, June 11, 1854.
MR. G. W. WESTBROOK:
Sir—My son was afflicted with a swelling upon the knee joint, which confined him to the house. I had a doctor attending him for some time, but he did not do him any good. One of my neighbors told me to use the Mustang Liniment. I asked the doctor if I could do so, and he told me he thought I could not do better.
I procured one bottle, and in about a week he was able to go out. I can safely recommend it to the afflicted.
Respectfully yours, MRS. BENNETT.

W. S. Ladd & Co., of Portland, Oregon, writes that there is an immense demand for the Mexican Mustang Liniment in that country, and orders forty gross to be shipped by Golden Gate, that sails in a few days from New Yook.

Park & White of San Francisco, California, order 100 gross, to be forwarded by first clipper for that port.

PORT AU PRINCE, HAYTI, Jan. 16th, 1854.
I had the pleasure to receive invoice and boxes Mexican Mustang Liniment per Croton, and have no doubt it will have a brisk sale on the island.
GEORGE RACKSTER.

To give health, strength and elacity to the limbs, there is nothing can equal in effect, the
MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT.
FARMERS AND LIVERY STABLE KEEPERS
have need it for the following diseases with extraordinary success, certifying invariably to the efficacy of the Liniment, and the truthfulness of our assertions in its behalf:
Spavin, Splint, Ring-bone, Fistula, Wind Galls, Big Head, Bruises, Strains, String-halt, Scratches, Cracked Heels, Sweney, Saddle, Collar, or Harness Galls, Hard Lumps or Tumor, Film, or other diseases of the Eye, Poll-Evil, &c.
The small sizes retail for 25 cents per bottle;
The medium size retail for 50 cents per bottle;
The large sizes retail for one dollar per bottle.
The medium holds three times as much as the small;
The Large holds nearly three times as much as the medium,
Therefore the large bottles are the cheapest.

FALL OF SEBASTOPOL.

DETAILS OF THE ASSAULT.

FOURTH DIVISION CAMP, Sept. 10, 1855.

One more great act of courage has been added to the tremendous but glorious tragedy of which the whole world, from the most civilized nations down to the most barbarous hordes of the East, has been the anxious and excited audience. Amid shouts of victory and cries of despair—in frantic rejoicing and passionate sorrow—a pall of black smoke, streaked by the firery flashings of exploding fortresses descends upon the stage on which has been depicted so many varied traits of human misery and human greatness, such high endurance and calm courage, such littleness and weakness, across which have stalked characters which history may develop as large as the struggle in which they were engaged, and swell to gigantic proportions, or which she may dwarf into pettiest dimensions, as unworthy of the part they played. A dull, strange silence, broken at distant intervals by the crash of citadels and palaces as they fly into dust, succeeds the innocent dialogue of the cannon which have spoken so loudly and so angrily throughout an entire year, and tired armies, separated from each other by a sea of fires, rest on their arms and gaze with varied emotions on all that remains of the object of their conflicts.

On the morning of Saturday, Sept. 8, the weather changed suddenly, becoming bitterly cold. A biting wind right from the North side of Sebastopol blew intolerable clouds of harsh dust into our faces. The sun was obscured; the sky was of a leaden wintry gray. Gen. Pelissier during the night collected about 30,000 men about the Mamelon to form the storming columns for the Malakoff and Little Redan and to provide the necessary reserves. The French were re-enforced by 5,000 Sardinians, who marched up from the Chernaya last night. It was arranged that the French should attack the Malakoff at noon, and as soon as their attack began we were to assault the Redan.

At 10 1-2 the second division and the light division moved down to the trenches, and were placed in the advanced parallels as quietly and unostentatiously as possible. About the same hour Gen. Simpson and staff moved down to the second parallel of the Green Hill battery. Sir Henry Jones, too ill to move hand or foot, nevertheless insisted on being carried down to witness the assault, and was borne to the confines on a litter, in which he remained till all was over. It was, as I have said, a bitter cold day, and a stranger would have been astonished at the aspect of the British generals as they viewed the assault. The Commander-in-chief, Gen. Simpson, sat in the trench with his nose and eyes just facing the cold and dust, and his cloak drawn up over his head to protect him against both. Gen. Jones wore a red night cap, and reclined on his litter; and Sir Henry Airey, the quartermaster-general had a white pocket-handkerchief tied over his cap and ears, which detracted somewhat from a martial and belligerent aspect.

The Duke of Newcastle was stationed at Cathcart's hill in the early part of the day, and afterward moved off to the right to the picket-house over the Woronzoff road. All the amateurs and gentlemen, who rather abound here just now, were in a state of great excitement, and dotted the plain in eccentric attire—which recalled one's old memoirs of Cowes, and yachting and sea-bathing—were engaged in a series of subtle maneuvres to turn the flank of unwary sentries, and to get to the front, and their success was most creditable to their enterprise and ingenuity. The Tartars, Turks and Eupatorians were singularly perturbed for such placid people, and thronged every knoll which commanded the smallest view of the place. At 10 3-4, Gen. Pelissier and his staff went up to the French observatory on the right. The French trenches were crowded with men as close as they could pack, and we could see our men through the breaks in the clouds of dust, which were most irritating, already in their trenches.

A few minutes before 12 o'clock, the French, like a swarm of bees, issued forth from the trenches close to the doomed Malakoff, swarmed up its face, and were through the embrasures in the twinkling of an eye. They crossed the seven metres of ground which separated them from the enemy at a few bounds—they drifted as lightly and quickly as autumn leaves before the wind, battalion after battalion, into the embrasures, and in a minute or two after the head of their column issued from the ditch, the tri-color was floating over the Kornikoff bastion. The musketry was very feeble at first—indeed our allies took the Russians quite by surprise, and very few of the latter were in the Malakoff; but they soon recovered themselves, and from 12 o'clock till 7 in the evening, the French had to meet and defeat the repeated attempts of the enemy to regain the work and the Little Redan, when, weary of the fearful slaughter of his men, who lay in thousands over the exterior of the works, the Muscovite general, despairing of success, withdrew his exhausted legions, and prepared with admirable skill to evacuate the place.

Of the French attack on the left I know nothing, but that, if intended in earnest, it was not successful, and was followed by some loss to our allies. As soon as the tri-color was observed waving over the parapet of the Malakoff through the smoke and dust, four rockets were sent up from Chapman's attack, one after another, as a signal for our assault on the Redan. They were almost borne back by the violence of the wind, and the silvery jets of sparks they threw out on exploding, were nearly invisible against the raw gray sky.

It was a few minutes after 12 when our men left the fifth parallel. The musketry commenced at once, and in less than five minutes, during which the troops had to pass over about thirty yards from the nearest approach to the parapet of the Redan, they had lost a large proportion of their officers, and were deprived of the aid of their leaders, with the exceptions I have stated.

The riflemen advanced admirably, but from their position they could not do much to reduce the fire of the guns on the flanks and below the re-entering angles. As they came near, the enemy's fire became less fatal. They crossed the abattis without difficulty; it was torn to pieces and destroyed by our shot, and the men stepped over and through it with ease. The light division made straight for the salient and projecting angle of the Redan, and came to the ditch which is here about fifteen feet deep.—The party detailed for the purpose placed the ladders, but they were found to be too short. However, had there been enough of them, that would not have mattered much, but some had been left behind in the hands of the dead or wounded men, and others had been broken, so that if one can credit the statement of those who were present, there was not more than six or seven ladders at the salient. The men, led by their officers, leaped into the ditch and scrambled up the other side, whence they got up the parapet almost without opposition, for the few Russians who were in front ran back and got behind their traverses and breastworks as soon as they saw our men on the top, and opened fire upon them.

As the light division rushed out in the front they were swept by the guns of the Barrack battery and by several pieces on the proper right of the Redan, loaded heavily with grape, which caused them considerable loss ere they reached the salient or apex of the work at which they were to assault. The storming columns of the second division issuing out of the fifth parallel rushed up immediately after the light division, but when they came up close to the apex, Brigadier Windham very judiciously brought them by a slight detour on the right flank of the light division, so as to come a little down on the slope of the proper left face of the Redan. The first embrasure to which they came was in flames, but moving on to the next, the men leaped into the ditch, and with the aid of ladders and each other's hands, scrambled up on the other side, climbed the parapet, or poured in through the embrasure which was undefended. Col. Windham was the first, or one of the first, men in on this side, and with him entered Daniel Mahoney, a great grenadier of the forty-first. As Mahony entered, with a cheer, he was shot through the head by a Russian rifleman, and fell dead across Col. Windham.

As our men entered through the embrasures, the few Russians who were between the salient and the breastwork retreated behind the latter, and got from the traverse to its protection. From it they poured in a quick fire on the parapet of the salient, which was crowded by the men of the light division, and on the gaps through the inner parapet of the Redan; and our men, with an infatuation which all officers deplore, but cannot always remedy on such occasions, began to return the fire of the enemy without advancing or crossing behind the traverses, loaded and fired as quickly as they could, but did little execution, as the Russians were well covered by the breastwork. There were also groups of Russian riflemen behind the lower traverses, near the base of the Redan, who kept up a galling fire on our men. As the alarm of the assault was spread, the enemy came rushing up from the barracks in the rear of the Redan, and increased the force and intensity of their fire, while our soldiers dropped fast, and encouraged the Russians by their immobility and the weakness of their fusilade, from which the enemy were well protected. In vain the officers, in voice and act, by example and daring, tried to urge our soldiers on. They had an impression that the Redan was all mined, and that if they advanced they would all be blown up.

The officers fell on all sides, singled out for the enemy's fire by their courage. The men of the different regiments became mingled together in inextricable confusion. The 19th men did not care for the orders of the officers of the 88th, nor did the soldiers of the 23d heed the commands of an officer who did not belong to their regiment. The officers could not find their men—the men had lost sight of their own officers. All the brigadiers save Col. Windham were wounded or rendered unfit for the guidance of the attack. That gallant officer did all that man could do to form his men for the attack, and lead them against the enemy. Proceeding from traverse to traverse, he coaxed the men to come out, and succeeded several times in forming a few of them, but they melted away as fast as he laid hold of them, and either fell in their little ranks or retired to cover to keep up their fusilade. Many of them crowded to lower parts of the inner parapet and kept up a smart fire on the enemy, but nothing would induce them to come out into the open space and charge the breastwork. This was all going on at the proper left face of the Redan, while nearly the same scene was being repeated at the salient.

Every moment our men were diminishing in numbers, while the Russians came up in swarms from the town, and rushed down from the Malakoff, which had now been occupied by the French. Thrice did Col. Windham send officers to Sir W. Codrington, who was in the fifth parallel begging of him to send up supports in some order of formation; but all these three officers were wounded as they passed from the ditch of the Redan to the rear, and the Colonel's own aid-de-camp, Lieut. Swire of the seventeenth, a gallant young officer, was hit dangerously in the hip as he went on his perilous errand. Supports were, indeed, sent up, but they came up in disorder from the fire to which they were exposed on their way, and arrived in driblets only to increase the confusion and the carnage. Finding that he could not collect any men on the left face, Col. Windham passed through one of the cuts of the inner parapet, and walked over to the right face, at the distance of thirty yards from the Russian breastwork, to which he moved in a parallel line, exposed to a close fire, but, wonderful to say, without being touched.

The Colonel got some riflemen and a few of the 88th together; but no sooner had he brought them out than they were killed, wounded, or dispersed by a concentrated fire. The officers, with the noblest devotion, aided Col. Windham, and became the special marks of the enemy's riflemen. The narrow neck of the salient was to close to allow of any kind of formation, and the more the men crowded into it the more they got out of order, and the more they suffered from the enemy's fire. This miserable work lasted for an hour. The Russians were now in dense masses behind the breastwork, and Col. Windham walked back across the open space to the left to make one more attempt to retrieve the day. The men on the parapet of the salient, who were firing on the Russians, sent their shot at him, and the latter, who were pouring volley after volley on all points of the head of the work, likewise directed their muskets against him, but he passed through this cross fire in safety, and got within the inner parapet on the left, where the men were becoming thinner and thinner.

A Russian officer now stepped over the breastwork, and tore down a gabion with his own hands; it was to make room for a field-piece. Col. Windham exclaimed to several soldiers who were firing over the parapet: "Well, as you are so fond of firing, why don't you shoot that Russian?" They fired a volley and missed him, and soon afterward the field-piece began to play on the head of the salient with grape. Col Windham saw there was no time to be lost. He had sent three officers for reinforcements, and, above all, for men in formation, and he now resolved to go to Gen. Codrington.—Seeing Capt. Crealock of the ninetieth near to him busy in encouraging his men, and exerting himself with great courage and energy to get them in order, he said: "I must go to the General for supports. Now mind, let it be known, in case I am killed, why I went away." He crossed the parapet and ditch, and succeeded in gaining the fifth parallel through a storm of grape and rifle bullets in safety.

Sir William Codrington asked him if he really thought he could do anything with such supports as he could afford, and said he might take the Royals, who were then in the parallel. "Let the officers come out in front; let us advance in order, and if the men keep their formation the Redan is ours," was the Colonel's reply; but he spoke too late—for at that very moment our men were seen leaping down into the ditch, or running down the parapet of the salient, and through the embrasures out of the work into the ditch, while the Russians followed them with the bayonet, and with heavy musketry, and even threw stones and grapeshot at them as they lay in the ditch. The fact was, that the Russians having accumulated several thousands of men behind the breastwork, and seeing our men all scattered up and confused behind the inner parapet of the traverse, crossed the breastwork, through which several field-pieces were now playing with grape on the inner face of the Redan, and charged our broken groups with the bayonet, at the same time that the rear ranks, getting on the breastwork, poured a heavy hail of bullets on them over the heads of the advancing column.

The struggle that took place was short, desperate and bloody. Our soldiers, taken at every disadvantage, met the enemy with the bayonet too, and isolated combats took place in which the brave fellows who stood their ground had to defend themselves against three or four adversaries at once. In this melee, the officers, armed only with their swords, had little chance; nor had those who carried pistols much opportunity in using them in such a rapid contest. They fell like heroes, and many a gallant soldier with them. The bodies of English and Russians, locked in an embrace which death could not relax, but had rather cemented all the closer, lay next day inside the Redan as evidence of the terrible animosity of the struggle. But the solid weight of the advancing mass, urged on and fed each moment from the rear by company after company and battalion after battalion, prevailed at last against the isolated and disjointed band who had abandoned the protection of unanimity and courage and had lost the advantage of discipline and obedience.

As though some giant rock had advanced into the sea and forced back the waters that buffeted it, so did the Russian columns press down against the spray of soldiery which fretted their edge with fire and steel, and contended in vain against their weight. The struggling band was forced back by the enemy, who moved on crushing friend and foe beneath their solid tramp, and bleeding, panting, and exhausted, our men lay in heaps in the ditch beneath the parapet, sheltered themselves behind stones and in bomb craters in the slope of the work, or endeavored to pass back again to our advanced parallel and sap, and had to run the gauntlet of a tremendous fire. Many of them lost their lives or were seriously wounded in this attempt. The scene in the ditch was appalling, although some of the officers have assured me that they and the men were laughing at the precipitation with which many brave and gallant fellows did not hesitate to plunge headlong upon the mass of bayonets, muskets, and sprawling soldiers.

The ladders were all knocked down or broken, so that it was difficult for the men to get up at the other side, and the dead, the dying, the wounded, and the sound, were all lying in heaps together. The Russians came out of the embrasures, plied them with stones, grape-shot, and the bayonet, but were soon forced to retire by the fire of our batteries and riflemen, and under cover of this fire many of our men escaped to the approaches. In some instances the enemy persisted in remaining outside in order to plunder the bodies of those who were lying on the slope of the parapet, and paid the penalty of their rashness in being stretched beside their foes; but others came forth on a holier errand, and actually brought water to our wounded. If this last act be true, it is but right to discredit the story that the Russians placed our wounded over the magazine in the rear of the Redan, near the barrack battery, ere they fired it—the only foundation for which, as far as I can discover, is, that many of the bodies of our men found in the Redan, were dreadfully scorched and burned; but there were many Russians lying there in a similar state.

Our attack lasted about an hour and three quarters, as well as I could make out, and in that time we lost more men than at Inkerman, where the fighting lasted for seven hours.

It is difficult, as I have had occasion to observe on former occasions, to give with any pretensions to accuracy the details of a battle, but it becomes almost impossible to attain correctness in describing such an affair as the assault on the Redan under the peculiar circumstances which attended it. In addition to the smoke of battle, there were flying clouds of dust mingled with sand, which blew right in the faces of the men and swept the hills in their rear, which were crowded with spectators, or those who tried to be so, and the irregularity of the ground offered other impediments to their view; but greater than all these obstacles was this, that no one could, from any conceivable position in front see what was going on inside the Redan, which seemed to engulf our soldiers in its huge dun-colored and ragged parapets only to vomit them forth again in diminished numbers.

It was all along but too plain to understand what was taking place within from the external aspect of that ill-fated work, the slopes of which have astonished the world with the sight of British troops in flight twice in two successive attacks on its formidable defenses. This Redan has cost us more lives than the capture of Badajoz, not to speak of those who have fallen in the trenches and approaches to it; and, although the enemy evacuated it, we can scarcely claim the credit of having caused them such loss that they retired, owing to their dread of a renewed assault. On the contrary, we must, in fairness admit that the Russians maintained their grip of the place till the French were fairly established in the Malakoff, and the key of the position was torn from their grasp.

They might, indeed, have remained in the place longer than they did, as the French were scarcely in a condition to molest them from the Malakoff with artillery, and could not be permitted to interfere with our attack had they been able to send reinforcements to us; but the Russian General is a man of too much genius and experience as a soldier to lose men in defending an untenable position, and his retreat was effected with masterly skill and with perfect ease in the face of a victorious enemy.—Covering his rear by the flames of a burning city, and by tremendous explosions, which spoke in tones of portentous warning to those who might have wished to cut off his retreat, he led his battalions in narrow files across a deep arm of the sea, commanded by our guns and in the face of a most powerful fleet, paraded them in our sight as they crossed, and carried off all his most useful stores and munitions of war. He left us few trophies and many bitter memories.

JAMES GORDON BENNETT.

The position held by this man is altogether anomalous. He is rich, yet he has no friends. He wields a certain (destructive) power, but he has no party, and belongs to no set. He may make the tour of a crowded opera-house, or walk down a long street, and meet with no recognition. He is universally cut; universally disliked and extensively read. He has not a particle of talent, nor the least smattering of knowledge, nor any pretense to principle or serious opinion; yet he has held the position for twenty years of a leading public instructor; and all the talent, knowledge, and principal of this community, leagued together for the express purpose of putting him down, could not shake him in his position. At this very time when he had to withdraw his boy from a New York school because so many of the other boys spent their leisure moments in tormenting him, the Herald was to be found in every bar-room, in every reading-room, and in one half of the drawing-rooms in the city. We know of no individual who has held a position in any community like that of James Gordon Bennett in this.

The lately published biography of this singular person is a very tedious production, and adds scarcely anything to our knowledge of his career.—He was a poor low born, Catholic Scotch boy, of whose early life little is known, except that he was obstinate and wilful, and ran away from school.—He came to America in his twentieth year, landing at Halifax. For many years he was very poor and perfectly unknown. He taught school at Halifax, but with small success. He made his way to Boston, and after living for some time on the brink of starvation, obtained a situation as proof reader in a printing office. In the hope of bettering his fortune he removes to New York; tries to get up a school, but fails; tries to procure employment in the press, but cannot. He gets an engagement on a Charleston paper, and removes to that city, where he resides for a short time. Coming back to New York, he struggles long with poverty, attempts again to get employment in teaching, delivers lectures, writes for the papers, sets up a paper of his own—the New York Courier—which fails immediately. Years pass on in these fruitless efforts to to get his head above water, during which he acquires some reputation in New York as an unscrupulous writer for the press. In 1829 he was one of the editors of the Courier and Enquirer, and he retained that situation for three years. He then established a two cent paper called the Globe, which lingered one month and then died. Removing to Philadelphia he became a partner in the Pennsylvanian, in which capacity he became so unpopular that he was obliged to retire, and returned to New York.

But fortune was about to turn. In 1835 he began the publication of the Herald. He had scarcely any capital, no credit, no friends no party. But he had learned his trade, and he knew his public. His object was to have in every number something that would make people talk about the Herald—something outrageously impudent or silly, or obscure or abusive. No subject was sacred, for he believed nothing; no man was safe, for he had no friends. He always had the knack of making his readers laugh, and the floating population of a rich commercial town are a foolish people, and can be made to laugh very easily. The trick succeeded. People bought the Herald "just to see what the fellow had to say," and the Herald flourished. As his means increased he made extraordinary endeavors to get early and full intelligence, and to procure lively reports of local events. By incessantly issuing extras, he associated in the public mind the idea of news with the name of the Herald, and for a long time it was generally believed that he who would have the news must necessarily take the Herald. The editor kept before his mind one object, to get matter for his paper which people would read with avidity, and be sure to talk about. He never advocated any beneficent measure. He has never published an able editorial. He has never taken part in any honorable encounter. He has never originated a suggestion for the public good. His paper has had the single object of increasing its own circulation.

Verily, it has had its reward. The editor has been cowhided, we know not how many times, but the Herald has continued to prosper. He is as friendless as ever, but the number of his subscribers is great.

We cannot blame this poor man as he is generally blamed. It is a law of affairs, that whatever the public want to buy, some one will appear who is willing to sell it. We blame chiefly the public, whose low taste made the Herald possible and saleable. True it is no longer read by respectable people. It is now merely the great recognized organ of the bar-room interest. But fifteen years ago it was read by everybody, and it then obtained that pecuniary strength which, in the case of a newspaper, is so hard to attain, and so difficult to diminish. The power of the Herald is chiefly a reminiscence. But it is still the most profitable newspaper in the Union. That is the case, let us take blame to ourselves, and bestow some pity upon the lonely unhappy man, who wanting the ability to serve the public, was fain, in order to save himself from starvation, to prey upon the public.

He has succeeded in his object. He is sixty-eight years old. His head is white with age. His name is known to every human being in the country, and he has all the means of enjoyment in his power. But is there an honest, self-respecting laborer who would change places with him. "Nature" says Carlyle, "when her scorn of a slave is divinest, and blazes like the blinding lightining against his slavehood, often enough flings him a bag of money, silently saying, "That! Away; thy doom is that!"—[Life Illustrated.

Female Life among the Mormons.

Among the greatest humbugs of the day, is a romance called "Female life among the Mormons," which has been twice advertised in the St. Louis Republican during the last two months. Not as a simple advertisement, but as a literary review. A Catholic journal in the East after reviewing this precious literary production, said: "It is evidently a lie from cover to cover." The Republican of Sunday last says: "It is not to be regarded as strictly veracious." But no matter, the greater the lie the more voraciously is it swallowed by this Christian generation. And if it be not strictly true, where's the difference so long as it affords a good picking for pious Editors, and other long faced Christian hypocrites? "It is not to be regarded as strictly true, though doubtless every fact mentioned is equalled by daily realities," says the Republican. Whoever penned the above must be a stupid blockhead, if he is possessed of reasoning faculties, which is doubtful, he would certainly be pronounced "not guilty" of using them, if he should be charged with that offence before any intelligent jury. If the book is evidently "a lie from cover to cover," and is not to be regarded as strictly veracious, as he himself informs us, what in the name of common sense does he mean by saying in the same sentence, "doubtless every fact mentioned is equalled by daily realities?" Does he mean that every outrageous lie in this lying book is equalled by realities that occur daily in the Christian cities of America and Europe? If so we endorse the sentiment, believing honestly that there has never been a charge brought against the Mormons, however false, monstrous and devilish, but may be charged directly and sustained against their Christian persecutors.

The literary notice we have referred to commences thus: "We should be exceedingly glad if the controversy between the entire decent portion of Christendom and Mormondom could be settled by the publication of books, but no such hope cheers us." Our friends will smile at the above sentence, and will naturally enquire where any decent portion of Christendom is located? Let Christendom and decency be contrasted, and no Harlequin could represent a more perfect burlesque. We have traveled in the largest, the most polished and most Christian nations of the earth, and have resided in the most devout and sanctimonious cities of Europe and our own land, and are fully convinced that the decency of Christendom is as black as hell, and deceitful as the devil; and notwithstanding its white robes, long prayers, and missionary labors, it is full of corruption, putridity and uncleanness; and if the founder of the Christian religion should speak to his pseudo followers, he would say "ye are as painted sepulchers, fair to look upon, but full of dead mens bones." And to those who profess to be his ministers he would say, "you are truly zealous to make a proselyte, but when you have made one, he is two fold more the child of hell than before; for instead of being teachers, you have need to be taught the first principles of the doctrines of Christ."

The writer despairs of seeing the controversy between Christendom and Mormondom settled by books; and well he may, for many thousands of books have been published with the view of checking the rise and progress of Mormondom, and have so manifestly failed in their mission, that 'tis not surprising that he has lost confidence in the efficacy of anti-Mormon books. And who will be surprised when those books are pronounced by disinterested witnesses and judges, to be an evident lie from beginning to end? The writer is so far disgusted with the lying book he recommends, and the policy of publishing expositions of Mormonism with any chance of staying its progress, and destroying its power, that he says wildly in conclusion: "We have read it with some interest, and probably those who buy it will find it worth the money. But our own judgment is that we want no more books on the subject, but an army of twenty-five thousand men who shall be sent to sustain the officers of the United States Government, in an entire remodeling of the Territory." This would certainly be the greatest burlesque ever enacted in the reign of Christendom, and one from which she would never recover in this world nor the world to come. Twenty-five thousand soldiers to remodel a model Government, the writer of such trash and monstrous balderdash, is a fit subject for a Maison de fous. A madman would not fling his firebrands with more recklessness, than the mad-brained writer of the article from which we have quoted. What have the people of Utah done that twenty thousand soldiers should be sent to ride rough shod over them? If our Christian friends imagine that twenty-five thousand soldiers couldforce the free born citizens of Utah to sacrifice their wives, sisters and daughters, to the beastly lusts of a corrupt soldiery, they will find themselves miserably mistaken, and those who try it shorter by a caput. For the word has gone forth from him who will not lie, that if the United States troops shall play again the game they played last winter in Utah, they shall pay the penalty with their lives, and all the people said amen. It is therefore advisable that our editorial confreres should persuade Uncle Sam to quarter his troops where their beastiality and licentiousness will go unpunished; that is, in any portion of the United States but in Utah, for there truth will be laid to the line, and righteousness to the plummet, as sure as the Lord lives; and the transgressors of the laws of righteousness will be cut off.

The writer says, moreover: "We feel no special virtuous indignation against Mormonism, and its lecherous Priesthood; nor do we feel any special sympathy for the people who have been deluded into a sacrifice of themselves upon the altar of such a beastly religious faith. The men seem to be devoid of principle in everything, and the women to be no better than they should be." We have no hesitation in saying the writer of the above is either a stupid ignoramus, or a wilful liar; and which ever he may be he is devoid of that, he depreciates and ignores in others. Does not every sensible man know that there are thousands of men in Utah whose honor and integrity have never been impeached? Whose principles of virtue, honor and integrity are as high above the principles of the aristocracy of St. Louis, New York, and Washington, as the highest heavens are above the earth? How then, can such a groundless charge be heard without a rising indignation in our bosom against the unprincipled calumniator.

We do not charge these outrageous statements, which we have quoted from the Republican, against its editors, for their whole course towards us as a people, has been gentlemanly and honorable. We have moreover too high an opinion of their intelligence and honest candor, to think they would knowingly prostitute their valuable paper to so base a purpose as that implied in the article we have quoted from. It must either have been written by some crasy reporter, or was furnished by Messrs Bushnell & Edwards, who are said to have sold already three hundred copies of this immaculate lie, and can therefore well afford to advertise and publish their clap-trap concerning it; in either case it might be slipped in unknown to the editors. We are the more ready to put this charitable construction upon it, because it is the first article we have ever seen in the Republican that could be considered rabidly Anti-Mormon. We, therefore, hope it was a mistake, but we shall see.

The Cherokee Mission.

The Cherokee Missionaries left this City on Wednesday, 24th October, in fine health and spirits. Elder Case was chosen Captain; who appointed Elder William Bricker, Chaplain; Henry Eyring, was appointed General Clerk and Reporter; Elder James Kenney, Teamster. It was gratifying to witness the cheerful countenances and willing disposition of these, our Brethren, to go forth into the vineyard to assist in building up the Kingdom of God. Our prayers and blessings shall go with them, and the blessings of all faithful Saints. And we pray God, the Eternal Father, to open up their way and give them the confidence of the sons and daughters of Israel unto whom they are sent, that they may accomplish a work in the midst of that people, that will cause the Heavens to rejoice because of them, and their Brethren to exclaim: "Well done, good and faithful servants."

Extract of a letter from Hon. J. C. Haight.

We are in receipt of a letter from Elder J. C. Haight dated Ceder City, Utah August 9th, from which we extract the following: we have had to suspend operations of the Iron works for the last three weeks on account of the haying and harvest, as every one wanted to secure a little hay (which is very light) and their grain. We are doing a little this week to finish our castings, and as soon as we can get fuel to warant it, we shall start the furnace to get out iron to make the engine, which I am in hopes we shall accomplish this winter, and have it ready for operation in the spring. The getting of coal is a slow business, two teams have come and they are trying to get hay to sustain themselves, I can hear of no others coming as yet.

Our wheat is a middling crop. Water has been scarce as we have had no rains lately, the creek is low.

Our Election came off on the 6th inst and John M. Bernhisel is returned as delegate to Congress, George A. Smith councelor to the Legislature.—J. C. Haight and Jesse N. Smith Representatives G. C. Pendelton, County Recorder, brother Martineau was run at Parowan for county Recorder, but lost by forty-two votes. Every thing is moving along quietly as far as I know. The Indians are peacable, quite a number of the Paravantes have come here to get something to eat—as the crops are all destroyed north as far as Springville. Many are coming from Parowan to get wheat. The scale is turned.

MINUTES OF A MEETING

Of Missionaries and Elders held in the Church office, Tuesday afternoon, October 23d, 1855.

Meeting opened by singing, and prayer by Elder J. Powell.

The President stated that as the brethren about to go on missions were present, he wished to settle all unsettled business.

It was motioned and carried that Elder James Brooks act as clerk of the meeting.

The President said that as Elder Amos Gustin, a missionary from Canada was present, he would like to hear from him concerning his late mission. Elder Gustin said that in the British Provinces of North America the people did not seem to care about being preached to, and in all respects it was a hard place for an Elder to travel in, unless he had plenty of money to pay for a house to preach in, and pay his own expences; he also said he had filled his mission to the best of his ability and was now on hand to go on a mission wherever the Presidency thought fit to send him.

The President proposed that Elder Gustin take a mission to Mormon Grove to assist Elder James McGaw, and to take charge of the Saints in that region of country, in Elder McGaw's absence, as he would probably be in St. Louis shortly. Carried.

The President then called on Elder Howell, from Keokuk, who was present, and could speak the Welsh language, to give his feelings about taking a mission.

Elder Howell said he was on hand to go any where the Presidency saw proper to send him.

It was therefore moved and seconded that Elder Howell be appointed a special mission to seek up the Welsh Saints scattered through the Mississippi valley, and also cheer up and encourage any English Saints he might find in his travels. Carried.

The President then called upon Elder J. Clinton to give any counsels and instructions, or speak upon any subject he had on his mind.

Elder Clinton spoke at some length, giving some most excellent and useful instructions to the young brethren going out on missions, showing them how they should act, in order that they may gain the esteem and confidence of the Nation they were going unto. He said that the mission that they were engaged in was a great and glorious one, and the day was not far distant when numbers of that people would obey the gospel. He exhorted the brethren to make themselves familiar with the instructions contained in the Book of Doctrine and Covenants.

The President then called upon Elder J. Banks to address the meeting. Elder Banks said he did not see that he could do more than bear testimony to the excellent instructions that Elder Clinton had just given, which he most heartily endorsed, and exhorted the brethren to give dilligent heed unto them.

Elder Hart said there was one item of business that had slipped his memory at the Conference, that had been more or less upon his mind ever since, and he felt to bring it forward now. It was that Elder John Powell, a member of the High Council, go on a mission to Calhoun Co., Illinois. There being a branch of the church in that country that required an experienced Elder among them, to set in order and regulate all things pertaining to the interests of the church in this place. It was therefore motioned that Elder John Powell take a mission to Calhoun Co., to set in order and regulate the church in that region of country, with the liberty to return as soon as he had straightened up all things there, and had performed the mission unto which he was called. Carried.

Elder Powell expressed his willingness to undertake the mission appointed him, and to execute the same in righteousness according to his ability.

The President said that Elder Case would be authorized to receive tithing in the Cherokee Nation, as well as Elder A. M. Miller, the President of that mission. Elder J. S. Lees in Texas, and Elder Powell in the region of country to which he was appointed.

Elder Case was nominated to take charge of the little company of Elders appointed to the Cherokee Nation, until they report themselves to Elder Miller at Grand Saline. The brethren expressed their satisfaction in the appointment, and their willingness to sustain the same.

Elders Powell, Flavel, Howell, Gustin and Windley, were then set apart to their various missions and appointments under the hands of Elders Clinton, Banks and Hart.

The President stated that any of the brethren that were going away, and wished to make a few brief remarks had the liberty to do so, which opportunity many of the brethren embraced, stating their willingness to do all in their power to assist to build up this kingdom, and roll on the work of God.

After a few closing remarks by the President, the meeting dismissed by singing, "Go ye messengers of Glory," and prayer by Elder Clinton.

TYPO.

Our Alton correspondent wishes to correct a typographical error that occured in his communication to the "Luminary" last week, instead of "real dignity has an evanescence" it should have read "real dignity has an evenness," the above error is of small dimensions to some we have seen lately—in reading a discourse a few weeks since we were not a little shocked to see it stated that the Apostles who labored, faithfully among men, were to sit upon Thrones and judge the twelve tribes of Israel. One of our City Papers published a few weeks since "the Dairy" of a Minister. Such blunders are doubtless provoking, but there is no certain guarentee against them, and the best policy for the outraged writers to adopt is, to patiently "grin and bear it." for so shall their rage be staid.

Dr. Clinton took the cars on Wednesday last, to return to Philadelphia—Elder John Banks left the same day for Cincinnati, the society and counsels of these brethern have been a source of uninterrupted satisfaction and pleasure to us during their stay in this City, and to the church in general. The good counsels, wholesome advice and sound doctrine taught by these worthy Veterans of Zion, will not soon be forgotton by those privileged with hearing them—their presence and instructions gave a zest to all our Councils Conferences and social intertainments. And we pray that the holy spirit that dwells in their hearts may abide with us and the people of God forever.

Correspondence.

Mr. Editor: Thinking that a sketch of our meeting held on the 11th for the ordination of those appointed on missions, would not be uninteresting, I send it you.

Thursday Oct. 11, 1855.—Special meeting held in the basement of the church corner of Washington avenue and fourth street 7 1-2 p. m. adjourned from the 8th.

The meeting was opened with singing. Elder S. J. Lees, engaged in prayer. Bishop Joseph Jones spoke a short time, after which President Hart said that he would devote the remainder of the evening to teaching, and defer the fellowship meeting, he then introduced, Elder John Banks (from Cincinatti) who gave some excellent remarks and council, to those who were about to be ordained and set apart, in his usual felicitious and amusing manner. Elder Jeter Clinton (from Philadelphia) then spoke, and gave some excellent and wise counsels, showing the difficulties and the beauties of the ministry, giving great encouragement to those about to be ordained and set apart to their various missions.

The remarks of those brethren added no little interest to the services of the evening, and made us to appreciate the principles of life and salvation (if possible) more than ever we did before. Several of the sisters were present and from the satisfaction that sat upon most of their countenances, it would appear that they were not backward in enjoying a portion of the interest manifested.

The President then called upon those who were appointed on missions, to take their places in the order of their presthood. Having done so Elders Jeter Clinton, John Banks, James H. Hart and Charles Edwards then proceeded to ordain and set apart the brethren as follows. Elder James Case set apart to his mission in the Cherokee Nation by the mouth of Elder Jeter Clinton, Elder Gardner set apart to his mission in Illinois, by the mouth of John Banks, Elder Samuel J. Lees, set apart to his mission in Texas, by the mouth of James H. Hart Elder William Bricker set apart to his mission in the Cherokee Nation by the mouth of Charles Edwards, Elder George Giles set apart to his mission by the mouth of Elder Jeter Clinton.

Priest John Restall, ordained to the office of an Elder, and set apart to his mission in Texas by the mouth of Elder John Banks.

Priest Henry Eyring, ordained to the office of an Elder, and set apart to his mission in the Cherokee Nation by the mouth of Elder Charles Edwards.

Teacher George Higgerson, ordained an Elder, and set apart to his mission in the Cherokee Nation by the mouth of Elder John Banks.

Member Nimrod Murphree, ordained an Elder, and set apart to his mission as a traveling Elder in this Stake of Zion, by the mouth of Elder James H. Hart.

After the buisiness of ordaining &c., was gone through, the hymn "Go ye messengers of Glory" was sung. The President remarked that it was an honor to the brethern that they were among the first harbingers of salvation to the house of Israel in that Nation. And exhorted them to be faithful in the discharge of their duties.

Elder Jeter Clintion made a few remarks concerning brother Spencer, the mode he intended to adopt in his adminestrations. He said he intended to depend on the spirit of the Lord seeking his blessing on any little thing he might prescribe that it might be beneficial to him; he would leave him in the hands of the Lord, and trust to his decision or will in that matter.

The meeting was then closed with prayer.

JAMES H. HART President,
James S. Cantwell Clerk.

Mr. Editor: Sir—In closing the report of the special meeting of the 11th inst, I think I may not be out of place in saying that from the free influence of the Spirit of God that prevailed, and was eminently manifest in the blessings that were pronounced upon the heads of the brethren appointed. We have no hesitancy in saying, that, they were ordained and set apart by the Revelations of Jesus Christ under the hands of an authorized Priesthood, the power and authority thereof being handed down from the Heavens, through the instrumentality of the martyred Prophet, Seer and Revelator, Joseph Smith.

I have had the pleasure of taking sketches of the blessings, through the servants of God, which are no small argury of the prosperity of the brethren in building up this Stake of Zion.

Their success will be eminent in bringing into the Kingdom of God, the remnant of the house of Israel unto whom they are sent, and in seaching out the honest in heart.

Praying for their success, in these important undertakings, I subscribe myself yours in the Kingdom of God. JAMES S. CANTWELL.

Twelve Miles Below Fort Laramie, September 13, 1855.

Dear Brother Hart:

Knowing the anxiety that is felt by you and the Saints in general, now under your presidency, to hear from their brethren and sisters that are crossing the wide-spread plains of the West, to Ephraims fat Vallies. I have retired to the carriage in the evening, while some are singing the cheerful songs of Zion, others playing the violin, whilst others are saying, O, dear, how sore my legs are, to give you a short sketch of our journey, since I last wrote, and our prospects for home, knowing that it will be the only chance to communicate to you, until our arrival. We wrote you last, from Little Blue; since which time, you will see by the date of this and distance, that we have travelled speedily, and with small amount of sickness and death, although in our encampment there are many old and infirm persons, yet through the blessing of the Lord, the most of them have strength to endure their journey. We have not met with any difficulty from the Indians yet, although Government has declared war against them, and blood has commenced to flow, yet we are preserved from being masacreed by the kindness of our Father that's in the Heavens, connected with our diligence in watching.

I will give you a short sketch of the proceedings of General Hearney, with the Indians. He came up with his command, one day in the advance of us, from Fort Harney to Ash Hollow, about seven hundred strong, and found a party of the Sioux Indians, about eight miles from Ash Hollow, and a battle ensued on the 3d, and the General sent over word to me on the 5th, and wishing me to keep an advanced guard, stating at the same time that the best information that they could get, was that they had killed one hundred and twenty Indians, taken fifty-eight prisoners, mostly women; had four soldiers killed and five wounded. He stated, also, that they were going to lay out a fort a small distance below Ash Hollow, after which they calculated to proceed to Fort Laramie, and from thence to wherever they could find any of the Sioux Nation. A few miles from where we are now encamped, there is about forty of the Indians that were in the battle near Ash Hollow. Report says that they are quite reckless, and that much hostile feeling is in them. What will be the result of these matters, remains yet to be told. However, I will say that I try my best to carry out the Generals instructions, and more too, for I pray the Lord not only to be our front guard, but also to protect our rear, at the same time watching diligently.

Now, Dear Brother Hart, I should be happy to see you, and my well beloved brethren and sisters of the stake of Zion in St. Louis, and the regions round about. I feel as though I only got acquainted with them, and then torn from them in an unexpected moment, but they are often in my memory and my feeble prayers are in their behalf, that they may have power to overcome and have eternal lives. My kind regards to your family and to all the Saints. I Remain, as ever,

Yours in the Gospel,
MILO ANDRUS.

From the Millennial Star.

STAFFORDSHIRE CONFERENCE.

Cobridge, Sep. 7, 1855.

President F. D. Richards:

Dear Brother—It is with a thankful heart to my heavenly Father for His blessings, that I sit down to write a few lines to you. I know that you have a great desire for the welfare of this Conference, and that you would like to know how we are getting along. I greatly desire, and still live in hopes, that you will pay us a visit. I think it would do you good to come and see the few Saints in these parts. I can truly say that, with few exceptions, they are doing all in their power to roll on the work of the Lord.

I thank the Lord that some of the Saints feel quite rich to what they did a while ago. They are getting rich in faith, and that makes them rich in works. It does my soul good to go into some of the meetings. I have felt grieved many times that we had not more means to carry on the work in this Conference. Still I feel that the work is the Lord's, and, if we do all we can, it is all that is required of us. As the faith of the Saints increases, their works increase also, so that we can do more than heretofore. As we could not get money to rent Halls with, we have tried lecturing out of doors.

Yesterday, brothers Curtis, James Taylor, and myself went to Nantwich, a small town six miles from Crewe. We went to the spot where we were to speak, and it was filled with things to sell, as it was the wakes. We felt quite disappointed to think that we had come so far and then could not have the privilege of speaking to the people. But the Lord was with us. A friend came and told us that there was another place. We went to it, and he went and got a chair for us to stand on, and we commenced our meeting. The people came by hundreds to hear us. Brother Taylor spoke first, and then brother Curtis spoke until his lungs gave out. The people paid good attention until they had got through, and then they wanted a time. There were two or three men who were disposed to make a disturbance, but we had the most friends there. There was one man who talked for some time, and abused us, and the Saints, and Joseph. He told the people that the "Mormons" were all going to starve. We waited until he got through, and then I asked the people if they would stand and here me. They said that they would, and the Holy Ghost was with me, for I never felt better in my life. I told them how we had been persecuted, and I gave them a sign, and that was, that the Saints would not perish for want of food in the Valley. I talked until I got so hoarse that I was obliged to quit. They all appeared pleased, and I told them that we had come without purse or scrip, and would like to have some one take us in and feed us. One man gave me a shilling, and that paid for our bed. We went without supper, and walked six miles the next morning before breakfast, and I went on to Burslem for mine. We are going to the same place next week, and I believe we shall do good there. The brethren are all alive, and they go out every Sunday, and preach to the people wherever they can get a hearing.

The Saints attend their meetings now, better than they have done for years before, so they say. I have had more joy in my labors the last month than in all the rest of the time I have been here.

Please give my kind love to Elder Little and all the brethren in the office. God bless you in all things is my prayer all the time.

WILLIAM G. YOUNG.

St. Louis, October 24 1855.

To the Editor of the Luminary:

Dear Brother—Thinking that a short communication from me concerning my late mission would not be uninteresting to your readers, I take this opportunity of communicating a few items, having just returned from Canada. It will be remembered by some of my friends that in April 1854 G. P. Waugh J. G. Sly and myself were appointed by the General Conference of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter day Saints held in Great Salt Lake City, to go on a mission to Canada to preach the Everlasting Gospel.

On the 8th of May we left Salt Lake City for our field of labor, in company with eighteen other Elders, destined for different parts of the Earth making in all twenty-one in the company.

Benjamen L. Clapp was chosen President of the little company, we were fifty-two days crossing the plains to old Fort Kearny, there we seperated to go to our respective fields of labor.

Elder Sly and myself for Canada where we arrived early in August and we traveled and labored together until May 1855, when he brought a little company to the States. Duriug this time we preached the gospel in every place where we could get an opportunity; laboring with our hands for our support.

We found considerable numbers who had obeyed the first principles of the gospel years ago, but had never gathered with the Saints we re-baptized some of these, and baptized some fourteen others. Making in all some twenty members in good standing in the district where we labored, which extended over an area of country of some two-hundred miles.

The Saints in Canada seem anxious to gather up to the Vallies of the Mountains as soon as they can settle their business in that country. I left on the 18th ult, leaving Elder Able Parker of Canboro to preside over the church in that country, and to bring them along in the spring and to lead them up to the Vallies of the Mountains, should no other appointment be made. Brother Parker is a friend to truth, and to those who love the same in sincerity; and any of the Elders who might be passing that way would be kindly received, should they call upon him.

I arrived in this City on Friday the 19th inst in company of brother Samuel Martin from Canada whom I baptized on Saturday the 20th. Not being able to find the brethren in St. Louis when I first arrived in consequence of the early hour—we went at once to Gravois where was a young man named Job Carter whom I baptized in Canada. Finding a branch of the church at Gravois, I remained there till Monday. I preached on Sunday afternoon to from one to two-hundred Saints.

On Monday evening I attended a Social Party, of Saints in this City, which was a grand affair indeed, and my heart was made to rejoice greatly with the brethren on that occasion. On Tuesday evening I met in council with the Presidency and council of this Stake of Zion and was appointed on a mission to Mormon Grove and Atchison to assist Elder McGaw, I attended a Social Party of the brethren given by Bishop Harris to the Elders who were about to leave on missions, and their wives, the party numbered about forty we enjoyed ourselves like Saints of the living God, feasting upon the choicest productions of the earth, and the blessings of the Heavens till near 2 o'clock A. M. when we parted all feeling to rejoice in the work of the latter days. On Thursday 25th I propose leaving for Mormon Grove, there to resume my labors, to build up the kingdom of God. Yours truly in the gospel. AMOS GUSTIN.

Miscellaneous.

THE WAR.

Position, Movements, and Prospects of the Armies in the Crimea.

The last official dispatches report the South side of Sebastopol to be occupied by detatchments of French and English troops who have had the distinct quarters of the town assigned to them.

The Russians concentrated their forces in the Northern forts, and were occasionaly firing upon the town, to which the Allies replied from the two forts which remained intact, (Nicholas and Quarantine,) and from the ruins of other forts. Prince Gortschakoff, in his reports, describes the firing of the Allies as heavy.

Preparations were making by the British and French engineers, by the sinking of immense mines, to destroy the splendid docks, arsenel and ship building yards of Sebastopol, and thus uproot the place as a naval stronghold. Though there is no official information on the subject, the allied generals for obvious reasons, being silent as to their future operations, there are various premonitions of a vigorous campaign in the open field.

Prince Gortschakoff on the 23d ult., reported that 26,000 men had been landed at Eupatoria, and that on the 27th this force was increased to 33,000 men. He has since reported that "imposing masses" of the Allied troops continue to threaten the left wing of the Russian army from the valley of Badair, whilst a force amounting to between 30,000 and 40'000 men threaten the right wing of the Russians from Eupatoria.

It is uncertain, and will remain so for some little time, which of these threatened attacks is the real one, but there is quite enough in Prince Gortschakoff's dispatches to show that he considers himself threatened in front and on both flanks. Another significant fact is that the English landed transport corps are in full activity; that the field batteries of the artillery are in marching order; that large numbers of the French cavalry have embarked for Eupatoria, and by the telegraphic accounts from Vienna, it is stated that the allied fleets had left Sebastopol on the same secret expedition.

It is again asserted, from Vienna, that the Russian army is retreating.

The Times' correspondent, writing on the 21st, is not at all sanguine that the Russians will be forced to abandon their position on the approach of winter.

The correspondent of the Daily News takes a different view. He says:

"The belief gains ground that the Russians are preparing to evacuate the north side of the harbor of Sebastopol. The extensive earthworks which have been lately constructed, and others in course of construction, are regarded as simply intended to cover their retreat and protect the reargaurd of the Russian army. Carts have come in empty from the direction of the Mackenzie heights, and have gone away laden, it is supposed, with provisions."

"These arrangements are supposed to indicate an intention to retire. It is still understood that a combined movement is to take place against the enemy's position on the Mackinzie heights. A direct attact from Bakshi Seai is spoken of, the approach from the south being made by a route which is kept secret, and which will have the effect of avoiding the enemy's fortified intrenchments."

Le Nord, of Brussels, takes a hopeful view of Russian affairs in the Crimea. A writer in that journal says:

"The situtation is not entirely to our disadvantage, and the honor of our armies is in no way compromised. Our men will no longer be obliged to offer themselves up as a holacaust, but will now be able to defend themselves in a close fight, and sell their lives at a high cost."

The same paper states that out of 10.000 seamen who have undertaken, with officers, the defence of Sebastopol, only a fourth survive, and some six or seven officers.

In an order which Prince Gortschakoff has addressed to his soldiers, the Prince admits a loss of from 500 to 1000 men per day, during the last 30 days of the siege. To continue to defend the south side, he says would have been to expose the troops to be uselessly murdered. He concludes by saying: It is not Sebastopol we have left in the enemy's hands, but burning ruins, that we have set fire to ourselves. Sebastopol enchained us to its walls; with its fall we acquire freedom of action and a new war commences."

A letter from St. Petersburgh states that the evening before the Emperor's deparuture for the South a grand council was held, at which it was decided to carry on the war with the utmost energy.

The Emperor went from Moscow to Nicolaieff, the great Russian Navel depot on the Exuine, where, on the 23d ult., accompanied by the Grand Dukes Constantine, Nicholas and Micheal, he made an inspection of the troops, fortifications, and dock yards. The fortifications, it is stated, are to be greatly strengthened and extend.

By telegraph we learn that the Czar has left Nicolaieff for the Crimea, his object in proceeding thither being doubtless to inspirit his forces by his presence, and turn the tide in favor of Russia.

Various Russian and Prussian accounts state that the war is to be carried on with the greatest determination, and that the Crimea is to be defended to the last extremity.

Gen. Mouravieff, now in Asia, will, it is intimated, take the place of Prince Gortschakoff, who is to become Minister of War.

Moscow advices state that 193,000 men have been added to the millitary force of Russia.

The Czar's Address.

The Emperor Alexander has issued the following address to the Russian people, through the Governor of Moscow:

"COUNT ARSENIUS ANDROWICH.—Since my ascending the throne of my ancestors, it has been my wish to visit my faithful and dear metropolis, in which I was born, and where I have been baptized under the protection of the holy relics of the holy worker of miracles, Alexis of Moscow.

"In fulfiling this wish, I have observed with lively satisfaction the hearty welcome of myself and my whole house, shown by the inhabitants of Moscow—a traditional reception, with which Russia always welcomed her Czars. I authorize you to express to all the inhabitants of Moscow my satisfaction and acknowledgement.

"My happiness would have been complete, if prior events had not saddened those happy moments. It is already known, from my order of the day to the Russian army, that the garrison of Sebastopol, after an unexampled siege of eleven months, and and after unheard of feats of bravery and self denial, in the repulse of six obstinate attacks, has passed over to the north side of the town, leaving the enemy only blood-stained ruins.

"The brave defenders of Sebastopol have done everything possible for human power to do. The former and present unfavorable events I accept as the inscrutable will of Providence, which visits upon Russia heavy hours of trial. But Russia's trials have been much heavier, and God Almighty has always sent her his benovelent and invinsible help. Let us, therefore, also now trust in Him. He will defend Russia, the Orthodox which has drawn the sword for a just cause—for the cause of Christendom.

"I am glad to see the incessant proof of the readiness of everybody to sacrifice family, property, and the last drop of blood, for the integrity of the empire and the honor of the country. I find comfort and strength in popular sentiments and aspirations, and, with my whole heart united with my faithful and brave people, I shall repeat, confident of God's help and aid, the word of Alexander First, "where there is truth there is also God," I remain your well-wisher, "ALEXANDER."

Prince Gortschakoff's general order to the Russian forces in the Crimea is dated on the 12th of September. After recounting the movements in the siege, as already known, he makes the following appeal:

VALIANT COMRADES.—It is painful, it is hard to leave Sebastopol in the enemy's hands. But remember the sacrifice we made upon the alter of our country in 1812. Moscow was surely as valuable as Sebastopol—we abandoned it after the immortal battle of Borodino. The defence of Sebastopol during 340 days is superior to Bordonio, and when the enemy entered Moscow in that great year of 1812, they only found heaps of stone and ashes. Likewise it is not Sebastopol which we have left to them, but the burning ruins of the town which we ourselves set fire to, having maintained the honor of the defence in such a manner that our great grandchildren may recall the remembrance thereof, with pride to all posterity.

Sebastopol kept us chained to its walls with its all we acquire freedom of movement, and a new war commences, a war in the open field, that most congenial to the Russian soldier. Let us prove to the Emperor, let us prove to Russia, that we are still imbued with the spirit which animated our ancestors in our memorable and patriotic struggle. Wherever the enemy may show himself, we will present our breasts to him, and defend our native land as we defended it in 1812.

Valient warriors of the land and sea forces!—In the name of the Emperor I thank you, for the unexampled courage, firmness and constancy you have displayed during the siege of Sebastopol.

ENGLISH IDOLS.

The Universe is severe upon the English manufactory of idols at Birmingham. It is well known that the Allies have opened and still maintain an active trade in hedious brass gods, with various heathen nations. They have a price current and a prospectus. Thus, Gingember, the god of health, is made of pure water, and has "a sabre of modern form." Buggaboo, the god of protection from ghosts, will be noticed as possessing an artistic grace of attitude. Bang, the god of war, is martial, heroic, massive. The Universe thinks that this is running a pretty powerful opposition to the missionaries, and deplores the fatal influence of commerce. It breaks a lance for the superiority of French missions, whose members, it says, usually win the crown of martyrdom. By which it means to claim that the famous slice of cold missionary, spoken of by Sydney Smith, was furnished by a Frenchman, which we all know it was not. It rejoices that no hardware establishment in Paris issues advertisements with the attractive heading, "Pagans supplied here."

"THE OLD WOMAN."

It was thus a few days since, we heard a young stripling of sixteen designate the mother that bore him. By coarse husbands we have heard wives called so occasionaly, though in the latter case the phrase is more often used endearingly. At all times, as commonly spoken, it jars upon the ear and shocks the sense. An "old woman" should be an object of reverence above and beyond all phrase of humanity. Her very age should be her surest passport to courteous consideration. The aged mother of a grown up family needs no other certificate of worth. She is a monument of excellence, approved and warranted. She has fought faithtully "the good fight," and come off conqueror. Upon her venerable face she bears the marks of the conflict in its furrowed lines. The most grevious ills of life have been hers; trials untold and unknown save to God and herself, she has borne incessantly, and now, in her old age, her duty done, patiently awaiting the appointed time, she stands more beautiful than even, in youth! more honorable and deserving than he who has slain his thousands, or stood triumphant upon the proudest field of victory.

Young men speak kindly of your mother, and even courteously, tenderly to her. But little time and you shall see her no more forever. Her eye is dim, her form is bent, and her shadow falls graveward. Others may love when she has passed away; kind-hearted sisters, perhaps, or she whom of all the world you choose for partner, she may love you warmly, passionately; children may love fondly, but never again, while time is yours, shall the love of woman be to you as that old, trembling mother has been.

In agony she bore you! through puling helpless infancy her throbbing breast was your safe protection and support; in wayward and touchy boyhood, she bore patiently with thoughtless rudeness and nursed you safely through a legion of ills and maladies. Her hand it was that bathed your burning brow or moistened the parched lip; her eye that lit up the darkness of wasting, nightly vigils, watching always in your fitful sleep by your side, as none but her could watch. Oh, speak not her name lightly, for you cannot live so many years as would suffice to thank her fully. Through recklessness and impatient youth, she is your counsellor and solace. Up to bright manhood she guides your improvident steps, nor even there forsakes or forgets. Speak gently then, and reverently of your mother, and when you too, should be old it shall in the same degree lighten the remorse which shall be yours for other sins, to know that never wantonly have you outraged the respect due to the "old woman."

GREAT EVENTS IN THE CRIMEA.

A TALE WORTH PRESERVING.

The first year of the war in the Crimea has now been completed, and the following review of the chief incidents and progress of the siege of Sebastopol will be read with interest:

FROM THE 14TH TO THE 16TH SEPTEMBER, '54.—The English and French armies landed in the Crimea at Old Fort, having left Varna on the 7th, in steamships and sailing transports, and protected by the fleet. Upwards of 100 ships were engaged in the conveyance of the English army alone. On the night of the 14th, the men slept on the ground in rain unprotected by tents.

Sept. 20.—The English army, in five divisions, had marched to the Alma, pioneered by the cavalry on the 19th, when a slight skirmish took place between the advancing guards and some Cossacks. On the 20th the English and French armies occupied the Northern bank of the Alma, after a sanguinary encounter, defeated the Russians, and took possession of their batteries; the enemy fled, leaving 700 prisoners and 4000 wounded on the field of battle. The loss on the allies' side was about 600 killed and 2000 wounded.

Sept. 20.—The allied armies proceeded South from the Alma, in unopposed march upon Sebastopol.

Sept. 24 (Sunday.)—The army halted at the village of Belbeck.

Sept. 25.—The march was resumed Southwards, the road lying through a thick wood, past Mackenzie's farm. Balaklava was taken possession of the morning of the 26th. Several steamers and transports had already arrived in the harbor.

Sept. 27.—The siege train landed.

Sept. 28 to Oct. 16.—The besieging army engaged in erecting its batteries all round, from the high ground above what has since been known as the Malakoff Tower, to the West side of the city, near Quarantine Harbor.

Oct. 17.—The siege commenced at half past six in the morning, the whole line of attack opening simultaneously. The land attack was aided by the fleet under Sir Edmond Lyons.

Oct. 25.—The Battle of Balaklava.

Oct. 26.—The first great sortie of the Russians from Sebastopol.

Nov. 5.—This day (Sunday) was fought the battle of Inkermann.

Nov. 13 and 14.—Great storm in the Black Sea causing destruction of ships and transports. By this calamity a large portion of the winter stores of the besieging army was lost. Lord Raglan created Field Marshal.

Nov. 15 to 30.—The siege operations slackened; Liprandi's army re-crossed the Tchernaya.

Dec. 2.—Huts and winter clothing despatched to the Crimea, as also a body of "navies" to form the Balaklava railway.

March 17.—The rifle pits taken by the French.

March 18.—The French bombarded the town for several hours during the night.

March 22.—Grand sortie by the Russians.

April 1.—The Russians established themselves on Kaidar.

April 9.—The bombardment resumed, and continued with more or less continuity to the 25th.

April 6.—The Russians made a sortie against the French line, and were repulsed with great loss.

May 3.—The expedition to Kertch recalled.—Gen. Canrobert resigns the command of the French army, and is succeeded by Gen. Pelissier.

May 22.—The French took the rifle pits between the Quarantine and central bastions, after a fearful struggle and a heavy cannonade.

May 23.—The fight in the same rifle pits was resumed with great slaughter. The French had 1,600 killed and wounded, and the Russians (whose losses were mostly caused by the French field pieces) were supposed to have lost 6,000.

May 24.—The expedition to Kertsch sailed again, by which the whole Sea of Azoff was scoured, and the corn supplies intended for Sebastopol cut off.—During the month the Sardinian contingent of 10,000 men arrived.

May 25.—20,000 French, the whole of the Sardinian force, and 20,000 Turks marched to the Tchernaya heights, which were evacuated by the Russians, and occupied the position. By this process the area of the Allied army position was nearly doubled.

June 6.—The fire of Sebastopol was renewed.—The next day, after a short and decisive fire, the French soldiers swarmed up the heights, attacked the Russians at the embrasurers, and in a few minutes had possession of the much-coveted Mamelon. The English made good their footing in the quarries.

June 8 to 17.—On the capture of the Mamelon and the Quarries, the trenches of the besiegers were pushed out towards the Malakoff and the Redan. Zigzags ran in every direction in front of the Redan.

June 17.—The bombardment of Sebastopol again resumed. For three hours the fire was warmly returned by the Russians, when it entirely ceased.

June 18.—This day was made the disastrous attack on the Malakoff and the Redan.

June 28.—Lord Raglan died after a short illness, aggravated, it is believed, by the disastrous result on the 18th. He was succeeded by Gen. Simpson.

August 16.—The battle of the Tchernaya.

Sept. 8 and 9.—The South side of Sebastopol evacuated by the Russians, in consequence of the deadly fire of the allies, and the successful attack and capture by the French of the Malakoff Tower. The siege of the South side of Sebastopol has thus lasted 316 days, reckoning from the time the fire was first opened, on the 17th October, 1854.

Thrilling Episode on Kane's Arctic Expedition.

The New York Journal of Commerce of October 13, says:

Some of the episodes encountered during Dr. Kane's search have wild interest. At one time it became necessary to send a fatigue party with provisions to assist the main party under Dr. Kane in an attempted passage across Smith's Sound. This party was under the command of Mr. Brooks, first officer of the expedition. He was accompanied by Mr. Wilson and others, volunteers. During their travel they found the ice completely impenetrable, and a snow storm at last swept wildly over the floes, and in the midst of a heavy gale from the North, the thermometer, to their dismay, sunk to fifty-seven degrees below zero. Human nature could not support the terrible cold. Four of the party, including Mr. Brooks and Mr. Wilson, were prostrated with frozen feet, and with great difficulty three of their companions, after encountering great suffering reached the ship and announced the condition of their comrades. Their chance of being rescued seemed extremely small. They were in the midst of a wilderness of snow, incapable of motion, protected only by a canvas tent, and with no land marks by which their position could be known.—Even to drag these maimed men would have been under ordinary circumstances a work of difficulty, but to the slender party left at the ship, it seemed to be impossible. Dr. Kane, with the boldness and courage which justified the warm attachment felt towards him by all under his command, in less than one hour organized a recruiting party, leaving on board only those who were necessary to receive the sick, and started off in the teeth of a terrible gale, steering by compass, to rescue the sufferers.

After nineteen hours constant travel, during which two of the party fainted, and others required to be kept from sleep by force, they struck the trail of the lost party, and finally, staggering under their burdens, one by one reached the tent, which was almost hidden by the snow. The scene as Dr. Kane entered the tent, was affecting beyond description. The party burst into tears. A blubber fire was immediately built, pemmicm cooked, and the party ate for the first time after leaving the vessel. Ice was also melted, they having been to this time without drink. Worn out as they were, but four hours were allowed for the halt. The maimed of the frozen party were sowed up in buffalo robes, placed on sledges, and dragged along by their companions, Dr. Kane walked in advance, picking the track. Cold of the utmost severity again overtook them. Bonsall and Morton, and even the Esquemaux boy Hance, sunk upon the snow with sleep. It was only by force they were aroused and made to proceed, as cold seemed to have destroyed all conception of danger. A large bear met on the way, was fortunately scared off by Dr. Kane, by the simple waving of his hand. They reached the ship after a walk of sixty-two hours, still dragging their companions behind them, but insensible. Dr. Hayes, the intelligent surgeon of the ship, from whom we obtained the particulars of this fearful adventure, received the returning party. Two of the number died of their injuries, and two others underwent amputation, who are now restored to perfect health. The condition of those who dragged the sick, was most lamentable. Their memory for a time was entirely gone, and the ship, in the midst of muttering and delirium, resembled an hospital. The Surgeon and one remaining attendant were in charge of the ship. In this state of semi-madness the sick remained for two or three days, but afterwards they instantly recovered, and the party, under Dr. Kane, started three weeks afterwards and resumed their labors in the field.

Intrepidity like this has never been surpassed.—It is spoken of with emotion, even now, by the stoutest hearts in the expedition.

THE word devil, said a certain parson, is mean any way you can take it. Remove the D, and it is evil; remove the E, and it is vile; remove the V, and it is il; and the L alone has the sound of hell. Beware, then of the devil—he is a mean rascal.

THE LAST DISPENSATION.

BY JOEL.

In the last great dispensation,
As the Father had decreed,
Joseph came to bring Salvation
To the lost of Abraham's seed;
For to him the light of Zion
And the Priesthood was restored
By an angel that came flying
From the presence of the Lord.

Now the glorious longed for era
Has arrived, when Jacob's seed
From the nations worn and weary
Are returning home with speed.
Lo! they come with joy and singing
To Mount Zion, see they flow,
While the mountain tops are ringing
With their joyful songs below.

Glory be to God, the Father,
Who hath set his liberal hand,
This the second time to gather
Israel to his promised land.
Praise him for his great salvation—
For his holy Prophet's voice
Sounding now in every nation,
Making all the Saints rejoice.

DIED.

At Kingston Coal Mines, Ills., Oct., 1855, AURELIA HARMON, aged sixty years.

MCLEAN'S VOLCANIC OIL LINIMENT is truly a celebrated remedy, and has done more to alleviate human suffering than any other remedy ever discovered.

One or two applications will relieve the most severe pain, bruise or sprain.

Two bottles will cleanse, purify, and heal the foulest ulcer or sore, and it will heal the most severe burn or scald without a scar.

Every family should have a supply constantly on hand, for use in time of need.

Read the following extract of a letter, which is incontestable proof of its wonderful efficacy:

A BLIND MAN RESTORED TO SIGHT.

J. H. MCLEAN—Dear Sir: * * * I have been suffering for four years with rheumatic sore eyes, being at times altogether blind. I procured the advice of several physicians, but none of them could do me any good. By the advice of a friend I applied your "Volcanic Oil Liniment," according to the directions around the bottle, and it has cured me permanently. I have used it since for bruises, pains, &c., and it has always given immediate relief. I live on the main road near Farmington.

Yours, respectfully, JOHN H. ALLERD.
Jefferson county, Mo.

For horses it is far superior to any other remedy for curing lameness, bruises, cuts, old sores, swellings, &c.

We say, then, to all who may be suffering from external diseases, call at once and get a supply. Thousands of bottles are sold (and used) daily, and we have never heard of a case where it has failed in giving relief when properly applied.

☞For sale by J. H. MCLEAN, the proprietor, corner Third and Pine streets, St. Louis, and by all respectable dealers in Medicines everywhere.

TYRE.

The wild and windy morning is lit with lurid fire;
The thundering surf of ocean beats on the rocks of Tyre;
Beats on the fallen columns and around the headland roars,
And hurls its foamy volume along the hollow shores;
And calls with hungry clamor that speaks its long desire;
'Where are the ships of Tarshish, the mi'ty ships of Tyre?'

Within her cunning harbor choked with invading sand,
No galleys bring their freightage, the spoils of every land,
And like a prostrate forest when Autumn gales have blown,
Her colonades of granite lie scattered and o'erthrown;
And from the reef the pharos no longer flings its fire
To beacon home from Tarshish the lordly ships of Tyre.

Where is thy rod of empire once mighty on the waves—
Thou that thyself exalted till Kings become thy slaves?
Thou that didst speak to nations and saw thy will obeyed,
Whose favor made them joyful, whose anger sore afraid,
Who laid'st thy deep foundations, and thought them strong and sure,
And boasted midst the waters—shall I not aye endure?

Where is the wealth of ages that heaped thy princely mart?
The pomp of purple trappings; the gems of Syrian art;
The silken goats of Kedar; Saboea's spicy store;
The tributes of the islands thy squadrons homeward bore,
When in thy gates triumphant they entered from the sea
With sound of horn and sackbut, of harp and psaltery.

Howl, howl, ye ships of Tarshish! the glory is laid waste;
There is no habitation; the mansions are defaced.
No mariners of Sidon unfurl your mighty sails;
No workmen fell the fir-trees that grow in Shenir's vales,
And Bashon's oaks that boasted a thousand years of sun,
Or hew the masts of cedar on frosty Lebanon.

Rise, thou forgotten harlot! take up thy harp and sing:
Call the rebellious islands to own their ancient king;
Bare to the spray thy bosom, and with thy hair unbound,
Sit on the piles of ruin, thou throneless and discrowned!
There mix thy voice of wailing with the thunders of the sea,
And sing thy songs of sorrow, that thou remembered be!

Though silent and forgotten, yet nature still laments
The pomp and power departed, the lost magnificence.
The hills were proud to see thee, and they are sadder now;
The sea was proud to bear thee, and wears a troubled brow,
And evermore the surges, chant forth their vain desire;
"Where are the ships of Tarshish, the mighty ships of Tyre?"

From the Birmingham (England) Journal.

THE MORMON CONFERENCE.

Mr. Editor:—Sir: Observing placards posted on the walls through Birmingham, announcing the "Half-yearly Conference" of this peculiar sect, to be held in the Odd Fellows' Hall Temple street on the 22d inst., curiosity prompted me to attend.—The Conference opened by singing and prayer.—There were present about a thousand persons, including a number of "Elders." It was whispered that the sons of the Prophets were among the number. Joseph Young, son of Brigham the Prophet; W. Kimball, son of H. C. Kimball, First Counsellor to Brigham; and G. Grant, brother to J. M. Grant, Second counsellor to the Prophet; also F. D. Richards, the supreme authority of Mormondom in Europe. The state of Mormonism in Birmingham vicinity was represented by the presiding and traveling Elders as prosperous. Much opposition from "sectaries" had been experienced in open air preaching. At Great Bridge, the Rev. B. Willmore, of West Bromwich, had been delivering anti-Mormon lectures, and also publishing anti-Mormon pamphlets, "but without any hope of reclaiming any who had embraced the Mormon delusion." The finances of the society were read to the meeting, and appeared to give general satisfaction. For emigration, temple and general church puposes, £719 16s. 9 1-4. had been raised. The secretary also read the statistical report for the half-year, which represents 4 Seventies; 154 Elders, 155 Priests, 73 Teachers, 55 Deacons, 79 cut off, 18 dead, 84 scattered, 170 removed, 170 received, 104 emigrated, 173 baptized; total of members, 1,769. Next followed a train of extraordinary motions. all carried unanimously, "That Brigham Young be upheld and sustained by our faith, prayers and means, as Prophet, Seer, and Revelator of the Church of Jesus Christ in all the world; that H. C. Kimball and J. M. Grant be upheld in like manner, as his counsellors; that the twelve Apostles, with Orson Hyde as president of the quorm, be upheld the same; also, F. D. Richards, as president of the Church in the British Isles and adjacent countries;" with many more of a similar kind.

In the afternoon several American Elders addressed the crowded audience, and bore testimony to the virtuous character of Joseph and Brigham, and to the purity of morals in Utah. In the evening President F. D. Richards was introduced to the assembly. He declined addressing the meeting in consequence of ill health, but called on his friend Elder J. A. Little, to speak for him, who rose and addressed the assembly on orthodox Mormonism.—The pith of the oration was for saint and sinner to comprehend that salvation was only obtainable through Jesus Christ, and Joseph Smith, as the ambassador of Jesus Christ. At the close, Mr. Richards rose to endorse the views of Mr. Little.

On Monday evening a social tea party came off, the Hall being decorated for the occasion in Mormon style. High above the "eye of Providence" appeared to take cognizance of all underneath, a motto in letters of gold attracted my attention, "Brigham, God's Vicegerent," from which was suspended the square and compass, line and plummet.—The compass in the centre, just above the head of the speaker, was imagined to say, "Dont reveal too much, nor speak too long; keep within compass." I was informed three crowns suspended over the stand represented the "First Presidency." "Truth is mighty and will prevail," "Union and Perseverance" "Utah the star of the West," "Mormonism, born in poverty, cradled in storms, reared in hurricanes, won't fail in earthquakes," and "Truth and Freedom: while the first preserves us, let us preserve the other," were the favorite mottoes.

Mr. F. D. Richards presided over the after exercises of the evening. Elders from the Great Salt Lake City spoke "as they were led." Some good and original ideas were advanced. A few songs from Elder Dunbar, president of the French mission, enlivened the scene, and applause would have simultaneously burst forth in clapping of hands and stamping of feet, but a look from the chairman reminded the "saints" that the only legal expression of approbation must be a smile. "This is the order of Zion.

Tuesday evening a lecture was delivered by Elder C. H. Wheelock, on the "Peculiar Institution of Plurality of wives." The lecturer alluded to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, for examples of piety and polygamy. David, the man of God's own heart was introduced to advantage, but was criticised severely, because of his unlawful intercourse with Bethsheba, and the consequent murder of Uriah.—David had his master's (Saul's) wives given him, and God would have given more if he had righteously desired them; but he lost all forever through his folly and sin. He (the lecturer,) would challenge any divine in England to prove plurality of wives not a divine institution. He was willing to contrast Salt Lake City with any other city in Christendom, as far as industry and morality were concerned. Could we find prostitution in Mormon Salt Lake City on a par with the same vice in Christian Birmingham, or pious Oxford, or holy Rome? He earnestly recommended Christian nations to purge out the old leaven from their own hearts, before they attempted to evangelize the sensuous people of Utah.

On Wendesday evening, Elder James Ferguson, president of the Irish mission, delivered an oration, on the absolute necessity of a temple of God existing in all ages on the earth, in order that the human family might be saved. All ordinance appertaining to eternal life should be performed in a temple built by commandment. The Bible said so. This generation would be condemned for their disbelief in its contents. The temples that had been built by the Saints in this dispensation had answered the ends of their erection. Another temple was in course of erection in Salt Lake Valley.

A vote of thanks was moved to President F. D. Richards, for proposing this lecture. A sea of hands indicated the feeling of the meeting; and thus triumphed Mormonism in the heart of Birmingham. This strange people is on the increase; boldness is seated on the brows of their leaders; determination is perceived in every word in every gesture. If they are prevailed against, honesty of purpose in their opponents must be the ruling motive. Calumny, misrepresentation, physical force, will fail to reform the weakest Mormon; it only adds energy to the system. Ministers, arm yourselves with facts—with truth gird up your loins and meet the advocates of Mormonism as men; and with the sword of the Spirit cut the "Gordian knot" of the world's wonder while there is an opportunity.

AN OBSERVER.

FACTS ABOUT THE HUMAN BODY.

There are two hundred and eight bones in the human body, exclusive of the teeth. These bones are composed of animal and earthly materials; the former predominating in youth, and the latter in old age, rendering the bone brittle. The most important of the bones is the spine, which is composed of twenty-four small bones called the vertebræ, one on top of the other, curiously hooked together and fastened by elastic ligaments, forming a pillar, so to speak, by which the human frame is supported.

The bones are moved by the muscles, of which there are more than five hundred. The red meat of beef, the fat being excluded, is the muscular fabric of the ox. There are two sets of muscles, one to draw the bone one way, and another to draw it back again. We cannot better describe the muscles than by comparing them to the fine elastic threads bound up in their cases of skin. Many muscles terminate in tendons, which are stout cords, such as may be seen traversing the back of the hand, just within the skin; and which can be observed to move when the hand opens or shuts. Every motion we make, even the involuntary one of breathing, is performed thro' the agency of the muscles.

In adults there are about fifteen quarts of blood, each quart weighing about two pounds. This blood is of two kinds; the arterial and veinous. The first is the pure blood as it leaves the heart to nourish the frame, and is of a bright vermillion color. The last is the blood, as it returns to the heart, loaded with the impurities of the body, to be there refined, and is of a purple hue. Every pulsation of the heart sends out about two ounces of arterial blood, and as there are from seventy to eighty beats in the minute, a hogshead of blood passes through the heart every hour. In fevers the pulsations are accelerated; the waste of the body goes on faster than it can be recuperated, and consequently death ensues if the fever is not checked.

The stomach is the boiler, if we may use such a figure, which drives the human engine. Two sets of muscles, crossing each traversely, turn the food over and over, churning it up in the gastric juice, till it has been reduced to the consistency of thin paste. This process requires from two to four hours. Emerging from the stomach, the food enters the small intestines, where it is mixed with bile and the pancreatic juice, and converted into chyle. These small intestines are twenty-four feet long, closely packed, of course, and surrounded through their whole length with small tubes, which act like suckers, and drawing off the chyle, emptying it into a larger tube, named the thoracic duct, which runs up the back, and discharges its contents into the jugular vein, whence it passes into the heart, to assist in the forming of arterial blood.

The lungs are two bags, connected with the open air by the windpipe, which branches into innumerable small tubes, all over the inside of the lungs, each tube terminating in a minute air cell. The other surface of these air cells is full of capillaries, or infinitely small veins, a thin membrane only dividing the air from the blood. The impure portion of veinous blood is carbonic acid, which, having a stronger affinity for air than for blood, passes through this thin membrane, in a gasseous state, combines with the air in the air cells, and is expelled, with the next expiration. Meantime the oxygen of the air unites with theblood and becomes purified, then passing into the heart, being mixed with chyle it is forced through the body as life-giving and arterial blood.

The skin serves an important purpose in carrying off impurities from the human system. It is traversed with capillaries, which contain more blood, in the aggregate, than all the other capillaries of the body. It is also perforated with countless perspiratubes, the united length of which amount to twenty-eight miles, and which drain away from three to four pounds of waste matter every twenty-four hours, or five-eighths of all that the body discharges.

The nerves are another curious feature of the animal economy. They are, however, but little understood. They act as feelers to tell the wants of the body, and also as conductors to will the muscles to act. They branch out from the brain and spine over the whole frame, in infinitely fine fibres, like the branches and twigs of a tree.—[Ledger.

Horrors of the Hospital of Sebastopol.

Of all the pictures of the horrors of war which have ever been presented to the world, the hospital of Sebastopol presents the most horrible, heart-rending, and revolting. It cannot be described, and the imagination of a Fuseli could not conceive anything at all unlike unto it. How the poor human body can be mutilated and yet hold its soul within, when every limb is shattered, and every vein and artery is pouring out the life stream, one might study here at every step, and at the same time wonder how little will kill! The building used for an hospital is one of the noble piers inside the dockyard wall, and is situate in the centre of the row at right angles to the line of the Redan. The whole row was peculiarly exposed to the action of shot and shell bounding over the Redan, and to the missiles directed to the Barrack Battery, and it bears in sides, roofs, windows and doors, frequent and destructive proofs of the severity of the cannonade. Entering one of the doors I beheld such a sight as few men, thank God, have ever witnessed! In a long, low room, supported by square pillars, arched at the top, and dimly lighted through shattered and unglazed window frames, lay the wounded Russians, who had been abandoned to our mercies by their General. The wounded did I say? No, but the dead, the rotten and festering corpses of the soldiers who were left to die in their extreme agony, unattended, uncared for, packed as close as they could be stowed, some on the floor, others on wretched trestles and bedsteads, or pallets of straw, sopped and saturated with blood, which oozed and trickled through upon the floor, mingled with the droppings of corruption. With the roar of exploding fortresses in their ears, with shells and shot forcing through the roof and sides of the rooms in which they lay, with the crackling and hissing of fire around them, those poor fellows, who had served their loving friend and master the Czar but too well, were consigned to their terrible fate. Many might have been saved by ordinary care. Many lay, yet alive, with maggots crawling about in their wounds. Many nearly mad by the scenes around them, or seeking escape from it in their extremest agony, had rolled away under the beds, and glared out on the stricken spectators, oh! with such looks. Many with legs and arms broken and twisted, the jagged splinters sticking through the raw flesh, implored aid, water, food, or pity, or deprived of speech by the approach of death, or by dreadful injuries on the head or trunk, pointed to the lethal spot. Many seemed bent alone on making their peace with Heaven. The attitudes of some were so hideously fantastic as to appeal and root one to the ground by a sort of dreadful fascination. Could that bloody mass of clothing and white bones ever have been a human being, or that burnt black mass of flesh have ever had a human soul? It was fearful to think what the answer must be. The bodies of numbers of men were swollen and bloated to an incredible degree, and the features distended to a gigantic size, with eyes protruding from their sockets, and the blackened tongue lolling out of the mouth, compressed tightly by the teeth which had set upon it in the death rattle, made one shudder and reel round. In the midst of one of these "chambers of horror"—for there were many of them—were found some dead and some living English soldiers, and among them poor Captain Vaughan, of the 90th, who has since succumbed to his wounds. I confess it was impossible for me to stand at the sight, which horrified our most experienced surgeons—the deadly clammy stench, the smell of the gangrened wounds, of corrupt blood, of rotting flesh, were intolerable and odious beyond endurance. But what must the wounded have felt who were obliged to endure all this, and who passed away without a hand to give them a cup of water, or a voice to say one kindly word to them. Most of these men were wounded on Saturday—many perhaps, on the Friday before—indeed, it is impossible to say how long they might have been there. In the hurry of their retreat, the Muscovites seem to have carried in dead men to get them out of the way, and to have put them upon the pallets in horrid mockery. So that this retreat was secured, the enemy cared but little for their wounded. On Monday only, did they receive those whom we sent out to them during a brief armistice for the purpose, which was I believe, sought by ourselves, as our overcrowded hospitals could not contain, and our overworked surgeons could not attend to any more.

Mustang Liniment and the Ladies.—In our opinion, nothing is above the comprehension of women; and with less prejudice, more liberality, and much keener perception than men, when a new idea is presented, a new doctrine taught, or a new fact asserted, she grasps it at once, and with the rapidity and clearness almost of instinct, decides upon its merits or truthfulness; and if her decision be favorable, she enthusiastically advocates and supports it. Thus the common saying has obtained—"Once get the women on your side and you are safe;" and we are happy to state that we have the ladies all in favor of the Mustang Liniment. They have tried it for caked breasts, sore nipples, sores, chafes, and burns on children, as well as for croup and mumps; also, for corns, tooth-ache, pains in the limbs and joints, sore eyes, eruptions, cuts and bruises, and they have always found it effectual—and they go about like angels, as they are, proclaiming it to their friends and to all they see or hear tell of, who are suffering. We have daily calls for it by persons who say such and such ladies recommended them to try it.

Go on ladies in your "good Samaritan" work, and thousands will bless you for your timely advice.

MEDICINE FOR THE BILLION!
A Certain Remedy for all Diseases of
MAN OR ANIMALS,
Requiring an External Application.
Warranted in every Case for which it is Recommended!

THE MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT!
Unlike all other popular medicines, it is used by many prominent members of the faculty, and many of the public Hospitals. Their prejudices have yielded to indisputable and incontrovertible demonstrations of cures performed where their remedies had failed.
It has cured more cases of
RHEUMATISM
than any other medicine ever used. Its efficacy in this terrible disease is acknowledged by all who have used it. It not only cures the complaint, but appears to give a vigor and elasticity to the limbs, before unknown, thus performing a double office.

A FEW TESTIMONIALS.
Path Finder Office, May 11, 1854.
G. W. Westbrook:—
Please send me by the bearer three large bottles of your Mexican Mustang Liniment, as I wish to take it up to my place in Vermont, not thinking it advisable to do without it. I have used it in my family and on my horses, and have found it invaluable. Yours,
J. T. WHITNEY.

Elizabethtown, Tenn., May 25, 1855.
Mr. G. W. Westbrook:—
Dear Sir—It affords me much pleasure in saying to you that the Mexican Mustang Liniment outsells any medicine that I have ever had for sale, and comes nearer doing what it promises to do. Send me another supply, as I am nearly out. Yours respectfully,
JOHN SINGLETRAY, P. M.

Philadelphia, June 11, 1854.
Mr. G. W. Westbrook:
Sir—My son was afflicted with a swelling upon the knee joint, which confined him to the house. I had a doctor attending him for some time, but he did not do him any good. One of my neighbors told me to use the Mustang Liniment. I asked the doctor if I could do so, and he told me he thought I could not do better.
I procured one bottle, and in about a week he was able to go out.
I can safely recommend it to the afflicted.
Respectfully yours, MRS. BENNETT.

W. S. Ladd & Co., of Portland, Oregon, writes that there is an immense demand for the Mexican Mustang Liniment in that country, and orders forty gross to be shipped by Golden Gate, that sails in a few days from New Yook.

Park & White of San Francisco, California, order 100 gross, to be forwarded by first clipper for that port.

Port au Prince, Hayti, Jan. 16th, 1854.
I had the pleasure to receive invoice and boxes Mexican Mustang Liniment per Croton, and have no doubt it will have a brisk sale on the island.
GEORGE RACKSTER.

To give health, strength and elacity to the limbs, there is nothing can equal in effect, the
MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT.
FARMERS AND LIVERY STABLE KEEPERS
have need it for the following diseases with extraordinary success, certifying invariably to the efficacy of the Liniment, and the truthfulness of our assertions in its behalf:
Spavin, Splint, Ring-bone, Fistula, Wind Galls, Big Head, Bruises, Strains, String-halt, Scratches, Cracked Heels, Sweney, Saddle, Collar, or Harness Galls, Hard Lumps or Tumor, Film, or other diseases of the Eye, Poll-Evil, &c.
The small sizes retail for 25 cents per bottle;
The medium size retail for 50 cents per bottle;
The large sizes retail for one dollar per bottle.
The medium holds three times as much as the small;
The Large holds nearly three times as much as the medium,
Therefore the large bottles are the cheapest.

DISCOURSE

By Elder John Banks on the life and death of President Orson Spencer, delivered on Sunday afternoon in the Church, corner of Washington Avenue, St. Louis, Mo., October 21st, 1855.

[REPORTED BY S. J. LEES.]

In complience with the request made by your worthy President, and seconded by many Elders who form a part of this Stake of Zion, I arise this afternoon for the purpose of making a few remarks in connexion with the life and death of Elder Orson Spencer, late President of the work of God in this region of country. And in doing so I wish it to be understood that so far from entertaining an idea that any eulogy in reference to the labors and character of the illustrious individual whom I have just mentioned is necessary, I consider such an idea would be idle and foolish. His works are well known to the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. His indefatigable labors for the propagation of the principles of eternal life, are known not only to the church, but to the world at large. To say that he was an exemplary character of faith, endurance, patience, zeal and integrity, would be to describe but very feebly the character of the man.

In regard to his history, he heard and embraced the everlasting gospel some sixteen years ago. At that time he was a minister, belonging to what is called the particular Baptist persuasion. His education was somewhat liberal, he was a graduate of Union College, and as a minister of the Baptist faith, he no doubt performed what he considered his duty to his fellow men. His labors as a Baptist minister, were well known in the East and the South, and he was highly esteemed by a very large circle of friends and acquaintances. He was one of those few ministers who seems not only to have merited but gained the esteem of all who knew him, in consequence of his affable, amiable and endearing manners. He had the good fortune to secure to himself many friends, whom he never failed to tell that God had spoken from the heavens, and that he had revealed the everlasting gospel and the holy Priesthood. In being informed himself that mankind had been groveling in darkness for ages, and that the set time had come for the Lord to reveal the abundance of light and truth, and set His hand to recover and gather Israel, he went forth and obeyed the gospel, rejoicing in spirit and praising God; and from that hour to the day of his demise he was ever a faithful member, and an active officer in the Church of Jesus Christ. A man who enjoyed the greatest confidence of his brethren, and who had the esteem of as large a circle of friends as any man who ever figured in this church, in this the evening of time.

From time to time he has been called upon to fill some of the highest stations in the church. He was a member of the High Priests Quorum, and a member of the High Council of the Stake of Zion, and in reference to the various organizations and committees, we find very frequently the name of Orson Spencer. He was a member of the Legislature of Utah, and I know not of any department of the work of God, wherein he has not been a prominent man, whose wisdom was sought after and regarded as valuable. At home he has ever been in the front rank, ever ready in his spirit and body to benefit the church of God. Abroad in distant lands as a herald of salvation, he has been eminently successful, and in distant nations his name is green in the memory of thousands, and will be cherished by them as long as they exist. And in his works, so fraught by wisdom, knowledge, understanding and learning, so eminently calculated to answer the purpose for which they were designed; he will live forever while the Church of Jesus Christ lives on earth, and it may be truly said, that though dead, yet he speaketh.

Through the productions of his pen, I am prepared to say from my own personal knowledge, that many very many have been brought to a knowledge of the truth. His works have claimed attention in what is called the most respectable society in Europe. As a man in social life, performing the various duties of father, husband and brother, his conduct was exemplary, and there are very few men who were ever more beloved or more revered, and whose counsels were more regarded and attended to than those of Elder Spencer, by his numerous family.

I have seen him when comparatively released from the duties or his office in the ministry, engage in what some would call the menial offices of his home, with heart filled with gratitude and satisfaction for the mercies blessings and advantages his family continued to receive, though still poor in this worlds goods. He was often times debared of the luxuries and even the necessaries of life, yet his heart was ever at rest, his mind ever at peace, and he was ever found thaukful to God. His hope was strong, his faith firm, and his confidence in his brethren unwavering. He was an individual whose faith had been tried in oppression, by mobocracy, by persecution of the most trying kind, yet he was ever ready at the call of the authorities of the church. And in the last trying scenes through which the church was called to pass—I refer to the expulsion from Nauvoo—Elder Spencer was called upon to leave a young and helpless family, and go on a mission to Europe. His wife through suffering fell a victim to the persecutions, and died. His family was left in the barren wilderness, with a journey before them of one or two thousand miles, in a country untried, where perhaps the foot of a white man had never trod, a place regarded as unfit to be inhabited by civilized beings.

I feel myself inadequate to the task of doing justice to him, or his memory. I have oftentimes felt grateful in being privileged to labor with him, as I have for the last ten months previous to his appointment to the Presidency in this place; in a city noted for its rejection of the words of eternal life—Cincinnati—a city not to be equalled on this continent for apostacy and apostate spirits who are possessed of the most malignant feelings towards the Church of God. We labored there together for ten months. I know his character well, and I speak advisedly, and the true sentiments of my heart when I say, I aspire to no higher destiny than his. I was with him when he breathed his last breath; and said, may I die the death of the righteous, and may my last end be like his. Truly a mighty man in Israel hath fallen.

But he who called him to the holy office he held, still lives, and when the church requires such men can raise them up. He who raised him up will raise up others until his good pleasure is accomplished in this, the dispensation of the fulness of times.

As rational beings, as beings that have affections of which we cannot rid ourselves, we mourn his loss. We feel to mourn his loss when we remember his wise counsels, his exemplary character, his pure precepts, his unwavering stability, his disinterestness. When we think upon these things we mourn his loss, yet we mourn not as those who have no hope; in fact I believe the word hope too feeble to express the confidence we have in regard to the rest, happiness and glory that is secured unto him. He has passed from our midst, we have followed him to the silent tomb, and paid the last formal obsequies to his memory.

His humble conduct will ever stand before us as an example worthy to be copied. In his example we have seen with our eyes the power of God, and the power of truth, while we remember him we shall ever have before us a living example of the power of the principles of eternal truth.

He has passed away but for a moment. Orson Spencer, our beloved brother lives to-day, and will live forever. He is still a member of the church, and will be forever. He is now our brother as much as he ever was, and perhaps in a relation we cannot comprehend, still more so. He is probably more calculated to do good in rolling forward the great work of salvation, and bring to pass the redemption of the heritage of God, than when in our midst.

The Priesthood still rests upon him, and he is now perhaps, discharging his duties with more vigor than when he last addressed you from this stand; the same love of the truth pervades his bosom, though he has shuffled off the coil of this mortal existence. His spirit still lives with just the same affection, with the same powers either to a less or greater degree, that existed in him when he dwelt in the flesh. Wearied out by suffering and fatigue, and wasted by continual labor from year to year, his body fell into the tomb, but his spirit was unimpared, and is now lively and as full of energy as it ever was, and perhaps more so.

He is still a missionary, only his labors have ceased among men in the flesh. He rose from that body and assended upon high to engage in larger fields of missionary labor. He is still actively engaged in accomplishing that work God has revealed from the heavens.

The time has come for the prison houses to be broken open—for the principles of emancipation to be taught to the dead as they are to the living, and our brother still feels the same delight and the same pleasurable emotions as when in the flesh, and he still loves to speak upon the principles of truth, and bear testimony to the fact that the true church is built upon the foundation of Prophets and Apostles; Jesus Christ being the chief corner stone. That spirit of his which could exhibit in so sarcastic a manner the follies of men; their incongruous errors and inconsistancies, is still actively engaged in the clime where he dwells, and it is just as necessary that he should be removed, as that he should ever be a member amongst us. If we could see him today, we should see him attending to his duties as actively, and discharging them as faithfully as he ever did, and looking forward to the coming of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Yes, he looks forward to the day when the graves shall give up their dead, when at the voice of the Son of God, through the development of the keys of the everlasting Priesthood, the faithful shall arise, come forth and inherit the earth, and shall have allotted unto them their possession, the inheritance that shall never fade away.

His mind now revels in the glorious prospect of the redemption of Israel, while the holy spirit pours into his bosom instructions from the throne of God. That valient and indomitable spirit that once existed amongst us, feels as light, acts as free, and performs labors perhaps much easier than heretofore. His affections have not become cool towards us, he feels for his friends, and loves them as affectionately as when he was here. His prayers are offered to the same God to whom ours are directed, that the Saints may put off the Gentile yoke, and that Zion may arise and put on her glorious apparel. He is now joining with myriads in asking "how long Oh Lord, holy and true shall it be before we are avenged of our enemies?" and may be heard exclaiming with extatic delight, all power, all might, all magesty and dominion be unto our God who sitteth upon the throne forever. I can imagine him associated with that illustrious and magnanimous retenue that distinguished themselves and overcame through the blood of the Lamb; who, having braved all opposition and finished the work given them to do, having filled the measure of their creation with honor, are now awaiting the glorious period when with the redeemed they shall come forth and reign upon the earth as their everlasting and eternal inheritance given them of the Lord.

When I reflect upon the illustrious individual who forms the subject of these remarks, I reflect upon him with great familiarity of feeling, I regard him as still closely associated with us, and when I remember his wise counsels and instructions it seems as though he was present with us. I call to memory some of the last expressions he ever made while he was in the body, and his serenity, mildness, resignation and integrity to the authority of the church of God to the last moment of his earthly existence. His last words were "all is right," previous to these words he said, "I give myself up to the church, to my brethren in this city, and to my President, Elder John Taylor." He bowed his head to the authorities of the church, and rejoiced in bearing testimony of it, and in the union and power which characterize the church of the living God.

It is pleasing thus to remember our friends—to think that the bond of union is not severed. It is pleasing to lift up the curtain of this world and look into that which is to come, which we are enabled to do measurably by the keys and power of the everlasting gospel revealed unto us. When we contrast the views we now entertain, with the dark sombre notions which we have formerly endulged in, with regard to our friends when we have committed them to their narrow home, never more to behold their countenance, or to mingle with them in the social relations of affection, and in the kind endearments of life. We have indeed cause to rejoice in the light of truth that has dawned upon our minds in this the evening of time, even in the principles of eternal truth which are so well prepared to captivate the minds of those who love the truth, and those principles of Godliness revealed for the salvation of the children of men. For what know men of futurity except it is revealed from the heavens, and what know men concerning the place of rest, of the departed, except it be learned through the church of Jesus Christ, and through reception of and obedience unto the gospel?

We sorrow not as those who have no hope, we are perfectly satisfied that he is at rest, and that he is pursuing the same honorable course that marked his movements in this world, that his affections are still towards us, and that we have the benefit of his prayers, and through the words he left behind him, the benefit of his administrations. In the spirit world where he is now laboring, there is a necessity for his services, and he is there an able advocate of truth, and is engaged probably in chasing away the darkness that beclouds the understanding of those who have in the spirit world to learn the everlasting gospel as it has been revealed unto us. For be assured there is no other name given under heaven among men, but the name of Christ, or, in other words, there is no other gospel in the heavens or on the earth, or in hell, whereby intelligent beings can be saved, but that revealed by Jesus Christ, and restored in these last days. Wo unto any man or angel, says the Apostle, if they preach any other gospel than that which he preached—let him be accursed said the Holy Ghost. We ought to regard our illustrious brother as associated with us in the same principles, and the champion of the same doctrine, belonging to the same order of Apostles, Prophets, Evangelists, Pastors and Teachers, He is upheld and sustained by the same holy Spirit, which takes of the things of the Father and the Son and revealeth them unto all intelligent beings within the flesh or out of the flesh, in the body or out of the body.

The same affection, the same love, the same endurance, the same fortitude, the same devoutness characterizes Elder Orson Spencer to-day. Well and nobly did he sustain his part. He has left us in his life and character an important lesson to study and reflect upon, and an example worthy of imitation. We would do well to copy the noble, generous and exalted character of our deceased brother. His virtue that shone so conspicuously, his integrity, faithfulness, endurence and disenterestedness all stand before us worthy of our imitation.

Some may think this is eulogizing the dead too much, but I believe this to be a correct and righteous principle; and when I perceive a man superior to me, I conceive it my duty to copy after him. As an illustrious Apostle once said, "be ye followers of me even as I follow Christ." Let us cling to whatever is lovely and of good report, and by so doing we shall be preparing ourselves for that rest that remaineth for the people of God.

It is generally the custom on such occasions as the present, to say something in regard to the resurrection of the dead. 'Tis a subject which we have received as little instruction upon, and seems as obscure in its details as any subject of our holy religion; yet it is a subject we all aspire to understand, and oftentimes engages our attention as a subject in which all our hopes are centered. In passing through the trials and difficulties of life, we often draw comfort from reflection upon this subject, and are stimulated to enterprise and good actions that we may obtain "the better resurrection." This great subject seems to be the acme of the desires of the Saints, the highth, depth, length and breadth of their most sanguine expectations. They have looked forth anxiously for the time when they should no more know privation, sufferings and death, but be clothed upon with immortality and eternal life. It has always been the greatest satisfaction of the Saints to know that if this earthly house should be dissolved, they had a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens; and when they wished to express the joy that pervaded their bosoms, they refered to a time when the redeemed should say, "Oh death where is thy shing, Oh grave where is thy victory." They looked forward to this time not only as the period when they would be rescued from the jaws of death, and the effects of sin; but they looked forward to it as a time of re-union with beings whom they loved, an everlasting association with those objects which were so lovely and dear to them in life—a dear wife—an affectionate husband—an amiable sister—and the children, the fruit of their loins. All these endeared objects of their affection, were associated with the ideas of the resurrection of the dead.

When in this life, the people of God were called to separate formerly, they mourned over the dead forty days; setting their house in order, eating and drinking in a peculiar style. And yet they had hope, they knew those whom they loved would stand upon the earth in the latter days, though worms might destroy their bodies, and though their veins might be consumed within them, they knew that in their flesh they should see God, and when they departed this life, they knew there was laid up for them a righteous crown, which the Lord, the righteous judge, would give unto them in that day, and not to them only, but to all who love the appearing of the Son of God.

We observe amongst some of the ancients a strange tenacity, and carefulness with regard to their burial places. They appeared very anxious to be buried near each other, that their dust and bones might mingle with each other. They desired to be near each other—a family saved of the Lord, raised from the dead, being clothed upon with immortality and eternal lives, entering into the joy of their Lord.

Some ask how will the resurrection be brought about; will it be by the sound of the trump, in the twinkling of an eye, when the graves shall give up their dead, and the whole earth shall give up its dead in one moment? Or how are we to look forward to its accomplishments? We may be assured that as the resurrection is one of the first principles of the gospel, it will be in perfect uniformity with other principles of the gospel. It will require the same keys (or greater,) the same authority to handle those things, in order that an individual may be raised from the dead, as it requires to take an individual down into the waters of baptism for the remission of sins. Hence, whoever shall be raised from the dead, will be indebted to some other person who has been previously resurrected and holds the keys thereof, which will be sealed upon them through the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. The dead will come forth upon the principles, and through the exercise of the power of everlasting lives, vested in the hands of Apostles, Prophets, Evangelists, Pastors and Teachers; which authority when rightly understood, will be regarded as the right arm of the Almighty.

The resurrection will not be brought about as we have formerly imagined, but it will be done in order, and literally, impartually and consistantly, as all the works of God are performed. It will come in its time and place, every man in his own order, every man according to the progress he has made in the principles of eternal life. Every man will be judge and raised according to his works, and in the order of his family in the Priesthood; will every man be raised without confusion, and without any of that hurry and breaking of shins some have fancied would be the case on the occasion?

The Lord is not in a violent hurry, He has arranged the time into days, months, and years; and with Him one day is said to be as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day. He will not therefore be in haste in executing so important a work. He has allotted at least one thousand years for the resurrection of the dead. It looks like a long time, but there is a great deal of work to be done. That we regard as a long time to come, or, a long time since, would be regarded by one free from the pains and penalties of death as a small moment; and a thousand years for the resurrection of the dead, would be regarded as work done in a very rapid manner. It will upon the principles of justice, and with an eye extended to the whole of the family of God. That God will do things justly may be argued from all things we behold around us; It is seen and felt by all intelligent beings. This principle is moulded in the hearts of all nations of the earth, civilized or uncivilized, Jew, Christian or Pagan. And all speak of the resurrection of the dead, however imperfect and confused their notions. God has planted it in our hearts and it remains there.

Where is the wisdom and power of the great God, without the resurrection? who does not see at once that all His benign and generous plans must fail, and death, and the author of death, would be the greater, if the keys of everlasting life are not placed in the hands of those who are destined to overcome him? One Apostle speaks of Jesus as he that holds the keys of death and hell, that openeth and no man shuteth; and shuteth, and no man openeth.

The Priesthood that our illustrious brother and President had when he sat before you, a very weak man, he still holds, and will increase, and will never cease to be wielded for the upbuilding of the kingdom of God on earth, until righteousness shall be all in all, and sin, death and the devil shall be cast into the lake. When all who now live, or ever did live, will bow to God, even all created beings, be they in heaven, on the earth or under the earth; they shall all bow the knee and worship him that made the heavens and the earth, the seas and the fountains of water. It will be brought about by the recognition of that authority which God has placed in His church, and vested in Apostles, Prophets, Pastors and Teachers, that God has placed there for the work of the ministry and for the accomplishment of the great and glorious purposes He designed to accomplish, before the morning stars sang together, or the sons of God shouted for joy.

Oh, how it ought to cheer and comfort our hearts that the leaven of everlasting life has been placed in our hands. Oh, how we ought to rejoice that the power of endless lives has been taught to man in the flesh.

Persons who are strangers to our doctrines, and unacquainted with our views, say, they never attend our meetings but we are all the time speaking about authority; they are about right. It was upon this principle that the declension took place, and ever has taken place when God has had a church upon the earth. A disregard to the fact that God should rule upon the earth, that we administer in His name as ambasadors—the questioning of this has always led to apostacy. Pious, devout and exemplary Christians, think that it comes very strange from the servants of God in this age to say "whosoever sins ye remit they are remitted, and whosoever sins ye retain they are retained." To say this, in their estimation of piety, is blasphemy.—Here is the grand point that separates the world from the church of Jesus Christ. Here is the line of demarcation between the righteous and the ungodly.

If the Lord would permit this generation to move on uninterrupted in the way they choose, as they have for some generations past, we should see some curiosities. We have had already some strange exhibitions—we have had some strange three nered things, and things even more strange might be expected to grow out of faith in that being without body, parts or passions—strange developments from a God that has no abiding place, and occupies no space. Had not God spoken from the heavens, and revealed the true order of the gospel, His own character and attributes, we should have other strange ideas, systems and organizations in the world.

There are people to whom I am willing to award credit for sincerity and goodness of heart, who believe that when they leave this world, they will rush up to the throne of God and say "Lord I am come," no matter what He may be doing or about to do, He must set it all aside because they have arrived.—And suppose He will be very glad to see them, and welcome them to heaven, or will be in a very great passion, and send them with curses to hell, and that He is doing this every moment of time. Talk of the harlequin, and the power of comedy to portray the passions of the mind, it would take a smart specimen of the order to display all the passions described to that God "without body, parts and passions." Oh, it is a deliverance, it is an emancipation from the kingdom of darkness, to have and obey the gospel of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. I care nothing how amply learned, how devoted, how enthusiastic, how disinterested, how energetic, or how great an individual may be, without a knowledge of the principles of the gospel of Jesus Christ, such an individual will be all his life time, through fear of death, subject to bondage.—Hence, in reflecting to-day upon the death of our beloved brother, we have reason to rejoice, and we can with propriety reiterate the last words he ever made use of in this world, "all is right," and if all is right why sorrow? Why grieve and lament? Let us rather rejoice in this dispensation of God's providence, for all things work together for good to them that love God, whether it be life or death, all things work together for good. Let us work righteousness and be careful upon all occasions that we live our religion. We have only one day to live at once, although I have seen people very much perplexeed because they could not live two or three years of their lives in a few minutes, or do at least all the thinking part of it. I have seen saints start for the valley with as much clothing, furniture and implements of labor, as would supply the city of Nineveh. Not content with this, they fancy to themselves extensive farms, will stock them with the finest cattle, build them houses and decorate and beautify them like the palace of Solomon. This class of people want to accomplish too much. The way to live our religion, retain the spirit of God and accomplish the things He requires, is just to do right until Tomorrow. No beings ever progress on any other principle.

Let every man observe his duty in its time and place, and when God speaks, it is our duty to obey in that very hour. If we do this, whatever things are good for us will be given unto us. Nothing will occur amiss, prosperity or adversity, life or death, our Father in Heaven watches over us with paternal affection, and will give his angels charge concerning us. There are those, we are informed, who are ministering spirits to those who are heirs to salvation. Upon this principle alone shall we walk uprightly and obtain eternal life.

Let me exhort you to be faithful to the kingdom of which you are subjects; exercise faith in God, put confidence in his promises. In doing this we shall rejoice, and with our beloved brother Orson Spencer, we shall come first in the resurrection, and enter into our possession, and that remaineth for the people of God. May this be our portion, for Jesus sake. Amen.

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS.

We have to apologize to our subscribers for the non-appearence of the "Luminary" at its usual time last week; and for the satisfaction of those who are not aware of the cause, we will here give an explanation. Two more numbers will complete the first volume. It has therefore been considered desirable by President Snow, that the second volume should be commenced on the first day of the new year; to effect which it was suggested that the last few numbers of the present volume should be published at longer intervals.

The letter suggesting this change, was written near Fort Laramie, 17 August; and ought to have been delivered a month, or six weeks ago, when we should have been able to give timely warning to our readers; but not coming to hand until last week, we were under the necessity of adopting immediately the suggestion, and thereby disappointing for one week, our anxious subscribers. It will therefore be understood that the balance of this volume will be published fortnightly. The first number of the second volume may be expected on the first day of the new year, after which it will be issued weekly as usual.

The present arrangement will allow our agents ample time to pay up all arrearages for the last volume, and to forward subscriptions for the next. It is particularly requested that all our agents and subscribers, who are indebted to this office, should settle such accounts as soon as possible, as we wish to balance our books for this volume before the close of the year, so that the second volume may be commenced untrammeled by arrearages that should be paid now. As this is a business that will require considerable time, our subscribers will please give to it their earliest attention.

We copy the following item from President Snow's letter. "It is desirable that all who are willing to sustain the Luminary, should send in their names, and subscriptions, before the beginning of the second volume; and for agents generally, to try and enlarge their lists, and give timely notice how many they can dispose of, for the next year, so that the probable number for the year may be struck off at the commencement of the volume."

The above needs no comment from us, all will understand what is required, and will do well to communicate with us immediately upon the subject. All letters relating to the Luminary, may be directed to Erastus Snow, as usual, St. Louis, Mo.

Signs of the Lord's Displeasure,

Manifested in Wars, Pestilence, Revolutions, Railway disasters, and other dread catastrophes of our day.

It becomes the duty of journalists of our day to chronicle some of the most important events in the world's history. It has been truly said by one of Zion's poets, "Events grow stranger every year," and they follow each other in such rapid succession, and present such varied phases and disastrous consequences that they begin to alarm and astound our sage philosophers and moralists, who profess to be the least excitable portion of mankind, and to cause them to tremble, and their hearts to fail them for fear of the things that are coming on the earth.—Men who have felt themselves at ease, and perfectly secure from the ordinary casualties of mortality, begin to be afraid, and sore troubled in their spirits because of the calamitous events that are constantly transpiring around them. Bloody wars, pestilence, earthquakes, revolutions, and other dread disasters are becoming as familiar and common to this generation as household words. Necromancy, spirit rappings, sexual depravity, and other developments of demonology, are becoming as prevalent, if not more rampant than at any former period of the world's history; and instead of the nations of the earth advancing in the stage of progress, and approximating to a unity of feeling and action, every successive year, and each convulsive change rends them still more assunder, and demonstrates the impossibility of national progress, and the power of man to govern man, unaided by revelation from the heavens.

There is evidently a wide spread feeling in the bosom of mankind, that there is something terrible at hand. The feeling is by no means confined to the people of the Saints, the still small voice of the spirit whispers unto all people, of the pending judgments of the Almighty, that loom o'er the Gentile nations, requiring only the signal of the Lord to overwhelm the ungodly, as the hosts of Pharaoh ,or the cities of the plains. If there was ever one time more than another, when fear had taken hold of men—when there was distress of nations, and perplexity—when the judgments of God were being poured out upon the earth, it is now. If there was ever a time that could be called emphatically and truthfully, the last days, it is now. If there was ever a time when God's kingdom existed upon the earth, it is now. If therefore, there was ever a period when the people should learn righteousness, it is at this time. We may therefore say with propriety unto all people, "to-day, if ye will hear the voice of the Lord, harden not your hearts." His voice may be heard in the thunders and lightnings, and in the tempest and earthquake. His voice is also heard in the din of war, and the roaring floods. His hand may be seen in your pestilential cities, railroad disasters, and steamboat explosions. "The all surrounding heavens, the earth, and e'en the air is big with death." Some persons would probably consider it bordering on blasphemy, and the sin against the holy Ghost, for us to say the hand of God is in all these bloody catastrophes of which we hear from time to time, but so it is. We have been taught by revelation from Jesus Christ, that against no other is the wrath of God kindled, except against those who acknowledge not His hand in all things.

We may incur the displeasure of the Almighty because of our follies and sins, but we shall feel ourselves perfectly secure from His wrathful anger, as it regards any doubtful recognition on our part, of His omnipresent hand in all the wondrous vicissitudes and calamities that are dispensed around us. Conscious of all things being done according to the will and pleasure of the Almighty; we are perfectly satisfied with every circumstance that may occur, and whilst our neighbors weep and lament, and others fear and tremble, we can lift up our heads and rejoice, knowing by these things that our redemption draweth nigh. We can therefore boldly look every dread catastrophe in the face and say with all confidence and certitude "whatever is, is right," because all things work together for good to them that love God, and are called according to His purpose.

Some may be disposed to ask if we consider those who are being killed off by war, pestilence, railway accidents and other dispensations, are more wicked and ungodly than the balance of their fellows, we would answer this question in the language of the Saviour, when philosophizing or rather moralizing upon a similiar circumstance. "Think you" said He "that those on whom the tower of Saloam fell, were more wicked than other men? I tell you nay, for except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish." God has decreed a consumption upon the whole earth, and upon this land will His most direful anger and vengeance be poured out; for in this very State, and in the State of Illinois, has the blood of Prophets and Saints been poured out in open day before the Lord of Sabbaoth, which has caused the very heavens to weep and mourn because of the inhumanity of man. And because of the outraged laws of heaven and earth, and because of the blood of innocence that has been so wantonly shed upon this land, the Lord will most assuredly come out of His hiding place and vex the nation in His sore displeasure, and in His wrathful indignation against His rebellious adversaries, He will laugh at their calamity, and mock when their fear cometh; and if what has already been witnessed on our rivers and railroads, in our cities and plains has been done by the counsel and will of God; then be it known unto all people that these are but the beginning of sorrows that are coming upon the people of this State and nation.

It will be seen by the discourse delivered by the Rev. T. Hill, on Monday last, over the bodies of the Rev. Dr. Bullard, and two other officers of the Presbyterian church, who were among the victims of the late disaster, that he takes pretty nearly the same view of the catastrophe as ourselves, which might therefore be considered orthodox. The Republican in reporting the discourse referred to, says: "He vindicated the providence of God in all such affairs, and reprobated the disposition of men to ascribe them to the workings of mere blind, irresponsible laws, and while they were not to be accepted indiscriminately, as indications of God's displeasure against the dead; they were to be received as solemn rebukes to the worldliness of the saved." If it was a stroke of God's providence, designed to rebuke the wickedness of the ungodly, as above intimated, it was indeed a terrible stroke of His displeasure, and calculated to arouse the careless to a sense of their dependence upon God, for all things they possess. It was said by one of the old Prophets that when the judgments of the Lord were abroad in the earth, then would His people learn righteousness. How many of our fellow citizens will learn righteousness by the scenes of the past week, we must leave futurity to disclose; for ourselves, we can say understandingly, "It is the Lord, let Him do what seemeth Him good."

The visitation was certainly severe and distressing beyond the power of language to describe, there lay twenty-nine mangled corpses, that a few minutes before were full of health, vigor and buoyancy of spirits; by one fell swoop the massive cars, and their numerous occupants were precipitated into one general recepticle, and presented a scene that would cause the stoutest heart to shudder to contemplate. The shrieks of the dying, and the groans of those less injured, and the wild and fearful consternation depicted upon every countenance on that occasion, will never be forgotten. To add to the horrors of the scene, the very heavens seemed to frown upon the living and the dead; for scarcely was the first scene enacted when the heavens gathered blackness, the thunders rolled, the lightnings flashed and the rain descended, and all the elements of nature seemed to conspire to render the scene the more appalling. The particulars of this melancholly disaster will be found in another column of this paper.

An extract from Harper's magazine which we publish here, will be found strikingly discriptive of the spirit of the times, and indicates unmistakably the fearful forebodings in the hearts of men, of the things that are coming upon the earth. In speaking of the yellow fever, or, what has been called because of its dreadful ravages at Norfolk and Portsmouth last summer, the pestilence, the editor observes:

"Early in the last spring, we remember to have heard wise men mutter about out chair that the scourge of yellow fever would commence a Northern progress with the summer then coming; that it would advance slowly, and with deadly surety, and gradually, like an invading horde of barbarians, desolate the land as it passed. Then, subsiding with the season, like an invading horde of barbarians retiring to the silent gloom of winter-quarters, it would recommence its withering march with the growing season.

"The prediction is so far fulfilled, that there seems no reason to doubt that it will be entirely so. We must calculate upon its sure arrival among us, or very near us, with the next summer. And what it will be, let Norfolk tell us. What it will be, let the history of the City fifty years ago tell us. If fearful in Norfolk, what will it be in New York? If fearful in New York in 1800, what will it be in New York in 1856? The length of the warning would seem to be an intimation of the intensity of the evil. Such a slow and imposing advance is like a solemn voice in the air, crying at midnight and at morning, 'Prepare!'

"But when did ever a people or a city prepare? We shall dance up to the edge of the abyss, until suddenly it crumbles beneath us, and we are gone."

It is impossible for us to contemplate these things without feelings of awe and reverence towards that august being who sits enthroned in yonder heavens, and displays so wondrously His power among the nations of the earth, and whilst the wicked rage and are dismayed and tremble, and are ready to curse God and call for rocks and mountains to fall upon them, and hide them from His presence, we are reverentially led to exclaim in the language of the psalmest, David, let the people praise thee Oh, God, yea let all the people praise thee.

THE CHEROKEE MISSION.

We have had the pleasure of a visit during the last week, from Mr. Martin, a merchant of Grand Saline, Cherokee nation, who brings us cheering news of the brethern who are laboring in that country, we have a short communication from Elder Miller, which we give below. We have received likewise an order for books of Mormon Doctrines and Covenants, Hymn books, &c., which indicates the lively interest entertained by the people of that Nation, to obtain correct information concerning the revelations of Jesus Christ.

Elder Miller says: "I take this opportunity of sending you a few lines by favor of Mr. Martin who will call upon you with an order for some books, which we would like you to fill. The work is still progressing slowly here, though there has been eleven baptized at brother Croft's lately, and two in Mr. McNores neighborhood, and I expect to baptize some more on Sunday (Oct. 21st). The brethren and sisters feel first-rate here, and are united. We have good meetings. And all are anxious to go to the Valley in the spring.

My health has been poor for some few days, but I am now better. Brother B. C. Petey has not been out preaching yet, the rest of the brethren are all well, or were when I last heard from them. We have received the papers and they shed quite a ray of light in this region."

We learn moreover from Mr. Martin that a Reverend missionary opponent, who has been some time located in that Nation, feeling grieved that so many should be led away from his fold, by the revelations of Jesus Christ, and the everlasting gospel, gave notice of his intention to expose the folly and inconsistency of Mormonism, and gathered a large audience to hear his wonderful development of the supposed monstrosities of Mormonism. But instead of hearing what they expected—a honest straight forward and lucid refutation of the doctrines and principles of Mormon faith—they were compelled to listen to a long tirade of vituperation and blackguardism, mixed up with newspaper stories of such very questionable data, that the audience was completely wearied and disgusted, and when at length concluded, and Elder Miller volunteered his services for the better exposition of the subject announced, and called for the voice of the assembly on the subject, a general expression was manifest in his favor.—And the profound attention that was given whilst the right side of Mormonism was presented, will doubtless be a caution to the missionary fraternity in the nation concerning the mode of future attack, and will most likely produce results in the life and character of the audience that will never be forgotten, neither in time nor in eternity.

We must certainly congratulate our brethren upon the novel scene produced in their field of labor—a live missionary attempting to expose Mormonism—and that too with nothing more than antiquated lies and sectarian prejudices. It has become quite a rarity to find a man so ignorant of Mormonism as to attempt a public refutation of its principles.—The impractibility of bringing any reason or revelation to bear against Mormonism has been demonstrated a thousand times in every land where it has obtained—and the very attempt to oppose its progress by logical debate or Biblical argument is preposterous, and is regarded by every sensible student of theology as the very quintescence of folly and madness. Some of our acrimonous journalists are so convinced of this fact, that they have given it as their mature conviction deduced from a series of observations and philosophic reasonings, that nothing less than a well manned fifty pounder—and a regiment of twenty five thousand soldiers will ever operate with any effect against it. And these gentlemen have so little confidence even in this prescription, that they could not be hired to mann that gun, or join that company though the valleys were filled with honey, and the mountains with gold. Mormonism has become an established fact, and is known throughout the whole earth as an impregnable fortress of strength. Its apostles and chief representatives are hosts in themselves, and the mighty works performed by them, will stand unmoved though all earth and hell should raise a seige against them. We can therefore well afford to smile at the puny scribblers who fight such wonderful battles with the Mormons from time to time behind some meal tub; and those other specimens of the ridiculous, who ape the legitimate authorites of Heaven so abominably, by putting on white robes, making long prayers, preaching for hire, and devining for money, and begging the Lord to be merciful unto them miserable sinners.

If the above picture should be considered ludicrous, we cannot help it. We protest in all honesty that 'tis no libel on their character, whether ministers of Judaism, Catholicism, Paganism or Protestantism, the prayer is to them equally apropriate, "Lord have mercy upon us miserable sinners."—And before they can enter the kingdom of God they must repent and be baptized every one of them in the name of Jesus Christ, and receive the gift of the holy Ghost by the laying on of hands, or where God and Christ are they can never come—worlds without end.

GLEANINGS.

Monday the 5th. inst. was the day appointed for opening of the Missouri Legislature. The death of the late Presiding officer, Lieut. Gen. Brown, occurring during the recess; and the demise of two of the members, who were victims of the fatal disaster at the Gasconade Bridge on the Thursday previous has doubtless cast a gloom upon that assembly.

The first Monday in December is the day fixed for the opening of the next congress; when all sorts of times and seasons may be expected.

The organization of a secret abolition association was announced a few weeks since by Mr. Laughlan, of St. Joseph. He has since furnished a lengthy article upon the subject, with the Constitution and ritual of the grand encampment and regiments of the Kansas Legion of the Kansas Territory, adopted April 4th, 1855. The publication of these facts has produced a bloody encounter between Mr. Laughlan and Mr. Samuel Collins, who, it seems was a Colonel in the "Kansas Legion," who took with him some twelve of his friends, determined to force the former to retract his statements, or to kill him. They met at Doniphan, Kansas Territory; an unqualified retraction was demanded, and refused, when Collins fired, but fortunately the weapon was turned aside by a spectator, Laughlan then drew a revolver and shot and killed his antagonist. Mr. L. was dangerously hurt in the conflict, by a knife wound in the side. Mr. Lynch a friend of his, was wounded in the head by the discharge of a gun. Such are the disgraceful scenes being enacted in what is called "the land of the free, and the home of the brave;" the grand issue of these tragical events will be awaited with the utmost anxiety by all lovers of good order, and of the constitution of their country.

The Russian News has been meagre of late, but it shows the allied star still in the ascendent. A few half starved Turks, have gained a decided victory over the Russian forces in Asia.

The Russians attacked Kars, but were repulsed with immense slaughter.

Kinburn at the mouth of the Dnieper, has been taken by the allies. The Russian loss at Kars is said to be four thousand.

The Russians have surrounded the North side of Sebastopol with new fortifications.

Mayor King appointed Monday the 5th, as a day of general lamentation and mourning for the dead, and of praise and thanksgiving for the living.

St. Louis has been for several days a city of mourning, but has now resumed its usual business like appearance.

Elder Milo Andrus writes from Pacific Springs under date of Oct. 7th, and was expecting to arrive in the Valley about the 20th. The company had suffered considerably in a snow storm, near the South pass; they had lost some stock, but at the time of writing, the company was moving along prosperously, health and peace reigned in the camp.

Elders Alred and Harper were about thirty miles in the rear in about the same condition.

Elder G. W. Hickerson has written us under date of Nov. 4th. He has been sick for several weeks, and was consequently unable to attend our late Conference. Brother Hickerson is preparing to return home in the spring. We trust that health, peace and prosperity may attend him.

We are under obligations to our esteemed friend, Elder Charles Bassett, for an interesting communication for the Luminary, from his mountain home, which our readers may expect in our next paper.

We learn by a despatch from brother Marvin of Cincinnati, that Elder Banks lay sick at Cannelton, Ind., and had been sent for to Cincinnati; we hope it is nothing serious.

We have have been anxiously expecting the arrival of President Taylor, for the last week; and we are happy to learn by letter from Dr. Clinton, as well as by the Mormon, that he is en route to this city, and will most likely be with us early next week. The brethren are looking forward with the greatest anxiety for his arrival, when such instructions and measures may be expected that our position and circumstances require.

A chandler having had some candles stolen, a friend bid him good cheer, "for in a short time," said he, "I am confident they will come to light."

Correspondence.

The following letter was written to brother Spencer, but being of a public and interesting character, we take the liberty of submitting it to the readers of the Luminary; feeling assured of its favorable reception by all true hearted Saints.

Pomeroy, Meigs County, Ohio,
October 29th, 1855.

Dear Brother Spencer:

Dear Sir: Thinking perhaps you would like to have a line from me, and to hear of the work in this place, I will give you a short account of our situation, and proceedings. As you are aware I came to this place by direction of brother Banks; I found the Saints enjoying a good degree of the spirit of the Lord, and determined to go on in the work.—Brother Banks had been here a few weeks previous to my arrival—had re-baptized them—renewed their spiritual strength—trimed up the tree, and got it into growing order; and under the blessings of the Lord, the present condition of the Saints is attributable to the labors of Elder Banks. Since I have been here, I have endeavored to carry on the work thus begun—to strengthen and confirm the Saints; and so far as I am able to forward the cause in which we are engaged, and which at all times is nearest our hearts; and I take pleasure in saying that we enjoy a good spirit, and that the Saints are willing to do their duties—to assist to the extent of their abilities, in building up the kingdom—establishing Zion—carrying the ensign to all nations, and sustaining the Priesthood in all their measures to accomplish their glorious purposes, until the whole world shall be revolutionized with truth—wickedness swept from the earth—a day of righteousness come in, and all kingdoms, nations and countries, bow before our God and His Christ; when the "law shall go forth from Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem." Perhaps this is treasonable, however, we are laboring with our might to accomplish these ends, and by the assistance of the Almighty will never cease until our object is attained.

We are preaching in this place, twice each Sabbath; and in the villages around, during the week, and also, sometimes on Sabbath evenings. Also we have preaching in Welsh, in the different towns, we are laboring to give them a faithful warning before the scourges of the Lord entirely consume them from the earth, "for I have heard from the Lord of hosts, a consumption even determined upon the whole earth;" and the Prophet says, "now is the hour of the judgments, and of the consumption." Some few have believed our report, and have obeyed, and others are investigating, being convinced if we are not right, all the rest are wrong; and that if there is any salvation for the human family, it is to be obtained only in Mormonism. Some of the dol Saints, who have been on the back ground for a long time, are beginning to feel their way back to the fold, having found no rest for their feet since wandering from the paths of peace. Yesterday we held our quarterly Conference, brother Evans presiding. All the officers were presented, and unanimously sustained, not a dissenting voice during the whole day. President Evans and myself addressed them, principally upon the subject of obedience to the Priesthood, and the necessity of union of the Saints.

You will see from these few lines our situation. I feel continually thankful to the Almighty for His blessings, and that He gives so good a portion of His spirit to the Saints, and I unceasingly pray that He may increase the love and union of those who are here, and throughout the States, that they may have the spirit of Zion in their breasts; that their feelings may be in unison with the Saints of God in the vallies of Ephraim. The prospect is here, as everywhere, so for as my observation extends—not very flattering for doing a great work, the powers of darkness have too firm hold of the people; they are too securely bound in the chains of error, ever to believe the principles of eternal truth, or, rather to believe that the gospel as preached by Christ, Peter, Paul, Joseph, Brigham and all the servants of God in all ages, is truth, and the power of God unto the salvation of those who believe; and it seems impossible almost, to get them to notice it. I have tried with all the energy of my soul to convince them, arguing from the Scriptures, from reason and common sense, and bearing my testimony to the truth of what I have seen, felt and verily know; testifying of those things to come. Yet they hear it as an idle tale, positively as a thing of naught, and unworthy their investigation or reflection. At the sound of Mormonism, many will come to hear for once or twice, through curiosity, or a baser motive, and when they find it is not the licentious thing they imagined, and fondly hoped it was; and when instead of catering to their depraved and sensual appetites, doleing out foul mouthed scandel, orsetting forth principles and doctrines, to justify them in their corrupt practices. We teach the pure principles of righteousness, the plan of salvation, and call upon them to repent of their evil deeds, and worship the Lord. They soon are satisfied, they want no more of it, and you see them not again. But yet there are some who perhaps will believe and obey, those who honestly seek the truth with full purpose of heart. I hope all such may see the light, and be saved in the kingdom. I think there are some here of this kind, and I hope I shall have the pleasure of adding them to the church before I leave this part of the vineyard for another field of labor.

My health is very good, and I enjoy a reasonable buoyancy of spirits, considering the circumstances under which we are placed in preaching the gospel to this generation, when their hearts are steeled to the principles, and they turn a deaf ear to our exhortations.

I desire an interest in your prayers, and believe me you are remembered by all the Saints here. Give my respects and love to the Saints in St. Louis.

With respect I am your brother in the Covenant.

FRANKLIN B. WOOLEY.

Varieties of Mankind.—Mankind may be divided into three distinct classes—those who are too stubborn to abandon error after conviction—those who are so gullible as easily to be humbugged and deceived—and those who are possessed of good common sense, and use it to the best advantage, in directing their actions and shapeing their opinions.

PRE-EXISTENCE.

Once our Father was like us,
In a world of toil and pain,
And in tribulation thus
Did His exaltation gain.

Now in Kolob's brilliant sphere—
In a bright and blest abode,
With His wives and children there,
Reigns as our eternal God.

In a city paved with gold,
Shining with celestial light,
Once His face we did behold
And rejoiced with great delight.

By the blissful fountains, there
Once we ate and drank in peace,
And received our Mother's care
With our Father's love and grace.

Now they've sent us here to school,
In this world of toil and pain,
That we may like them by rule,
Endless exaltation gain;

And if faithful we remain
Till our exit day arrives,
We'll return to them again,
Crowned like them with endless lives.

Great rejoicing on the plains on the 24th July, 1855, in Commemoration of the Pioneers entering the Valley of the Great Salt Lake, by the Perpetual Emigration Fund Saints, under the Presidency of Elder Richard Ballantyne.

North side S. Fork, Platt river, Aug. 3rd, '55. }
450 Miles above Fort Leavenworth. }

To the Editor of the Luminary:

On Tuesday half past seven, A. M. the Saints met for morning prayer. Choir sung "Come all ye sons of Zion and let us praise the Lord."—Prayer being offered up by Elder Wm. Glover President Ballantyne then adressed the Saints for a short time and said: "I feel happy in seeing the good spirit and feeling that are manifest throughout the camp. This Day, is a day of rejoicing in the Vallies of the mountains, and we desire that this camp should rejoice and be glad. We shall therefore go a short distance and encamp for to-day, and in the afternoon hold a Festival and meet in the dance together, and if the brethren who are gone a hunting, bring in a Buffalo, we will roast him and enjoy ourselves." There was then given three hearty cheers for the 24th, followed by three times three for President Brigham Young. Elder Ballantyne shouted glory to God and the Lamb, and all the people shouted Amen.

At eight o'clock, A. M., the camp moved out in splendid order, with flags of all sorts and sizes affixed to the wagons, while the ladies were busily employed in gathering priarie flowers to adorn the heads of the oxen, and make wreaths for the brethren. By the time we reached the camping ground, which was eleven A. M., nearly all the oxen were adorned with flowers. Our wagons being drawn into carrell, cattle watered, and put into good pasture, extra provisions were then served out for the evenings enjoyment, which caused the ladies to be busily employed preparing confectionary, rice puddings, apple tarts, tea, coffee, &c., &c. While the ladies were thus engaged, a few of the brethren under the superintendance of Elder Wm. Pitt, were painting a flag on canvass fourteen feet by six with the following design. On the upper corner was a star representing Deseret. On the top the wide spread Eagle with the ribbon motto "O God save Isarel," under the Eagle was a large bee-hive with the ribbon motto "we'll never give up the ship."

On the opposite side of the canvass was the star of Deseret with a large bee-hive, having the motto, "Glory to God and Brigham Young" which floated majesticaly in the breeze, hoisted at the west end of the carrel; while others of the brethern were taking their boxes from the waggons, to form a table of some sixty or seventy yards up the centre of the carrel, covered over with white table cloths.

During the time this was going on, President Ballantyne entered the carrel accompanied by Elder Wm. Pitt, of the Nauvoo Brass Band, having his violin. Elder Wm. Glover, who was appointed Marshal for the day; also, Elder Elias Gardiner, Captain of the first ten, and Elder George Myers, Captain of third ten, with four young ladies dressed for the occasion, and who entered heartily into the dance. At this part of the stage, the camp had the appearance of a city of Drapers, Dressmakers and Milliners; for, by the by, the ladies had rummaged their boxes from top to bottom, in order to get their caps, dresses, &c., to see who would be the smartest at the ball. Supper being ready, and the tables being furnished with the necessaries, each ten sat down together with their respective Captain at their head, who in turn asked a blessing on the food of their respective ten, which the Lord had so liberally bestowed upon them in the wilderness, which consisted of venison, roast and boiled Buffalo, puddings, tarts, tea, coffee, &c. &c. Supper being over, President Ballantyne arose in the power of his calling; and adressed the Saints for a short time, pointing out the blessings and privileges of the sons and daughters of Zion. Elder Wm. Pitt was next called upon to deliver an oration. He said: "It is with pleasure I arise on the present occasion to address the Saints, and I feel it a great blessing to be thus privileged.

This day is kept in commemoration of the pioneers entering the Valley of the mountains, after enduring all manner of hardships and tribulations, knew that they were led there by the power of God; as much so as Israel in ancient times, and when I reflect upon what they have gone through, it causes me to rejoice to hear and see the prosperity that now attends them. When we were in Nauvoo, we did not know the hour that our enemies would be upon us, being continually surrounded by mobocrats, apostates, and false brethren."

He then spoke of a few things which took place at their expulsion from Nauvoo, and showed how the enemies of the Church sought its overthrow, but the Lord overruled it for our good. He then gave a detail of the organization of the pioneers to travel to the mountains to seek out a home for the Saints. They did not care what they suffered if they could but obtain this. Our head men had to live on a little boiled corn—they had no fine flour and bacon as we have; but the Lord blessed and strengthened them. He then gave a description of their journey to the Valley, which was interesting, showing how God overruled all things for good in establishing a place for the gathering of his people—Israel. His remarks were pointed and came home to every heart.

Elder George Myers was next called upon to address the meeting, after which, Elder Glover, Marshall of the day, said, "brethern and sisters we will have no more speaking at present. But you old men take your old ladies and enjoy yourselves in the Dance;" which was responded to by a hearty laugh from all present; so that all who were inclined joined heartily in the dance, to the vibrations of brother Pitt's violin accompanied by brother Cleggs dulcimer.

During the evening brother Glover entertained the company with a song, and Dr. George Bell with a comic anecdote. The dance was kept up until a late hour. The company was then dismissed by prayer. Thus ended the 24th of July on the plains, a day that will be long remembered by those who were blessed in participating in the same.

DANIEL CAVEEN Secretary.

Fort Laramie, Aug. 15, 1855.

To the Editor of the Luminary:

Dear Sir—In connection with the report sent you by brother Caveen, I would say that we are getting along well on the plains. Unity and peace prevails among us. The saints rejoice in their journey. No stampeads have yet taken place among the cattle. The feed has been good. The roads between Ash Hollow and Laramie have been rather heavy. During the fore part of the journey they were very good; but the large government freight trains have cut them up where the soil was sandy. Our cattle stand the journey well. The Indians are peaceable. No interruptions to our emigration that I have heard of.

Yours in haste. RICHRD BALLANTYNE.

Historian's Office. G. S. L. City. }
Sept. 30th. 1855. }

To the Editor of the Luminary:

Although the senior editor of your valuable journal is taking an airing in the mountain gorges, I do not feel altogether disposed to stop my monthly correspondence, but take pen again to note some of the principal events which are transpiring in this corner of Zion.

It is a day of progress; and although in July a great portion of the crops were utterly destroyed, and the new sowing pinched with drouth, we believe that through the blessing of the beneficent Creator enough has been made in the territory to keep the people from starvation. A considerable portion of the late corn crop ripened, and should severe frosts keep off a few weeks longer, the prospect for corn bread can be considered favorable, but there will certainly not be the least surplus. Many cattle have died from drinking the poisonous water from low stagnant pools.

Captain Hindley's company arrived here on the 3d. The Danes got in on the 7th. The First Division of the P. E. Fund Company under Ballantyne, arrived on the 25th. The 5th Company under Moses Thurston arrived on the 28th.

Considerable improvements are going on in the city, The Governor's large dwelling house is enclosed. Mr. Wm. C. Staines is erecting a splendid dwelling house, in the cottage style, in his beautiful garden. Mr. Jarvis is erecting a large dwelling house, and Secretary Babbitt is just completing his house 63 ft. long and 35 ft. wide, containing 18 rooms, and having 33 doors. It is built on the site of B. F. Johnson's house, known as the "five chimneys", and presents a fine appearance. The adobe work of the Historian's Office and house adjoining isc ompleted. There is a fire proof vault for the storage of the Historical papers &c. The Hon. Elias Smith, Probate Judge of this county, is erecting a good house in the 17th ward, 48 ft. long and 36 wide; the basement story of rock is 10 ft. high, with two stories of adobe work above, 11 ft. each. It will be finished in superb style.

The California mail arrived on the 26th;—brought very little news of any kind.

The settlements in Weber county are being considerably enlarged. Settlements are being formed on Bear River, on the Malad, and in Cache Valley.

The Indians on the Humboldt have a prospect of starvation before them this winter; the antelope and deer have left the vallies, also the squirrels which form a very palatable food, and which have hitherto been in great abundance, and the grasshoppers having destroyed the grass seed, on which they placed considerable reliance.

Bro. Woodruff has taken 79 1-2 dozen peaches as his tithing; Bro. John Nebeker, 53 dozen, the widow of Bro. W. Richards, 36 dozen, Bros Carrington and Bullock, each 8 dozen, Bro. Sprague, and many others have also taken in their dozens. We name this, to shew a new item of business, and fruit is rated according to its scarcity.

We have had several meetings to encourage fruit raising, which I shall not dwell upon, as Col. Bullock has forwarded you the minutes of the meetings for publication.

A brother Cook, at the Public works, is making some improved specimens of Congress knives, table knives, swords, a spear, and other articles of a similar nature; and a brother who has come in this season from Wolverhampton, is manufacturing locks, and he defies the citizens of this territory to pick any of them.

Elder Seth M. Blair has opened a first rate store. He has a great variety in it, and is selling a little brisker and cheaper than any other store in this city being determined to go through with whatever he undertakes. From present appearances, his creditors if he has any, may feel perfectly safe, for he is not trusting any man, being determined to have either money or the goods.

The Hon. Jesse N. Smith, representative from Iron county arrived in this City last evening, by him we learn, that in addition to the damage the crops sustained by grasshoppers and drouth, that county has sustained considerable damage from early frosts. Coal Creek was very low, as also all the streams.

The citizens of Parowan were completing the city Hall, all of which was 8 ft. high, and one quarter of it 12 ft. They are now diligently engaged in finishing it.

We send you a small specimen of cotton raised on the Santa Clara, which gives conclusive proof that we have within the limits of our mountain Territory the means of producing that almost indespensable article of clothing.

Mr. Townsend has mounted a bell, cast from Deseret iron, upon his hotel. Its ring is clear, and compares very well with that used at the public works. Yours &c. GEO. A. SMITH.

LETTER FROM PREST. E. SNOW.

G. S. L. City, U. T., Oct. 1st, 1855.

President Orson Spencer:

Beloved brother—I seize my pen to greet you from our mountain home—the lovely city of the Saints—and through the Luminary, the Saints and my friends in the East.

I have had no opportunity of hearing aught from you, since I parted with you at Mormon Grove, August 3d.

Uncle Sam's express mail, which left Independance on 1st, bore me company as far as Laramie and there fell in the rear, and reached this city a week behind me. The mail for September, due here some days since, has not yet arrived, and this is the last day of grace for the Eastern mail from this place, and I can wait no longer, so that if ever so important communications arrive a day after, requiring immediate answer, they must lay by over another month; and our friends in the East must console themselves with the reflection, that our "Uncle Sam" is too poor to allow us a mail oftener than once a month, and that Mr. Magraw or his mules, are too poor to put that through in time to anticipate the news by our usual "ox telegraph." Under existing mail regulations if the Mississippi gets to running up stream, Uncle Sam swallows Cuba, or the allies drink up the black sea, we may expect to hear of it from three to six months after; and if the Mormon boys rise in the mountains and conquer the world, the fathers at Washington will know nothing of it until it is all over with.

I arrived here in 28 days after I left you, including 8 days travel with Elder Ballantyne and Thurstin's train, and stoppages with all the other companies of our emigration. They were all prospering finely and in general good health.

The 1st company arrived here on the 3d Sept. and the 2d, 3d, 4th and 5th companies have since come in safely, besides some merchant trains. The church train and 2 companies of "P. E. Fund" Saints, besides several merchant trains, one yet behind, which are all expected within three weeks.

The weather continues warm and dry, and the effect of the continued drouth is prejudicial to health, particularly, among children. Summer complaints dissentary and cholera morbus have of late been unusually frequent and fatal, not only among children, but among newly arrived adults, who gratify a ravenous appetite with every vegetable product of the valley.

The grasshoppers and crickets have so completely used up the grass and early grain in this part of the country that a large portion of the stock of Salt Lake and Davis counties are being driven North for winter quarters, and the extensive bottoms of the Malad and Bear river are covered with immense herds. Cache valley is occupied by the church cattle, and is reached through Box Elder kanyon. Settlements are being pushed into these places, as well as Brush valley, and many places in the South and South East. The settlers at Fort Supply, or Smiths Fork, of Green river, have this year solved the problem as to grain growing in that country; and wheat and other small grain liberally rewards the laborer the present season.

The people of this Territory have reason again to congratulate themselves on following the wise councils of Governor Young, in continuing to resow and replant their fields despite the all-devouring grasshoppers; for now there are large quantities of wheat of the second and third sowing yet to be harvested, and corn of the third planting nearly ripe, which afford a fair supply of bread of the people of the Territory.

The sugar works are idle, the present season, for want of beets, the entire crop of which fell a prey to the common enemy. I have however eat some excellent specimens of sugar, made by rinsing off in water, a heavy coating sacharine, which in many places settled apon the leaves of trees.

The brethren are beginning to come in from the southern settlements, to attend Conference, on the 6th proximo. From them I learn, that the settlements at Cedar City, Harmony, Santa Clara, and Los Vegas, have raiesd good crops; but the water of Coal Creek had failed to such an extent, that the Iron works at Cedar had suspended operations, and mills were able to do but very little business, recent rains, however, had given indications of an increase of water, and Mr. Haight, the enterprising manager, was proposing to start the Iron works again. In the meantime the company are making an engine to fall back upon, in case of another failure of water. The work is progressing rapidly upon the canal leading from the Big Cottonwood to this city, which, when completed will not only afford an abudnance of water for irrigation, and an easy access to the valuable granite quarries. but also greatly facilitate the lumbering operations in the immense pineries of the Big Cottonwood, where large amounts have this season been expended in makingan excellent road and erecting several excellent mills, and others soon are to be erected from which is expected mainly the lumber and timber for the Temple and other public works. The health of President Young has been quite indifferent since my arrival, though it is now much improved. With warm remembrances to Elders Hart, Brown, Harris, and all my former brethern and fellow laborers, I remain your brother in Christ.

Most Disastrous Accident—Twenty-nine Persons Killed—Great Numbers Wounded.

The magnificent train of cars which left our city yesterday morning, on an excursion to Jefferson City, to celebrate the opening of the Pacific Railroad to that place, is now a mass of ruins, and infinately worse than this, many of the noble hearts, that participated in the pride of the occasion are now stilled in death.

The train, consisting of fourteen cars, left the depot, on Seveth street, at 9 o'clock, crowded with invited guests, a half hour after the time advertized. By the time it reached Hermann this delay was fully recovered, thus showing the good condition of the track. After leaving Hermann, the train proceeded with good speed, and without the least difficulty, until it reached the Gasconade, when one of the most disastrous accident occured which has yet thrown this city into mourning.

The bridge across that stream gave way, and ten of the cars were precipitated a distance of twenty-five or thirty feet. The locomotive, from all appearances, had reached the edge of first pier, when the structures gave way, and in falling reversed its position entirely, the front turning to the East, and the wheels upward. On the locomotive at the time, were the President, Mr. H. E. Bridge, Mr. O'Sullivan, the Chief Engineer of the road, and an additional number of employees.

Mr. Bridge, it is supposed, is the only one saved of the individuals named. An hour after the disaster, voices from beneath the wreck of the locomotive were heard asking for assistance, and when we left the scene of disaster active efforts were making to relieve the sufferers. It is possible—nay, it is to be hoped probable, that some of the unfortunates may have been rescued.

The road enters the bridge with a curve, and this circumstance perhaps, prevented the disaster from being more fatal. as the cars thereby were diverted, and thus prevented from falling diretly in a general melee. Enough of injury, however, was accomplished. The baggage car next the engine, went down, to use the expression of one who was in it, "extremely easy," without causing any serious casualty. The first and second passenger cars followed, and in these several were killed, and a great number more or less mangled.

In the third car, one or two were killed, only.—This car, although in a dangerous position, and almost entirely demolished, was less fatal to life and limb. In the fourth and fifth cars a great many were fatally injured, and several instantly killed. The balance of the train followed swiftly on their fatal errand, and the loss of life, with contusions more or less severe, was dreadful.

Some of the cars plunged on those beneath them with their ponderous wheels, and crushed or maimed the unfortunate persons below. Others hung upon the cliff in a perpendicular position, and two or three turned bottom upward down the grade. Only one—the extreme rear car—maintained is position on the rail.

Thus has happened a frightful accident—one more disastrous than it has been our sad duty to announce for a long while. The city is in mourning for many of its most worthy citizens, and domestic grief will require long years to heal the wounds it has inflicted.—[Republican.

We die in America as fast as we live. Diseases share the intensity of our life and our climate.—What a wail has saddened the dying summer coming from the South! How fearful the daily story of malignant sickness in a few fated towns! There are certain things that we always unconsciously place in the past. War to us Americans is rather an antiquated fact. When any one fell in the Mexican campaign nobody could escape the feeling that it was a kind of irregular, melancholy cutting off. To have perished at Marathon, to have fallen at Waterloo, was to have a historical prestige. Even now to be killed in the Crimea is, from the military point of view, not so mournful, because the contest is a great one, and the eyes of the world are fixed upon it.

But great wars seem to be obselete; at least civilization regrets them, and contemplates their necessity with a shudder; and great pestilences we thought, as children, were remote and historical.—There was the plague in London and the plague in Egypt. There was also the yellow fever in America at the beginning of the century. But we thought it had gone out with the novels of Brokden Brown who wrote about it. Then came the cholera, and and undeceived us to pestilence, as afterward the Mexican campaign undeceived us to war.

And early in the last spring, we remember to have heard wise men utter about our chair that the scourge of yellow fever would commence a Northern progress with the summer then coming; that it would advance slowly, and with deadly severity, and gradually, like an invading horde of barbarians, desolate the land as it passed. Then, subsiding with the season, like an invading horde of barbarians reuring to the silent gloom of winter-quarters, it would recommence its withering march with the growing season.

The prediction is so far fulfilled, that there seems no reason to doubt that it will be entirely so. We must calculate upon its sure arrival among us or very near us, with the next summer. And what it will be, let Norfolk tell us. What it will be, let the history of the City fifty years ago tell us. If fearful in Norfolk what will it be in New York? If fearful in New York in 1800, what will it be in New York in 1856? The length of warning would seem to be an intimation of the intensity of the evil. Such a slow and imposing advance is like a solemn voice in the air, crying at midnight and at morning prepare "Prepare!"

But when did ever a people or a city prepare? We shall dance up to the edge of the abyss, until suddenly it crumbles beneath us, and we are gone. We play upon the edge of the rising tide. Its hollow, melancholy, fateful moan is but the music of our dancing. It rises and rises. We dance and dance. How soft the sky—how tender the gentle lights—and there! the moon is rising, and lifting a realm of romance out of the sea. The tide rises and rises. We dance and dance. The realms of romance are rising. But the sun is set, and the sea has consumed the children.

We shall see if our Mayor is still the good officer he promised to be. To guide the city of New York through the chaos of a pestilence is a task that the brave might fear. In all the necessary filth of a metropolis a plague finds its favorite pasturage. But will it be best to wait until it is firmly feeding there, or prepare to poison it now?—[Harper's Magazine.

WONDERFUL JUGGLING.

We extract the following from an article in the Crayon, descriptive of travels in British India.—The scene of the occurence is laid in Madras:

"But the most wonderful performance that we saw this morning, was a feat of pure juggling, of which I have never been able to find any solution. One of the old men came forward upon the gravelled and hard trodden avenue, leading with him a woman. He made her kneel down, tied her arms behind her, and blindfolded her eyes. Then bringing a great bag net made with meshes of rope, he put it over the woman, and laced up the mouth, fastening it with knotted intertwining cords in such a way that it seemed an impossibility for her to extricate herself from it. The man then took a closely woven wicker basket that narrowed toward the top, lifted the women in the net from the ground, and placed her in it, though not without the exertion of some force that he could crowd her through the narrow mouth. Having succeeded in getting her into the basket, in which, from its small size, she was necessarily in a most cramped position, he put the cover upon it, and threw over it a wide strip of cotton cloth, hiding it completely. In a moment, placing his hand under the cloth, he drew out the net quite untied and disentangled. He then took a long, straight sharp sword, muttered some words to himself, while he sprinkled the dust upon the cloth, and put some upon his forehead, then pulled off and threw aside the covering, and plunged the sword suddenly into the basket. Prepared, as in some degree we were, for this, and knowing that was only a deception, it was yet impossible to see it without a cold creeping of horror. The quiet and energy with which he repeated his strokes, driving the sword thro' and through the basket, while the other jugglers looked on, apparently as much interested as ourselves, were very dramatic and effective. Stopping after he had riddled the basket, he again scattered dust upon its top, lifted its lid took up the basket from the ground, showed it to us empty and threw it away. At the same moment we saw the woman approaching us from a clump of trees, at a distance of at least fifty or sixty feet.

Throughout the whole of this inexplicable feat, the old man and the woman were quite removed from the rest of their party. The basket stood by itself on the hard earth, and so much beneath the verandah on which we were sitting that we could easily see all around it. By what trick our watchful eyes were closed, or by what means the woman invisibly escaped, was an entire mystery, and remains unsolved. The fact is not a very uncommon one, but no one who had seen it, ever gave me a clue to the manner in which it was performed."

A great man is a blessing to his race in proportion to the amount of good which he does in behalf of his race. He may possess many rich and rare gifts of genius; and still, if he be destitute of goodness, nothing will atone for the want of it.

Still Another.—Mr. Editor: As a matter of great importance to the afflicted. I wish to make the following statement: About six years ago, my wife was attacked with a slight stroke of dumb palsy. The whole of her right side and limbs were partially paralysed. A doctor was called, who bled her very copiously in the right arm, which relieved her, and she had no more symptoms of paralysis, until last fall, when the right arm gradually became weak and powerless. Both limbs and the whole of her right side soon became perfectly benumbed, and all voluntary motion was entirely suspended. She was bled again, but without any relief. Even her tongue became paralysed, so that she could not, at times, speak so as to be understood. She had a brother, Thomas Utley, a boy 14 years old, who had some time previously been cured of a very severe attack of the same disease, by the use of three bottles of the Mustang Liniment. And we determined to try it in her case, as she had been under the treatment of doctors for several months, without any apparent benefit. I obtained one bottle and commenced bathing the whole affected side and limbs. The effect was truly astonishing. In less than a month, every symptom of the disease had disappeared. She can use her limbs as freely as ever, and no impediment whatever exists in her articulation. In fact, she is perfectly cured; and we bless the day we were induced to use this invaluable Liniment. EDWARD UPMEYER, St. Louis, Mo.

THE BEAUTIFUL VALE.

TUNE—"The Englishman."

Here's a vale, a vale of deathless fame,
The home of the righteous brave;
It bears a blest and glorious name
Where the living waters lave.
Here holy prophets live and rule
In righteousness and peace;
It is a sweet and pleasant vale,
Where Saints can live at ease.
CHORUS—'Tis a beautiful vale no one can deny,
As ever was found 'neath a western sky.

'Twas here the hardy pioneers
Established liberty's home,
A boon for which they sighed for years,
For which choice blood has flown.
Led on by the shining rays of truth,
Guarded by an Angel band,
The hoary head and vig'rous youth
Sought out this glorious land.
CHORUS—'Tis a beautiful vale, &c.

Here too the righteous exiles fled,
When driven by fire and sword,
From the lovely homes their hands had made,
And the temple of the Lord.
Here the widow sheds no tear in vain,
Nor do orphan's cry for bread,
For holy men their cause maintain,
And see that the poor are fed.
CHORUS—'Tis a beautiful vale, &c.

Here virtue meets its due reward,
And honor comes by worth,
They are not gain'd by blazon'd sword,
Nor yet by boasted birth.
Here paltry gold can never hide
The hedious forms of vice,
Nor pamper'd tyrants rule in pride,
For here the poor rejoice.
CHORUS—'Tis a beautiful vale, &c.

This lovely vale is dearer far
Than the land that gave me birth,
For truth, kind heaven's brightest star,
Illumes this spot of earth.
Yes, truth shines forth in its native strength,
And liberty reigns supreme,
While peace and joy throughout the length
Of this pleasant vale are seen.
CHORUS—'Tis a beautiful vale, &c.

Stern justice bears a righteous sway
In the hearts of Zion's sons,
So God-like, brave, and true are they,
The anointed holy ones.
Her daughters too are pure and free,
And chaste as the Angels fair;
No wanton wretch dare mar their glee,
For justice is reigning here.
CHORUS—'Tis a beautiful vale, &c.

God bless the sons of this sweet vale,
May their oneness stronger prove,
Their cup of pleasures never fail,
And their homes be fill'd with love.
May its daughters ne'er have cause to mourn
At departed freedom's shrine,
But hail with joy that day's return
When they step'd upon its soil.
CHORUS—'Tis a beautiful vale, &c.

CHARLES DERRY.

THE HABITS OF THE ESQUIMAUX.

The arctic expedition of Dr. Kane, has been fertile in more than merely physical discoveries. The student of the science of human nature, which has of late been inaugurated, will find abundant food for reflection in the following account of Esqimaux life:

The Esquimaux settlements are some forty miles apart, and generally consists of but two or three huts, containing a population of some eighteen or twenty. These huts are generally built of massive stones, some of them several tons weight, and is a matter of surprise how they could have possibly got them up. Like the sledges, the huts are handed down as most valuable property. Some of them have been seen built of whale-bone—probably from a fish taken by them after being killed by whalers. In summer they form tents of skins, and, at a pinch, of snow. They are hospitable, and fond of visiting, and so these settlements keep up an interchange of of communication, and live very happily. Their huts are heated by means of stone lamps, cut by themslves out of a sort of soap-stone, fed with blubber, and with a wick of ground moss. By this means they manage to keep up a temperature of sixty degrees Farenheit, while the temperature out of doors is as many degrees below zero. They usually eat raw meats—the flesh of walrus and seal; but when they do cook anything or make any soup—which they make very good, it is by means of these lamps.

Their sleeping places are platforms built of stone, raised some eighteen inches from the floor—so as to keep in the warm atmosphere—and covered with grass taken from islands at a distance. Their clothing consists of fox skin jumpers or coat, with an inner jumper of bird skin, the feathers inward; bear skin trowsers, bear skin boots and bear skin gloves. The dress of the women is similar to that of the men, except that the former wear boots extending half way up the thigh, while those of the men do not extend to the knee; and that the ladies also wear a sack to their hoods, which they call nessak, in which they carry their children. The men are of a medium size and stoutly built while the women are similar statue and slighter. They do not practice the Mormon habits of polygamy, but are, on the contrary extremely particular about their matrimonial relations. This had been the universal testimony of travelers who had visited them. As with all savage nations, the onus of the labor devolves on the women. The men come in from the hunt, throw down the prey they have secured, walrus or seal, and the women have then to go to work, skin the animals, prepare the flesh for food, extract the bones, and prepare the sinews for sewing purposes. One of the ordinary acts of hospitality or civility on the part of the ladies is to take a fowl, or a piece of meat, chew it up very nicely and hand it to the visitor, who is expected to be overcome with gratitude and finish the operation of chewing. It would give them dire offence if there should be any failure to do honor to this act of hospitality.—In all other respects they excercise to a remarkable degree the same virtue. The Esquimaux of the northern regions profess to have a dread of going to the Danish settlements, lest they should be eaten up by their southern brethern, while these last entertain the same dread, and with more reason of the Northern tribes. Those tribes, however, as high up as the expedition penetrated, seem to be becoming gradually extinguished, and we understand that Dr. Kane has formd the philantrophic scheme of collecting these people together. He proposes, we are told, to gather them from the most northern regions and bring them down to the Danish settlements, where they can enjoy more comforts and be subject to less vicissitudes.

The Esquimaux have a priest, whom they call Anjekok, who performs marriages and burial services, and is supposed to have some influence over the heart. When a couple is maried, their friends have imposed upon them, for a certain length of time, abstinence from certain kinds of meats; and when a young man or a young woman dies, all the young men and the young women of the settlement are condemned to the same sort of abstinence.—The priest is believed to have power over the walrus and seal, and in a time of pressing scarcity to be able to call them up to the surface of the water. Their faith in the Anjekok is the only approach they have to religious belief. They spend their long winter of four months, total darkness in sleeping and eating, never going out to hunt unless pressed by necessity. They have no sort of amusement except singing and an accompanying motion of the body, which can hardily be designated dancing.—They do not use tobacco in any shape, nor do they smoke any other weed or root for the purpose of stimulents, nor would they allow any smoking in their huts. The children always get a name selected from whatever subject happens to be on the tapis in the paternal hut when they are born.

In Lievely or Godhaon, island of Disco, the population of 250 or 300 is composed principally of Esquimaux, pure and half blood. They manage to keep up a good deal of social enjoyment by means of dancing, singing, and music. They have a peculiarity for ear music and can manage to play on the jews-harp or violin any air they hear. The women are said to be great rogues, if not in stealing gentlemen's hearts, at least in pilfering tin pots and plates, and anything of that kind. We saw one young gentleman connected with the expedition, who had no less than three specimens of the hair of young ladies of Lievely. One of them is dark as the raven's wing, of silkiest texture, and came from the locks of a full blooded Esquimaux; another is dark brown, very fine, and belonging to a half blood; and the third of a golden color, and of equally fine texture, showed unmistakeably the Danish blood of the lady's sire. We presume these love tokens will be duly treasured, though not in the National musem at Washington. This same gentleman has a quantity of skins and furs which he has brought home with him as reminiscences of Greenland. But they have to be fumigated or to undergo some other process of purification, for the Esquimaux ladies, who have the tanning operation in charge, not being able to procure bark, have recourse to a liquid which answers as well, but which careful chambermaids do not tolerate the presence of in a room.

The Esquimaux never resort to the barbarous mode of cutting off frost bitten limbs. They apply to them a piece of rabbit skin, and always with good effect. We are sorry to see that one of the expedition lost his life by the amputation of a frost bitten foot, and that three other have had to suffer amputation.

It may be a fact worthy of note that Dr. Kane went to the Arctic regions provided with daguerreotype apperatus and plates, but that from the peculiar nature of the atmosphere no impression could be taken. These and a valuable collection of specimens of natural history, geology, and casts of the Esquimaux, with the libraries of Capt. Kane and officers, had to be left behind; but the drawings, reports, instruments and documents of the expedition were preserved.

The Man that Played on the Harp with the Thousand Strings—The Spirit uv Just Men made Perfeck.

The following remarkable sermon is said to have been delivered by a Reverend Chaplin of a Mississippi flat-boat, at Brandon Mississippi. And will doubtless prove amusing to the jocose portion of our readers. The most straight faced will find it difficult to digest without a smile.

"I may say to you, my brethering, that I am not an edecated man, an' I am not one o' them that beleeves edecation is necessary fur a gospel minister, fur I beleeve the Lord edecates his preachers jest as he wants 'em to be edecated. And althongh I say it that oughten't to say it, yet in the State of Indianny, whar I live, thar's no man as gits a bigger congregation nor what I gits.

"Thar may be some here to day, my brethering, as dont know what persuasion I am uv. Well, I may say to you, my brethering, that I am a hardshell Baptist. Thar's some folks as don't like the hardshell Baptist, but I'd ruther hev a hardshell as no shell at all. You see me here to-day my brethering, dressed up in fine close; you mout think I was proud, but I am not proud my brethering, and althougb I have been a preacher uv the Gospel for twenty years, and although I'm capting uv that flatboat that lies at yure landing, I am not proud my brethering.

"I'm not gwine ter tell you edzackly whar my tex may be found; suffice it tu say, its in the leds of the Bible, and you'll find it somewhar 'tween the first chapter of the book of Generation and the last chapter of the book of Revolutions, and ef you'll go and sarch the Scripturs, as I have sarched the Scripturs, you'll not only find my tex thar, but a great many uther texes as will do you good to read, an' my tex, when you shill find it you shall find it to read thus:

"And he played on a harp uv a thousand strings—sperits of just men made perfeck."

"My tex, brethering, leads me to speak uv sperit Now thar's a great many kinds of sperits in the world—in the fust place, thar's the sperits as some folks call ghosts; then thar's the sperits uv turpentine, and then thar's the sperits as some folks call liquor, and I'v got as good artikel of them kind uv sperits on my flatboat as ever was fotched down the Mississippi river; but thar's a great many other kind of sperits, for the tex sez: 'He played on a harp of a thou-sand strings—sperits of just men made perfeck.'

"But I'll tell you the kind uv sperits as is ment in the tex; it's fire. That is the kind of sperits as is ment in the tex, brethring. Now thar's a great many kinds of fire in the world. In the fust place, thars the common sort uv fire you lite a segar or pipe with, and then thar's camfire, fire before your'e reddy to fall back, and many other kinds uv fire, for the tex sex: 'He played on a harp uv a thou-sand strings—sperits uv just men made perfeck.'

"But I'll tell you the kind of fire as is ment in the tex, my brethern—it's hell fire! an' that's the kind uv fire as a great many of you'll come to, ef you dont do better ner what you have bin doin'—for 'He played on a harp uv a thou-sand strings—sperits of just men made perfeck.'

"Now, the different sorts uv fire in the world may be likned unto the different persuasions in the world. In the fust place, we have the Piscapalions, and they are high sailin' and a highfalutin' set, and they may be likened into a turkey buzzard that flies up into the air, and he goes up and up till he looks no bigger than your finger nail, and the fust thing you know, he cums down and down, and is a fillin' himself on the karkiss of a dead hoss by the side uv the road—and 'He played on a harp of a thou-sand strings—sperits of just men made perfeck.

"And then thar's the Methedis, and they may be likened unto the squirrel, runnin' up into a tree, for the Methedis believe in gwine on from one degree uv grace to another, and finally on to perfeckshum, and the squirrel goes up and up, and he jumps from lim' to lim', and branch to branch, and the fust thing you know he falls and down he cums kerflummux, and that's like the Methedis, for they is aller fallin' from grace, ah! And—'He played on a harp of a thou-sand strings—sperits of just men made perfeck."

"And then, my brethring, thar's the Baptist, ah! and they hev bin likened unto a possum on a 'simmon tree, and the thunders may roll, and then the earth may quake, but that possum clings there still, ah! And you may shake one foot loose, and the other's thar, and you may shake all feet loose, and he laps his tail around the lim', and he clings furever, for—'He played upon a harp uv a thou sand strings—sperits of just men made perfeck."

Here the reporter could no longer contain himself and his notes became unintelligible.

MCLEAN'S VOLCANIC OIL LINIMENT is truly a celebrated remedy, and has done more to alleviate human suffering than any other remedy ever discovered.

One or two applications will relieve the most severe pain, bruise or sprain.

Two bottles will cleanse, purify, and heal the foulest ulcer or sore, and it will heal the most severe burn or scald without a scar.

Every family should have a supply constantly on hand, for use in time of need.

Read the following extract of a letter, which is incontestable proof of its wonderful efficacy:

A BLIND MAN RESTORED TO SIGHT.

J. H. McLEAN—Dear Sir: * * * I have been suffering for four years with rheumatic sore eyes, being at times altogether blind. I procured the advice of several physicians, but none of them could do me any good. By the advice of a friend I applied your "Volcanic Oil Liniment," according to the directions around the bottle, and it has cured me permanently. I have used it since for bruises, pains, &c., and it has always given immediate relief. I live on the main road near Farmington.

Yours, respectfully, JOHN H. ALLERD.

Jefferson county, Mo.

For horses it is far superior to any other remedy for curing lameness, bruises, cuts, old sores, swellings, &c.

We say, then, to all who may be suffering from external diseases, call at once and get a supply. Thousands of bottles are sold (and used) daily, and we have never heard of a case where it has failed in giving relief when properly applied.

☞For sale by J. H. MCLEAN, the proprietor, corner Third and Pine streets, St. Louis, and by all respectable dealers in Medicines everywhere.

MEDICINE FOR THE BILLION!

A Certain Remedy for all Diseases of

MAN OR ANIMALS,

Requiring an External Application.

Warranted in every Case for which it is Recommended!

THE MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT!

Unlike all other popular medicines, it is used by many prominent members of the faculty, and many of the public Hospitals. Their prejudices have yielded to indisputable and incontrovertible demonstrations of cures performed where their remedies had failed.

It has cured more cases of

RHEUMATISM

than any other medicine ever used. Its efficacy in this terrible disease is acknowledged by all who have used it. It not only cures the complaint, but appears to give a vigor and elasticity to the limbs, before unknown, thus performing a double office.

A FEW TESTIMONIALS.

PATH FINDER OFFICE, May 11, 1854.

G. W. WESTBROOK:—

Please send me by the bearer three large bottles of your Mexican Mustang Liniment, as I wish to take it up to my place in Vermont, not thinking it advisable to do without it. I have used it in my family and on my horses, and have found it invaluable. Yours,

J. T. WHITNEY.

ELIZABETHTOWN, TENN., May 25, 1855.

MR. G. W. WESTBROOK:—

Dear Sir—It affords me much pleasure in saying to you that the Mexican Mustang Liniment outsells any medicine that I have ever had for sale, and comes nearer doing what it promises to do. Send me another supply, as I am nearly out. Yours respectfully,

JOHN SINGLETRAY, P. M.

PHILADELPHIA, June 11, 1854.

MR. G. W. WESTBROOK:

Sir—My son was afflicted with a swelling upon the knee joint, which confined him to the house. I had a doctor attending him for some time, but he did not do him any good. One of my neighbors told me to use the Mustang Liniment. I asked the doctor if I could do so, and he told me he thought I could not do better.

I procured one bottle, and in about a week he was able to go out.

I can safely recommend it to the afflicted.

Respectfully yours, MRS. BENNETT.

W. S. Ladd & Co., of Portland, Oregon, writes that there is an immense demand for the Mexican Mustang Liniment in that country, and orders forty gross to be shipped by Golden Gate, that sails in a few days from New York.

Park & White of San Francisco, California, order 100 gross, to be forwarded by first clipper for that port.

PORT AU PRINCE, HAYTI, Jan. 16th, 1854.

I had the pleasure to receive invoice and boxes Mexican Mustang Liniment per Groton, and have no doubt it will have a brisk sale on the island.

GEORGE RACKSTER.

To give health, strength and elacity to the limbs, there is nothing can equal in effect, the

MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT.

FARMERS AND LIVERY STABLE KEEPERS

have need it for the following diseases with extraordinary success, certifying invariably to the efficacy of the Liniment, and the truthfulness of our assertions in its behalf:

Spavin, Splint, Ring-bone, Fistula, Wind Galls, Big Head, Bruises, Strains, String-halt, Scratches, Cracked Heels, Sweney, Saddle, Collar, or Harness Galls, Hard Lumps or Tumor, Film, or other diseases of the Eye, Poll-Evil, &c.

The small sizes retail for 25 cents per bottle;
The medium size retail for 50 cents per bottle;
The large sizes retail for one dollar per bottle.
The medium holds three times as much as the small;
The Large holds nearly three times as much as the medium,
Therefore the large bottles are the cheapest.

CHURCH HISTORY.

HISTORIAN'S OFFICE, G. S. L. CITY, August the 9th, 1855.

EDITOR OF THE NEWS—

Sir: The enclosed correspondence not having appeared in the "People's Journal," I thought proper to present you with the rough manuscript, which you are at liberty to publish in your columns, if you think proper. Yours respectfully.

GEO. A. SMITH.

G. S. L. CITY, 20th March, 1855.

EDITOR OF PEOPLE'S JOURNAL:

By the request of President Brigham Young, I have answered your letter to him, bearing date September 18 1854, of which the following is a copy:

"DEAR SIR: We are publishing a history of all the religious denominations now extant, their rise, founder, articles of faith, statistics. &c.

We have published several from the most able pens in the country, and our object in writing this, is to solicit your aid in this matter.

To be brief, will you write us a history of your church, or "the Latter Day Saints," and oblige your servants,

TONSLY & COWIN."

GENTLEMEN: Your note was long delayed in consequence of the irregularity of the mails, not one fourth of the mail matter due to this city having arrived for the last five months, which is owing to some neglect or derangement, we suppose, of the Post office department.

I have taken considerable pains to answer (from the best authorities at hand) as briefly as so extensive a subject could well be considered. I wish to publish the History entire. If you do not choose to publish it entire and unaltered, please return it to me, as the Editor of the News has already requested me to furnish him a copy, which I refused as I intended it for yourselves.

Be pleased to furnish a couple of copies of the number in which it is published, one to Gov. Young, and one directed to the Historian's Office, and oblige, very respectfully yours,

GEO. A. SMITH,
Historian of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Joseph Smith, jun., was born in Sharon, Windsor county, Vermont, 23d december, 1805; moved with his father to Ontario county, New York, and in the year 1819 resided in Manchester: he was by occupation a farmer, and his advantages of education were limited.

At the age of 15 he began to reflect seriously on the necessity of being prepared for a future state of existence. He went among the differnt denominations that existed in that state, and his mind became perplexed with the clashing and contention which existed among those professed the name of Christ.

Disgusted with the confusion which his researches disclosed, and encouraged by the promise of Saint James: "If any of you lack wishom, let him ask of God who giveth unto all men liberally and upbraideth not, and it shall be given him," he retired to a grove, and in earniest prayer besought the Lord to reveal the way of salvation; and while thus engaged he beheld two glorious Beings wrapped in a brilliant and glorious light, who informed him that all the religious sects of the present age had departed from the ancient gospel of Jesus Christ and his apostles, with its gifts and priesthood, which should be made known to him in due season: many glorious things were shown him in this vision.

On the 21st of September, 1823, while engaged in prayer, and striving to excersise faith, the room was filled with light surpassing that of noonday, in the midst of which was a person whose countenance was as lightning, and yet so full of innocence and goodness, and of such glorious appearance as to banish all apprehensions: he was an angel commissioned of God to inform him that the covenants with ancient Israel touching their posterity should soon be fulfiled and that the great work to prepare for the second coming of Christ should now commence; the fullness of the gospel should be made known to all nations; that the native inhabitants of America were a remnant of Israel, who had anciently enjoyed the ministry of inspired men; that the records containing their history had been preserved to the period of their national degeneracy, and that these records had been concealed in the earth, and the Lord promised they should soon be revealed.

On the following day the angel returned and showed him the spot where the sacred record was deposited. A small rock, projecting a little above the earth's surface, covered a stone box; he opened it and beheld the plates..

The angel said, you cannot at this time obtain them, and when they are obtained, it must be by prayer and faithfulness in obeying the Lord; they are not deposited here for the sake of accumulating gain or wealth, or for the glory of this world; they are of no worth to the children of men, only for the knowledge they contain, which is the fulness of the gospel of Jesus Christ, as it was given to the ancient people of this land. The stature of this personage was a little above the common size of men in this age; his garments were perfectly white, and they appeared to be without seams.

Much instruction was given by the angel to Mr. Smith during a period of four years, and on the 22nd September 1827, the angel of the Lord delivered the records into his hands; they were engraved on plates which had the appearance of gold, each plate was not far from 7 inches by 8 in width, and length, not quite as thick as common tin, beautifully engraved on both sides in reformed Egyptian characters, bound together in a volume as the leaves of a book, fastened at the edge with three rings running through the book; with the records was found a curious instrument called by the ancients the Urim and Thummim. By the gift and power of God, through its means, he translated the record, which is the Book of Mormon. The first edition of 5,000 copies was published by Joseph Smith, at Palmyra. New York.

The Church of Jesus Chrrst of Latter Day Saints was organized in Manchester, New York, on the 6th April, 1830, and was then composed of six members, who were baptized by immersion under the hands of Joseph Smith and Oliver Cowdery, who received the apostleship by commandment from God, and the administration of heavenly messengers, and were the first elders of the church.

The Book of Mormon being printed, the church began to attract the attention of newspaper editors, who immediately opened their artillery against Joseph Smith, and the handful who had received his testimony. The tocsin of persecution was immediately sounded, and continued to increase with scarcely any cessation, during his whole lite.

Through the labors of Joseph Smith, Hyrum Smith, Oliver Cowdery, and other elders who had been ordained, branches were established in New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, the British Provinces and New England States.

A large branch of the church was established in Kirtland, Geauga county, Ohio; and the spirit of persecution persuing all the branches to a very great extent, the Saints commenced gathering to Kirtland; and soon after Joseph Smith, with several of the elders, visited Jackson county, Missouri, and commenced settlements of the Saints: upper Missouri being at that time but thinly inhabited.

In June, 1831, a conference was held at Kirtland; a number of the elders were ordained high priests by Joseph Smith, he being Presibent of the high priesthood and of the whole church, being called of the Lord like unto Moses, a Seer Revelator, Translator, and Prophet; and it was his privilege to have two counselors, to act as assistant Presidents, which form the First Presidency of the Church.

In June, 1832, W. W. Phelps & Co. commenced printing a monthly periodical at Independance, Missouri, devoted expressly to the spreading of the principles of the gospel, and publishing the revelations of God to the Church.

A Mercantile house was established by the firm A. S. Gilbert & Co,, and several hundred of farms were opened, and mills and many extensive improvements commenced.

The elders continued to preach with unabated zeal. notwithstanding they were constantly subjected to abuse.

On March 25, 1832, Joseph Smith and Elder Sidney Rigdon were dragged from their beds at midnight, in the town of Hiram, Portage county, Ohio, daubed with tar and feathers, and severely injured. Aqua fortis was poured into President Smith's mouth and left for dead. One of his children was sick with the meazles, and being in bed with him at the time of the outrage, was thereby exposed to the night air, and died almost immediately: she may, therefore, be called the first martyr of this dispensation.

In June, 1833, a commencement was made for the building of a Temple in Kirtland.

On the 22nd July 1833, the printing office of W. W. Phelps, at Independance, Missouri, was surrounded by a mob of about five hundred men; the press was destroyed, the type pied, and the house, a two story brick building, pulled down. Loss of property, $6,700. This mob violence continued from day to day.

Edward Partridge, the presiding bishop of the Church, was publicly stripped, and tarred and feathered on the public square, in the presence of several hundred spectators.

Mr. Charles Allen, a member of the church, received the same compliment; the tar was mixed with some corrosive substance.

The store of Gilbert and Whitney was broken open their goods promiscuously scattered in the streets—lives threatened, individuals whipped, and a great number of houses unroofed by parties visiting the different settlements: upwards of two hundred houses were destroyed by fire and 1500 persons driven fron their homes and scattered into the adjoining counties, principally into Clay, without any means of subsistence, a great number having perished from wounds, bruises and exposure.

As the Saints were scattered along the banks of the Missouri River, a plot was laid by a party of the mob to murder all who should be left on the Jackson side. On the morning of the 13th, of October, very early, they beheld the wonderful meteoric phenomenon of stars falling from heaven, which caused the hearts of the Saints to rejoice, and the mob to abandon their purpose; some of the mob were so affected by the sight that they wept, believing the day of Judgment at hand. I am sorry to say that clergymen of various denominations sanctified these deeds of cruelty by their presence and participation.

In the fall of 1833 a printing press was established in Kirtland, Ohio, where Oliver Cowdery commenced the publication of the Evening and Morning Star.

In 1834, Joseph Smith, accompanied by 205 men, visited Clay county, Missouri, and attempted to bring out a reconciliation with the people of Jackson. His Excellency Daniel Dunklin, then Governor of Missouri, notified the legislature in his annual message, that the means of enforcing the laws, both civil and military, were so insufficient that the Mormons could not be protected in the state. He had previously written to Col. J. Thornton, under date of the 6th, June, 1834, as follows: "I am fully persuaded that the eccentricity of the religious opinions and practices of the Mormons, is at the bottom of the outrages committed against them."

By industry, economy and prudence, the Saints in Clay and the adjoining counties had begun to acquire wealth and to enjoy prosperity, and were enabled to purchase considerable tracts of land; this aided the Jackson county mob to raise an excitement in Clay county. Public meetings were held, and the Saints notified by their official resolutions, that they must cease to make improvements in Clay county, or to purchase other lands; and required them to leave the county of Clay. A location was accordingly made in a new, uninhabited, naked prairie county, destitute of timber, by the unanimous consent of the mob, who said it was fit for nothing else but the Mormons. The Saints of Clay county purchased the lands of the government, and moved immediately into Cladwell.

In 1834, Joseph Smith senior, was set apart as Patriarch over the whole Church to bless the fatherless.

On the 14th February, 1835, Joseph Smith, by a commandment of God, selected and ordained Twelve Apostles, to be special witnesses in all the world of the fulness of the gospel, and to preside over the Church in all cases when the Presidency were absent; and during the year 1835, they visited all the States east of Ohio, and also the British Provinces, comforting the scattered branches, preaching the gospel, and building up new branches.—Many hundreds were baptized during the season.—About the same time, he also ordained a quorum of seventy elders for the same purpose, many of whom devoted the most of their time to traveling and preaching, going forth "without purse or scrip."

The Temple in Kirtland was so far completed as to be dedicated on the 27th of March, 1836, 416 elders being present in a general council on the evening of the dedication. This Temple is a stone building 80 feet by 60, the walls 50 feet high, and the tower 110 feet high. There are two main halls 55 feet by 65 in the inner court, four vestries in the front, and five school rooms in the attic. The building is well finsihed, and a fine specimen of architecture.

In June, 1837, Heber C. Kimball, Orson Hyde, Willard Richards, and Joseph Fielding, with three others, started on a mission to the British Islands.—They arrived in England on the 20th of July, without a farthing in their pockets, and on the 23rd commenced preaching in Preston. At Christmas the church had extended from Preston to Penworthham, Longton, Southport, Eccleston, Whittle, and Hunter's Hill, the number of members amounting to about one thousand.

In 1837 the greater portion of the saints in Kirtland, moved to Missouri, and settled in Cladwell, Daviess, Clinton, Carroll, and Ray counties. The county of Cladwell had been organized, and the city of the Far West established.

In December the printing office in Kirtland was destroyed by fire, the work of an incendiary.

In the spring of 1853, the emigration to Missouri continued, most of the Saints leaving Kirtland. The foundation of a town was laid on Grand River in Daviess county, called Adam-ondi-ahman. Several hundred thousand acres of land had been entered at the land office, and some two thousand large and flourishing farms opened thereon. A village was also commenced in Carroll county, on the Missouri river called, De Witt.

Caldwell county in three years, from a naked prairie, had become one of the most flourishing counties in the State. A foundation was laid for a Temple at Far West, 110 feet long by 80 wide, a printing office established, and a monthly paper called the "Elders Journal" published. In Aug. 1838 at an election held in Galatin, Daviess county, a barrel of whiskey was rolled out, and the crowd invited to drink heartily, and prevent the Mormons from voting. A riot ensued which ended in knocking down three Mormons—(eight only being present)—and in 23 of the mob being carried off in a degree helpless. One of the Mormons was stabbed. Immediately the tocsin of Mobocracy was again sounded, and several hundred men assembled at Millport, swearing extermination against the Saints. They were soon dispersed by the interference of Gen. Doniphan, but it was only to shift their quarters. They removed to De Witt in Carroll county, and drove out its inhabitants, robbing them of their property. Many of the Saints perished from want and suffering, and the remnant escaped into Cladwell.

The mob again renewed their operations in the county of Daviess, filling the country with false reports; but finding their undertaking likely to fail, Lilburn W. Boggs, then the Executive of Missouri, issued an order for the extermination of the Mormons from the free Republic of Mo.; and ordered Major General Clark, with 13.000 men to proceed immediately to Far West, and put the cruel decree into execution. This force immediately proceeded to the settlements of the Mormons; who being but few in number comparitively, and finding themselves opposed by the executive order of the State, and consequently by the form of legal proceeding, made no resistance to this military force, altho' they would have fought the whole of them had they continued in their true colors as a mob.—Under pledges of peace and protection, men women and children were indiscriminately massacred, women ravished, houses plundered, horses stolen, cattle and hogs shot in their pens for sport, corn fields robbed, thousand of acres of grain destroyed by turning horses into the fields, and fences burnt up. Several hundred persons were driven in a defenceless condition into a hollow square of armed fiends, and compelled to sign away their property to the Republic of Missouri, to defray the expense which had been incurred in commiting these crimes. About seventy of the brethren were selected for the purpose of execution; public notice was given they would be put to death, and the residue permitted to go home, take their families and leave the State immediately on pain of death.

On the 1st of November, 1838, Joseph Smith and his comrades were tried by Court Martial, without them being present, or allowed to make any defence, and sentenced to be shot. The order for their execution was given by Major General Lucas as follows:

"BRIGADIER GENERAL DONIPHAN:—Sir, you will take Joseph Smith and other Prisoners into the Public Square of Far West, and SHOOT them at 9 o'clock tomorrow morning."

A SINGULAR STORY.

The following was published several years ago, and we believe originated from the pen of a Washington letter. We revive it on account of its eccentric significance, and commend it to the attention of the Charleston Mercury and his conferes:

The other morning at the breakfast table, our friend, the Hon. C. Calhoun seemed very much agitated and out of spirits. You know he is altogether a venerable man, with a hard, stern, Scotch-Irish face, softened in its expression around the mouth by a sort of sad smile, which wins the hearts of all who converse with him. His hair is snow white. He is tall, thin and angular. He reminds you very much of Old Hickory. That he is honest no one doubts; he has sacrificed to his fatalism his brightest hopes of political advancement—has offered up on the shrine of that necessity which he worships, all that can excite ambition, even the Presidency of the United States.

But to my story. The other morning at the breakfast table, where I an unobserved spectator, happened to be present, Calhoun was observed to gaze frequently at his right hand and brush it with his left, in a hurried and nervous manner. He did this so often as to excite attention. At length one of the persons composing that breakfast party—his name I think is Toombs, and he is a member of Congress from Georgia—took upon himself to ask the occasion of Mr. Calhoun's disquietude.

'Does your hand pain you?' he asked.

To this Mr. Calhoun replied in rather a hurried manner—'Psbaw! It is nothing! Only a dream which I had last night, and which makes me see perpetually a large, black spot—like an ink-blotch—upon the back of my right hand. An optical illusion, I suppose.'

Of course these words excited the curiosity of the company, but no one ventured to beg the details of this singular dream, until Toombs asked quietly.

'What was your dream like? I am not very superstitious about dreams, but sometimes they have a good deal of truth in them.'

'But this was such a peculiar absurd dream,' said Mr. Calhoun, again brushing the back of his hand; 'however, if it does not too much intrude upon the time of our friends, I will relate it to you.'

Of course the company were profuse in their expressions of anxiety to know all about the dream.—In his singularly sweet voice M. Calhoun related it:

'At a late hour last night, as I was sitting in my room engaged in writing, I was astonished by the entrance of a visitor, who entered and without a word took a seat opposite me at my table. This surprised me, as I had given particular orders to the servant that I should not on no account be disturbed. The manner in which the intruder entered, so perfectly self possessed, taking his seat opposite me, without a word, as though my room and all within it belonged to him, excited within me as much surprise as indignation. As I raised my head to look into his features, over the top of my shaded lamp, I discovered that he was wrapped in a thin cloak which effectually concealed his face and features from my view. And as I raised my head he spoke:

'What are you writing Senator from South Carolinia?'

'I did not think of his impertinence at first, but answered him voluntarly:

'I am writing a plan for the dissolution of the, American Union, (you know, gentleman, that I am to produce a plan of dissolution in the event of certain contingencies.

'To this the intruder replied in the coolest manner possible:

'Senator from South Carolina, will you allow me to look at your hand—your right hand?'

'He rose, the cloak fell, and I beheld the face.—Gentlemen, the sight of that face struck me like a thunder-clap. It was the face of a dead man, whom extraordinary events had called back to life. The features were those of General George Washington; yes, gentlemen, the intruder was none other than George Washington. He was dressed in the revolutionary costume, such as you see preserved in the Patent Office.'

Here Mr. Calhoun paused, appearently much agitated. His agitation, I need not tell you, was shared by the company. Toombs at length broke the embarrassing pause. 'Well, w-e-l-l, what was the issue of that scene?' Mr. Calhoun resumed.

'This intruder, as I have said, rose and asked to look as my right hand. As though I had not the power to refuse I extended it. The truth is, I felt a strange thrill pervade me at his touch; he grasped it and held it near the light, thus affording me time to examine every feature of his face. It was that of Washington. Gentlemen, I shuddered as I beheld the horribly dead alive look of that visage. After holding my hand for a moment, he looked at me steadily and said in a quiet way:

'And with this right hand, Senator from Carolina, you will sign your name to a paper declaring the the Union dissolved?

'I answered in the affirmative. 'Yes,' said I, 'if a certan contingency arises, I will sign my name to the Declaration of Dissolution.' But at that moment a black blotch appeared on the back of my hand—an inky blotch which I seem to see even now.

'What is that? said I, alarmed, I know not why, at the spot on my hand.

'That,' said he, dropping my hand, 'is the mark by which Benedict Arnold is known in the next world.'

'He said no more, gentlemen, but drew from beneath his cloak an object which he laid upon the table—laid it down upon the very one which I was writing. That object, gentlemen, was a skeleton.

'There,' said he, 'there are the bones of Isaac Hayne, who was hung at Charleston by the British. He gave his life in order to establish the Union.—When you put your name to a Declaration of Dissolution why you may as well have the bones of Isaac Hayne before you; he was a South Carolinain, and so are you.—But there was no blotch upon his right hand.

'With these words the intruder left the room. I started back from the contact with the dead man's bones, and —awoke. Overworn by labor I had fallen asleep and had been dreaming. Was it not a singular one?

All the company answered in the affirmative, and Toombs muttered, 'Singular, very singular,' at the same time looking curiously at the back of his right hand, while Mr. Calhoun placed his head between his hands and seemed buried in thought.

The Real Inventor of the Steamboat.

From advance sheets of Loyd's forthcoming Steamboat Directory, we see that the credit of the invention of the steamboat to John Fitch, and not to Robert Fulton. He produces good authority to sustain him in his assertions, and the friends of Fitch will no doubt be glad to find justice will be done him in this work.

It appears that John Fitch invented and made a successful trial trip with his steamer at Philadelphia, in 1786, which averaged nearly eight miles an hour, and that afterward, when he was in Paris, trying to obtain aid from the French Government to further his plans, he met Robert Fulton, who was experimenting with his submarine batterry for blowing up ships; and Fulton, by pretending to take great interest in John Fitch, obtained plans and drawings for his steamboat by giving him some milk and water letters to various persons.

Poor Fitch remained in Europe for some time, trying to get capitalists to advance him funds to prosecute his great invention, but without success. They called him crazy, little dreaming of the prize they were losing.

Meantime Robert Fulton, returned to New York, and obtaining funds from Chancellor Livingston, built the steamer "Cleamont" on the North river, in 1806, using on her one of Watts'improved steam engines, ordered from England. This was fully twenty years after John Fitch had demonstrated the practicability of stemming the Mississippi with the steamboat.

In 1811 Robert Fulton and Livingston claimed the exclusive privilege of navigating the Ohio and Mississippi by steam. Several boats were thus tied up; but at the great trial in New York, it was satisfactorily and conclusively proven that Robert Fulton was not the inventor of the steamboat but to John Fitch belonged that credit.

The life of poor Fitch is peculiarly interesting and melancholy. Just before his death he remarked: "The day will come when some powerful man will get fame from my invention, but nobody will believe that poor John Fitch can do anything worthy of attention." He was buried on the banks of the Ohio.—[Cin. Times.

GOVERNOR YOUNG'S DISCOURSE.

The Deseret News, of the 26th September, contain a short discourse delivered by President Young, concerning "the Lord's poor, the devil's poor, and the poor devils," and their relation to the Church, which has been partially published by some of our cotemporaries, and some have ventured to pass their comments and strictures upon it. Lest any of our readers should entertain a wrong impression upon the subject, through the scurrilous articles of the public journals, we will extract the principle items from the discourse, and make such remarks thereupon, that we may consider appropriate. There is one thing to be noticed in the publication of this discourse, that may well attract the attention of the "poor devils" and all outsiders. That is, Mormonism has nothing to conceal from the world. Its dealings with the world are all open and above board, and things that some might consider detrimental to its interest and prosperity, if known, are published upon the housetops, and sent forth by its own official organs, unto all nations.

After refering to the ingratitude of many who are helped out by the P. E. Fund, who, after having several hundred dollars expended upon them for their emigration, not only refuse to adopt prompt measures to refund the dept, but try to move off with the Company's property. The President gives the following challenge concerning Mormon honesty and honor; and since St. Louis is and has been for many years, the great commercial mart of the Church, in republishing this, we bring the question before a host of merchants, who are competent to answer the question, and who would be prepared to endorse the draft of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints to any amount, providing Governor Young's name was associated therewith. President Young says:

"Now I can ask the world this one question: were we ever in your debt and refused to pay you? And they will answer "no." We can turn to the Saints in England, France, America, or anywhere upon the face of the earth, and ask them "have you lent us money, or means of any kind, and we were not on hand to pay you?" And they will answer, "No."

When brother Erastus Snow arrived, on the first of this month, he came to me in the morning and informed me that he had run me in debt nearly fifty thousand dollars; he said "President Young's name is nearly as good as the bank."

My name has been used without my consent or without my knowing anything about it, and our agents have run us in debt almost fifty thousand dollars to strangers, merchants, cattle dealers and our brethren who are coming here."

The Governor next refers to persons in Salt Lake, who have just arrived from Europe, with drafts on him, for monies loaned to the P. E. Fund Company, which should be refunded by the parties benefited, before any demand could reasonably be made for the payment of those drafts. It is not Gov. Young who is personally benefited by these transactions, but the people of the Saints, who should feel with him an equal interest in all things associated with the gathering of the poor, and the building up of Zion. The Church is not Brigham Young's, nor is it Joseph Smith's; but the Church of Jesus Christ, and if in its revolutionary operations, it involves individuals in pecuniary difficulties, He will be responsible. And in case His credit is not good with the people, the Governor steps forward, or his representatives, and sign his name to the drafts for six or twelve months, as the case may be. When all is peace in their Zion, until they arrive in the vallies, when they manifest the truth of the saying of Jesus. "It is easier for a camel to enter the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter the kingdom of God." We will here give another extract from the discourse that will fully illustrate the difficulty suggested by the Saviour, and if any of the rich wish to apostatize because of it, we recommend them to do so in Europe; or, in the States, and thus save themselves the everlasting shame and disgrace consequent upon the exposure of their selfishness and infidelity to the kingdom of the living God:

"I will tell you a little about the brethren, to show you the amount of confidence there is.

"There are men who have lately arrived in town who have a draft on me, and who have hunted me up for the cash, before they could find time to shave their beards, or wash themselves, saying, "I have a draft on you at ten days, fifty days or six months sight, (as the case may be,) with, please pay so and so. Brother Young, can you not let me have the money immediately, for I do not know how I can live without it, or get along with my business at all?" This is the kind of confidence some men have in me. I want to name this. Why? Because I am hunted; I am like one that is their prey, ready to be devoured. I wish to give you one text to preach upon, "from this time henceforth do not fret thy gizzard." I will pay you when I can, and not before. Now I hope you will apostatise, if you would rather do it.

"It is the poor who have got your money, and if you have any complaints to make, make them against the Almighty for having so many poor,—I do not owe you anything. You have my name attached to the paper to help the poor. Whether they are the Lord's poor, the devil's poor, or poor devils, is not for me now to judge. I tell the brethren, that they may understand here to-day what kind of sacred confidence some of them have in the leader of this people, though I am happy to say that such cases are few. I would be ashamed to join a people, organized as we are, and be afraid to trust their leader."

No person with any knowledge of the history and character of Gov. Young, but will be ready to admit that he has ever shown himself a sterling philanthropist, and one of the greates benefactorst of the human family. And as fast as men are acquainted with his principles, and are actuated by his spirit, they become willing to share his responsibilities in behalf of the poor. They are not only ready to leave their homes in Zion, and travel without purse and scrip in distant nations, to bless and save the poor and oppressed of the earth; but on their return, they are ready, if required, to dispossess themselves of all they have to benefit the poor, and bear each others burdens. We present the following extract, as an example of philanthropy, which is characteristic of the spirit of of Mormonism, and worthy of all admiration. The President says:

"I collect means around me; the poor must have it, and I make them work and pay for it; that makes me wealthy, and I cannot help it. I have property for sale, and say, if any man in England, or any where else, will expand his heart and loosen his purse strings to buy sixty-two thousand dollars worth of property, I have it for sale to help the poor. I do not want it destroyed, or to go into the hands of a mob, but I want it to go to the building up of the kingdom of God. I would prefer it to go into the hands of the Saints, and use it to pay off those who have drafts against me. Here is brother Duel; he has a good house, and there are many others; go and buy their properety and they will take your drafts and hand them to me. (Here many voices were heard in a low tone saying) "Yes, take my property." Why do I hear such responses on every side? Because they know and understand Mormonism as they ought. Go on throw out your drafts; it is better for you to do this than to have the money and let it go to destruction, and perhaps you with it. How many scores have come into this kingdom, who have mourned themselves to death because Joseph had five dollars of them? And yet they would let their money go into the hands of the enemies of Christ, and sit down calmly and say, "tho' I have lost that money, I am in the kingdom of God yet." If it is absolutely necessary, and circumstances cannot be controlled to keep them from going into the hands of our enemies, we will not whine, about it, but let it go and then get more.

Dare any of you come and buy property? I can furnish as much as you can buy. My house on the hill yonder, I have advertised it for sale, and also my lands and barn. "What do you ask for it? sixteen thousand dollars; it is worth that and a great deal more. Can any of you buy it?" Walk up and buy my beautiful situation on the hill, and I will put the proceeds into the Perpetual Emigration Fund, if you will pay me the money, and gather the Saints, the Lord's poor and the devil's poor and the poor devils, and when we have got them here we will make Saints of them if we can, and if we cannot, we will cast them out of the kingdom."

It appears absolutely necessary to the happiness of some of our cotemporaries that, they be able to present their readers with something marvelous, distressing, and alarming, concerning Utah and the Mormons; and if difficulties do not exist of themselves, they feel bound in consequence of their position in the world to create some. Some of the fraternity, have predicted upon the statements of the above paragraph, a finicial crisis; but we do not apprehend, any particular distress, through financial affairs, we have no Railways, or Banking institutions that are likely to produce a panic amongst us, which frequently happens in this lower region.—There are no dens of infamy, and corruption to curse the people, there are no belligerant partizans there to operate against the interests of the government, but all is peace, union, and prosperity; and if money would redeem Israel, build up Zion, and make the place for the Lord's feet glorious, there would not be any lack of gold and silver to accomplish it. The God of Israel holds the keys of the treasures of the earth and can open them to his people according to his pleasure. And if President Young, required the wealth of Israel to build up the kingdom, it is his prerogative to command, and thousands would respond and donate their all. Such is the dominant spirit of the Saints in the Vallies of the mountains, and among the nations too, so far as the influence of the everlasting gospel extends; and those who have not learned to seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness; have that important lesson to learn, before they can be numbered with those who fought the good fight, finished their course, and kept the faith.

MORMONISM.

The world was never more deceived and astonished, with regard to any subject, theory, or organisation, than has been the case in reference to the rise and progress of Mormonism, or the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints. Its obscure birth and helpless infancy, were looked upon as evidences of its insignificance and puerility. Its illiterate founder and visionary development, were regarded as unmistakable signs of incompetency and instability, and consequent failure. Ministers preached against it, editors wrote against it, statesmen condemned and execrated it, and the ignorant rabble persecuted and mobbed it; but, notwithstanding all these difficulties and disadvantages, it has displayed wisdom, stability and potency, such as no other system or government is able to boast; although it may be said to have been "born in poverty, reared in storms, and rocked by revolutions." It has gained in a few short years, a position, and attained an eminence that may well incite the envy of a degenerate and jealous world, and whilst its pusillanimous antagonists look up to it with concentrated envy and alarm, it can well bestow upon them that pity and contempt they so justly merit.

Mormonism has already assumed a position, and obtained a foothold upon the earth that was never dreamed of in the philosophy of its adversaries.—"We thought," said the first observers of the system, "that it was altogether unworthy of notice, and being left to itself would soon explode and become extinct;" but finding themselves outwitted in their calculations, and disappointed in their expectations, they considered it their imperitive duty to publish their sage opinions of the character of its founders, who were gravely represented as "ignoramuses" and "money diggers," and consequently unqualified for the business they assumed. How far those gentlemen were correct in their views of Mormonism and its founders, we may leave our readers to judge, upon the evidence furnished by the gradual development of the doctrines, principles and organization of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

Who has ever discovered a weak point in Mormonism? a point where it could be considered vulnerable, and too weak to sustain a general assault from its adversaries? It has been assailed in every possible manner. The pulpit and press have spent their strength upon it without effect, and the combined influence, and artillery of earth and hell have simply demonstrated the fact, that Mormonism is invulnerable, and will never be destroyed. It is a mighty Malakoff that has endured a seige of twenty-five years, and has sustained no material loss in any engagement; and it is certainly better prepared for a rough encounter to-day, than at any former period. It has lost in some engagements some bold champions and brave Generals, but other noble ones have stepped up and filed their place, and have gained the victory over their adversaries. Mormonism, has therefore nothing to fear; for, as it has hitherto resisted every assault, and has never retreated but to a more advantageous position, and has so far obtained a series of victories over its hosts of enemies, even so will be its progress in the future, and no weapon that is formed against it shall prosper; and every tongue that is lifted up in judgment against it, shall be condemned.

The principles of Mormonism have a relation to the things of time as well as eternity—of the body as of the soul. Christianity has become so metaphysical and refined by aid of modern philosophy, that there is really nothing of it. Its professors pretend to ignore temporal things as altogether too gross and sensual to constitute any portion of their religion. Such things that were considered essential to temporal blessing, prosperity and hapiness by the ancient Saints, are considered entirely unnecessary by christians now. Temporal matters, they consider as their own private concerns; and, they think, speak and act as though the Lord had nothing to do with them. So long as they go to Church on Sunday, and pay the preacher and pew rent, they cannot understand why the Lord should ask anything more of them, until they go into His immediate presence, to join the old Patriarchs and Saints, in singing the song of Moses and the Lamb.

The professors of Mormonism are simple enough to believe that God should be in all their thoughts and actions, and that His hand is in all things. For He has not only organized our spirits, but He has constituted our bodies too, and consequently knows as well what is necessary to bless the one as to save the other. But the world has grown so wise in matters of political and religious government; that the idea has become almost universal, that neither God nor angels have any right to interfere with the policy of modern governments. Hence, when the prophet Joseph announced the fact that God had spoken, and that angels had committed unto him the fulness of the everlasting gospel, it caused a universal clamor among the people, that doctrines so anti-Christian and heterodox should be proclaimed among men in this enlightened age. The people could very readily admit the propriety of God speaking, and of angels administering to Abraham, Moses, Elijah, Jesus and numerous others in former days; but that the Lord should again speak, and that angels should again minister to those who are heirs of Salvation, was in their estimation, altogether preposterous.

Preposterous as the idea appeared to the majority of mankind, it was none the less true. The simple testimony of an illiterate youth that God had spoken—that angels had committed unto him the everlasting gospel, and the keys of the holy Priesthood, has produced more excitement in the world, has brought about a greater reformation, and has incited more stupendous results than any other system of philosophy that was ever promulgated among men. And if we may judge from facts that everywhere abound concerning Mormonism, we should pronounce it the most consistent and rational system that was ever established among men—the most perfect, philosophical organization revealed to mortals. It comprehends all the wisdom of men and angels, and the Gods—eternity past and eternity future, it holds in its mammoth grasp, and all things in heaven and earth are open to its view. It takes hold of the poor and needy from the utmost bounds of the earth, and places their feet in the tops of the mountains. The world gazes upon it with admonishment, and says Mormonism is truly "a marvelous work, and a wonder."

In consequence of the appointment of Missionaries in the Valley, to labor in Texas, several of whom are now en route from this city, Elder S. J. Lees' appointment to the Presidency of the Texas Conference, is for the present countermanded; and until other arrangements or appointment be made, he will be associated with us in the publication of the Luminary.

Elder John Restall's appointment to Texas, has been also countermanded for the same reason.

President John Taylor arrived in this city on the 14th inst., in fine health and excellent spirits, and took his departure yesterday morning, making a visit of nine days; but considering the amount of business on hand all the time, it appears like so man hours. We are, however, promised another visit in one or two months, or at any rate, as soon as circumstances will admit. In the meantime, we desire the prayers of the Saints, and the co-operation of all the faithful in this stake of Zion, that we may continue to discharge the duties and responsibilities devolving upon us, with that righteousness, efficiency, and dignity, that become an Elder of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints.

Elder Taylor's address to the Saints in the U. States and Canada, which is published in another column of this paper, will be found highly interesting to the readers of the Luminary.

New York Milk.—In the Board of Ten Governors, in New York, on Wednesday evening, the milk used by the children in the city institutions on the islands, was shown to be innocent of a cow, and an article made of arrowroot, water and chalk.

To the Saints in the United Sates and Canada.

The departure of President Erastus Snow, to the valleys of the mountains, and the death of our esteemed friend and brother, Elder Orson Spencer, who was appointed to preside in this western district, during the absence of President Snow, render it necessary for me to address you a few words, as the charge of this, as well as the eastern country, necessarily devolves upon me.

As I have elsewhere stated, no one can sympathise with you more, in the loss of our mutually esteemed friend, than myself; faithful and true, under all circumstances, like a hero he died, with his harness on, and having finished his work here, bid adieu, for the time being, to his earthly friends, and received the happy plaudit of, "well done good and faithful servant;" he has gone to mix with other society, and labor in other spheres.

Being advised of his death, and knowing that there must be matters of importance to attend to in this stake of Zion, in relation to the "Luminary," the Church, financial affairs, and general business, I came with the purpose of confering with the brethren, and advising as to the best course to adopt, in relation to all these matters. I am very happy to have to say that the judicious arrangements made by President Snow, in relation to the Church organization, coupled with the wise counsels of President O. Spencer, during his administration, have rendered any change, or improvement unnecessary, in relation to Church matters. I have met the High Council, the Bishops and other authorities of the Church, and find everything is moving on harmoniously, that union, peace and order prevail, and that the spirit of the Lord prevades their councils. Brother Hart, President of the stake, upon whom has devolved a heavy responsibility, since the decease of Professor Spencer, has acted promptly, wisely and judiciously, and has managed all things devolving upon him, associated with the Church, with prudence and efficiency; and all I have to say, in relation to these matters, is to urge upon the officers a renewed dilligence in their efforts to promote the interests of the kingdom of God, and to call upon the Saints to continue to magnify their calling, to uphold by their prayers, faith and practice, those officers whom they have voted to sustain, to attend to their family, and other duties, to continue to pay their tithing to use their exertions to gather and to perform the various duties devolving upon them to attend too, as Saints of the Most High God; that the peaceful influence of the spirit of God may brood over you, that your hearts may be full of joy and rejoicing, and that you may secure to yourselves, your progenitors and posterity, the rich blessings of the celestial kingdom of God.

I was very happy, on my arrival, to shake hands with many of my brethren from the Valley, who are sent out on missions to England, Texas, and various parts of the United States. It always does me good to meet with old friends. They are in good health and spirits, and seem full of the spirit of the Lord, and richly freighted with the blessings of eternal life. I feel to say, God bless them, and may their missions be as they ardently desire, productive of much good to fallen humanity, and a great blessing to the Saints of God. May the spirit of wisdom dictate them, and may they return with many sheaves as the fruit of their labors.

The news from the Valley, is generally good.—The temple and other public works are progressing. The famine has died a natural death, and peace and prosperity prevails.

There will be some change in the emigrating route, this season, of which the Saints will be duly notified. In the meantime, I shall make use of every means to obtain correct information for their benefit. Business will call me back to New York, for the present; but, as I shall take a general supervision in relation to all these matters, I may return to this part of the country in one or two months, for a time, according to circumstances. In the meanwhile, I wish all Presidents and Elders to confer with me, in relation to the emigration and other matters connected with the interests of Zion in the United States. If it was not so late, I should be in hopes of the Presidency sending out some one from the Valley, to assist in managing affairs. There is very little doubt, however, that early in the spring, President Snow, or some other efficient person, will be here; until then, I ask for the blessings of the Lord on my brethren—I in turn, ask for an interest in their prayers, that we may mutually carry out the will of our heavenly Father, the wishes of the Presidency, magnify our several callings, and secure to ourselves an everlasting inheritance in the kingdom of our God. I remain your brother in the gospel.

JOHN TAYLOR.

Correspondence.

G. S. L. City, Sept. 28, 1855.

Editor Luminary:

Dear Sir—I arrived in this city on the first inst., having made the trip from Mormon Grove in 28 days; 8 of which we traveled in company with an ox train. The U. S. Mail left the same time as we did and reached this place several days later.

The September mail left for the States on the first instant, so our eastern correspondents are obliged to wait for the October mail, before they get answers to to their communications by the Aug. mail. This is very annoying, especially to our merchants and other business men, a petition was circulated yesterday, and unanimously signed, praying our Post Master to retain the October mail, till the September mail arrives.

Captain Ballantyne's company of P. E. F. Saints arrived in this city on the 25th, inst. The Nauvoo brass band, accompanied by many of the Saints of this city, went out to meet them on the 24th and stayed over night with them in the kanyon President E. Snow and lady, and sister Ballantyne were among the number.

They had really an interesting time. The night was spent in feasting and dancing, in music and prayer, and general rejoicing; that the hardships and perils of their tedious journy were at an end. The sisters wept for joy, and many a tear drop was discovered on the cheeks of the sterner sex.

They came into the city in beautiful order. The band mounted on horseback, rode at the head of the company and played most delightful music. Their beautiful flag borne by two young men on horseback, threw out its magnificent folds to the breeze and several smaller flags floated from the tops of the waggons.

As they corelled on Union Square, Presidents Young and Kimball rode down to see them, and gave them a cordial welcome to the vallies of Ephraim.

To-day, about 9 o'clock A. M., Captain Moses Thurston's company rolled into the city. I stepped into a carriage and rode out to meet them, at the border of the city. The Saints in this company also seemed in excellent spirits. Among other acquaintances, I was happy to meet with brother and sister Seal, sister Holdsworth, and sister Annie Hampton, all well known to the St. Louis Saints.

I was only absent from this city about seventeen months; yet, during this short time, very many palpable changes have transpired. Several magnificant buildings have been erected, stores, public Halls, and dwellings, and a host of smaller and more humble dwellings, and mechanics shops.—The Presidents new dwelling, which is now nearly completed, is not only a beautiful, but an elegant edifice, and would do honor to any city, Mormon or Gentile.

Business is very dull and money very scarce.—Grain is cheap: wheat and corn $1 50 per bushel. Notwithstanding the dreadful havoc of the grasshoppers, I think there is a sufficency of grain in the Territory to sustain the inhabitants, if it is properly and economically used.

There has been much more sickness here this season than at any other previous season since our settlement of these vallies. Yet deaths have been comparitively few.

There is a spirit of union among the Saints here, every year seems to add aditional union and faith. They are breaking of the shackles of superstition, the old rusty cloak of tradition is being thrown aside and the people are more and more willing that God shall rule in Zion. It is a much less onerous task to rule this people now than it was ten years ago The priesthood does control now, then it did not. It required "Thus saith the Lord" to accomplish a trifling object. Now when the Prophet speaks, there is a response from tens of thousands of willing hearts. President Young has the confidence and esteem of all the Saints. His word is law in Zion, and the people yield a willing obedience to all his requirements. Men and women are less selfish in their feelings, they seem willing to sacrifice all consideration of self upon the alter of Zion's interest. They have learned that to build themselves up, Zion must progress, their interests are so closely indentified with the interests of the kingdom of God, that the line and distinction cannot be traced. While Zion prospers the Saints increase in prosperity. When we withdraw our support from the Church, we suffer individual loss.

We are anticipating a "great time" at our Conference which commences a week from next Saturday, preparations are being made for a mighty host, the covering to the new Bowery is being extended, and a large number of additional seats are being provided. The weather is fine; as pleasant as spring.—More anon. Yours in the Lord. CHARLIE.

TO FRIENDS EAST.

[Letter No. 1.]

Oneida county, township of Verona, State of New York, is a locality very dear to me, for there I first saw the light so resplendent on this terraqueous ball. There were my first respirations in this life-giving atmosphere from which millions of the human race are invigorated at every breath. There was the parental hearth, the natal bowers, the cradle, the maternal lullaby, the hoop, the kite, the jocund songs of boy-hood and the hey-day fervor of youthful fancies. There hope's bright visions were embellished with prospective pleasures, and the rasaceous hues of the fragrent spring-time shed enchanting lustre into the impassioned soul. There were the school-mates with whom the sports of the brief recess were passed, and with whom was conned the A B C—the alpha of learning. Yes, Merona, your hills, your vales and meadows green gave back the lively echoes of those early joys.—Brothers, sisters, cousins—all disported there right merrily and forged that enduring chain of love and friendship the bright links of which still dazzle in memory and sometimes drew us back from devious wanderings to review those early scenes of pleasure and delight. But adieu, ye purling brooks, fragrant fields and shady groves! Verona, to all your tranquil scenes a brief farewell! Ye are changed now, and how does reflection harrow up the keen sensibilities of the soul! The loved ones of that bright day are scattered over the broad earth. Children still play upon those green lawns and sunny slopes; but they are strangers—going through their season of youthful fancies. The father who lavished kindness there has outstriped me one thousand miles in penetrating the western world; and the most excellent mother who poured the balm of condolence into the sacred chambers of my infantile griefs is enfolded in the pure habiliments of her final rest.

Rest, mother, rest from all thy sorrow,
From all thy toil and all thy pain;
Sleep, mother, sleep—in that blest morrow,
When Christ will come, we'll meet again!

From all this let us us turn, turn to review the West—the great, the prolific, the bountiful, the advancing, the golden West. This is my present theme.

Dobtless, you have heard much about Council Bluffs and Iowa; Nebraska, Utah, Oregon, and Washington territories, as well as California; but, as was the case with Bersheba reespecting the wisdom and glory of Solomon, "the half has not been told." I would not, if I could, send a fine spun, silken threaded, eulogy upon the picturesque scenery; the bold bluffs that tower along the swift current of the Missouri and the border, gentler, clearer waters of the Mississppi; the broad bottom lands, with their rich soil undisturbed by the plow of the husbandman, or groaning under the burthens of agriculture; of the high roling praries, that spread out in bounless magnificence before the enraptured gaze of the traveler; with broad green flower dapled swells succeding each other, in imitation of the undulating, ever changing, upheaving, swelling, mysterious Ocean; of the enchantments of verdant glades and tranquil glens; the gushing springs, ripling brooks, leaping cascades and swelling rivers; of the stately elk, bounding deer, and hordes of buffalo that swarm the gorges, plains and forests of the West; nor of the legendary lore with which all these have been enriched by those excentric tribes whose steeds have cut out thousands of unobliterated war paths and whose earth-mounds still mark the sepulchers of their fallen braves and chieftains.—What good to write of those? To realize them, you must stand in their midst and partake of their several influences. Why not try it? Give up your shops; sell out your farms; pack up your law books; throw down your ax and grubbing hoe;—turn your backs upon the heaps of cobble stones piled up in your fields; leave your plows among stumps and roots, and come out where there is room for enlargement; where you can obtain as much of the best land that ever blessed the Globe for $1 25 per acre as may be desired, with no stumps, roots, or stones in the way of the plow. When, a few years since, I saw some of you toiling early and late upon your farms, and told you that in the West were millions of acres already cleared off and as ready for the plow as were your fields of greensward or meadows, you could but feel rather credulous; still such is the truth. Such is called prairie, and can be "broke" (plowed) with two or three yoke of oxen. If turned over in the fall of the year the sod becomes entirely rotted by spring when by the use of a heavy harrow drawn over it by two yoke of oxen it is entirely torn to pieces, and, without further plowing, is ready for the seed. This is a dark, rich, friable soil, and is capable of producing from fifty to eighty bushels of corn to the acre. It will also produce a good yeild of wheat, oats, buckwheat, hemp. rye, millet, and every other kind of grain, and as regards vegetables of every kind, no soil on the Globe can beat it.—A few days since, on walking over the farm of Benjamin Minturn, Esq., four miles North of this city, I took the measurement of one his mammoth Irish potatoes and found its length to be 22 inches with a surface of 30 3-4 inches. This challanges taterdom for an equal.

There is an abunnance of land in Western Iowa still in market inviting ariculture and the energies of the husbandman, beautiful and healthy situations where homes of comfort and habitations of peace can be erected and where the institutions of domestic relations can be amplified and patrimony increase beneficial posterity. An investment for a few hundred dollars by the father of a family will lay the foundation for a sure support. The great fertility of the soil, its easy cultivation and the excellent market for every kind of produce are encouragements which ought to invite emigration. The poor and the rich should understand these facilities and the resources that exist through the great western region for enterprise, for comfort and wealth, that they be induced to locate and possess themselves of benefits so bountifully lavished.

Progress of Truth in Arkansas—Upwards of Forty Persons Baptized.

Pecan Point, Miss. Co., Ark., Oct. 21, '55.

To the Editor of the Luminary:

Dear Brother—Thinking you might be glad to hear from this section of the country, I have concluded to write you a few items that may be interesting to you and the readers of your valuable paper. When I first came to Arkansas, the people were very anxious to hear from me, as they were unacquainted with the principles of Mormonism, doors were opened to me in all quarters, so anxious were the people to hear what I had to say.

I attended a Methodist meeting, held by my brother on the Sunday morning, and gave out an appointment for 4 o'clock P. M., which was attended by a numerous congregation of enquirers. They wished me to hold meeting again. And I did so on the following Sabbath, which was well attended, and one offered himself for baptism, water being distant, we could not get through till dark.

Whilst repairing to the water, one more became convinced of the importance of baptism and prepared himself for the ordinance. Having lights prepared, we went into the water, following the footsteps of Jesus, and John, and attended to the solemn and sacred ordinance. Before we returned home I baptized eight more. The spirit of God rested upon us and we felt to rejoice. The whole company were members of the Methodist church. My brother and his faimly were included in the number baptized.

I ordained two of the brethern Elders, and gave them instructions how to proceed, and left them the following morning for Illinois, being compelled to go on business. I promised to return and visit them as soon as possible, which I did in company of Elder Corbett. We had several meetings, which were well attended, and were blessed with some success. One day we baptized seventeen, and another day we baptized four.

We left again for Illinois, still promising to return to them as soon as we could. I am now among them again. Since my return I have been laboring constantly with the brethern, which has been attended with the manifestations of the good spirit of of the Lord, in building up the kingdom of God.

I held a meeting on Sabbath, at 11 o'clock, and in the evening. We had a good time. Several offered themselves for baptism, which we attended to the next morning; and I baptized eleven more into the Church, and I can assure you we had a time of great rejoicing.

I think the work is now almost done here, but I shall still continue to labor. I should have attended Conference, but the health of my family would not admit of me leaving them.

I desire the prayers of my brethern of St. Louis and elsewhere, that my family may be restored to health. I am desirous of leaving these sickly parts, and of gathering with the people I love, and enjoy the sweet communion of the Saints in the Vallies of the mountains.

Be with me Lord while here I stay,
Be with me to the end;
May I from virtues path ne'er stray,
For Jesus sake—Amen.

I remain yours, &c., in the gospel of peace.

S. J. D. SPAIN.

Mormon Grove, K. T., Nov. 11, 1855.

Dear Brother Hart:

I had expected to come to St. Louis and learn what was essential for me to do. But as there would be no way for me to get back before the opening of the river, in the spring, which would confine me to St. Louis this winter, and be most likely a surplus hand, I have concluded not to visit St. Louis before February, unless I should be needed. In that case, if informed, I will come, if it should be by stage.

I have been expecting some one from the Valley before this, and have remained here longer than I should otherwise have done, but as the season is advancing, and as brother Gustin has arrived here to assist in the little business of this place, I feel as though I could be spared very well, so I expect to start to-morrow morning, on horseback, for Council Bluffs City, and other places between here and there, in order to fulfill the mission given me by brother Snow. I was instructed by President Snow, to teach and build up the Saints, that I may find scattered along the Missouri Valley, and to strive to get them ready by another season, for the mountains.

I feel that my mission requires faith, humility, and perseverance, as there are many spirits abroad in the world, and some have got possession of money, who once professed to enjoy the holy Ghost, and to know the God of Joseph, who ran well for a season, and made their way as far the Missouri river, but seeing its muddy currents, winding along its sandy banks, and looking beyond to the sage plains, the poisonous waters, and the savage Indians, and their hearts began to faint and they yeilded themselves up to the persuasions of the evil one, and they are ensnared and become subject to any spirit that presents its self. Hence, we find, occasionally, Gladdenites, Strangites, Beneemyites and many other ites, in the Missouri Valley; but I hope to be able in the strength of Israel's God, and by the influence of his holy spirit, to strengthen the weak, confirm the hnmble, that the honest poor may be blessed, and the kingdom of God be extended to his eternal praise and glory.

All things are moving along pretty well here.—I have been striving to improve the P. E. Fund Farm, and make arrangements to build a dwelling and store house by another emigration. Atchison is building up fast. Many of the merchants are making arrangements for another year. I presume there will be seventy stores here by next May. Should I be wanted for the business of the emigration, or any other matter, my address will be Council Bluffs City.

Yours truely in the kingdom of God.

The Death of Elder A. L. Lamoreaux.

Great Salt Lake City, Sept. 3, 1855.

To Elder G. A. Smith, Church Historian:

I have just learned from the family of the late elder A. L. Lamoreaux that Joseph Smith, during his tour to Washington in 1839, stopped with him then in Dayton, Ohio, and before leaving, laid his hands on Elder Lamoreaux and blessed him, and prophesied upon his head that he would go on a mission to France and learn another tongue, and do much good; but would not live to return to his family; he would fall by the way as a martyr.

The Prophet wept as he blesed him, and told him these things, adding that it was pressed upon him, and he could not refrain from giving utterance to it.

Elder Lamoreaux talked with his family about it when he left them in 1852, and endeavored to persuade them that this was not the time and mission on which he should fall, but to believe that he might this time be permited to return again.

When the "Luminary" brought the tidings of his death, they exclaimed surely brother Joseph was a Prophet, for all his words have come to pass.

Thinking this an incident that should not be lost, I have penned it from the mouth of his eldest daughter, and submit it to you; and would add that his excessive labor and toil in providing for the company under his charge during the hot weather in June, in the unhealthy climate of St. Louis, predisposed him to that terrible scourge that laid him low, and thus he fell a sacrifice for his brethern.—Respectfully, &c., ERASTUS SNOW.

CORN STALK MOLASSES.

To the Editor of the News:

Sir—As the Beet crop through the Territory is almost a total failure, in consequence of the long drought and the ravages of the grasshoppers, the question suggests itself, where are our molasses to be procured from for the next year? According to the information I have received from the Bishops through the Territory, I consider there will be few beets raised over what will be required for seed and table use. If we are to buy all the sweet we use from our merchants, at the rate of 40 cents per pound, we shall not be as well supplied as we have been the last few years. Even if we had the cash on hand to pay for the amount of sugar we require in our familes, it is a well known fact that we cannot all be supplied, as there has never been enough brought into Market.

As the corn crops through the different settlements are tolerably extensive, and generally looking well, I think it would be for the general good of our citizens to direct their faith and works to that portion of the crop to procure our Molasses; and as we have not manufactured from the corn stalk to any extent for the last two or three years, the probability is that the machinery necessary to squeeze or press the juice out of the stalk is out of repair; a timely word from you on the subject, to stir up the pure minds of our farmers and mechanics by way of remembrance, to have their rollers put in good order through the different wards and settlements, would likely have the desired effect; that when the corn is matured, we might have all things in readiness to make an abundant supply of good molasses.

IMPROMPTU.

Within some hearts in every age,
Have burned those sacred fires,
Whose flames emblazon every page,
And kindle strange desires.
And in the centre of each land,
Have hearts with high thoughts beat,
Whose energetic powers spanned,
The good, the great, the sweet;
And grasping all have strung their harps
With gems of glowing song,
'Till e'en a very nations heart,
With joy beat high and strong.
But I, a child of simple note!
Can I e'er hope to stir
A nations pulse? or think to drain
The sweets they might confer?
I ask it not; let other tongues
Sing other deeds of might—
Of radient climes, of glowing suns,
Of forms like angels bright,
Of mountains high, with crowns of ice,
Of crystal lake and stream,
Of flowing vales, and groves of spice,
Of caves where treasures gleam.
I sing but of that new found land,
As yet unknown to fame,
Where mighty people yet shall stand,
And boast a mighty name;
Where crystal stones encase the lakes,
And crystal crowns the mountains,
Where from some secret cavern breaks,
Upboiling crystal fountains,
Where long entombed a city proud,
Forth from the silent past,
Glides like a spectre from the shroud
Of ages, o'er it cast.
When dews of honey, from the skies,
Drop at its children's door,
Where grains of gold might kings surprise,
And golden grain the poor;
From courts of justice, granite rocks
Keep out preposterous laws,
No hearth-stone pale, beneath the shocks
Of hellish clashing wars,
When in its mountain nest, the dove
Of peace finds sweet repose—
Joy revels in each righteous breast,
And health blooms like the rose.
Know ye the land? know ye the gem
Whose hidden lustre lies
Buried within the mountain's glen,
Secure from worldly eyes?
Fair Deseret! thy fame shall yet
Light up those summits hoary,
Truth's jeweled lustre ne'er shall set,
But gild earth's future story.

St. Louis ANNA ELISABETH.

The Territories—Powers and Duties of Congress.

The Democratic Convention, which recently assembled at Jefferson City, and which seems to have rallied together all the representatives of the democratic party, save the ultra friends of Mr. Benton, put forth among their resolutions the following declaration of opinion:

"That the Constitution of the United States is founded upon the fundamental principles of entire, and absolute equality among all the States of this Union, and it is not competent for the Congress, or any other power, to impose upon new States coming into the Union any Constitution or restriction in respect to their domestic institutions, or internal concerns, which the Federal Constitution has not imposed upon the original States; and that any effort on the part of Congress, or any other power to violate this principle, should be met and opposed by all good citizens as an attempt to trample upon the Constitntion and destroy our Union."

The foregoing denies the competency of Congress to tie up any territory when it comes into the Union so as to prevent that territory, when converted into a State, from legislating at her pleasure on the subject of slavery.

The doctrine couched in this Resolution derives great support from certain recent opinions delivered by the able and learned Attorney General of the U. States. Indeed, the Resolution itself was not improbably based on these opinions. The following summary of them will not only show our readers what they are, but will impress on every mind the fact that they are by far the most remarkable and important statement of the doctrince in question which has ever yet been given to the country.

1. It has been adjuged by a long series of decisions of the Supreme Court that the United States never held any municipal sovereignty, jurisdiction, or right of soil in the territory of which any of the new States are formed, except for temporary purposes, namely: to execute the trusts created by deeds of cession of Virginia, Massachusetts, Georgia, and other States in the original common territory of the Union, or by treaties with France, Spain, and the Mexican republic, in the territories of Louisiana, the Floridas, New Mexico, and California.

2. It has been adjudged by the same series of decisions that the provisions of the ordinances for the organization of the Northern Territory were extinguished by the Constitution; or if any of them retain continuing validity, it is only so far as they may have authority derived from some other source, either the compacts of cession, or acts of Congress under the Constitution.

3. This doctrine has been applied in leading cases to questions touching the property in public lands, the relation of master and slave, religion, navigable waters, and the eminent domain, and may be taken as the established legal truth.

4. In obedience to the same principle, and proceding in the same line of adjudications, it must have been held, if the question had come up for judicial determination, that the provision of the act of March 6, 1820, which undertakes to determine in advance a perpetual rule of municipal law for all that portion of the province of Louisiana which lies north of the parallel of 36 degrees 30 minutes north latitude, was null and void ad incepto, because incompatible with the organic fact of quality, of internal right, in all respects, between the old and the new States.—[Morn. Heaald.

There is this difference between a man of sense and modesty, and a person of cunning and impudence; one shines in his abitities, the other debases himself and is a disgrace to society.—[Spectator.

The man who does most has the least time to to talk about what he does.

Where are we to Get Bread?

The price of wheat has seldom been so high, and the consumption of it has never been so large. It becomes, therefore, a matter of grave and interesting inquiry how and whence we can draw increased supplies.

The harvest of America this year has been splendid, and that of Great Britian decidedly good; but France has been less fortunate, and the produce of Baltic provinces was unquestionably deficient.—From Canada and the United States we shall doubtless draw large supplies; but France will be a formidable competitor in that quarter; and a competitor, too, who, though less wealthy than ourselves, will be guided, in the price she gives, by social and political, as well as by purely mercantile considerations. The blocade of the Russian ports on the Black Sea will necessarily deprive us of our usual supply from these productive sources. One other quarter remains, of which therefore, it behooves us to take all the advantage possible, viz.: the Danubian Principalities. Vast stores might be drawn thence, were the existing impediments at once and peremptorily removed. We would urge upon the government instant and earnest considerations as to what can be done in that direction.

The impediments to the free export of corn from Wallachia, Moldavia and Bulgaria are of two kinds; the internal ones arising from the Austrain occupation of the Provinces, and the external ones consequent upon Russsia's command ot the mouth of the Danube. The precise nature and extent of both will of course be known to to the government. As to the first, we need not endeavor to disguise from ourselves that Austria will not afford any facilities to the Allies which she can decently avoid, nor scruple to put any difficulties in the way of our free supply, which she can plausibly or without discovery create. The fall of Sebastopol, and the favorable turn which the fortunes of her "allies up to a certain point" seem to be taking, may not improbably make some difference in her behavior, though we can scarcely deceive ourselves as to her real animus.

But her presence there is doubly inimical to our interests in this particular. In the first place, the consumption of her army is large and wasteful; and in the second place, her behaviour and the officials whom she has set up and protects, effectually hinder the establishment of such a stable, liberal energetic and really national Government as would develop the resources and draw forth the stores of the country, by assuring to property ample and certain security, and to industry and enterprise their true reward. The time has come when the Allies are entitled and bound, to demand that the Austrian occupation of the Principalities—which, as their whole conduct has shown, has been effectively an occupation in the interests of Russia—shall cease, and when her tools and those of her quondam protector shall be removed to make way for better governors and sincere friends.

Not a sack of wheat now reaches us from any of the three Danubian provinces without Russian sanction. She commands the mouths of the Danube by means of her settlements and fortresses on its banks. At present it appears she allows neutral vessels to navigate that river, and these export certain moderate and precarious supplies. But it is not to be expected that this permission will continue after she perceives how important we deem it; nor ought neutral vessels alone to have this advantage; nor ought we to leave the command of such a trade and such a granery in the hands of our adversary.

The mouth of the Danube and the whole left bank from the Purth downwards should be immediately wrested from Russia, and she should be driven far enough from the river to prevent her from excercising the slightest control over its navigation. Ishmael and Reni, should be seized, and these as well as Galatz should be garrisoned and held by the allies. After what has been achieved, we cannont doubt that this enterprize might be promptly undertaken and speedily carried out. On the mode of doing it, we shall not presume to offer an opinion. As to the properiety and even the necessity of doing it, we scarcely think that any one who considers at once the demands of our corn markets and the productiveness of the Danubian provinces, can entertain one moment's doubt.—[London Economist, Ootober 27.

A CHAPTER OF HORRORS.

A letter from Norfolk received at Petersburgh, gives the following chapter of horrors.

I saw at the Potter's Field (so great is the difficulty in obtaining grave digggers,) about 16 to 20 feet square, in which was buried the bodies of 34 victims, piled one upon another, and covered over with lime, forming one huge and monstrous mound.

Many have been interred without boxes or coffins, or anything else, save the blankets upon which they died. Several of our wealthiest citizens have been buried in rough square boxes, and the graves dug by their frineds.

In one instance, I heard of a father digging the graves of his two only daughters; and as many as nineteen to twenty bodies have been lying on the ground at the Cemetry waiting their turn for interment as soon as the holes were dug, for in many instances they are not more than two and a half feet deep.

Business is entirely suspended and the stores all closed. You cannot obtain a pound of sugar or a piece of soap. The rich as well as the poor are dependant upon the Howard Association, who have established a provision store, and who dispense food and provisions to the needy with a bountiful hand.

A LAKE OF PITCH.

The last number of Silliman's Journal contains an account of that remarkable curiosity, the "Pitch Lake of Trinidad in the West Indies.

The Lake is situated on the western shore of the island, near the village of La Braye, which is built on a foundation of hard pitch. The lake stands about 90 feet on a plateau above this village, is circular, and half a mile in diameter, surrounded on all sides with a dense forest. Its face is intersected with a net work of water channels, which gives it the appearance of marbled paper.—The surface of the pitch is pretty hard, and when the water channels are dry, it can be passed over on foot.

In the centre of the lake, the pitch appears to be constantly and silently rising up in a mass, and what is very singular numerous pieces of wood are constantly and silently rising to the surface from below. These are from one to several feet in length and are forced by the peculiar pressure to assume an upright position, so as to appear all over the lake like stumps of trees protubing through.

It is believed that this pitch lake is slowly boiling below. Streams of sulphuretted hydrogen gas frequently issues from beneath the temperature of which is 97 degress of Fahrenheit.

The centre of the lake is somewhat plastic but around the sides the pitch is very hard. The water in the streams and small pools is pure and soft; fish are numerous in them, and alligators make them their habitation.

Large springs of petroleum are in its vicinity, and about a mile northward there is a bed of brown coal cropping out upon the seashore; it is about 200 feet thick, and appears from its dip as if it passed under the lake.

The pitch is of great depth, for it has been dug into eighteen feet in many places. It is believed to be a submurged bed of vegetable matter, undergoing distillation by volcanic action underneath.

The store of bitumen appears to be inexhaustible. It is used with wood for fuel by the American steamers plying on the Orinoco river. Mixed with pebbles and gravel it makes excellent pavements, and ground-floors for houses. With ten per cent of rosin oil it makes a good pitch for ships.

The Earl of Dundonal has purchased a tract of twenty-six acres of it, and has instituted experiments to discover, if possible, some means for making it a substitute for india rubber and gutta percha waterproof or vulcanized fabrics. He has already made some vulcanized cloth, which, from appearances bids fair of future success. If such a result crown his efforts—and every person should wish him success—such an inexhaustible supply of cheap material as this lake furnishes will soon bring down the price of such goods in our country, and thus confer unspeakable benefits upon our people.

The Capture of Kinburn.

The operations which resulted in the capture of the forts of Kinburn, seem to have been planned and executed with equal skill. The first step in these operations was the feint of an attack on Odessa.—For two days the combined fleet lay in a thick fog, within five miles of that city, the bells of the city and the signal-guns of the fleet being heard through the gloom, while neither city nor fleet were visible to each other. When the mist rolled away, the greatest activity in preparing for defence was observed on shore. During the next three days the fleet menaced the city, and on the 14th of October, without having fired a shot, all the ships weighed anchor and stood to sea, Eastward. This feint of an attack had the effect of hurrying a large force of the enemy to Odessa, and withdrawing them from the vicinity of Kinburn.

Kinburn, it need scarcely be repeated, stands at the extremity of a narrow spit of land, which forms the Southern shore of the liman, or bay of the Dneiper. The allied land force disembarked east of the town, in order to cut off the retreat of the garrison. Their landing was effected without opposition. The French ranged themselves on the left, to undertake the assault, the British being further to the East to prevent any attempt to relieve the fort. An overwhelming fire opened from the ships soon rendered the fort untenable, and the commandant, General Kokhnovitch, was forced to capitulate, his garrison being accorded the honors of war. Kinburn mounted not more than seventy guns. Honorable terms were offered to the commandant of Otchokoff if he would surrender, but he preferred to blow up his defences and retired.

The First Duties of a Wife in Siberia.—It is a received custom, that every young bride, on her arrival at her husband's house, must invite guests to a dinner prepared by her own hands; and this repast is considered a test of the education she has received at her father's house. Shame and disgrace are the consequence, should she be found deficient on such an occasion, and shame, also, to the parents who did not attend to this essential branch of her education. Whereas her success in gratifying her guests is reckoned as a proof, not only of the woman's own excellence, but also as no small recommendation to her own family, among whom she must have had so good an example, and received such excellent instruction.

It is said that if lawyers are particularly well red on any one point that point is the nose.

Going to law, the Chinese call 'winning a cat to lose a cow.' A very sensible comparison.

Still Another.—Mr. Editor: As a matter of great importance to the afflicted. I wish to make the following statement: About six years ago, my wife was attacked with a slight stroke of dumb palsy. The whole of her right side and limbs were partially paralysed. A doctor was called, who bled her very copiously in the right arm, which relieved her, and she had no more symptoms of paralysis, until last fall, when the right arm gradually became weak and powerless. Both limbs and the whole of her right side soon became perfectly benumbed, and all voluntary motion was entirely suspended. She was bled again, but without any relief. Even her tongue became paralysed, so that she could not, at times, speak so as to be understood. She had a brother, Thomas Utley, a boy 14 years old, who had some time previously been cured of a very severe attack of the same disease, by the use of three bottles of the Mustang Liniment. And we determined to try it in her case, as she had been under the treatment of doctors for several months, without any apparent benefit. I obtained one bottle and commenced bathing the whole affected side and limbs. The effect was truly astonishing. In less than a month, every symptom of the disease had disappeared. She can use her limbs as freely as ever, and no impediment whatever exists in her articulation. In fact, she is perfectly cured; and we bless the day we were induced to use this invaluable Liniment. THE TWENTY-FOURTH OF JULY.

A faithful band of Saints were gladly wending
Their way towards the valley in the West,
While peace and joy their mighty wings were lending
To aid and guide them to the promised rest.

Why rose the sound of music and of singing?
Of gladsome voices and of mirthful glee?
The echoes o'er the mighty prairies ringing,
Betoken sure a people pure and free.

This day was one of sacred remembrance,
And one which we in nowise could forget;
The day our brave men made an entrance
Into the peaceful vale of Deseret.

The thoughts of that great day came rushing o'er us,
Its painful past, and all its present joys;
A faithful picture of its scenes before us—
We gladly listened to our brother's voice,

As he portrayed their hardships and their trials,
While travelling through this dreary wilderness;
How the the Lord had blessed them with his smiles,
And with a home in Utah's deep recess.

And then three hearty cheers were loudly given,
In honor of those brave and noble men;
And God—our Father—saw from yon fair heaven,
How heartily we all responded then.

Contented as the richest in this world,
Together we partook our frugal feast,
While Deseret's proud banner wide unfurled,
Proclaimed why we our journeying had ceased.

As if to favor us, the moon shone brightly,
Its cloudless disc now served us for a lamp,
And old and young began to foot it lightly,
Within the precincts of our little camp.

And sure 'twas cheering to behold the brethren
Joining with spirit in the dance and song,
Encouraging the old and freely gathering,
And mingling in the gaming of the young.

'Twas well nigh morning ere we separated,
Returning to our tents to gain some rest,
And who shall say this day was celebrated
In Zion, with more joy and happiness.

HESTER.

From the Missouri Republican of 1846.

News from the Internal Regions.

Some months ago a Canadian, of the Rocky Mountain party, to whom I had rendered some services, brought to me a bundle of papers, of which he gave me the following singular account. He said, that beyond the Mountains he fell in with a party of the Hudson Bay Company. With this party he found a brother that he had not seen for many years. His brother gave him the bundle of papers, and informed him, that about two years before, he had been on a hunting party, east of M'Kenzie's River, where he fell in with a tribe of Esquimaux Indians, from one of whom he received the bundle in exchange for a knife. The Indian told him that a long time ago, his band was encamped on the sea shore, a great distance to the north east; that one day a strange man was observed on the ice, coming toward them; that the stranger was greatly exhausted from hunger and cold; that he took him to his tent and gave him food, but he died the next day, and left the bundle of papers, securely wrapped up in skins.

If my curiosity was excited at this singular history of these papers it was much more so when, on examination, they proved to be a narrative of the travels and extraordinary adventures of an American by the name of Jonathan Wilder. The papers are in a greatly deranged state, and appeared to have suffered from the rude hands through which they had passed. The narrative is written partly on common paper, and partly on rude parchment, and what appears to be the bark of a tree.

It appears that Mr. Wilder was many years ago, wrecked on the coast of Africa; was taken prisoner by the natives, and was carried into the interior of the country; that he passed through many nations of Africa, as a slave to a black merchant; that he eventually fell in with, and was ransomed by the celebrated Mungo Park, whom he afterwards accompanied on his travels. He states that Mr. Park, himself and three natives, were descending a large river, (the name of which is rubbed out in the manuscript, but presumed to be the Niger,) they came to a large city, at which they proposed to land, but were diverted from it by the hostile attitude of the natives, who appeared on the bank in immense numbers. They passed the city, followed by the natives on the banks, halloeing and using singular gestures, which added to their apprehension that mischief was intended. In a short distance, the river became contracted, and the current greatly increased, which induced them to attempt a landing, at all hazards, but it was now too late; the river became a perfect rapid; rocks and whirlpools beset them on all sides, and they soon lost all control over the direction of the boat. A large mountain appeared directly ahead, with a chasm in its base, gaping to receive them. The three natives had jumped overboard on the first alarm. Park and Wilder clung to the boat, and awaited their fate, which they saw was inevitable. They soon lost all sense of their situation, and eventually found themselves thrown upon a small island within the bowels of the mountain. Here they remained some time, subsisting on dead animals and fish, which they found in abundance, cast up on the island. Their eyes had in a little time, become accustomed to their dark abode, and they were enabled to see and to feel the horrors of their situation. The rocks rose perpendicular from either shore, and formed an arch overhead, which effectually precluded all idea of an escape. Grown desperate, in a situation which destroyed all hope of ever again seeing the light of Heaven, and fearing too, that the next rise of water would sweep them even from that desolate island, they determined to embark in their boat, which had sustained no great injury, and submit themselves to providence, believing that no fate could be more horrible than that which awaited them in their present abode. They accordingly once more launched themselves into the foaming current, and were carried along with inconceivable rapidity, until becoming entangled in an eddy, and landed on another small island, where to their great astonishment they found a human being in an old negro, who by signs gave them to understand that he had been forced down the river and thrown on the island when but a boy, where he had ever since remained its solitary tenant. They again embarked accompanied by the old negro, who gladly united his fate with his new acquaintances. The current gradually became less rapid, and they occasionally landed for repose. Our party now began to entertain some faint hopes that the river, after running under the mountain, would carry them safely out on the other side. After a voyage of considerable duration, to their great joy and astonishment, they were suddenly launched into daylight, in view of an open sea, but in what quarter of the globe they were at a loss to conjecture. The party now landed to seek repose, after their long and arduous voyage, and congratulated each other on their miraculous escape; and yet they could scarcely satisfy themselves, that all had not been a dream. The party remained here several days, viewing the surrounding country, and endeavoring to find out on what part of the globe they were cast; but as no sun, moon or stars had appeared, Mr. Park's instruments were of no avail; neither could his maps and charts throw any light on the subject. Reflecting on their late extraordinary adventures, and their present singular situation, Mr. Park was induced to examine a book he had with him, containing some philosophical speculations on the organization of the globe. This book appeared about the 18th century, and supposed to have been written by a Frenchman, under the title Tellemeid, an East Indian Philosopher. The writer had advanced the singular idea that the waters had once covered the globe; that by some convulsion of nature the earth appeared; that mankind sprang from the sea, and originally had tails, which in time dropped off, like the tail of a tadpole, and that the globe was hollow within and made up of concentric shells. At any other time our party would have laughed at the speculations of this philosopher, as the visionary effusions of a crazed imagination; but, looking back to their late eventful voyage, and their present situation, in a pure, clear atmosphere, and seeing neither sun, moon or stars, the truth flashed on their minds, that they had penetrated the globe, and were then in the Internal Regions. Full of this idea, our party embarked and coasted along the shore some days, and at last came to a large, well built, populous city. The astonishment of our adventurers was not greater than that of the inhabitants, who flocked round them in immence numbers, conversing in a language, to Wilder unknown, but recognized by Park, as the Hebrew tongue; and the people proved to be a colony of Jews. Mr. Wilder gives a long and fanciful description of the city and its inhabitants, and enters minutely into a history of their manners, habits and customs, which do not appear to have undergone any material alteration from the manners and customs of their ancestors, as recorded in Holy Writ. The art of printing is unknown to this people; but they have written records of the great events, from the creation of the world, down to the sacking of the city of Jerusalem, by the King of Babylon and their king and people carried away captive. They have a tradition that when their King Zedekiah fled from the city of Jerusalem to the plains of Jericho, where himself and his army were made prisoners, an Angel appeared to those who remained in the city, and after having selected all the virtuous and faithful led them forth by night and conducted them through many nations, and for many days until they came to a cave or hole in the earth, which they entered, and which was closed behind them; and that they passed through the earth to the world they now inhabit, as a place of refuge, where they are to remain until the coming of the Messiah, who they believe is to lead them back to the land of their forefathers; and as a reward for their sufferings and their constancy, will make them a great and mighty nation, to whom all the other nations of the earth shall be subject.—They say it was foretold them, that about the year of the world 5829 a great prophet would appear on the surface of the globe, who would build a city of refuge, and gather together the remnants of the scattered tribes of Israel, preparatory to the restoration.

This people have immense wealth, in all the precious metals, and an abundance of domestic animals, the most remarkable of which is an animal much larger than the elephant of the old world, and supposed by Mr. Wilder to be the Mammoth, whose bones are occasionally found on the American continent. They have neither sun, moon nor stars, but receive light and heat from the reflection of the sun on a luminous body placed opposite two holes, or openings, one at the North and the other at the South pole, and the light and the seasons are regulated by the revolving of the earth. The inhabitants have spread over the most part of the interior world, but reside principally in cities. Though governed by the same laws, wars and rebellions are very frequent. Their chief city, and their seat of government, where the king resides is called the city of Noah. Whilst Wilder was there, several cities rebelled against Mordecai, their king, but were subdued, and heavy contributions levied on them.—Fire arms have long since been known to them, and they have large magazines of arms and military stores. These magazines sometimes blow up and do great damage to lives and property. Mr. Wilder enters into some speculations as to the probable effect such concussions have on the external surface of the globe, and arrives at the conclusion that our earthquakes are caused by the blowing up of these powder houses.

Park and Wilder traveled over the greater part of the internal world, and visited both the poles.—The South pole is surrounded by the sea; but at the North, a rim of land surrounds the opening, except a narrow strait connecting the external with the internal seas. This people say that about two thousand years ago, a part of the nation rebelled and determined to return to Jerusalem. They journeyed northward, and went out at the North hole, and were never seen or heard of afterwards. This fact led Park and Wilder to entertain a hope of being able to return to their own country by the same route. Wilder makes some pertinent remarks and suggestions as to the probable origin of the Indians of the American continent.

Park and Wilder having finished their exploration of the country, became anxious to return to the old world, and having provided themselves with necessaries for their journey, came out at the North pole. They traveled nearly round the pole or opening which they judge to be two or three hundred miles in diameter, and made many attempts to penetrate to the South, but suffered so much from cold and fatigue, that they gave up all hopes of succeeding, and resolved to return and end their days with the new found people. Nothing, however, could subdue the desire in the breast of Wilder, to revisit his native land; and after some time, he determined to make another attempt. He started alone, traversed the regions around the pole, the climate of which he describes to be mild, growing colder as he progressed South. After innumerable hardships, he penetrated the wilderness, and arrived at the open sea. He journeyed eastward, along the seashore, until he came to a tongue of land, stretching away to the South. This, he rightly concluded, adjoined or approached the American continent.—He now journeyed southeast for forty-five days, and arrived at the extreme point of land in view of the American continent, from which he was seperated by a strait of twenty-five or thirty miles. He gives a glowing description of his feelings, on arriving in sight of his native continent, and the hope of once more seeing his country and his home. It was now midsummer; the strait was frozen over, but appeared open further South. He here makes his last entry on his journal. He resolves to attempt the passage of the strait, and if he succeeded, endeavor to find his way to some Indian nation, or perhaps some of the British posts. It appears he lived to set foot on his native shores, and died, or was murdered by the savages.

In several parts of Mr. Wilder's narrative, he touches on the subject of converting to Christianity, the Jews of this interior world, and in a note to one of his last chapters, he appears to have formed the design, if he should live to reach his native town of Boston, to prepare himself as a missionary, and return to the people he had left.

I have given such a sketch of the prominent parts of this wondrous narrative. The papers are greatly disordered and as soon as my leisure will permit, I intend preparing them for the press. The work, including maps and drawings, will probably occupy a volume of three hundred pages. In the meantime, the curious may have an opportunity of examining the singular manuscript, by calling on me.

As wonderful as this relation may seem, to me it has the stamp of authenticity.

Now that the transaction is of the past, and Sebastopol has fallen, by the combined means of French and English valor and Yankee powder, we presume we violate no confidence in stating, from well-authenticated rumor, that two or three thousand tons of American-made powder, from the most approved mills of Delaware and Connecticut, have been shipped from this port to the order of Brstish official agents, to the Crimea. The Russian government may be somewhat surprised at the magnitude of the supply, but will scarcely make it the ground of diplomatic remonstrance, knowing that partial shipments of the same sort were made to Antwerp or Hamburg to be sent overland through Germany for Russian use.—[N. THE CARDINAL'S CURSING.

"The cardinal rose with a dignified look.
And called for his candle, his bell, and his book!
In holy anger and pious grief
He solemnly cursed that rascally thief:
He cursed him at board and he cursed him in bed,
From the sole of his foot to the crown of his head!
He cursed hin in sleeping—that every night
He should dream of the devil and wake with affright;
He cursed him in eating. he cursed in drinking
He cursed him in coughing, in sneezing, in winking:
He cursed him in sitting, in standing, in lying;
He cursed him in walking, in riding, in flying;
He cursd him in living, he cursed him in dying?
Never was heard such a terrible curse.
But what gave rise
To no little surprise
Nobody seemed one penny the worse!"

MC'LEAN'S VOLCANIC OIL LINIMENT is truly a celebrated remedy, and has done more to alleviate human suffering than any other remedy ever discovered.

One or two applications will relieve the most severe pain, bruise or sprain.

Two bottles will cleanse, purify, and heal the foulest ulcer or sore, and it will heal the most severe burn or scald without a scar.

Every family should have a supply constantly on hand, for use in time of need.

Read the following extract of a letter. which is incontestable proof of its wonderful efficacy:

A BLIND MAN RESTORED TO SIGHT.

J. H. McLEAN—Dear Sir: * * * I have been suffering for four years with rheumatic sore eyes, being at times altogether blind. I procured the advice of several physicians, but none of them could do me any good. By the advice of a friend I applied your "Volcanic Oil Liniment," according to the directions around the bottle, and it has cured me permanently. I have used it since for bruises, pains, &c., and it has always given immediate relief. I live on the main road near Farmington,
Yours, respectfully, JOHN H. ALLERD.
Jefferson county, Mo.

For horses it is far superior to any other remedy for curing lameness, bruises, cuts, old sores, swellings, &c.

We say, then, to all who may be suffering from external diseases, call at once and get a supply. Thousands of bottles are sold (and used) daily, and we have never heard of a case where it has failed in giving relief when properly applied.

MEDICINE FOR THE BILLION!

A Certain Remedy for all Diseases of

MAN OR ANIMALS,

Requiring an External Application.

Warranted in every Case for which it is Recommended!

THE MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT!

Unlike all other popular medicines, it is used by many prominent members of the faculty, and many of the public Hospitals. Their prejudices have yielded to indisputable and incontrovertible demonstrations of cures performed where their remedies had failed.

It has cured more cases of

RHEUMATISM

than any other medicine ever used. Its efficacy in this terrible disease is acknowledged by all who have used it. It not only cures the complaint, but appears to give a vigor and elasticity to the limbs, before unknown, thus performing a double office.

A FEW TESTIMONIALS.

PATH FINDER OFFICE, May 11, 1854.

G. W. WESTBROOK:—

Please send me by the bearer three large bottles of your Mexican Mustang Liniment, as I wish to take it up to my place in Vermont, not thinking it advisable to do without it. I have used it in my family and on my horses, and have found it invaluable. Yours,

J. T. WHITNEY.

ELIZABETHTOWN, TENN., May 25, 1855.

MR. G. W. WESTBROOK:—

Dear Sir—It affords me much pleasure in saying to you that the Mexican Mustang Liniment outsells any medicine that I have ever had for sale, and comes nearer doing what it promises to do. Send me another supply, as I am nearly out. Yours respectfully,

JOHN SINGLETRAY, P. M.

PHILADELPHIA, June 11, 1854.

MR. G. W. WESTBROOK:

Sir—My son was afflicted with a swelling upon the knee joint, which confined him to the house. I had a doctor attending him for some time, but he did not do him any good. One of my neighbors told me to use the Mustang Liniment. I asked the doctor if I could do so, and he told me he thought I could not do better.

I procured one bottle, and in about a week he was able to go out. I can safely recommend it to the afflicted.

Respectfully yours,

MR. BENNETT.

W. S. Ladd & Co., of Portland, Oregon, writes that there is an immense demand for the Mexican Mustang Liniment in that country, and orders forty gross to be shipped by Golden Gate, that sails in a few days from New York.

Park & White of San Francisco, California, order 100 gross, to be forwarded by first clipper for that port.

PORT AU PRINCE, HAYTI, Jan. 16th, 1854.

I had the pleasure to receive invoice and boxes Mexican Mustang Liniment per Croton, and have no doubt it will have a brisk sale on the Island.

GEORGE RACKSTER.

To give health, strength and elacity to the limbs, there is nothing can equal in effect, the

MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT.

FARMERS AND LIVERY STABLE KEEPERS

have need it for the following diseases with extraordinary success, certifying invariably to the efficacy of the Liniment, and the truthfulness of our assertions in its behalf:

Spavin, Splint, Ring-bone, Fistula, Wind Galls, Big Head, Bruises, Strains, String-halt, Scratches, Cracked Heels, Sweeney, Saddle, Collar, or Harness Galls, Hard Lumps or Tumor, Film, or other diseases of the Eye, Poll-Evil, &c.

The small sizes retail for 25 cents per bottle;
The medium size retail for 50 cents per bottle;
The large sizes retail for one dollar per bottle.
The medium bottle is three times as much as the small;
The Large bottle nearly three times as much as the medium,
Therefore the large bottles are the cheapest.

CHURCH HISTORY.

Doniphan possessing a knowledge of law, and having a good share of humanity, replied—'it is cool blooded murder! I will not obey your order; my brigade shall march for Liberty to-morrow morning at 8 o'clock. And if you execute those men, I'll hold you responsible before an earthly tribunal, so help me God!'

Thus the lives of the prisoners were saved. The scene that followed beggars description; language is inadequate to describe it. Imagine fifteen thousand people, embracing all ages, sexes, and conditions, driven in mid-winter from every thing they possessed; destitute, hungry, naked, homeless, and friendless, across trackless prairies, scattered two and three hundred miles from their homes, which they had erected on lands purchased from the Government of the United States, and under the protection of the American flag, driven across the Mississippi river; hundreds—perhaps thousands—perished during the winter, spring and summer because of this exposure. The men in consequence of their over exertion and anxiety, failed first, leaving widows and orphan children in countless numbers, to still suffer.

Notwithstanding the violent feelings of the people of Missouri against the Mormons, they suffered Joseph Smith, and other Elders who had been in prison for six months (and a part of the time fed upon human flesh) to leave the State as soon as the Mormons had all left.

President Smith immediately went to Washington, and made application to the President of the United States, and to Congress for redress; and the most favorable reply was that of Mr. Van Buren, then President of the United States; "Your cause is just, but Government can do nothing for you."—Senator Clay coldly remarked; "You had better go to Oregon." Senator Calhoon said: "It involves a nice question, the question of States rights; it will not do to agitate it;" and the committee of Congress reported it was none of their business.

The scattered remnant, not disheartened, though persecuted, clustered around President Smith, and commenced building the city of Nauvoo, in Hancock county, Illinois; a point so sickly that two unsuccessful attempts had been made to settle it, only a few families living there; yet their burying yard contained such a number of graves as might frighten a new settler from the State of New York, even if there had been three thousand inhabitants.

On 14 Sep. 1840, the Patriarch Joseph Smith, Sen., worn out with exposure and toil, died at Nauvoo, and Hyrum Smith his eldest son, who had previously received ordination and blessing under his father's hands, was acknowledged Patriarch over the whole church.

The bluffs around were put in a state of cultivation, the swamps drained, and in a few years it became as healthy in Nauvoo as any part of Illinois.

Missouri, however, not content with her wholesale system of robbery and extermination against the Saints, commenced a series of vexatious lawsuits against them as soon they became satisfied that they would not all die on the Mississippi.

In 1841, Joseph Smith was demanded from the Governor of Illinois, and a writ issued by him for his apprehension: a writ of habeas corpus was issued, the case was investigated at Monmouth before Judge Stephen A. Douglass, and the arrest declared illegal.

This proceeding, including the expense of Council, fees of attendants, as witnesses &c. cost upwards of three thousand dollars; no inconsiderable sum for a person who had just been robbed of his all.

Dissatisfied with the result of legal proceedings, Missouri commenced a system of kidnapping by which means a number of individuals were carried forcibly without form of law into that state, whipped imprisoned, some of them hung by the neck and otherwise tortured.

The sum of $200.000 was appropriated by the Legislature of Missouri to defray the expenses of the Mormon massacres, the plundered property not being considered sufficient to pay the robbers.

In 1842, a new demand was made by the Governor of Missouri. Joseph Smith was again arrested, and an attempt made to kidnap him into that State. A writ of habeas corpus was obtained from the U. S. District Court for the State of Illinois. Judge Pope heard the case in Springfield, and decided 'the proceedings illegal, and Missouri had no claim on him, and ordered it entered on the docket that he should be troubled no more in the matter', this proceeding altogether cost $12,000.

A foundation had been laid for a temple in the city of Nauvoo. A charter had been obtained for the city conferring liberal powers upon the City Council. A University, and Manufacturing Association incorporated. A Legion also chartered. The University organized and put in operation in several departments. The Manufacturer's Association commenced the erection of large buildings for the manufacture of pottery. Thousands of people flocked in from every part of the United States, and the British Isles. Streets were opened, hundreds of fine buildings erected, a company was incorporated for the purpose of building an extensive hotel with a capital of $200,000. A considerable amount of stock was sold and the basement story of the building with 240 feet front was finished. An extensive printing establishment, stereotype foundry, and book bindery put in operation, two Masonic Lodges established, a large and commodious Masonic Temple was built. Several flourishing villages of the Saints were established in different parts of Hancock and neighboring counties, as well as in Iowa. Joseph Duncan, an aspiring party leader, anxious to become Governor of Illinois, took the stump at Edwardsville, and from that, visited different parts of the State, rousing all the vile passions and religious prejudices that could exist against the Saints, promising that if he could be elected Governor of Illinois, he would exterminate the Mormons, this formed an extensive anti Mormon party, who although unsuccessful in the election which elevated Thomas Ford to the executive chair, continued its operations.

In June 1843, Joseph Smith was arrested at Inlet Grove, Lee County, Illinois, by officers Reynolds and Wilson by virtue of a writ from Gov. Ford of Missouri, and strenuous attempts were made to kidnap him directly to Missouri, which would have been done, had not some high-minded citizens of Dixon and Papaw Grove lent their aid and come to his rescue. the news of his arrest reaching Nauvoo, hundreds of the Saints mounted their horses and started to his assistance (he being arrested while on a visit 250 miles from home.) Another struggle against kidnapping, another series of legal proceedings, another writ of habeas corpus, another trial, and another discharge, was the result; the cost of this proceeding was immense, for so zealous were the Saints to protect their leader, in addition to filling the whole country with horsemen between the Illinois and Mississippi rivers, and sending a squadron across the Illinois to prevent his being kidnapped. About 100 men chartered a steamboat which kept a constant watch of the boats on the Illinois and Mississippi rivers to prevent his being carried into Missouri by steamboat; $100,000 would not defray the expenses and damage to Nauvoo by this arrest.

The general assembly of the State of Illinois in the session of '43 & 4 made an attempt to repeal the charters granted to the City of Nauvoo, which although it did not succeed, had a tendency to depreciate the value of stock with the Manufacturing and Nauvoo house associations. In the month of June, '44 a mob assembled in the neighborhood of Carthage, circulating reports that Joseph Smith and the Mormons had bid defiance to the laws of the State. and all manner of falsehoods were put in circulation, to inflame the public mind, and the Editors of several newspapers devoted their time and space propagating these falsehoods, and on the strength of the rumor that the Mormons were determined to resist the laws, Gov. Ford came to Carthage and ordered into service several hundred men, mostly members of the mob, he then sent an officer to Nauvoo to arrest Joseph Smith and several others, Mr. Smith apprehending that the intention was to murder him, instead of trying him the 47th time by law, requested the Governor to protect him from mob violence, which he pledged the faith of the State to do; the matter of which he was accused being investigated, he was again dismissed, when a new writ was taken out charging him with treason, and he put in jail. Gov. Ford then dismissed all his troops except one company, (the Carthage Greys,) who were known to possess the most violent feelings of hatred toward the Mormons, and treacherously left them to be murdered, after having held a private council on the subject and concluding that that would be the best way to pacify the feelings of the mob HE left them to their fate.

On the 27 June, at 23 minutes past five P. M. the prison was surrounded by about one hundred and fifty armed men with their faces blackened, who massacred Joseph Smith and his brother Hyrum, the Patriarch of the church, leaving Elder John Taylor severely wounded with four balls, Elder Willard Richards, who was in the same room escaped unhurt; although President Smith had repeatedly apprised the Saints that his tarry among them would be short, and before leaving Nauvoo told his friends he was going like a Lamb to the slaughter and would never return, yet no people on the face of the earth ever mourned more sincerely the loss of a benefactor than did the Latter-day Saints.

The anti-Mormons rejoiced in his death and exulted loudly in their victorious treachery, while the christian world generally exclaimed "how barbarous to kill him so, but, then it is a good thing he is dead."

At the fall term of court, bills of indictment for murder in the first degree, were found against the principal leaders in the massacre, and they were allowed by the court to go at large on bail, and to go each others security, only $1000 being the sum required.

In May 1845 they had a sham trial and were acquitted, although the court, bar, jury and witnesses knew them to be guilty of the murder.

The Twelve Apostles being the first quorum in authority in the church, by the unanimous voice of the Saints immediately returned from their mission abroad and took their position at the head of affairs in Nauvoo; Brigham Young, President of the Twelve Apostles presiding.

The Temple, which was one story high at the time of the Prophet's death, progressed rapidly, the Saints continued to gather into Nauvoo.

The Seventies Hall was built, a music hall and a large stone arsenal were also erected, the Nauvoo House was recommenced; the brick work of the first story being built, when the mob coming to the conclusion that the murder of the Prophet had not destroyed the progress of Mormonism, commenced an organization for the extermination of the Saints from Nauvoo, under the name of a wolf hunt.

Being aware of the above organization, a council of the leading men of the church directed a memorial to every State and Territory in the Union (except Missouri) couched in the most respectful language, setting forth the condition of the Saints and asking the privilege of settling in their State, and receiving protection and religious liberty, which was treated with perfect silence.

The old scheme was resorted to, of getting out vexatious writs for President Young and the members of his quorum. He not feeling disposed to be murdered as the Prophet and Patriarch had been, provided himself with good and efficient weapons, gave notice from the stand to assembled thousands that any man that laid hands on him or read a writ to him, he would kill him if he could do it with a pair of six-shooters, (which he exhibited,) and although many individuals volunteered to try the experiment, yet their nerve failed before coming to the sticking point.

The Legislative Session of 1844 repealed the charters of the city of Nauvoo, of the University and the Legion, a combination was formed, composed of nine counties for the extermination of the Mormons, and the work commenced on the tenth day of September 1845, by burning all the houses in Morley Settlement belonging to Mormons, and so continuing from one settlement to another.

An armed body of about one hundred and fifty men, continued two weeks burning houses, destroying property, and turning helpless women and children out of doors, homeless and destitute, to perish; although the sheriff of the county called upon the good citizens who were not Mormons to turn out under his direction, and disperse the burners, yet not one obeyed his call, but a party of the armed burners pursued him and drove him out of the neighborhood, he was obliged to summon a posse of those who had been just burned out, and kill one of his pursuers to save his life; escaping to Nauvoo, he issued a Proclamation, commanding the Mormons by virtue of his office as sheriff, to turn out and quell the riot; 500 men were then employed upon the Nauvoo house, which was moving up rapidly.

They were dismissed by the Trustees and made preparation for repelling the mob, and the sheriff succeeded temporarily in dispersing the rioters.—General Harding soon after came into Nauvoo with four hundred of the State militia, camped there several days, enquired where the Prophet was buried, said the Governor could not do anything to protect the Mormons, and did not go into the districts where the burning had been performed, although over one hundred houses had been burned, the troops remained some time in the county, several houses were burned within sight of their camp, and several persons lost their lives because they placed a little dependence upon the militia for protection.

Previous to this, there was a council of the authorities of the church, who had passed a resolution, which as a matter of policy was kept private, to send 1,500 men as pioneers to make a settlement in California, or Oregon, not intending to remain in Illinois, a proposition was accordingly made to the mob (for the State Government had no power) that if they would let the Saints alone and assist them by buying out their property, stopping vexatious law-suits against them, they would remove from the State; which proposition was accepted; accordingly companies were immediately formed, several thousand wagons were put under contract, nearly all the wagons in the surrounding country were bought up, and all the movements possible were made to provide for an early start in the spring.

But the persecution being renewed in violation of the above pledge, 1,000 families commenced their journey on the 1st February 1846, thinking by that means to be able to allay the excitement against those who remained behind. Many of the teams crossing the Mississippi river on the ice, President Young and the leaders of the church with a scanty fit out pursued their journey Westward, having to make the road for 300 miles, bridging numerous streams, and encountering every vicissitude of weather that could be imagined.

They arrived at Council Bluffs in July, where they were met by Captain J. Allen of the U. S. army, who called upon them in behalf of the President of the U. S., for 500 men to assist in the war with Mexico. The required battalion was made up leaving their families mostly in the Omaha country, on the West side of the Missouri river, in wagons, without protectors, or means of subsistence. Soon after the battalion started on the road for New Mexico.

The aged and infirm, halt, lame, blind &c., who were unable to enlist into the battalion, gathered up their wagons, and established a place called Winter Quarters, where 700 cabins were erected during the fall and winter, and where the families suffered extremely from sickness, exposure and the want of the necessaries of life.

As soon as it was known in Illinois that the flower of the camp had enlisted in the service of the U. S., the mob assembled with redoubled fury, formed a regular military encampment, provided with artillery, in the neighborhood of Nauvoo, which now contained the poor, the helpless, the sick and infirm, as all who were able to leave on any terms, had done so during the spring and summer.

The mob increased their force to about 1800 men, and made several unsuccessful attacks upon the city, (which could barely muster 123 efficient men,) killing and wounding a number of its inhabitants, battering down many buildings, and after several days bombardment, in driving the people helpless and destitute of every thing that could make earth desirable, across the river into Iowa, where many must have perished from starvation, had not their kind Creator fed them, by sending upon their camp, flocks of quails, so tame that their women could catch them with their hands. And to crown their victory, the mob set fire to the Temple of Nauvoo, which was the most beautiful building in the Western States. It was the first specimen of a new order of architecture introduced by Joseph Smith; and had cost a million dollars. The light of its fire was visible for thirty miles.

In the spring of 1847, President Brigham Young, with 143 pioneers, started in search of a place of settlement, and were led by the hand of the Almighty—for no person among them knew anything of the country—directly to this valley, where the company arrived on the 24th of July, having sought out and made a new road 650 miles, and travelled a trappers trail nearly 400 miles.

In the fall of 1847 about 700 wagons laden with families arrived in this valley, which was so barren as to produce nothing but a species of dry grass four or five inches high, and the ground was covered with myriads of large black crickets, the food of the Indians.

In this desolate place the site of Great Salt Lake City was surveyed; not a single person in the whole company having a full supply of provisions, but all were on three-quarters or half rations; and in this condition about 100 of a detachment of the Mormon Battalion found their way here without any provisions. President Young, and a portion of the pioneers returned to Winter Quarters the same fall, and arrived again in Great Salt Lake City with 1000 wagons in the fall of 1848.

The crickets during this season came down from the mountains in myriads, and destroyed a great portion of the scanty crops; and the whole would have been destroyed had not the Almighty in His kindness to His people, sent gulls in large flocks, which devoured the mammoth crickets, and then vomited them up preparatory to devouring more.

Notwithstanding the Mormon Battalion was in the service of the United States, and a great portion of their families located at Winter Quarters, the Indian department compelled them in the spring of 1848 to leave their cabins, and move across the river into the State of Iowa, although it was well known, they were only camped until the return of the absent Battalion.

In the spring of 1848 some members of the Mormon Battalion first discovered the gold mines in California, thus opening to the world an unparalleled source of wealth and adventure.

In the fall of 1848 the first Presidency of the church was re-organized; Brigham Young being unanimously chosen President of the whole church, Heber C. Kimball and Willard Richards his counselors, and their places were filled in the quorum of the Twelve Apostles. John Smith was ordained Patriarch over the church.

In March 1849, a provisional government was formed, and a State Constitution adopted by a convention under the name of "The State of Deseret." A Delegate was sent to Congress with a petition for admission into the Union. In September 1850, an act passed the Congress of the United States, providing for the organization of the State of Deseret into the Territorial Government of Utah. News of the passage of this act did not arrive until the spring of 1851, and a full judicial bench did not settle until July 1853. Brigham Young was appointed Governor and has performed the duties of that office for four years to the entire satisfaction of the inhabitants, who unanimously desire his re-appointment.

And although the country was one of the most barren by nature, ever inhabited by man, as according to the estimates of the late Captain Gunnison of the U. S. Topographical Engineers, not one acre in 21,000 can ever be irrigated; and scarce a tree or bush can be made to grow beneath the snow line without irrigation, no colony has progressed with more equal and uniform rapidity.

The settlements have been extended from North to South to the entire breadth of the Territory 350 miles, wherever water can be had to irrigate the earth. It contains about 50,000 inhabitants who are almost exclusively members of the church. About 100 saw mills and forty grist mills are in operation, and amongst the public buildings there are the Deseret State House, which has been occupied by the Legislature for five years; the Utah Territorial house at Fillmore City; the Tabernacle in G. S. L. City, a building 126 by 64 feet, arched without a column. There are twenty-four good school houses in this city, generally about twenty by thirty feet and are well finished. All the neighborhoods in the Territory are provided with similar school facilities.

The amount of labor expended in ditching and preparing for irrigation, is far greater than clearing heavy timber farms in the States. Good wheat, corn and vegetables are produced, if carefully irrigated, in great abundance.

On the 11th day of March, 1854, Dr. Willard Richards died in G. S. L. City, of dropsy. On April 6, Jedediah M. Grant was chosen as a counselor in his place.

On the 23rd of May, John Smith, Patriarch, died in G. S. L. City.

The church has about ninety-five missionaries from Utah, in Europe, and an equal number in Asia, Africa, and the Pacific Isles, besides large numbers of Native Elders in the different fields of labor, a considerable number of the Saints are scattered throughout the United States and British provinces. The Deseret News edited by Elder Albert Carrington is published in G. S. L. City, and issues 4,000 copies weekly. A weekly newspaper is published in St. Louis, Mo., by Elder Erastus Snow; another in the city of New York by Elder John Taylor. A periodical is published in Liverpool, England, edited by Elder F. D. Richards, and has issued 22,000 copies weekly. A weekly periodical is published in Swansea, South Wales, called the Udgorn Seion, in the Welsh language, by Elder Dan Jones.

A periodical called the Scandinaviens Stierne, is also published in the Danish language, at Copenhagen, Denmark. A periodical has also been published in Switzerland in the French language, edited by Elder T. B. H. Stenhouse. The Book of Mormon has been translated and published into the Welsh, Danish, French, German and Italian languages. The work has made considerable progress in Sweden, and Norway, the governments having made their utmost exertion to prevent it, the progress has been slow in France, Germany and Italy, owing principally to governmental proscription.

In Denmark and Switzerland, the progress has been much better. In the Sandwich Islands considerable progress has been made, some 5,000 persons having received baptism. The Book of Mormon has been translated into the Hawaiian language, and a printing establishment has been secured for the publication of the Book of Mormon and a periodical there.

The missionaries on the Society Islands met with good success until the French Government with sword in hand, adopted the exterminating policy of the mobs in the United States.

Missionaries have established many branches and a periodical in Australia; branches have been established in South Africa, Gibraltar, Malta and also in the allied army and navy in the Crimea; several branches have been established in India, and a monthly paper published at Madras, but owing to the great ignorance and degradation of the people, our missionaries have met with but very limited success.

About one thousand Saints have emigrated from Denmark to this Territory, and a similar emigration is expected this season. The number of Church members is unknown, but from the best estimates that we can gain, they are over 480,000.

A company has been incorporated to assist the immigrating Saints to this place, from the countries first, where they were the most oppressed. It is termed "the Perpetual Emigrating Fund Company" and has a capital of 250,000 and is conducted on such principles as to be continually increasing, and extends assistance to emigrating Saints in the form of loans to be re-paid after they settle here.

For the faith of the Church, I extract from the Times and Season, as follows:

We believe in God the eternal Father, and in his Son Jesus Christ, and and in the Holy Ghost.

We believe that men will be punished for their own sins and not for Adam's transgression.

We believe that through the atonement of Christ all mankind may be saved by obedience to the laws and ordinances of the Gospel.

We believe that these ordinances are, 1st. Faith in the Lord Jesus Christ; 2d. Repentence; 3d. Baptism by immersion for the remission of sins; 4th. Laying on of hands for the gift of the Holy Ghost.

We believe that a man must be called of God by "prophecy and by laying on of hands," by those who are in authority to preach the gospel and administer in the ordinances thereof.

We believe in the same organization that existed in the primitive church, viz., Apostles, Prophets, Pastors. Teachers, Evangelists,, &c.

We believe in the gift of tongues, prophecy, revelation, visions, healing, and interpretation of tongues, &c.

We believe the Bible to be to be the word of God as far as it is translated correctly; we also believe the book of Mormon to be the word of God.

We believe all that God has revealed, all that he does now reveal, and we believe that he will yet reveal many great and important things pertaining to the kingdom of God.

We believe in the literal gathering of Israel, and in the restoration of the ten tribes. That Zion will be built upon this continent. That christ will reign personally upon the earth, and that the earth will be renewed and receive its paradisiacal glory.

We claim the privilege of worshiping Almighty God according to the dictates of our conscience, and allow all men the same privilege, let them worship how, when, or where they may.

We believe in being subject to Kings, Presidents, Rulers, and Magistrates, in obeying, honoring, and sustaining the Law.

We believe in being honest, true, chaste, benevolent, virtuous, and in doing good to all men; indeed we may say that we follow the admonition of Paul, "we believe all things, we hope all things," we have endured many things and hope to be able to endure all things. If there is anything virtuous, lovely, or of good report, or praiseworthy, we seek after these things. Respectfully, &c.

JOSEPH SMITH.

We also believe in the Patriarchal order of matrimony.

A foundation has been laid for a temple in this city 193 feet long and 125 feet wide.

On the 18th of February 1855, John Smith son of Patriarch Hyrum Smith the martyr, was ordained Patriarch over the Church.

The unparalleled progress of this people in the face of so much opposition and persecution, and in so dreary a country, shows clearly that the power of the Almighty is exerted in a miraculous manner to spread his diamond truth to reclaim the nations.

To the Subscribers of the Luminary.

Owing to the absence of President Erastus Snow to the valley, and decease of our beloved and lamented brother—Professor Orson Spencer, who, it was anticipated, would attend to the editorial department in St. Louis, and from other considerations, it has been deemed advisable to suspend the issue of the St. Lou's Luminary until such time as circumstances will admit of filling the editorial corps by appointment from the valley or the return of President Snow. The yearly subscription for the Luminary is about to expire, and as there may be some who have recently subscribed, we shall make arrangements to supply them with the MORMON, so that no loss shall accrue from the former arrangements of President Snow; we shall also insert the Luminary's unexpired advertisements, and request a continuance; and we respectfully solicit the subscribers of the Luminary and the Elders to exert their influence through the country to forward names and subscriptions to our office in New York, as early as possible, for the present and coming yearly subscription for the MORMON, that we may be able at the earliest moment, to supply the back and following numbers to the several subscribers, and be better prepared to commence the issue of another year.—[The Mormon.

THE LAST NUMBER.

The present number completes the first volume of the "Luminary," and terminates its modest career. The article from President Taylor which we re-publish in this paper from "The Mormon," will explain to our subscribers the cause of our discontinuance. We have forwarded to "The Mormon" all those names, subscriptions and advertisements which have been sent us for the second volume of the "Luminary," which change we doubt not will be fully appreciated by our patrons.

In the absence of President Erastus Snow, who is still rusticating we presume in the mountain territory, we thank our subscribers for their kind and liberal patronage, and in closing the volume we would express our recognizance and gratitude to the Father of light, for that portion of His spirit that has inspired its editors and correspondents, and for that effulgent truth that has been published in its weekly pages.

There are some who would have been glad to have it continued; but He who caused light to shine in darkness, has otherwise decreed, and hath so ordered events that those whose presence was esential to its existence are absent. The one at his mountain home, the other in the silent tomb. We therefore introduce the subscribers of the "Luminary" to our excellent cotemporary "The Mormon," with our most polite bow, and wish them all a merry Christmas and a happy New-Year.

We copy the following address "to the Elders and Saints throughout the United States," from the Mormon, and recommend it to the careful consideration of the Saints in this Stake of Zion, and hope it will be warmly responded to by every Latter-day Saint.

THE MORMON.

To the Elders and Saints throughout the United States.

We wish to address a few words and to call your attention to the propriety of sustaining our own publications, and circulating them, as far as practicable, in the various regions where you reside. The toil, labor and pecuniary responsibilities associated with publishing a paper, are only known by a few; and those things which may amuse and instruct you, are obtained only by unwearied diligence, perseverance and industry, by both mental and bodily labor, as well as at a heavy pecuniary expense.—We need not here say anything about the MORMON, for the high encomiums that we are daily receiving from all parts of the world, give us sufficient evidence that our labors are accepted and appreciated by our readers. We wish, however, to inform our friends that these results are only obtained by a heavy outlay, consequent upon the labor necessarily employed in the enterprize. We could publish a paper for a good deal less money than we do, but it would not be THE MORMON. Now, we are wishful to advance instead of retrogading; we have various suggestions and improvements to make, in relation to the MORMON, so soon as we shall be in a condition to carry them out; but those improvements will require yet a further outlay, and we want to lay this subject calmly and dispassionately before our brethren. The question arises, shall we have as good a paper as is published in the United States? If so, will you sustain it? not in name or word, but in solid, sober reality. Our responsibilities are not theoretical, they have to be met every week and every day in dollars and cents. Now, if the paper is of any use to anybody, it is of use to the Elders and Saints of our own church. It is at the present time one of the most powerful auxiliaries in spreading truth, repelling falsehood, and advancing the interests of the kingdom of God in the United States; and we call upon all Elders and Saints to double what they have already done, that we may be delivered from all embarrassments on this subject, that the cause of truth may progress, and the principles advocated in the MORMON may float throughout these United States.

We appeal, too, to the Council, officers and Saints in the stake of St. Louis, to sustain us with that liberality with which they have heretofore sustained the Luminary. Brethren, let not your hands be feeble, nor your hearts faint; we are doing a good work—come to our help. We would here remark that we have incurred liabilities, the which, if any of our brethren who have the means, feel it in their hearts to help us liquidate, it will be thankfully received; and for the future, we wish the MORMON to stand on its own merits. Cannot we do it, brethren? Mormonism never started a thing yet but what it could accomplish. Let us unite with a long pull, a strong pull, and a pull altogether, and we will accomplish the object designed. We do not come before you with a poor mouth, or as supplicants, begging and pleading; we lay it before you as a duty—and if you cannot, we can.

CHEROKEE MISSION.

We have been favored by Elder Eyring with a copy of the journal of the little company of missionaries in charge of Elder James Case, which left St. Louis Oct. 24th, for the Cherokee Nation as appointed at our last Conference. The company arrived at Spavenau Mills, the head quarters of the mission, Nov. 10th, and found brother Miller sick with chills and fever. Grand Saline is fourteen miles from the missionary station, and is the nearest post-office.

Nothing remarkable occurred on the journey except the sudden return of one of the party, W. O. Flavel, who went two thirds of the journey, when for some private motive gave out, and returned to Keokuk, where we found him two weeks since, not far from his mother's apron-strings.

Elder Richards from Salt Lake City, traveled with the company the last twenty-five miles, and gave the St. Louis brethren much useful information concerning their missions.

Elder Case writes under date of Nov. 13th, from which we extract the following: "Hereby I take the pleasure to inform you of our safe arrival at the place of our destination. I arrived here with all my little company (except W. O. Flavel, who left us at Springfield) in good health and spirits, on Saturday evening, Nov. 10th. We were favored most all the way with beautiful weather, and traveled quicker than we anticipated, we made the whole trip (377 miles) in fifteen days traveling, making on an average about twenty-five miles a day.

When we arrived we found brother Miller sick with the chills and fever, but to-day he seems to feel quite well again, having been administered to by us yesterday.

We held two meetings on Sunday, and felt a good spirit prevailing among the Saints, according to brother Miller's statement the work of the Lord in this part of the vineyard is advancing but slowly, there are baptised into the church only a few Cherokees, nevertheless there is a pretty good prospect to win many souls for the kingdom of God; there are a great many natives believing our doctrines, but they are slow in obeying, and it will require some time to remove their traditions and prejudices. The people in general receive our Elders friendly, and are willing to listen to our principles, but the influence of sectarian ministers is at the same time pretty strong, and hinders to some extent the spreading of the work.

Last evening we had a meeting, when I and my brethren received appointments to our fields of labor; I am appointed to labor with brother Eyring in the Creek Nation, about forty miles southwest from this place. Elder Richards is appointed with Elder Bricker to labor likewise in the Creek Nation. Brother Higgerson is appointed to advance our principles in the Choctaw Nation, under the direction of Elder Cook. We shall go to our several fields of labor in a short time, and I hope to be enabled soon to report favorable news."

VISIT TO KEOKUK AND NAUVOO.

The Temple—The Seventies Hall—General aspect of the City—Mr. Cabet and the Icarian community—The Saints in Keokuk—A Norwegian settlement discovered—Return to St. Louis.

Having occasion to visit the branch of the church in Keokuk, we took our passage on Wednesday, Nov. 28th. on the "Westerner," the regular packet between St. Louis and Keokuk, and arrived at our destination on Friday morning at 3 o'clock. From Alton we were favored by the company of Elders Christian Christianson, and Christian Frederick Nelson Tweedy, two Danish brethren recently from the Valley, now on missions to the United States, particularly to those people who speak their language.

After spending several hours with the brethren in Keokuk, we obtained a conveyence to Montrose, where we arrived late in the afternoon, and landed at the city of Joseph as the sun was declining beneath the Western horizon. The first structure that attracted our attention in the distance, was the colossal ruins of the renouned Temple, which may be easily distinguished at a distance of several miles. On entering the city we were attracted to the Seventies Hall, which still retains its sacred name, and the all-seeing eye, circumscribed by the Priesthood, is still seen on the upper portion of the building; but those commodious rooms where the Seventies of Israel once assembled in solemn council, are now desolate, and seemed shrouded like the entire city, in the habiliments of mourning. The workshops that were once enlivened by the general hum of industry, are now vacated and closed up for want of business. Dwelling houses, where the peaceful families of the Saints once mingled their songs of praise to the Almighty, are in some cases closed and boarded up as on the day they were abandoned, others were delapidated and gone to ruin for want of proper attention; the greater portion were pulled down and destroyed, whilst the balance were inhabited by strangers, and instead of hearing from the passers by, the sweet accents of our natal tongue, we were every where saluted with Parlez vous francais monsieur? Or, Sprachen sie deutch mien herr?

We took up our temporary abode with the family of the martyred Prophet, where we were kindly received and well accommodated. On the following morning we had an agreeable interview with monsieur Cabet, the celebrated author of "a voyage in Icarie," and founder of the Icarian community.—Who received us courteously, and with all the politeness characteristic of his nation. The community in Nauvoo is said to number about six hundred souls, who after a series of vicissitudes and revolutions in France, Texas and elsewhere, are now laboring to establish and develop Mr. Cabet's peculiar views for the especial benefit of themselves, and for mankind in general, so far as Mr. Cabet's theories and principles may be appreciated. The system is not unlikely to satisfy the present wants of the founder, who is doubtless honest in his intentions, and desires to benefit his people and nation, and will most likely improve the social and temporal condition of that class of his countrymen of which his community is principally formed. But the ultimatum of his scheme is by no means flattering to the initiated. The grand principle involved is the voluntary surrender of mind and means to Mr. Cabet. The little word, means, implies money, surplus clothing, books. implements of husbandry, machinery and all the paraphernalia of civil life, which may be termed Mr. Cabet's social law of consecration. If the treasurer be an honest man, and we have no reason to think otherwise, then the "common stock" may be considered safe in his control. But Mr. Cabet is en vieul homme, and his influential and all absorbing position will only pave the way for avaricious and dishonest speculators, who will have the finest chance imaginable to feed their insatiable desires and ambition at the expense of the commonality. Having no religious principle to govern or restrain their actions there is neither a certain hope for the life that now is, nor guarantee for the life that is to come. The community is now composed chiefly of the industrial class; but no sooner shall it become rich, than it will be swarmed by a legion of adventurers that every where abound on the European continent, and the shrewdest among them will grab the most.

We were politely introduced by the venerable Icarian Mons. Cabet, to his chief secretary, Mr. Edward Vogel, an intelligent German, who, conducted us through the refectory, La Cuisine, L'Imprimerie, Les Ecoles, and all the principal departments of the community, which were both novel and interesting to us outsiders. The Refectory is the parterre of a large building that comprises the kitchens, printing-office, theatre, wash-house, social hall and general dwelling house extraordinary! Where may be studied the gastronomic and the social sciences in all the perfection of communism as developed by Mons. Cabet. The Refectory is surrounded with numerous devices and inscriptions, illustrative of the order, and is sufficiently commodious for the accommodation of several hundred persons. It is used, moreover, as a theatre, and for the reunions of the general assembly. The school is built of stone taken from the "Nauvoo Temple," most of which is destroyed; the front still remains almost entire, looking down upon the deserted city in solemn grandeur and magnificence, a monument of greatness that has caused fiends to rage and tremble, and the whole earth to be astonished.

We returned to Keokuk on Saturday evening, by way of Montrose, and on the following day we had the pleasure of meeting with the Keokuk branch, which is composed chiefly of Saints left by the emigration of the year 1852. Elder Chas. Clark the President of the branch is a good man, and well qualified for the Presidency. He was for several years a traveling Elder in England; his counsellors are both good men, and well qualified to co-operate with him for the building up of the kingdom of God in that region of country; one manifest desideratum to its accomplishment is a convenient meeting room; in the afternoon several were obliged to retire, being unable to obtain admission, owing to the crowded state of the meeting place. We hope the brethren will take this matter into consideration and endeavor to obtain a suitable room in a more central position, which would be found highly advantageous to the interests of the cause of truth in that district.

We had the pleasure of striking hands with a number of our old and esteemed friends, among whom are brothers Flavel, Baily, West, Munns and their several families, and although the interview was of short duration, it was not the less pleasing and agreeable. It revived many pleasing reminiscences, and interesting scenes and incidents that time has engraved upon the page of memory in the most lively and durable character, that none but true Saints can fully appreciate.

Elders Christianson and Nelson were present at the reunion on Sunday; the former gave an interesting discription of a Norwegian settlement he had discovered about twelve miles from Keokuk, consisting of twenty-five families. They received him kindly, and offered their school house for preaching; brother Christianson has given out an appointment for Sunday next, (Dec. 9th,) and is sanguine of doing a good work among them, in the first place because they have no Lutheran Priest among them, and secondly because the Methodist Priests can't speak their language. He intends leaving them in charge of Elder C. F. Neilson, and searching out other setulements of his countrymen as directed by President Taylor.

We took our passage from Keokuk on Sunday evening at nine o'clock, and arrived at St. Louis on Tuesday morning at eleven, feeling considerably refreshed and exhilerated by the varied incidents of our short but interesting voyage.

From the Internal Regions.

The last number of the Luminary, contained on the fourth page an article with captiom, "The Internal Regions" which we intended to accompany with a few words of comment, as an explanation of our views upon the theory, pro-pounded by Mr. Wilder, concerning his visit to the interior of the earth; it being inhabited by the ten tribes &c., but they were omitted through the press of other business.

We do not believe in the writers theory; neither do we believe his a bona fide voyage, we have republished the article because of its novelty, presenting an exploded hypothesis whose chief merit is the air of romance and mystery in which it is written. There is one item in the article that might be considered a little remarkable, which reads as follows: They say it was foretold them, "that about the year of the world 5829 a great Prophet would appear on the surface of the globe, who would build a city of refuge, and gather together the remnants of the scattered tribes of Israel, preparatory to the restoration." If we allow 4000 years as the age of the world before Christ, which is generally given by chronologists; it will bring us down to the year 1829 when a great Prophet was to appear upon the earth, who would build a city of refuge; and gather together the remnants of the of the scattered tribes of Israel, preparatory to the restoration. This tradition or prediction is certainly co-incdental with facts that have transpired since that period. It appears the more remarkable because it was published some several years before the organization of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, by the Prophet Joseph Smith, who has since established cities of refuge, and commenced to gather together the scattered remnants of Israel, from all the nations of the earth.

It will doubtless appear strange to our readers, how a prophecy so manifestly true, should be mixed up with such an uncredible story as the one told by our fellow countryman, but so it is; and all the explanation we can give must be deducted from the article itself, which may be taken for what it is worth, we therefore leave each one to deduce his own conclusions upon it.

With regard to the geological question, involved in the article to which we have referred; we are inclined to believe Professor Silliman's theory, that the interior of the earth is a mass of fire that has never been extinguished since its formation, which is reserved unto the day that shall burn as an oven, when those that do wickedly shall be as stuble, in that day said the Prophet Malachia "They shall be burned up, and the Lord shall not leave them root nor branch." In the meantime let sinners in Zion be afraid, and let fearfulness surprise the hypocrites, and let them ask in the language of the Prophet "Who among us shall dwell in devouring fire? Who among us shall dwell in everlasting burnings?" and the response will be. "He that hath clean hands and a pure heart, and hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity, nor sworn deceitfully to his neighbor." The pure and faithful Saint shall live secure and unharmed as were the three Hebrew children in the furnace, and will abide the coming of the son of God, even though he be like a refiners fire, and may consume the ungodly with the breath of his mouth.

KANSAS.

The Kansas difficulties are every day becoming more difficult. The following from the "Lexington Express" of the 6th inst. is said to be reliable information, which indicates a most disastrous state of affairs, but it may be hoped from the firm stand the majority of the Territory has taken in favor of law and order, as interpreted by the territorial government that the guerre civile will soon subside.

"An entrenchment has been dug all round the town of Lawrence, and the people are armed with 1,000 Sharp's rifles and six pieces of cannon.—They say they will defend the town to the last extremity.

Gov. Shanon has ordered Sheriff Jones to take all the rifles and cannon at Lawrence, and bring them to Lecompton.

Two hundered men crossed the Missouri river at Deleware landing, before day on Monday morning, and were still crossing when Mr. Russel passed.

One company of millitia, under the command of Captain Dunn, was fitted out and furnished with arms, &c., at the town of Levenworth, by the house of Majors Russell & Co., and orders were left by Mr. Russell that like facilities should be offered to all others who might apply for the purpose of assisting the Governor.

Mr. R. confirms the story of the burning of sixteen pro-slavery houses at Hickroy Point, and regards this as one of the greatest of all the outrages committed by the anti-slavery party.

From Mr. Russell we also learn Gen. Ritchardson formerly Indian agent, in company with a number of personal friends—all freesoilers—applied to him for horses to go to Lawrence, for the purpose of counseling submission to the laws. Gen. R., although a freesoiler, takes decided grounds with the Governor. The result of his mission is not yet known. He went to Lawrence on Sunday.

SALT LAKE MAIL.

The Salt Lake Mail came to hand just before going to press, we have only space for the correspondence of the Historian George A. Smith, whose letter embodies as usual all the current news in the Territory that may be considered particularly interesting to our readers.

We have received the Deseret News up to Oct. 24th, from which we learn that general health, peace, prosperity, prevail. For the details of the news, we refer our readers to the "MORMON."

NECESSITY OF DIVINE AUTHORITY.

In the scriptures there are few things made more clear, then the fact, that to administer acceptily in the ordinances of Gods house, authority from heaven is necessary. From the earliest accounts of Gods dealings with the children of men, we find that he had delegated authority, who administered in His name the ordinances of salvation. We read of Adam, Moses, and other Prophets and Apostles, all being chosen, appointed, and authorized to do the work of God. Thus men being ordained to his power, were the constituted authorities of the kingdom of God, by the "kingdom of God" we mean simply the laws of God on the earth, in contradistinction from the governments of men. In every earthly kingdom there is necessarily authority, and the kingdom of God is not excepted from this rule.

Anciently no sacrifice, offering, or ordinance was accepted unless attended to by the authority, and in the manner God appointed. So long as men did not transcend the instructions given them, the authority was supreme in those to whom it was committed; hence Moses is represented as being "a God to Pharoh;" that is the designs of God, and power to accomplish them, were given to Moses to deliver Isreal, as absolutely as if God had been on the earth himself. The whole official life of Moses proves that he was God's legal representative on the earth. All the Prophets who stood at the head of dispensations, had the same power given in proportion to the work God designed they should accomplish.

And in the new dispensation this power was equally necessary. It was not sufficient that the early Apostles were called, commissioned and instructed by Christ, no, for he told them to tarry at Jeruslem "until they were endowed with power from on high." Paul referring to this power says "God hath committed unto us the ministery of reconciliation and we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God." They had power to bring about the salvation of the children of men as effectually as though Christ had administered to them personally, for they could "seal on earth and it was sealed in heaven; could remit sins on earth and they were remitted in heaven." That is God acknowledged, approved, and ratified all these official acts, for they administered for Him, and in his name. Knowing from where their power and commission came they spake as men having authority, as understanding what they were about, and for whom they administered.

Devils even knew of this authority, for on one occasion, when some pretenders assumed to exercise authority over them they said "Paul we know, and Jesus we know" but to these unauthorized men "who are ye?" The devils knew they were powerless, and in derision and defiance they seized these pretenders, and tore their clothes and flesh, and they fled naked and wounded; a severe lesson for their presumption.

The Jews knew something of this authority, for when Jesus introduced innovations upon their order and institutions they asked "by what authority doest thou these things, and who gave thee this authority?" Apostate as they were, they knew that such changes could not legally take place short of authority from God.

"God set in the Church Apostles, Prophets, Evangelists &c. "God set" simply means that he appointed and authorized them to act for him and administer "for the perfecting of the Saints, for the work of the ministry." Without such appointments from him "the work of the ministry" is not carried on hence if there are no legal ministers there is no salvation for the people, man can not assume this authority himself and be accepted "for no man taketh this honor upon himself, but he that is called of God as was Aaron."

We presume from these considerations that it will be admitted by all believers in the scriptures, that authority was anciently necessary, and as God changes not, it must be now necessary, or there has been a change in this matter, and if there is a change when did it take place? and who authorised it?

If the christians have not power from on high to bind on earth and to bind in heaven, to remit sins on earth so as to be acknowledged in heaven, if they have not the ministry of reconciliation, to mintster in Christ,s stead, if God has not set them in the church, if in fact they do not possess the power of godliness, what claims have they upon the attention of a candid inquirer, or, to minister in the important work of salvation."

O say the ministers of the day "we are called by the spirit" well what does that mean? if it means anything it means being called to the authority of administering the words of eternal life and the ordinance of salvation. This being "called by the spirit" means being called by revelation—by inspiration and that is a doctrine they are as unwilling to admit, as that the same authority that once was in the church is now necesssary.

Now as they do not admit of inspiration, nor, of having authority direct from God, they have no claim to our attention, no claim as ministers of Christ, to minister the ordinances involving our eternal interests, for all their acts are unauthorized, illegal and unavailing. Therefore, what good can result from the investigation of a system of religion that admits, at the beginning, it has no authority to administer, even if in form it were true?

The Latter-day Saints, on the other hand, do profess to have authority, to have revelation from God, to bind on earth and in heaven, to minister the ordinances and laws of His kingdom. They do profess in, and offer to the believer, the gift of the Holy Ghost, and the blessings the ancients enjoyed. Therefore, we do present claims that at least are entititled to a fair consideration, and that are worthy the candid attention af all honorable men, who are enquiring after the truth.

The question at issue, and the point in debate, is not whether the Latter-day Saints, or the religious world are right. That is not the question, for by the admission of no authority on their part, they are excluded from any consideration of being right, the reverse being clearly implied in their antipathy to having authority from heaven in our day.

The questions for the honest inquirer, is; are the Latter-day Saints right? Have they authority? Are they the legal representatives of God?

As we assert the affirmative to all these questions, as we give testimony that Joseph Smith had the administration of angels, and revelation from God at various times and places, both alone and in company with others; as we profess to have, and promise to others the spirit, its gifts and blessings as the ancients enjoyed them, and as furthermore we promise a knowledge of all we say, respecting God's work, through yielding obedience honestly to His commandments, we are entitled to a hearing. Presenting, as we do, claims involving an interest no less then salvation in God's kingdom, are we not entitled to that careful, patient, and searching investigation commensurate with the importance of the subject we present, from all those who profess an interest therein?

Whish of the sects dare risk its religious character, reputation, and standing upon such promises? Who else besides the Latter-day Saints dare promise these blessings to the believer? and in connexion with this promise, teach the ancient order, doctrines, principles and government? None! we answer none! We demand then, from the public, a patient and impartial hearing of our claims.

Would it not be more difficult to account for the purity, harmony, and consistency of Joseph Smith's doctrines, than to believe that he received them from heaven? Was it possible that he, unaided by God, could have hit upon, and combined every principle, doctrine, and blessing: also, the order, time, manner of and authority to administer in these things, without instruction from heaven? Would it not be more absurd to admit that a then ignorant and illiterate youth, but fifteen years of age, should have, himself, brought about these things, unaided, then to believe that God revealed them to him? Backed with testimony yet unimpeachable, is he not entitled to credit, until there is proof to the contrary, sufficient at least to impeach him, and the testimony of the witnesses.

Now, can the world, or "any of mankind," show that Joseph Smith has not received revelations and authority from heaven? Can they show that he was not at the place and at the time he says he was, when it is said he received those revelations? Can they prove that any of the witnesses who testify to the same things, were not at the place at the time when they say they saw and heard these things? If they can do this, they can, most certainly, weaken very materially, the force of his testimony, and those who testify of him receiving these things. But if they cannot show any discrepancy in his testimony, nor any clashing with the Bible in his doctrines, principles, organization, or government, or any fault in the testimony of his witnesses; if, in fact, they cannot bring any contrary testimony, how in the name of religion, consistency, and common-sense, shall men be justified in rejecting him as a Prophet. his mission and his testimony?

The mere fact of saying "it is not so we don't believe it," amounts to nothing. The cry of delusion, fanaticism, impostor, is no evidence. We ask for evidence (if it can be found) to the contrary, or to be credited, or some candid acknowledgment of disbelief upon grounds fair and reasonable.

We are not disposed, at present, to elongate upon this subject, having laid before our readers these few facts and reasonings, we leave it in confidence in the hands of the honest, unprejudiced inquirer after truth, having shown him, at least, that we are entitled to a favorable consideration, and that our principles are worthy of investigation. We have nothing to fear from the most piercing search of any fair minded person, but rather invite his criticism on the principles of Mormonism, being assured that they will lose nothing in his favor by encountering the severest test, and the closest search. Correspondence.

St. Louis, Dec. 8th, 1855.

Dear Brother Hart:

Knowing that you love to hear of the progress of the work of God in these last days, I will give you a short skeetch of my recent labors. I was appointed a mission, at a meeting of elders in this city on the 22d of October last, and on the 29th I left St. Louis. I called at Alton, visited some of the Saints, whom I am very glad to say enjoyed the spirit of God. I was kindly entertained during the night by brother Heber Rollings. I left there the next morning, and arrived in the evening at elder John Burton, Calhoon Illinois. The Saints were very glad to see me, as for some time past they had expected an elder from St. Louis would be sent to instruct them. Elder Burton who was at our last Conference, had taken home with him the spirit that so copiously rested upon us in our deliberations, and had aroused an anxiety with the brethern to learn their duty. After due instruction the brethern and sisters came forth to renew their covenants; I re-baptised seventeen, and on Sunday the 11th of November, I organized them into a branch. I appointed Elder John Burton President, who called James H. D. Spain and Napolion B. Vancil for his counselors, I appointed Elder T Griffeth to act in the office of priest. Elder Moses Covy as teacher, and Elder Jonathan Griffeth to act as deacon, there being no one holding the lesser priesthood there. The brethren voted to sustain all the authorities of the kingdom of God, with Brigham at their head, We partook of the sacrement, and rejoiced together. The brethren were willing to honor the law of tithing, and proceeded forthwith to tithe themselves, besides the seventeen re-baptisms I have baptised two new members into the church, the Calhoon branch now numbers twenty-members including eight elders, two of this number live in Jersey there is a brother Clark living in Pike county who was in the "renowned Mormon Battalion."

The brethren and sisters desired to have their children blessed, according to the order of the kingdom of God, consequently we had twenty to bless the following Sunday. The members in the Calhoon branch felt to be one with their brethren in this stake of Zion, not in faith alone but in works.—They have past a motion to fast the first Sunday in the month and to send the value of the amount saved to St. Louis for the poor, as they have none. The brethren intend leaving here in the spring for the Valley.

We established a school, for the especial benefit of the adult members who doubtless will during the long winter evenings, learn something for their good. I named it the "parent school," brother's Covy and Griffeth will conduct it, under the counsels of Elder Burton.

I have rejoiced on this short mission for the power of God has been with me all the time. I have realized the blessing pronounced upon my head by Elder Jeter Clinton, for instance when I arrived in Calhoon brother D. Spain's child was very sick, he thought the child would die, I anointed it with oil in the name of the Lord, and laid my hands with my brethren on its head and rebuked the fever in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, and by the authority of the holy Priesthood, and the child was restored; again a few days after this two sisters were suffering from the chills and fever, and after they were re-baptised and confirmed, I rebuked the disease, they had no more chills while I was there for this then I thank the Lord my heavenly Father knowing assuredly that the Gifts do follow the believers according to the promise of Jesus.

I know that Joseph Smith was a Prophet of God, and that Brigham Young is a Prophet, Seer, and Revelator; and all those who Repent of their sins and are baptized for the remission of sins, by one having authority, and have hands laid upon them for the gift of the holy Ghost, and keep the commandments of God shall also know for themselves, that the Latter-day Saints are the people of God.—I bore testimony while I was there to all who came to hear me, for I know these things are true.

Yours in the everlasting covenant, J. POWELL.

EMIGRATION.

We have great pleasure in submitting to our readers the following letter:

Office P. E. Fund Company,
G. S. L. City, Aug. 31, '55.

Dear Brother Franklin—We send a few names, in another letter, whose passage through has been settled here in advance; which is the course we shall pursue in future if any are sent for from this office; this limits the number considerably, as payments are not quite so plenty as promises, and will give you a much greater chance to help on those in Britain who have been in the church from the introduction of the Gospel on those lands; old members, many of whom have remained poor and unable to get away, or through infirmity are remaining, comparatively unnoticed in the branches, and will soon lay down their bones in Babylon if not brought away. Brother Franklin, God requires us to help these out, and bring them to Zion, where they can be taken care of, and not suffered to want for the necessaries of life; hunt them out, they are not the most clamorous, and you will need to make a thorough investigation all through the branches, that none of these old members be suffered to remain, who are longing for deliverance.

You may publish this letter, that they may read it, and know their privileges, and our feelings towards those who have in a measure proved their love to the Gospel.

Some of the brethren here have donated property to a large amount to the P. E. F. Co., and I alone have donated to the amount of upwards of $60,000, a description of which is forwarded to you, and we recommend the rich brethren to buy, that they may be located in pleasant places when they arrive, and we require of all the brethren who obey the Gospel in Europe, who are rich, to tithe their substance on becoming members of the church, and it will be made available to gather Israel.

Yours in the Covenant, BRIG. YOUNG.
President of the P. E. F. Co.

The above communication will cheer the hearts of those Saints who have long been waiting—how anxiously, they alone have realized—for their liberation from the confines of Babylon. Many, we doubt not, have hoped on so long, that fond anticipation had given way a little to the shades of despair. The favor of the Lord and His servants seems now especially turning towards such, and we say. hope on still, and let not your faith falter.

The first great object to accomplish, after the church was driven into the wilderness, was to prepare, as fast as possible, a place to which the poor could be gathered in safety, and find the means of subsistence.

The P. E. Fund Company was organized for the especial object of gathering the poor. In order to accomplish this in the most efficient manner, it has been wisdom heretofore to use the limited means at its disposal, in a way best calculated to strengthen as fast as possible the infant settlements of the church. This has been done to a considerable extent by assisting many who were able to furnish in part the funds necessary for their emigration.—The Lord has sanctioned the efforts of His people by abundantly pouring out His blessing upon them. The borders of Zion have become enlarged, and her Stakes strong. Numerous sources of productive labor are now open, through which those who are dependent on their hands alone may readily obtain the necessaries of life, and in a few years be able to extend assistance to others. Cities are rapidly rising on every side, in which the houseless poor on their arrival can find shelter from the inclemencies of the first winter, instead of living in wagons or in rooms made in the earth, as thousands have done heretofore, because there had not been time to build a supply of houses. Farms have multiplied, and consequently the means for producing an abundant supply of food have greatly increased, so that the poor need not want, nor any person who will labor, go hungry. Finally the Lord has so abundantly blessed the faithful in Zion, that they are able, and, what is quite as essential, willing to practically manifest the anxiety they have ever felt for the gathering of Israel, by offering their fine houses, mills and farms for that purpose. It now devolves on the brethren in this country, who have the means, to manifest a corresponding spirit in this glorious work, by coming forward and purchasing these pleasant places which have been prepared for them through the suffering and toils of their pioneer brethren.

The word of the Lord is to gather out the aged, the infirm, and the destitute, those who for years have struggled on true to their God and their brethren, and who have continually, with a free and liberal spirit, administered to the Elders, and used the little that the Lord has given them to build up His kingdom. He has thus opened the way for the wealthy to use their means for the benefit of the poor without detriment to themselves, and the responsibility of their not doing so now rests upon them.

The Saints who have property are also required to tithe their substance, that it may be used for gathering the poor. The question will naturally arise in the minds of such—"What will be the result if we should not do this?" We answer, that the spirit of the Lord will forsake them and they will not enjoy the blessings of the Priesthood. They will go into darkness and be cut short in their salvation. This is all the compulsion that there is here or in Utah on the subject. It simply amounts to this—it determines which a man loves best, his wealth and its enjoyments, or the kingdom of God and its blessings; the good things of this life, or of that which is to come. The principle is not simply laid before the Saints, but the requirement is made, and those who profess to seek first the kingdom of God and its righteousness are expected to live up to this law.

A list of the property donated to the P. E. Fund Company by President Young and others in Utah, has been forwarded to us. The object is to sell this property to such of the brethren in this country as have the money to pay for it, and then use the money to emigrate the poor the coming year, agreeable to the spirit and instructions of President Young's letter. Much of this property we personally know can be classed with the best in Utah. A large flouring mill on Big Kanyon Creek, about six miles from the Temple Block in G. S. L. City, we are informed paid for itself in three years. A fine house and lot in a good location, fronting Union Square, and offered at $12,000, is now renting at $2,000 in cash per annum, or at 16 2-3 per cent. on estimated value. President Young's white house, with barn, carriage house, and other buildings appertaining to it, is considered by many as occupying the finest location in G. S. L. Valley, and overlooks nearly the whole of G. S. L. City. It is a desirable place for any person who might wish to have a comfortable and convenient home ready on his arrival in the mountains. The conditions on which this property is offered, it would seem, might meet the views of the most fastidious. Should any portion of the property be sold there, before President Young is advised of a sale of it here, the money paid here will be refunded on presentation of our draft in Utah, or property of equal value given in lieu of it. If the property purchased does not suit the purchaser, they can have the use of it for the use of the money until it is refunded. In some one of these ways it is presumed that the views of purchasers can be met. In addition to the property here mentioned, there is offered quite a variety of houses, city lots, and farming land, concerning which we will give all the information in our possession to persons who are desirous to purchase.—The great object is to obtain the means to assist the poor Saints to enjoy the blessings of the gathering. We hope that this feeling will find a warm response in the hearts of all Latter-day Saints throughout the length and breadth of this country who have surplus means at their disposal. We trust that the Lord will give them no rest in spirit until they have come up to the help of the poor in Israel, and, in blessing them, also bless themselves. It is required of the rich to use their thousands of pounds to do good with, just as much as it is of the poor to use their pennies, and they cannot reap equal blessings without doing so.

We now call upon the Pastors and Presidents in the various fields of labor to go to, and diligently search out all those brethren and sisters who joined the church in an early day, say from ten to eighteen years ago, and who have been faithful in the cause of truth. We wish a report of such forwarded to this office, embracing the following items—the number of years they have been in the church, their age, country of nativity, and probable amount of means that they can furnish towards their emigration, that so soon as we are enabled to turn the property placed at our disposal into cash, we may have the proper information before us to act upon, and be able to take such measures as will most efficiently carry out the designs of the First Presidency. The number emigrated by the P. E. F. Company the coming season will of course depend upon the amount of means which can thus be obtained. The P. E Fund monies cannot be used to assist any except those who go directly through to Utah, and in charge of the Company's agents.

The world around us have much to say about favoritism in their operations. They generally bestow their patronage from personal regard and attachment, without paying much attention to correct principles in the matter, or to the real worthiness of the object of their favor. This is not the favoritism which is now called for, but we wish the Elders to be diligent in searching out more particularly those who have patiently and perhaps silently endured all things for the Gospel's sake. It is the Lord's poor that we are so emphatically called upon to help, and length of service, faithfulness, age, and destitution should be the special, prominent reasons for bestowing favor and the blessings of the gathering.

MORMON IMMIGRATION.

LIVERPOOL CORRESPONDENCE.

36 Islington, Liverpool,
Nov. 17, 1855.

Elder John Taylor—Dear Sir: I have great pleasure in informing you that I have chartered the "Emerald Isle" and "James J. Boyd," to sail from this port for New York on the 27th inst. and 7th December. The first will take about four hundred English Saints; the latter about four hundred Scandinavian. It is quite probable that a part of the Scandinavian emigrants may press through at once to St. Louis, as they contemplate going to Utah in the ensuing season. After these two vessels it is possible there will be nothing further until the last of January or first of February. Your co-worker in the gathering of Israel. F. D. RICHARDS.

LETTER FROM GEORGE A. SMITH.

G. S. L. City, Oct. 30, 1855.

To the Editor of the Luminary:

The stoppage of the Eastern mail for the last two months, has effectually prevented the brilliant rays of the Luminary from cheering our eager eyes. If there was any possible reason for the stoppage of the mail, which we could imagine, by any stretch of thought or credulity whatever, we might endure it with some degree of patience, but understanding that the Government has a general, and brigade of troops, stationed along the road, it is impossible for anybody to be so credulous as to suppose for a moment, that a few naked, half starved, half armed and half organized savages could prevent the greatest nation on the face of the earth, from passing its mails punctually through the heart of its own country.

In addition to that, the fact being known here, that slow moving companies, small and unarmed parties of almost every description, have continued to arrive here almost weekly for the last two months, every single company assuring us that they had not been molested on the plains, and had received nothing but friendship from the Indians, precludes the possibility until we can gain further light, of a belief that the war with the Sioux has been the cause of the interests of this territory being so totally neglected that the mails should suspend their operation; we would like to hear something from some quarter, what is going on in the world, and if the U. S. Government would cease to act the dog in the manger, clear the track and let private enterprise try what it can do, we should be supplied with weekly communication in a little time. The probability is at present, that we shall have to wait until the British Government builds a railroad to the Pacific through her North American Provinces, then we may support a private express from this city to that road, and get an occasional show at the news, unless Uncle Sam should establish a mail route along the same track, and compel the express to pay him the postage on the letters it may carry, and then as now, neglect or refuse to carry the mail himself, after choking off others; as it is, we have had only two mails arrive here from the East within the time specified, since the present, contractors undertook the job, although the Government has paid them over 30,000 dollars extra for their non-performance. We shall send our correspondence this time by the South Western route, although we are satisfied there is something lame West of San Bernardino, from that place to this, the contractors have been as regular as a clock, not a single failure having taken place since the route commenced, although it is more difficult than the Eastern route, on account of long deserts, and more dangerous, there being no soldiers to protect them from the Indians.

The weather for the past month has been extremely fine, giving the farmers an excellent opportunity to gather their late and scanty crops; the emigrants favorable and comfortable chance to make their way through the mountains into the vallies, and thus to close their long and wearisome journey, and the inhabitants generally, a comfortable time to bring their winters wood from the crevices of the mountain tops.

Captain C. A. Harper's company arrived last night, and Captain Andrus on Wednesday the 24th. Many of the Perpetual Emigrating Fund cattle have died on the road, and those which arrived are rather in poor condition; there are three trains of merchandise still to arrive that we have heard of being on the road.

By letters from the Vegas we learn that their crops principally failed from the effect of alkali; the settlers were generally well. The Utes at the Elk mountain proved so hostile that the settlement there has been abandoned, three of the brethren were treacherously murdered by them; several of the brethren while returning from that place lost their way. John McEwan wandered four days without food, the people went out from San Pete to search the mountains and found him within twelve miles of that place. William Sterrett and two others undertook to bring in an express by the Spanish trail, they lost it, wandered about three weeks in the mountains, after eating their only dog, one horse, the skirts from their saddles, and the soles of their moccasins, they arrived safely in this city in good health and spirits.

I have recently visited Utah county, improvements are going on rapidly in the various settlements; good substantial meeting houses of ample size to accomodate the inhabitants are in progress of erection at Springville, Pleasant Grove, and Lehi, the late crops have come in very well, especially the Potatoes at Provo and Springville, the residue of the settlements in the county the crops are very scanty; the improvements in this city are moving on at a steady pace, many of the new stores are well filled with merchandize, sufficient to supply the wants of the community, money apears to be scarce.

Several of the Twelve Apostles are attending Quarterly Conferences in the Territory: they are accompanied by other Elders. Their meetings thus far, have been numerously attended, and very interesting.

The Deseret Dramatic Association open the season with the "Leap Year," on next Tuesday eve. Elder Wm. Willes commences a course of Lectures on his visit to India, in the Social Hall, to-morrow evning. The Polysophical Society have had several very interesting meetings during the last month.

The Secretary of the Territory is transmitting the Legislative furniture of the Council House, to Fillmore. Judge Drummond has removed to that place. Judge Kinney is holding a special term of Court in the Council House.

President Young made a visit to Cache Valley a short time since, where extensive preparations have been made for wintering large herds of cattle.

The inhabitants of Davis county are forming an extensive company for the purpose of making a canal to convey the waters of Weber river over a very large body of very rich land in the Northwestern part of that county, which will have a tendency to, at least, double the productions of that already productive portion of our Territory. G. A. SMITH.

Oh brother Spencer, do tell us, quick as possible, by the New Zealand route, if the Allies have taken Sebastopol, annihilated the Russian power in the Crimea, blown Cronstadt out of existence, and taken Odessa and St. Petersburgh? I really want to hear. G. A. S.

RUSSIAN NEWS.

London, November 20, 1855—The defeat of the Ingour was not the only disaster by which they were reminded of the anniversary of Inkermann.—News was received yesterday of a loss inflicted on the same day by the British forces in the sea of Azoff which cannot fail, under any circumstance, to be serious, and which may possibly prove more important even than the result of a battle.

It appears that with the intention of waiting for the means of transport which would exist as soon as the Gulf of Azoff should be closed with ice, the Russians had collected enormous quantities of grain and forage at a part of the coast supposed to be entirely secure from attack. A portion of these supplies were for the troops in the Crimea, and the remainder for those in Asia; and their amount is indicated by the fact that they were stacked in six tiers which extended a distance of two miles.

A force of 4,000 men, cavalry and infantry, remained to guard them, and under these circumstances, the Russian commanders evidently entertained no doubt of their complete safety. Captain Sherrad Osborne, however, who was actively scouring the coast of the Azoff with a flotilla which comprised several gun boats of extremely light draught discovered their existence, and contrived to get his vessels sufficiently close to protect his men in landing to destroy them, a feat which they performed in full presence of the enemy, and with a loss of only six wounded.

A week or two back it was notified at St. Petersburgh, that the army in the Crimea were provisoned for eight months.

There is reason to assume that the stores now burnt comprised a great part of what were thus alluded to, and if this should prove to be the case, its effect upon the position of the enemy during winter may be momentous It will be remembered that when the Allies first gained possession of the Sea of Azoff, it was predicted that the event would prove far more influential than anything else in sealing the fate of the Russians in the Crimea, and the operations of every subsequent month have tended to demonstrate the correctness of the impression.

Along with the news of the operations in the Sea of Azoff, intelligence was received of a frightful accident in the Crimea, from the explosion of some French magazines. It occasioned a large loss of material, and two or three hundred men were killed or wounded.

Beside the circumstances already mentioned, which distinguished the anniversary of Inkermann, other events took place on that day which are likely to contribhte to render it one of the most memorable in the history of the world.

While Omar Pasha was crossing the Ingour, and Captain Osborne was burning the grain stacks on the Azoff, the Czar Alexander was engaged in a visit to Odessa, and the Emperor of Austria was signing the concordat with the Pope, and thus cementing an ignominy which has not been paralleled since the days of our own King John.

"Varna, 7: 15 p. m.—Captain Sherrard Osborne reports that, on the 5th and 6th inst., a flotilla under his orders, in the Sea of Azoff, destroyed enormous quantities of grain and forage of this year's harvest, which was compactly stacked in six tiers, extending two miles along the coast, near Gheisklimm, ready to be conveyed partly to the Crimean army, after the formation of the ice in the Gulf of Azoff, and partly to the army of the Caucasus, and which the enemy thought secure from any naval attack. By the skilfulness of the arrangements, and the manner in which they were executed by Captain Osborne, in which he was ably seconded by Commander John J. Kennedy, the enterprise was affected in the most brilliant manner, by landing on three points, under cover of the gunboats of the allies, in the face of not less than 4,000 cavalry and infantry. Our loss amounted to only six wounded.

PAUL AT SEA.

He did not go for pleasure or his health or to make money. He went because he was sent.—He appealed from an unjust condemnation to Cæsar, and was sent a prisoner ocean wise to Rome. Heathenism paid his expenses. It is not often that goodly preachers get transferred from one part of the field to an other, and a pagan treasury foots the bill.

Paul did good service at sea. He did not coil himself up in his berth, and snooze away the voyage. Nor did he as one in bonds, go fretting in discontentment at his lot, setting every one else grumbling.—He was cheerful and full of animation, as a good man ought to be anywhere. He was handy as Jack himself when at sea called for him. Now he helps to pitch the cargo of the laboring vessel into the sea—now he makes all ring with a voice that encouraged the dispirited sailors—and now he gives the captain a hint that saved all the lives on board.

Paul took his religion with him at sea. He was not ashamed to let all know that he served God, giving thanks for the food provided, and praying for all on board.

Paul had a taste of shipwreck. But he went through its perils like a man of sense, and a christian, and did more for the safety of all his shipmates, than all the others on board.

Paul on the land or Paul on the sea, a most noble specimen of a christian man.—[Puritan Record.

No man ever prospered in the world without the co-operation of his wife. If she unites in mutual endeavors, or rewards his labors with an endearing smile, with what confidence will he resort to his merchandise or his farm, fly over lands, sail upon seas, meet difficulty and encounter danger, if he knows that he is not spending his strength in vain, but that his labor will be rewarded by the sweets of home. Solicitude and disappointment enter the history of every man's life, and he is but half provided for his voyage who finds but an associate for happy hours, while for his months of darkness and distress no sympathising partner is prepared.

OUR AIN MOUNTAIN HAME.

Come all ye feeling faithful Saints who've crossed the prairie drear,
And I'll tell you what you'll do for those who're coming out this year,
Lay up in store for them, worthy of your Godlike name,
And you'll have our ruler's blessings when the Saints come hame.

CHORUS—When the Saints come hame, when the Saints come hame,
And you'll have our ruler's blessings when the Saints come hame.

The Lambkins in their innocence upon the mountain brow,
Are less subject to devouring wolves than all good Saints are now;
Then stretch your welcome hand to your brethern who would claim
Our aid to help them onward to our ain mountain hame.

CHORUS—To our ain mountain hame, to our ain mountain hame,
Our aid to help them onward to our ain mountain hame!

The widows and the fatherless, the old and young together,
Who've toiled 'midst hunger, heat, and cold, and sickness sore to gather,
With songs of praise will come, with the sick, the blind, and lame,
To find a place of succour in our ain mountain hame—

CHORUS—In our ain mountain hame, in our ain mountain hame,
To find a place of safety in our ain mountain hame.

For o'er the waving prairie, like an endless sheet of light,
The caravans are rolling with some thousands on their flight
From the rage of war and famine, and a guilty world's shame,
To find a place of safety in our ain mountain hame.

CHORUS—In our ain mountain hame, in our ain mountain hame,
To find a place of safety in our ain mountain hame.

Soon Zion in her beauty shall forth upon the world,
In glorious light and majesty, when Utah's flag's unfurled;
And kings and queens from far, who, hearing of her fame,
Will come to see her glory in her ain mountain hame.

CHORUS—In our ain mountain hame, in our ain mountain hame.
Will come to see her glory in our ain mountain hame.

Then you, my friends, who built her up in glory and renown,
Will each receive for your reward a never-fading crown;
And brighter wreaths of glory than "the tongue of man can name,"
When this earth is made celestial—our ain mountain hame.

CHORUS—Our ain mountain hame, our ain mountain hame,
When this earth is made celestial, our ain mountain hame.

Free Love—The present Condition of Society.

A society has been formed in New York, and we learn another is also forming in Cincinnati, under the name and title of the "Free Love League," at the meetings of which, gentlemen and ladies of "progressive" views can meet and enjoy an interchange of sentiments without being subject to the restraints of matrimonial life. Their doctrine is the French theory simply that a man may take a mistress and throw her off when he is tired; and a woman may do likewise with a man—and that marrying is a humbug. The League in New York has received large accessions to its numbers, so that instead of meeting as at first, at a private house, they now occupy a hall of considerable dimensions on Broadway. Our readers will probably remember a work recently issued, entitled "Mary Lynden, or the Autobiography of a woman," and whose pernicious effects have already been felt in Society. The author's name was at the time unknown, but recent developments prove it to be the work of Mrs. Harriet Gove Nicholas. Agreeable to this and other works published each member of the Society takes an obligation that he or she will reveal none of its secrets, neither inform any person where its meetings are held. This smacks something of "Sam." But as many women have joined the League, its secrets have leaked out.

The Socialist doctrine is but one phase of the growing corruption of Society, and we may with concern, ask ourselves, what has aided to bring about this, and whither are we tending? In reviewing a lengthy article on the Free Love Doctrine, condensed from the New York Tribune, that general advocate auviud courier of the miserable isms of the day, a worthy cotemporary presents a picture worthy of reflection. We copy the article entire and suggest its perusal:

Increase of Crime and Imorality, and Decrease of Practical Piety in the United States.

We publish this morning a condenced account of one of the most disgraceful Associations, or clubs, of which we have ever heard or read. It is not a little surprising that this association could have been so long in the city of New York, and so open in its operations, without attracting the attention of the press or police, until discovered and exposed by an obscure, country editor who visited that city for the purpose of seeing sights, and beholding the Elephant of that metropolis! Where were the self-sacrifising missionaries to the Five Points, that they should lose sight of this still great evil?

It has ever been with reluctance that we have copied or made allusion to the innumerable cases of love and suicide, elopement and murder, seduction infanticide, crim con. and divorce, which teem in the newspapers by every mail. Now and then an extraordinary case would startle the public, and its great enormity entitle it a place on record. But these great and enormous outrages are on the increase—and if the daily records of crime are the test, society in this country is on a rapid decline.

While such is the condition of the criminal record, we look in vain for those Revivals of Piety and Religion which used to come as refreshing showers from the effective preachiug of the Gospel, the exemplary lives of Christians, and the purifying effects of Prayer. It is a lamentable fact that while churches are multiplying in number and wealth; while splendid edifices adorn our cities and villages, and their spires pierce the clouds, and glitter in the rays of the setting sun; while velvet and silk trappings adorn the pulpits; soft and downy cushions invite the loungers to the pews, and gay and gaudy crowds fill the seats—pure and undefiled religion—practical and Godly piety is sadly at a discount. The church-goers listen to a sermon remarkable for its rhetoric, its fine turned sentences, its flowery language, its eloquent delivery, and utter destitution of that sweet and consoling manna that comes from Heaven—that quick and powerful argument that convicts of sin, of righteousness, and judgement to come—and that pure spirit which soothes while it chastises; enlivens hope, while it exposes the human dross, and opens the gates of Heaven while it exposes the dreaded jaws of Hell!

The cause is easlily explained. Preachers and laymen, deacons and members, have sought to effect that reformation in mankind by laws, which God designed should be done by the preaching of the Gospel and the works of Faith. To secure the enactment of such laws, preachers have become politicians, deacons have become demagogues, and and members have become machines. The lamp of the Lord has died out—moral darkness prevades the land—infidelity rears its hydra head—immorality stalks about at mid day—crime runs riot at midnight.

In the midst of all these things, a dangerous and powerful war is waged upon civil and religious liberty; secret and oath bound societies have organized to overthrow our institutions, and to pull down the bulwarks of human freedom! In these midnight associations the clergy are found, instead of the religious meeting—plotting treason against the government, instead of doing the work of their Master! Is it any wonder that, while the class meeting, the prayer meeting, the church meeting, the social circle of hymns and psalms are deserted for political orgies—that such associations as that we give an account of to-day are organized and attended by thousands? Is it any wonder that masquerade balls and lecherous halls are crowded by the giddy multitude? In view of these things, is it any wonder to him who reads and believes the Bible, that providence often frowns upon our land? That epidemics, drouths, scourges, commercial revolutions, and agricultural disappointments are visited upon our heads? And may we not justly fear that, ere long, internal wars and foreign foes will overthrow our institutions, and make desolate our country?

Let all good men reflect seriously upon these things. Throw away all prejudices, and come to look seriously upon this subject, in its most serious and dangerous aspects. It is time the dry bones of the churches were awakened—that a reform was commenced; and it is apparent that—such revival—should commence in the House of the Lord!

THE ENGLISH ROTHSCHILDS.

In England the present representatives of the—Barons Lionel and Meyer, and Sir Anthony Rothschild—live in that sumptuous solitude and domestic magnificence with which the Jews so deeply delight to surround themselves, like some of the Christian Israelites in our own palatial avenues.—With the exception of Sir Anthony, who is a senile sensualist and gourmand, they extend but little hospitality, and wrap themselves up in a selfish indulgence. When, however, they do receive, it is with an Orential gorgeousness, and the maitres de cuisine of both Sir Anthony and Baron Lionel are among the most cunning chiefs in Europe. The residence of the one in Grosvenor palace, and the other in Piccadily, next Apsley House, and the town palace of the Duke of Wellington, are furnished with an affluence of splendor, and their daily life is surrounded, like that of all wealthy Jews, with every appliance of luxury. Indeed one of the banquets given by the Baron Rothschild, at his country villa, equalled anything ever told in story of the luscious Oriental feasts. It was summer and the banquet was served in the beautiful conservatory. Music floated around, and art lent its lovely light everywhere. The servers on which dessert was served, contained each a picture of rare artistic excellence, which might have been dreamed by Veronese or Claude Lorraine.

The only amusement in which the Rothschilds indulge is hunting. Old Anthony is gouty and chuckles at Lionel and Meyer for galloping round the fields after a fox. But the two brothers have a box at Mentmore, about forty miles from London, on the North-western Railroad, where they keep a splendid stud and a pack of buck hounds, and the swells of the city and stock exchange may be seen on morns of cloudy sky and southerly wind with scarlet tops and cigar, flying in their hansons to the North-western Station, to have a day with the Baron's hounds.

Neither of the family confine their passions for horse-flesh to the hunting field. They embarked upon the turf, and for one or two years they spared no expense to carry away its "blue ribbon," by winning a Derby. It is possible they would have succeeded in the race of '53 had not "Orestes," who carried the fortunes of the House, been unfairly dealt with the night before the running, and had a foul grain or two playfully introduced into his corn. This false play sickened the Rothschilds of the turf, and we believe that they have not now any horses in training.

To see the Rothschilds, however, in their glory, one must visit the Exchanges. This applies only to the Frankfort, Paris and London houses. In Vienna and Naples, the exchanges are only frequented by the very lowest class of "wild animals." But to see the old Baron Anselem or Baron James go to 'Change amid men who on every side doffed hat and bowed with cringing smile, would have convinced the veriest optimist that honor to mammon had not yet departed from the earth. Baron James always looked the gentleman, and even in the greatest excitement on the Bourse, when he stood surrounded by hundreds of faiseurs and brokers, a courtly smile ever slavered over his ominously smooth face.

Baron Anslem, with his noble head of white hair, looked very imposing from a distance, but he was so illiterate and so coarse, as to make it a service of disgust to approach him.

The London Rotschilds have their stations behind the statute of the Queen, near the entrance which leads to Exchange Place. Thither Lionel and Sir Anthony are to be seen twice a week, on Thursdays and Fridays, at about half-past 2 P. M., when bill exchange is taking place, languidly approaching, supported generally by some pet broker, and leaning toward the column at the right from the entrance. The gentlemen who lean on the adjoining columns are Mr. Heath, of the firm of Heath, Furs & Co., Mr. Bates of Barnings, and Mr. Doxat. To see the conflict among the bill and stock brokers as to who shall have Lionel's eye or ear, is intensly amusing. While at Stock Exchange, the thrice honored bull or bear who has been seen in converse with the Baron, is looked up to with veneration, and probably makes a sixteenth per cent out of the lucky incident.

After having stood in this position for about an hour, Baron Lionel wends his way home, in the same languid attitude, leaning on the arm of Sir Anthony or his uncle, Mr. Cohen, who is the principal bill broker of the house. As they turn From the Exchange into Bucklersbury, many are are the wink and signs of the passers by, who recognize the brood, and some of their poor co-religionists, who watch their exit to solicit alms, gather about them a circle of eager fellow-beggars when in some dirty-night den in Hound's ditch Moses relates with inexpressible pride that the Baron gave them a sixpence.

The office of the firm in New Court is enclosed in a large yard, which wears much the appearace of a garden. About fifteen clerks are in the main office, to which several private rooms are attatched, one of them being devoted to Consular affairs, the Baron being the Austrian Consul. Here, at about eleven, the Stock Exchange men, a class half snob and half Jew, make their appearance, and with gossip and swagger, and flattery and fawning, and shaving, the business of the day runs on till about four, when the Leviathans may be seen driving to their sumptuous homes, either in their own equipages or, occasionally, to effect simplicity, in a Hanson cab.—[N. Y. Tribune.

Statistics of Muscular Power.

Man has the power of imitating every motion but that of flight. To effect this, he has in maturity and health, 60 bones in his head, 60 in his thighs and legs, 62 in his arms and hands, and 67 in his trunk. He has also 434 muscles. His heart makes 64 pulsations in a minute; and, therefore, 3840 in an hour, 92,160 in a day. There are also three complete circulations of his blood in the short space of an hour. In respect to the comparative speed of animated beings and of impelled bodies, it may be remarked that size and construction seem to have little influence; nor has comparative strength, though one body giving any quantity of motion to another is to loose so much of its own. The sloth is by no means a small animal, and yet it can travel only fifty paces a day; a worm crawls only five inches in fifty seconds; but a lady-bird can fly twenty million times its own length in less than an hour. An elk can run a mile and a half in seven minutes; an antelope a mile in a minute; the wild mule of Tartary has a speed even greater than that; an eagle can fly eighteen leagues in an hour; a Canary falcon can even reach 250 leagues in the short space of sixteen hours. A voilent wind travels sixty miles in an hour sound 1042 English feet in a second.

FROM PUNCH

THE JUMPING WAFER.—The priests in France now announce a new miracle about twice a-week. The last is a jump which the "wafer" made, in church from the hand of a person who ought not to have touched it, to the missal of a very devout lady, and thence into her mouth, which happened providentially, to be open at the time. This was clever for a wafer. though we confess the greater miracle seems to be that a priest should print such a story and not be sent to St. Pelagie as a rogue, or to Bicetre as a fool. However, the Jumping Wafer is the last addition to the repertoire of the Roman Catholic Wizard of the South, and is a worthy companion to the Winking Virgin.

MCLEAN'S VOLCANIC OIL LINIMENT is truly a celebrated remedy, and has done more to alleviate human suffering than any other remedy ever discovered.

One or two applications will relieve the most severe pain, bruise or sprain.

Two bottles will cleanse, purify, and heal the foulest ulcer or sore, and it will heal the most severe burn or scald without a scar.

Every family should have a supply constantly on hand, for use in time of need.

Read the following extract of a letter. which is incontestable proof of its wonderful efficacy:

A BLIND MAN RESTORED TO SIGHT.

J. H. MCLEAN—Dear Sir: * * * I have been suffering for four years with rheumatic sore eyes, being at times altogether blind. I procured the advice of several physicians, but none of them could do me any good. By the advice of a friend I applied your "Volcanic Oil Liniment," according to the directions around the bottle, and it has cured me permanently. I have used it since for bruises, pains, &c., and it has always given immediate relief. I live on the main road near Farmington.

Yours, respectfully, JOHN H. ALLERD.
Jefferson county, Mo.

For horses it is far superior to any other remedy for curing lameness, bruises, cuts, old sores, swellings, &c.

We say, then, to all who may be suffering from external diseases, call at once and get a supply. Thousands of bottles are sold (and used) daily, and we have never heard of a case where it has failed in giving relief when properly applied.

☞For sale by J. H. MCLEAN, the proprietor, corner Third and Pine streets, St. Louis, and by all respectable dealers in Medicines everywhere.

Still Another.—MR. EDITOR: As a matter of great importance to the afflicted. I wish to make the following statement: About six years ago, my wife was attacked with a slight stroke of dumb palsy. The whole of her right side and limbs were partially paralysed. A doctor was called, who bled her very copiously in the right arm, which relieved her, and she had no more symptoms of paralysis, until last fall, when the right arm gradually became weak and powerless. Both limbs and the whole of her right side soon became perfectly benumbed, and all voluntary motion was entirely suspended. She was bled again, but without any relief. Even her tongue became paralysed, so that she could not, at times, speak so as to be understood. She had a brother, Thomas Utley, a boy 14 years old, who had some time previously been cured of a very severe attack of the same disease, by the use of three bottles of the MUSTANG LINIMENT. And we determined to try it in her case, as she had been under the treatment of doctors for several months, without any apparent benefit. I obtained one bottle and commenced bathing the whole affected side and limbs. The effect was truly astonishing. In less than a month, every symptom of the disease had disappeared. She can use her limbs as freely as ever, and no impediment whatever exists in her articulation. In fact, she is perfectly cured; and we bless the day we were induced to use this invaluable Liniment. EDWARD UPMEYER, St. Louis, Mo.

MEDICINE FOR THE BILLION!
A Certain Remedy for all Diseases of
MAN OR ANIMALS,
Requiring an External Application.
Warranted in every Case for which it is Recommended!

THE MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT!

Unlike all other popular medicines, it is used by many prominent members of the faculty, and many of the public Hospitals. Their prejudices have yielded to indisputable and incontrovertible demonstrations of cures performed where their remedies had failed.

It has cured more cases of
RHEUMATISM
than any other medicine ever used. Its efficacy in this terrible disease is acknowledged by all who have used it. It not only cures the complaint, but appears to give a vigor and elasticity to the limbs, before unknown, thus performing a double office.

A FEW TESTIMONIALS.

PATH FINDER OFFICE, May 11, 1854.

G. W. WESTBROOK:—
Please send me by the bearer three large bottles of your Mexican Mustang Liniment, as I wish to take it up to my place in Vermont, not thinking it advisable to do without it. I have used it in my family and on my horses, and have found it invaluable. Yours,
J. T. WHITNEY.

ELIZABETHTOWN, TENN., May 26, 1855.

MR. G. W. WESTBROOK:—
Dear Sir—It affords me much pleasure in saying to you that the Mexican Mustang Liniment outsells any medicine that I have ever had for sale, and comes nearer doing what it promises to do. Send me another supply, as I am nearly out. Yours respectfully,
JOHN SINGLETRAY, P. M.

PHILADELPHIA, June 11, 1854.

MR. G. W. WESTBROOK:
Sir—My son was afflicted with a swelling upon the knee joint, which confined him to the house. I had a doctor attending him for some time, but he did not do him any good. One of my neighbors told me to use the Mustang Liniment. I asked the doctor if I could do so, and he told me he thought I could not do better.
I procured one bottle, and in about a week he was able to go out.
I can safely recommend it to the afflicted.
Respectfully yours, MRS. BENNETT.

W. S. Ladd & Co., of Portland, Oregon, writes that there is an immense demand for the Mexican Mustang Liniment in that country, and orders forty gross to be shipped by Golden Gate, that sails in a few days from New Yook.

Park & White of San Francisco, California, order 100 gross, to be forwarded by first clipper for that port.

PORT AU PRINCE, HAYTI, Jan. 16th, 1854.
I had the pleasure to receive invoice and boxes Mexican Mustang Liniment per Oroton, and have no doubt it will have a brisk sale on the island.
GEORGE RACKSTER.

To give health, strength and elacity to the limbs, there is nothing can equal in effect, the
MEXICAN MUSTANG LINIMENT.
FARMERS AND LIVERY STABLE KEEPERS
have need it for the following diseases with extraordinary success, certifying invariably to the efficacy of the Liniment, and the truthfulness of our assertions in its behalf:

Spavin, Splint, Ring-bone, Fistula, Wind Galls, Big Head, Bruises, Strains, String-halt, Scratches, Cracked Heels, Sweney, Saddle, Collar, or Harness Galls, Hard Lumps or Tumor, Film, or other diseases of the Eye, Poll-Evil, &c.

The small sizes retail for 25 cents per bottle;
The medium size retail for 50 cents per bottle;
The large sizes retail for one dollar per bottle.
The medium holds three times as much as the small;
The Large holds nearly three times as much as the medium.
Therefore the large bottles are the cheapest.

GREAT SALT LAKE CITY,
UTAH TERRITORY.
HOOPER & WILLIAMS,

ARE transporting to Utah, this season, one of the largest and best assorted stock of GOODS ever taken to that region.

The purchases being made from the best houses in New York, Baltimore and St. Louis, and the long experience they have had in the trade, enables them to offer inducements in prices, style and kind, which will insure satisfaction.

Emigrants passing over the plains to California, will find it to their advantage to refit at Great Salt Lake, as produc can always be had for less than transportation from the States.

Persons wishing to remit or intend taking money with them, can risk and save money by depositing with Messrs. ROBERTSON, HUDSON & PULLIAM, No. 39 Murray st., New York, or J. J. ANDERSON, St. Louis, who are authorized to draw on us.
